of their parents, in order to pay for cramped living conditions, moldy showers, stinky bathrooms, and (in the worst possible scenario) life with a roommate resembling characters out of "Children of the Corn." Not to mention, the prohibitions with regard to otherwise legal enjoyments. Stiff penalties are placed upon those guilty of burning candles and incense. And, even if a 21 year old can buy liquor any place that sells it, he or she better not bring it to the wrong dorm on campus. According to the student handbook, if a student so much as wants to sell Avon products on campus, they have to beseech the Dean for written permission.

Seriously, MC administrative officers suggest that the policy was meant to nurture a community environment among students. Yet, approved after-hours group events are few and far between for students who want to socialize but don't have time to commit to year-round volunteer service. For those who do, there are plenty of planning meetings to attend.

Hypothetically, again, according to strict interpretation of policies, even if a student chose to have a gathering in his or her room without alcohol, incense burning, or Avon product soliciting a Resident Director could impose him or herself upon the crowd. A "write-up" for hosting an unchartered campus club or event, if there was discussion of some matter beyond idle chatter and outside of classroom investigative studies, is conceivable.

Unfortunately, for students on-campus housing means one of two things: 1) "Look, at least you don't have fart to walk to classes." 2) "When is long weekend coming so I can escape to my parent's house, have a party, and discuss Marxist Philosophy as it relates to Christian thematics?"

Of course, its gotta be the money. Why else would an institution of higher learning ban access to the real world to their young scholars; especially when most of them went to camp through their pre-adolescent and adolescent years. It is possible that parents of MC students sent them away during summers because the thought of three hot months with the fruit of their loins was too difficult to bear. It is more likely that those parents who sign for a $15,000 education for their aforementioned children wanted them to learn independence and self-sufficiency.

MC should adopt policies similar to that of other colleges and universities. In order to aid smooth transition into their new environment, freshmen (under age 20) and first semester transfers should be required to live on campus. Then, if parents or guardians pay for any portion of tuition and/or residence fees, students who want to move off campus in subsequent years should also be required to obtain signed and notarized permission from those same guarantors. Now, a fresh idea may be to offer non-credit evening courses for potential off-campus residents. Potential course offerings might include the following: "How to budget;" "Nutritious grocery shopping techniques;" "Know the facts before you lease: Laws, options, and responsibilities." In this way MC could truly prepare young adults for a life of independent living and active community citizenship.

The bottom line is that it may not be the money. Who are we to accuse? But, education suggests the opportunity to learn about oneself and the world. MC administration from the President to Student Development fails in its efforts to create a well-rounded student body when it denies their charges the American constitutional guarantee of freedom of choice. Next time you go to the Business Office to sign a loan check, give them a crayon drawing of a house sitting atop the world. Don't forget to make sure the shelf inside has books drawn on it!

Adult freedoms vs. dorm life

"The best possible college..."

For this issue's feature, we took suggestions from students, staff, and faculty as to what we should run. The potholes in the rear Carnegie parking lot (to the left) seem to be a growing concern (and a growing problem). With holes large enough to swallow a mid-sized car, residents are having real problems getting in and out without sustaining damage to their cars.

To the credit of the college, the potholes on the roads around campus have been recently paved over (instead of being filled with gravel or cement).

Willard House (pictured on the right), once the home of MC's presidents, and now the home of the Alumni and Parent's programs (and the office of the VP for College Advancement) has become a victim of water damage. This particular wall is located near the back door.

photo by Marc Hall

photo by Marc Hall

Letter to the Editor . . .

Dear Editor,

There are many residents on this campus that are very disturbed with the conditions of the residence halls, and I would have to say that I agree with them. After being here for three years, I expected to see changes within the residence halls, but none have occurred. We still have the same 1980's furniture that has been repaired so much that none of it looks like it is in good condition anymore. We still have the same old, stained, soiled carpet that feels like you are walking on the concrete floor when you walk on it. There are no luxuries at all in the halls of Copeland, Davis, Gamble, Lloyd, or Pearsons! Something must be done!

Many of us thought that after Carnegie's rebuilding, the college officials would have realized how much modern conveniences do for the campus. Private bathrooms, kitchenettes, new carpet and furniture, and cable television have made Carnegie very attractive to all residents. These conveniences have allowed Carnegie to have a very high retention rate of students each year. When recruits, both academic and athletic, are shown around campus, they are always shown Carnegie Hall and told how nice that residence hall is to live in. Of course they are also shown the other residence halls too, but how can these other halls compare to a recruit after they have seen Carnegie? Carnegie Hall holds just so many residents and the rest of us have to fill all the other halls. Now, there is nothing wrong with Carnegie, and I am glad that we have a residence hall such as this one, but why should the rest of us have to suffer through the old stereotypical "dorm-life" just because our school officials will not take the time to improve the rest of the residence halls on this campus?

We, as the residents of these other halls, would like to see something improved in our halls. We each pay approximately $15,000 a year to attend school here, but all of our residence halls do not show it. We understand that kitchenettes and private bathrooms are impossible in the halls of Copeland, Davis, Gamble, Lloyd, and Pearsons, but cable television is not. If just that was installed by no later than next year, we would be much happier. We have a maintenance staff that does the best that they can with our old furniture, but cable television is something that we do not have at all, but we do deserve! The kitchenettes and private bathrooms call for total rebuilding, which is impossible, but cable television and new carpet should be easily attainable. These things would make all of our residence halls more attractive to prospective students. They would increase the retention rate of students from year to year. Otherwise, the residents will just continue to go here for a year and then transfer to a place where they can have a few more luxuries for their money. These changes would also allow the residence hall staffs more opportunities to build community development by having cable television to use as a source of programming. Cable television and new carpet would provide all residences with a more "homelike" atmosphere, allowing a more comfortable transition to college. They would also allow the campus to have a form of preventive maintenance. This meaning that if the carpet gets stained after the new carpet gets installed, then we all know who is responsible, and we would be able to establish an effective carpet cleaning fund per hall. Also, if the cable goes out, then it is the responsibility of the cable company to fix it, not our maintenance department—since they have enough to do. All of these aspects are ways in which cable television and new carpet would benefit not only the residents' needs on this campus, but the attractiveness of the campus in general!

There is also another question that needs to be answered. What happened to our Vision '94 Program that raised nearly $23,418,414 in funds to go to "improving" the college? Along with our yearly fees, where is all that money going? What are our college officials doing with the money? What could all that money be being spent on? One thing is for sure—we are not seeing any results from the program in our residence halls, other than Carnegie Hall.

We understand that cable television would cost us a nominal fee each semester, and in Carnegie, but it does the same at home. Carpet is something that each residence hall needs anyway, so it should be taken care of before we do not have carpet at all from the prolonged wear and tear. At $15,000 a year per student plus our "supposed to be" Vision '94 Program, these two needs of cable television and new carpet should not be asking for too much. After all, our college officials are being paid to be receptive to our needs and be good planners, organizers, and budgeters. We, the many residents of Copeland, Davis, Gamble, Lloyd, and Pearsons Hall, deserve to see this change take place, and take place immediately!

Signed with intent to see change,
David Forster

Letter to the Editor . . .

Dear Editor,

After perusing the Feb. 14 issue of the Echo, I found (not surprisingly) yet another lengthy letter to the editor about politics. Let me first begin my comments with the following statement: I am in no way against printing articles about politics in the campus newspaper. Having given my disclaimer, I must say that I am sick and tired of opening the campus newspaper to find a war of words between a few individuals who happen to be members of the College Democrats or College Republicans. The series of letters to the editor that have been from and/or about Alex Little, David Sims, Kevin Rowland, and Chris Noe seem, to me anyway, to be little more than petty bickering under the guise of political discussion. If the College Democrats and Republicans want to debate the ISSUES, that is great, but please just have a forum that does focus on the issues and stop filling up the pages of the Echo with pseudo-debates.

Sincerely,
Jenny Cummings
Senior

Committed® by Michael Fry

"PHYSICIAN, N. ONE
UPON WHOM WE SET
OUR HOPES WHEN ILL, AND OUR DOGS WHEN WELL" —AMBROSE BIERCE.

I NEED A CBC, IV, LMNOP,
OR → AND A BIB MILK BONE
STAT!

NEXT TIME ON ER

DON'T WORRY... SHE'S GOING TO BE FINE. WE SEE THIS SORT OF THING
ALL THE TIME.

DRB and J-Board Reports

- January 15, 1995—The student who was accused of vandalizing Davis Hall has now received community service hours, probation until May 1996, and a warning that would lead to an immediate dismissal if the student becomes involved in any vandalism, harassment or disorderly conduct.
- January 15, 1995—The three Copeland Hall visitation violators have been given a visitation first offense, one month probation, and a warning letter placed in the disciplinary file.

- February 7, 1995—Two students were charged with visitation violation in Davis Hall and have received first offense violation.
- February 12, 1995—Two students in Copeland Hall violated quiet hours, and the case is still pending.
- February 13, 1995—Three Copeland Hall residents received a first offense visitation violation.
- February 14, 1995—A case involving five students violating visitation in Copeland Hall is still pending.

The Judicial Board has not met.

MC Crime Log

- February 12, 1995—In Gamble Hall, an off-campus visitor has been accused of sexual battery in connection with a Maryville College student. The Maryville College Security is assisting the Maryville City Police Department with the investigation.

PHOTOGRAPHY

If you have any photography experience, the Echo could use you. If you are interested, contact Paul Weaver at x 8461, or Marc Hall at 977-4565.

Photo by Marc Hall

Photo by Marc Hall

Wyatt

continued from p. 1

relate to students," Wyatt said.

She continued her career in student development with a masters from Peabody College in counseling and student personnel administration. She received her doctorate in higher education administration from Vanderbilt University.

Seven of her years working in student development have been here at MC. As VP for Student Development, she supervises religious life, athletics, housing, student activities, Crawford House, and Career Services.

When asked what she will miss the most, she responded, "Working with the people."

Wyatt commented that her worst moments at Maryville have been

"We need a President who is a part of the people's revolution—we don't need a President from Washington, D. C."—

The son of MC alumni Andrew L. Alexander ('34) and Floreine Rankin Alexander ('35) announced on the steps of the Maryville courthouse, on Feb. 28, that he will seek the Republican nomination for the presidency.

Alexander served as Governor of TN from 1979-87, president of UT from 1988-90, and as the Secretary of Education under the Bush administration from 1990-92. Alexander is also a former member of the Maryville College Board of Directors. He was elected to the board in 1975 and served until 1986.

Maryville College was involved in the announcement on a number of levels—transportation for the press was provided by MC and coordinated by the College Republicans, and numerous students attended the announcement, including Sophomore Clint Wight (above).

Loy

continued from p. 1

"Loy was my first good friend when I started working here," said Michelle Henry, Catering Supervisor, who has worked with Loy for four years. Henry smiled, "She's got the same 21-year-old mind, I guess. Same as I do. I can't stress that enough." She continued, "She collects pigs and cows. People put them on their heads for a play here on campus during interim. The students loved her. Foreign students loved her a lot. She still hears from many of them. She gets gifts and post cards. Christmas cards, Valentine's Day cards. She's got a fan club. A lot of people in Japan are saying 'Yipper!' and 'What's up, Doc!'"

Jeff, another Marriott employee, added, "All of her boys that come here are lookin' for her."

"Yeah," Michelle recalled, "She'd sing 'Rocky Top' when all the Alabama boys would come in. She's a big UT fan! So, she'd tease all of them." Michelle stopped beaming and added, "A lot of the kids don't realize she's gone yet. They think she's coming back." She paused, "I miss her."

Loy lives right down the road.

For 60 years, she has been just a few minutes from campus. Loy was born and raised here in Maryville. In the 1940s, she skated up and down the sidewalks near her elementary school on Broadway. Her girlhood home was near Wilkerson Pike (currently Court St.).

Yet, she said, "It wasn't until I started working for Marriott that I first set foot on campus."

Loy grew up, got married and stayed to raise children here. Loy has three children: Cheri, Holli, and Jeff. Of her son, Loy said, "He takes me anywhere, does the shopping and pays the bills."

She still rises at 5 a.m. and goes to bed around midnight even though the doctor says she needs her rest. She is supposed to remain hooked up to an oxygen tank all day, "but can you see somebody walkin' around with tubes in the nose all the time? Well, maybe, but not me," Loy said. "I never felt I was more than 18 years old. I was 55 before I realized I was an old woman."

Catherine Cobb, one of Loy's friends and co-workers said, "There is no way we can replace Loy. Her job can be filled, but Loy cannot be replaced. She had her personal little touch about things."

continued from last column

when she has felt a student is "at risk."

One of the achievements of which she is proudest was being a part of the process which placed a student representative on the Board of Directors. "That was really a step forward, I think, for students," Wyatt said.

When asked about her personal life, Wyatt said that she has never married because "I never met a man who deserved to be that happy."

For leisure activities, she enjoys travel, music, theatre, the mountains, and household maintenance.

Wyatt hopes to still have contact with the college community. "I really hope eventually to be able to have some time to volunteer back to the college and still have a chance to relate to the students," she said. "I will miss just being with students and getting to relate to folks in a more relaxed way."

PAPA JOHN'S PIZZA Call your PAPA 983-PAPA

One Large
Perfect Italian Sausage Pizza

$5<sup>99</sup>
+ Tax

Additional toppings .95 each. Not valid with any other coupon. Valid only at participating stores.

One Extra Large Two Toppings or Two Extra Large Two Toppings

$9<sup>95</sup> + Tax $15<sup>95</sup> + Tax

Additional toppings $1.25 each. Not valid with any other coupon. Valid only at participating stores.

Fighting Scots fall to Millsaps, end season at 20-7

by Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

The men's basketball season ended late Saturday night when Millsaps College Senior Phillip Robinson's desperation shot from the corner found the bottom of the net with no time remaining.

The final score was 88-86, as the Fighting Scots ended the season at 20-7.

The game took two overtimes to decide and it was a thriller from start to finish. Both teams had opportunities to win the game.

In the first half it was all Millsaps as they jumped all over the Scots and were up 24-10 with 6:10 to go after a basket by Robinson. The USA/CNNpoll ranked the Majors of Millsaps as number 13 and in the first half they looked every bit as good as that.

The Scots would come back, however, and after a three-pointer by Junior Sammy Williams things seemed to be looking good as the Scots had cut the lead to eight with the score at 29-21 with 2:06 left before the break.

At half the score was 34-24 Millsaps and the large and roudy home crowd was getting their money worth.

The Scots came out smoking in the second half and the few Maryville faithful had plenty to cheer about.

Junior Jeremy Burgess got a steal and a basket to start it off and then a few minutes later Senior John Robinette hit a three-pointer to cut the lead to just three with 17:34 left. The score was then 36-33.

Sophomore Stan Pennington continued to battle inside and cut the lead to one point with 9:28 to go and the score standing at 45-44.

The game remained close and it seemed as if Millsaps was going to hold on until Williams came up with a steal and was fouled on the way to the basket with just 12 seconds remaining. At this point the Scots were down by only one and in position to take their first lead.

Williams hit one of two and tied the game and when Millsaps missed at the buzzer the game was headed to overtime.

In the first overtime the Majors again jumped out to a lead and were up by four with just under two minutes to go with the score 76-72.

Then Williams came up with a huge three-pointer with a minute to go to tie the score and then, a few seconds later with Millsaps back in the lead, Burgess found the bottom of the net from long range to give the Scots the lead at 79-78 with under three seconds to go.

After a foul by the Scots it was Junior Johnny Brunini's turn to play hero. He made one of two and the game was sent into double overtime at 79-79.

In the second overtime it seemed as if the Scots might pull it out when Junior Scott McDaniel went diving over the scorer's table to save the ball to a streaking Robinette.

The Scots were up five when McDaniel found Sophomore K.C. Haworth with 3:11 to go.

It was Millsaps turn to come back and they did in a big way. First Junior Brad Price hit a three to cut the lead to one with 2:14 to go and then, after a Burgess lay up and down by one with 1.6 seconds remaining, Robinson came up with his shot from the corner to win the game, 88-86.

The Scots first round tournament game was just as good as Roanoke College collided with the Fighting Scots on March 2.

On Nov. 27 Burgess hit a three pointer in the last second to defeat Mt. Union. That was three months ago and it was not the NCAA tournament. On March 2, Williams helped to extend the men's basketball season for one more game as he hit two pressure free-throws with 4.3 seconds remaining to provide the winning margin against Roanoke College by the score of 77-76.

In the first half the home Scots worked visiting Roanoke College as they raced out to a 37-27 half-time lead.

Sophomore Stan Pennington stole the show in the first-half as he was a one man show on the block as he

Photo by Marc Hall

"Look into my eyes, boy"--

Sophomore Dee Bell helps his team with the 77-76 victory against Roanoke College in the first round of the NCAA tourney.

tallied 10 points.

Senior Bryant Lee kept Roanoke in the game with 10 points of his own in the first-half.

In the second-half the visitors crept back into the game with a 9-2 run that cut the lead to 53-50 with 10:48 to go in the game.

Roanoke then recaptured the lead with 9:37 to go when Junior Derrick Boykin scored to put his team up by the score of 54-53.

For the rest of the way the game stayed close and then Williams started to take over.

First he hit a streaking Junior Bryan Mills for the assist. Mills was fouled on the play as the home crowd erupted. Then, on the following free-throw Williams came up with the rebound and follow-up basket to put Maryville back in the lead at 72-70 with 2:14 to go in the game.

This all came after Roanoke had pulled ahead by five with 4:32 to go after Junior Akil Stewart's three-pointer found the bottom of the net to make the score 66-61.

Maryville was up 75-74 with 1:27 to play when Stewart came up strong again and put his team in the lead with 40.6 left in the game. After a Maryville time-out Roanoke had possession of the ball and seemed to be ready to run the clock out.

Williams had other plans as he blocked Roanoke's shot with the shot clock running down and then picked up the loose ball with 4.3 left to go. Williams was fouled on the play.

After a Roanoke time-out Williams calmly hit two free-throws to send the crowd into pandemonium.

Roanoke did have one last chance and Freshman Nathan Hungate got a good look at the basket. His shot looked good, but found the back of the rim and gave Maryville the 77-76 victory.

Williams ended the game with 21 points. Pennington had 20.

Roanoke was lead by Lee who finished with 28.

Photo by Marc Hall

"I'm coming at you"--

Junior Sammy Williams not only grabbed this rebound but also poured in a team high 21 points against Roanoke on March 2.

Lady Scots defeat Roanoke, head for NCAA's "Sweet Sixteen"

by Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

Since a Jan. 31 loss to Roanoke College, the Lady Scots Basketball team has reeled off seven straight wins, which includes the end of their regular season and the first and second round of the NCAA tournament. The loss to Roanoke did cost them their number one ranking in the South. However, it did not take them long to recapture that top spot as they defeated Emory University and began tournament play as the number one ranked team in the South region. On March 4 the Lady Scots avenged that earlier loss to Roanoke in a big way as they defeated Roanoke 90-59 to advance to the sweet sixteen.

The Lady Scots were lead by Junior Jamie Parrott with a game high of 33.

The game was well in hand at half-time as the Lady Scots were up 42-33.

Also leading the Lady Scots were Freshman Megan Casey with 14, including four three-pointers. Junior Lisa Cambell also had a great game with 22 points.

This rematch was set up after the Lady Scots did away with Trinity College (TX) on March 1 to kick off March Madness here on the campus of Maryville College.

Trinity came out ready to pull the upset and Junior Yanika Daniels and Freshman Jennifer Warren for Trinity seemed to be unstoppable as they scored their team's first 30 points and kept the game close throughout the first half.

Early in the first half the Lady Scots' answer for Trinity was Junior Jamie Parrott as she came up big with 23 first-half points.

Trinity did strike first as Daniels put them up 2-0 early in the game. Parrott came right back, and from there the Lady Scots took control and would never trail again.

The Lady Scots were up 21-17 when Sophomore Tracy Spires hit Parrott for one basket. Then Spires played long ball as she connected with Freshman Christine Rajkowski on a full-court pass. Rajkowski then in turn got it to Parrott for a 28-20 lead with 9:09 left in the half.

It was Rajkowski again hurting Trinity when she hit her first of three three-pointers that stretched the lead to 31-20 with 8:17 to go.

Trinity came out in the second half ready to play as Sophomore Kathy Bleser scored six straight points as she cut the lead to eight at 50-42 with still 18:12 to go in the game.

Now with Parrott on the bench in foul trouble it looked as if Trinity was poised to make a run. They would not get any closer than eight as the Lady Scots went on a 14-4 run that was capped by another Rajkowski three-pointer, her third of the game, that ran the lead to 64-46 with 14:50 to play.

Daniels then scored four straight for Trinity that lead Maryville to call a timeout as their lead was cut to 12 at the 7:44 mark.

Daniels' effort was short lived as, with Junior Lisa Cambell and Parrott both on the bench in foul trouble, Senior Laura Sibold stepped up and drew the offensive foul from Daniels. This was Daniels' fifth foul and her game was over as the Trinity hopes ended with her.

The Lady Scots went on to the 90-72 win, victory number twenty for the season.

The Lady Scots were lead by Parrott with 36. Junior Shelly Johnson also played well as she added 12 points, including a three-pointer. Rajkowski also reached double figures with 11 and three three-pointers. Cambell was the fourth player to reach double digits in scoring as she had 16 points.

Trinity was lead by Warren and Daniels with 28 and 25. Bleser also came up big in the second half, scoring all 11 of her points after half-time.

On Feb. 15 the two top teams in the South met to decide who would finish the regular season with that top spot at the polls. The then number two Lady Scots traveled to Atlanta, GA, to face the then number one Emory College.

At the start of the game, it looked

photo by Marc Hall

"This is not a problem"--

Junior Lisa Cambell goes baseline against Trinity. The Lady Scots won 90-72 in the first round of the NCAA tourey.

as if Emory would hold onto their ranking when they jumped out to an early lead. In fact, the Eagles of Emory scored first and never looked back. The lead grew to 15 points with 9:41 left in the half at 32-17.

The Lady Scots fought back before half-time and got within four points with 3:49 left in the opening half. The Eagles countered with an 11-6 run to end the half and put them in control at half-time with them up by nine with score of 51-42.

The second half was a totally different game as the Lady Scots took over and drew even with the Eagles only seven minutes into the half at 59-59. The Lady Scots did this on the strength of a 17-8 run.

At the 6 minute mark, this lead had reached nine points as the score stood at 74-65 in favor of the Lady Scots.

Next it was the Eagles turn to come back, and they wasted little time as they went on a 10-0 run that pulled them back into the lead at 75-74, with just over three minutes remaining.

The Lady Scots took the lead for good with 45 seconds to go when Freshman Megan Casey stepped up and drilled a three pointer to make the score 83-80. The Eagles would again close the lead to two, but would get no closer. When Junior Jama Cameron hit two free throws to make the score 89-83, the outcome was sealed.

The Emory Eagles had five players in double figures, lead by Jackson's 23.

The Scots were lead by Parrott who poured in 41 points along with five rebounds and four steals. Casey added 10 points, including two three pointers. Junior Lisa Cambell also had a strong game with 13 points and nine rebounds.

The Lady Scots will make their bid for the "Elite Eight" on March 10 against Wisconsin-Oshkosh (25-0) at home. Tip-off will be at 7:30 p. m.

photo by Marc Hall

"Can you say 'All-American'"--

Junior Jamie Parrott dropping in two of her 33 as she led her team to a 90-59 victory over Roanoke College, March 4.

Peer Mentors offer guidance, help

by Becky Lill
Staff Writer

Freshman year is a big transition for most people. Moving away from home, making new friends, adjusting to new teachers, and successfully managing newfound independence are all very taxing at times.

Many times, students don't adapt well to these changes. They often feel alone and discouraged. As a result, there is often a high degree of dropouts after the first year.

Maryville College is ranked seventh in the Top Ten Small Liberal Arts Colleges in the South, according to "U.S. News and World Report," but the retention rate, the number of freshmen who return to this institution for their sophomore year, is very low.

In an attempt to circumvent the low retention and graduation rates here at Maryville College, the Peer Mentor Program was created.

Ginny Rigell and Aaron Stone brought up the idea of Peer Mentors at a class council meeting last year and it soon became sort of a "class of '97 project" through the Senate.

Because many students showed an interest in the program, it is going strong today.

The Peer Mentor Program consists of the following: two faculty members, two staff Orientation leaders, two Senators, two representatives from each class, and six members-at-large.

These people advise and work for new students to make them feel welcome and comfortable at Maryville. They want students to know what is available here, so that students will want to further their educations at Maryville College.

Peer Mentors give freshmen someone to trust and depend upon other than staff or faculty members. In theory, they are non-judgemental and can relate more easily to incoming students. They promote interaction between freshmen and upperclassmen, and they help freshmen form healthy and lasting relationships with other students.

Peer Mentors work to enforce the Maryville College Covenant and to integrate it into the students' everyday lives. They want to help freshmen realize that scholarship, respect, citizenship, and integrity will help them have a better understanding of the world.

Peer Mentors also work with the Vision 2000 Program.

Anyone interested in applying to be a Peer Mentor for the 1995-96 school year may pick up an application in the Office of Student Development. The applications must be filled out and returned to Student Development by 5 p.m. on March 8.

Fourteen Peer Mentors and several alternates will be chosen.

Peer Mentors are required to attend Orientation classes which are held on Thursdays from 9:30 to 10:45 a.m.

Students who are chosen to be Peer Mentors receive the benefits of a private room at a double room rate. They are eligible for the ten meal plan. They can also count their work as Bonner hours.

For more information, call Aaron Stone at 8771 or Beckie Heckler at 8781.

Photo by Paul Weaver

"What's a welkin?"—

Prospective students gather in the CCM to ask questions about Maryville College. The event was part of the day long Open House on Feb. 25.

Student rights at Maryville College

by Kenyon Evans
Staff Writer

The Judicial System here at MC functions to help maintain the community. In order to preserve this system, it is imperative that all students be aware of their rights. As the MC Judicial Manual states, "Basic to our program is a faith in the properly informed student."

Many students are not aware of their rights and are not properly informed. One student who was recently written up and wished to appeal commented, "No one ever told me how to appeal or what I could do about it ... I'm sure it says in the handbook, but I guess they just expect you to know." Actually, the process for appealing a Disciplinary Review Board decision was mistakenly left out of the handbook this year. However, if a student meets with Cathy Cate, Director of Campus Programs, the student will be informed of all his or her rights, including the right to appeal.

After an incident report is filed, the student receives a notification that informs him or her of his or her right to make a statement and suggests that they meet with Cate to do so. Cate takes these statements from students, answers any questions that the students may have, and tells them what to expect. Cate commented that a common misconception among students is that she is an advocate for them or that she has a say in what the DRB decides. "A lot of students are real nervous when they come in. They don't understand the process; they don't understand that I'm just here to take a statement."

After the statements of the student and the RA or RD have been made anonymous (replacing names with student A, student B), the case is presented before the DRB. The DRB then makes a decision about the case or refers it to the Judicial Board. Cases are referred to the JB when the case involves potentially severe sanctions or extenuating circumstances.

Maryville College is a community where the students are primarily responsible for maintaining the community. Cate commented that a "definite strength" of the MC Judicial System is that "the students are in charge."

MC Equestrian team travels to KY, plans local show

by Sarah Stevenson
Assistant Editor

Maryville College's Equestrian team traveled to Moorehead State University in Kentucky for competition recently. A large number of MC students and parents were in attendance to show their support for the team.

Christen McCammon, the team coordinator, expressed excitement on the progress of the team, "The team has gone from two to seven riders. Even though it is a new program, the new riders are performing really well," she said.

The participants placed as follows: McCammon second in over fences and second and third in under saddle in the intermediate division, Megan McWhorter third in over fences and fifth in under saddle in the novice division, Elaine Gibbs fourth, Lisa Hensley fourth, Tiffany Rudicil sixth in under saddle in the walk trot division, and Aimee Cropper third and fourth in under saddle in the walk, trot, cant division.

"Everyone did extremely well. The horses were very difficult," McCammon commented.

Their most recent show was on March 4 and 5 at Midway College in Midway, Ky.

The team will hold a fundraising horse show on April 8 at Penrose

Farm in West Knoxville. Everyone is invited to attend. The team is currently looking for sponsors.

The team is looking for new riders for the fall. Anyone who is interested should contact McCammon at box 2447. Students who are interested do not need to own their own horses, and experience is not necessary.

“May I help you?”—

MC's new Director of Food Services, Marge Bradley, chats with a student about changes in the cafeteria.

MC welcomes Bradley, new director of food services

by Becky Lill
Staff Writer

“Of a good beginning cometh a good end.” This quote from John Heywood seems to describe the new addition to the Marriott staff here at Maryville College. Marge Bradley, the new Food Services Director, seems to be off to a good start.

When asked what attracted her to Maryville College, she replied, “I really like the small campus. It provides for a close family setting.”

Bradley was born and raised in the Cumberland Gap area, and for the past twenty years has worked in Public Relations and Development and as the Director of the Academic Advisement Center at LMU.

Bradley also has a strong background in catering and has had quite a bit of experience in kitchen operation and production.

Michelle Henry, Catering Supervisor, said “Everyone is really pleased with Marge. We can really feel the changes.” She went on to say, “Marge really seems to know what the students want.”

Henry also points out that Bradley is making a lot of changes in the cafeteria, such as the improved potato bar, salad bar, deli bar, banana split bar, and the new menus. She has also purchased much needed kitchen utensils, juice machines, and new decorations.

When asked about pending changes in the dining hall, Bradley replied, “I’m going to make small changes at first. I don’t think it’s wise to make large changes right away. First I’ll see how things are working now, and then I’ll make major decisions.”

Jeff Sayre, Marriott employee, says that Bradley “gets right in there and helps out. She’s very professional. She keeps the area very neat, organized, and clean.”

“I really would like to see students and faculty want to come in and to enjoy coming in. I am more than happy to work with the students and satisfy their wants as long as they’re not too outrageous,” Bradley says. “I’m implementing extra things for more variety while maintaining good quality.”

She also thinks that “the cafeteria looks nice, but it could look nicer. My overall goal is to improve student satisfaction, and improving the cosmetic aspect will add to this.”

Gevin Simpson, Student Supervisor/Special Events Coordinator, says simply, “Marge is great. She is very accepting of anything that is helpful to Marriott.”

Since each student pays an allotted amount for meals in the dining hall, Bradley is eager to make choices amenable to a wide range of students, but she cannot do this without student input.

Bradley and her staff are open to any suggestions or questions that students may have. There is a suggestion box in the cafeteria, and students are welcome to speak personally with Bradley.

Fay recovering, hopes to return to MC soon

by Claire Stancampiano
Staff Writer

After a battle with ovarian cancer and over four hours of surgery, Fay Humphrey, Secretary to the Chaplain, still has “plenty of smiles left to give away.”

On Feb. 2, the majority of the cancer was removed through the surgery; however, a small amount still remains in her bladder. In a few weeks, Humphrey will make an appointment with her doctor to begin radiation treatment.

When asked how she was feeling now she responded by saying “I’m very healthy. My doctor says I came through the surgery beautifully; much better than he had expected.”

The problem now stems from a broken rib which came from a fall she had on Feb. 16. She said “I can’t really move or breathe without pain, but the doctor says that it will lessen pretty soon.”

The Center for Campus Ministry, on the other hand, is not doing as well as Humphrey. Rev. Stephen Nickle said affectionately, “The CCM is really falling apart without her.”

Her reaction to this statement was, “I’m sure they are handling everything O.K., but I can’t wait to get back and help them.”

Humphrey will return to work after she begins radiation “if I’m not too sick,” she said. If she is not feeling well after the treatments begin, she will wait until after they are completed to return to the CCM.

Fay Humphrey

As far as activities go, Humphrey has been reading a bit, relaxing in her reclining chair, and she added, “I’ve been going into the kitchen and directing my husband.” She expressed deep gratitude for all the cards, gifts, and warm thoughts she has received. They have helped her maintain a positive attitude.

Room selection packages will be out soon!

Room selection preference cards must be returned before 5 p.m. on March 17.

If you don’t turn in your preference card in before you leave, you will need to wait until after room selection to sign up. Resident Assistants will distribute the packages to residents—commuters can pick up room selection packages in the Commuter Lounge. The room selection process is from April 3-4 in Lloyd lobby.

"Look Homeward, Angel" to open March 9

by Sarah Stevenson
Assistant Editor

Producing a play can be a time consuming task. This is especially true when the time in which the cast and crew have to work is reduced.

That is what has happened to the people working on this spring's presentation of "Look Homeward, Angel." The usual six to eight week production time has been reduced to just over five weeks. This is just the way the scheduling worked out, so the cast, crew, and director have made adjustments accordingly.

"I think that with the time pressures we have, that everything is going well," said Stage Manager Tiffany Rudicil. "But it's rushed," she admitted.

Director Jill Bergeron agreed. "It's been a little bit tougher than most shows," she said.

The play was written by Ketti Frings and is based on Thomas Wolfe's novel of the same name. The book is a slightly fictionalized account of Wolfe's life. The character Eugene Gant represents Wolfe.

The play, set in 1916, is a dramatization of the section of the novel where Eugene leaves home to seek his fortune and his identity in the real world. It is billed as a drama, but there are some moments of humor without.

"Angel" won a Pulitzer Prize as well as the New York Critics Award for Best Play in 1958. The original production starred Anthony Perkins as Eugene and Jo Van Fleet as his mother, Eliza and had a long run on Broadway.

"I think the show will be really good," said Bergeron.

The Maryville College production will feature Barbara Kisler as Eliza and Michelle Rudisill as Madame Elizabeth. Kisler performed in "Christy" this summer and Rudisill is an alumnus of the MC Playhouse.

Eugene will be played by Senior Mike Wilson. His older brother, Ben, will be portrayed by Senior Brian Prather. Another senior, Julie Williams, will play the role of Eugene's "older woman." Timothy Barnes has been cast as the father, W. O. Gant, and Sarah Stevenson will portray Helen, Eugene's sister.

Other roles will be played by the supporting cast which includes Melody Alexander, Christy Garland, Michelle Lawson, Karson Leitch, John McDonald, Melane McKay, Erin Rice, Aaron Stone, and Sam Waycaster.

"It's going really well as far as character development and story line," Williams commented. "I think we'll be ready for opening night," she said.

The production will run at 8 p.m. March 9, 10, and 11 in the MC Playhouse. Tickets are $7.50 for adults and $5.00 for area students, senior citizens, and college faculty and staff. MC students are admitted free if they present a current ID.

"It'll all work out," Bergeron said. "We're just going to have to push a little bit harder to make sure it does."

Anyone with any questions should call x8161.

"I'm in a wild, blind fury!"—Timothy Barnes rehearses with Mike Wilson and Michelle Lawson for MC's upcoming production of "Look Homeward, Angel." The play will run March 9-11 at 8 p.m. in the theatre.

Delta Omicron alive and kicking

by Amanda Martin
Arts Editor

One of the oldest organizations on campus is being revitalized. The Maryville College chapter of Delta Omicron, the international professional music fraternity for men and women, has more than doubled its membership this year.

Delta Omicron is an honor society consisting of both professional and college level musicians.

The purpose of the group is to benefit the community, the school, and the DO members through community service and scholarship programs.

One of the primary goals of the chapter is to promote music in the community.

"DO has been a sleeping fraternity for the last few years," said Chapter President Mary Frazier. "We are now trying to bring it back to life."

The new on-campus activities, which began this fall, include monthly recitals and information sessions with professional musicians. Both are open to the public.

Dotty Bushing, an MC Alumna, is the supervisor for the chapter. "Dotty has kept DO alive all these years," said Frazier.

The fraternity is open to both music majors and non-music majors who have a cumulative grade point average of 2.5 and a 3.0 GPA in music classes.

"I believe DO is an invaluable experience," said Faculty Advisor Ann Taddie, who is a voice instructor at MC. "One of the most obvious reasons is that it is impressive on a resume. It encourages the academic development of students as well as the development of their musical skills."

Other advantages for DO members are the scholarship opportunities they receive through the organization. Masayo Ohashi, a senior piano performance major, received a scholarship to study piano at the Taubman Institute in New York this past summer.

Members of Delta Omicron provide community services in the form of concerts for area hospitals and nursing homes, especially during holidays, and ushering for on-campus musical activities. Music tutoring is also available through the group.

For more information, contact Mary Frazier, box 2119.

Upcoming events . . . . .

- ° Mary Frazier will present a junior voice recital on March 2, at 8 p.m. in the FAC Music Hall. The accompanist is Jennifer Stadtmiller. The program will include works by Brahms, Carpenter, Debussy, and Mozart.
- ° Aaron Stone will give a concert on March 4, at 8 p.m. in the FAC Recital Hall accompanied by Jennifer Stadtmiller. The program is entitled "Dreams of Broadway" and will feature famous Broadway songs. Admission is $3 for adults, $2 for students, children, and senior citizens. Proceeds will benefit Delta Omicron, the campus music fraternity.
- ° The Maryville College Theatre production of "Look Homeward Angel" will be performed March 9, 10, and 11 at 8 p.m. in the Theatre. Auditions for the next MC production, "Bury the Dead," will be held at 7 p.m. in the FAC Music Hall March 13 and 14.
- ° There will be a student recital Thursday, March 16, at 8 p.m. in the FAC Music Hall.
- ° The art exhibit in the FAC for the month of March will feature work by MC faculty and students in a range of media including computer graphics, weaving, photography, and jewelry.

The Highland Echo

MARCH 17, 1995

MARYVILLE COLLEGE

VOL. LXXX, NO. 9

Inside

Bo and Chris review movies
on p. 3

Josh and Gevin,
p. 2 & 5

Literacy corps forms FEL, food pantry

by Chee Hill
Staff Writer

Most people at Maryville College know about the Student Literacy Corps, but few actually know what it does to serve its community. One of the activities that it has going now is the Family Education Laboratory, known as the FEL.

Last year, Linda Clark, the advisor to the Student Literacy Corps, wrote for and was awarded a grant from the Tennessee Legislature. Included in the written grant was the idea that the FEL, where there are families who learn how to read together, would serve a snack or dinner.

Just recently has the FEL been able to serve the literacy students. Abigail Blankner, assistant director of MC volunteer services, is the person in charge of the food services in FEL and has been for about a month.

"We're only hoping that the food will not only serve to fulfill some of their (literacy students') needs but also to keep them coming back," said Blankner. She continued, "The more needs that we can provide for them the more likely they are to continue because the nutrition rate for the students in literacy programs are horrendous... the fallout rate is incredible, and having the food there is an incentive." The food is provided as a dinner consisting of sandwiches, fruit, and juices. There are two dinners a week, Mondays and Thursdays. The program itself works Monday through Thursday. Last fall snacks were provided, but now the snacks have progressed into meals. "We are aiming for see Family lab, p. 8

"I've got it!"—
Freshmen Jeff Gallaher and Jim Lummus play frisbee on Lloyd beach as they enjoy the spring weather.

Photo by Marc Hall

Kirkland celebrates 34 years of maintenance

by Josh Goocey
Staff Writer

Loyalty and industriousness are indispensable qualities that seem to be lacking in today's generation, but I have found an individual—who is not a part of our generation—who is industrious and loyal when Maryville College is concerned. His name is Bob Kirkland, and he is a maintenance man. He began work for the college in September 1961 as one of the maintenance crew and has been faithful ever since. That means that he has provided the college with 34 years of hard work and loyalty.

Kirkland was born and raised in Monroe County which is only about thirty minutes from Maryville. Before he worked for MC he was a hired hand on a Tennessee farm, and he also worked for a packing company. He has always worked hard to make ends meet, and he has proven that through his years of service to MC.

Kirkland has a multitude of tasks, and he seems to enjoy them. He has five members on staff, and this includes students and full-time staff. They are responsible for items such as lighting, heating, plumbing, and all of the other problems that we can not fix ourselves. He has a very demanding schedule, and his job is never done. He usually works eight hours a day, but this is never enough time.

As students we have almost all had breakdowns in our room and told our R.A. that it needed to be see Kirkland, p. 8

Lady Scots
basketball season ends, p. 6

Fine Arts events, p. 10 & 11

MC Handbook falls under scrutiny on p. 4

photo by Marc Hall

From the Staff, the Echo Editorial. . . Editorial

Partisan politics have gotten a bit out of hand.

It seems that the Republicans and the Democrats spend so much time serving the party and looking out for the interests of the party that they are no longer serving the people or looking out for the interests of the people.

The two major national parties are equally to blame for this. Somewhere along the way they forgot what the purpose of government is—to serve the people. The terms we use reflect this memory lapse. We no longer have statesmen in Washington, we have politicians, who deal with politics, which is not exclusively the care of the people. Politics refers to the management of the nation, the parties, and the way politicians get elected.

Politicians have become so caught up in getting reelected that they are neglecting the wants, needs, hopes, dreams, etc. of the people that they represent. Washington has lost contact with its constituents. What else can be said?

The Republicans claim their success in the recent elections is a revolution. No revolution, however, has taken place. No bold new steps are being taken. If the American people wish to revolutionize Washington, they need to hold the politicians accountable at the polls. If your congressman is preparing to vote on an issue, then you need to let him or her know how you feel about that issue. Likewise, our representatives need to seek our opinions on the issues that they are dealing with.

Perhaps the solution is a third party.

During the 1992 Presidential election, Ross Perot joined the race as a darkhorse independent candidate, and caused quite a stir in political circles. The power of the independent candidate was demonstrated as

"We no longer have statesmen in Washington, we have politicians . . ."

Perot drummed up support because of his lack of political ties and responsibilities to a specific party.

A third party would upset the balance of power in the national political arena. Instead of national politics boiling down to Republican versus Democrat, and people voting for the Republican candidate because the Democrat does not appeal to them (or vice versa), the people would have a viable alternative. Currently people can vote Republican and hope that their candidate wins, vote Democrat and hope that their candidate wins, or vote for a third party candidate and watch their candidate fail in the primaries. American politics have ceased to provide the American people with a choice.

With the 1996 Presidential race approaching, this problem with American politics becomes even more apparent. In the eyes of many people, the race does not exist outside of the Republican party. The question is not who will win the race, but which Republican will beat Clinton.

This is a grave problem for the American people and government to face, and it is one that we must face together and immediately.

The American people need to hold the men and women who represent them in Washington and their state legislatures accountable for their actions. The only way to do this is to keep up with what they do and then act upon that knowledge accordingly.

It is our responsibility to do our part as educated voters. It is time for the American people to vote responsibly, refuse to subscribe to partisan politics, work only for the good of the nation as a whole, and vote only for those willing to work for these goals and these goals alone. If American politics are out of hand, it is the fault of the voter just as much as it is the fault of the politician.

photo by Marc Hall

by Josh Hogan
Columnist

Karma and personal cages

I find it exceedingly difficult to be sitting in front of this impersonal word processor on a day like today when all of Creation is blazing forth in one of the first warning beacons of spring. Fortunately, I think I can withstand the onslaught of my own personal "itchy feet" and write a bit about something that has given me some serious thought lately.

Several of my conversations with people on campus have been about a little understood Eastern idea, that of karma. I know that word may inspire one to think of the 60s and John Lennon's "Instant Karma." Really, though, there is nothing especially "psychedelic" or outrageous about the concept. I speak of the concept in the sense of a web of cause and effect; simply put, you reap what you sow.

I think the conversation that inspired my interest in karma was one I had not so long ago with Alex Little. If I remember correctly, we had been speaking of affirmative action and whether or not it was needed. However, the conclusion of that discussion is not my concern at the present. What holds more bearing on my thought was a general discussion concerning race relations, how people belonging to different races saw one another and the perceptions of "white" and "black" in general. One thing that came up is how it may be difficult for us in the wake of the civil rights movements to perceive the amount of racism and discrimination that still certainly exists in today's American society. There are still "white people" who are afraid of and feel superior to "black people"; there are also "black people" who believe that all "whites" are the same and are out to oppress them. Neither of these, I believe, are desirable mindsets.

One might say, "Well, that's believable, but what does it have to do with karma and Eastern philosophy?" I would say, in true retro-sixties language, there is a lot of "bad karma" out there. We as a society made up of many different backgrounds are sowing a lot of bad seeds. The result, as I saw it then, was that our different groups based on race or religion or whatever were staring across at each other from cages built of our own making. Occasionally, there was one brave soul—a Ghandi, a Martin Luther King, Jr., a Jesus of Nazareth—who took the brave step of walking out and leaving a door for the rest of us to follow.

Even so, it is not as simple as that. Inside those broader cages lie cages we construct around ourselves. These are cages that for one reason or another are around us constraining us and hurting us. We as individuals, even within a larger fragmentation of races, creeds and social groups, separate ourselves from the rest of Creation.

There is one problem inherent here, though. If one takes the belief that people's ills are of their own making and passively allow those who are trapped to remain in their cages, they fail to break out of their own. It is really not unlike noticing the twig in the eye of other's while only slightly shifting the steel girder in one's own. One must also keep in mind that many of us are in situations that may contribute greatly to these cages. It is much easier for someone like me, with a good amount of luxury and leisure time, to think of these things than it is to break out of one's cage.

How does one break out? It seems over and over that Love is the answer, although I know that sounds hopelessly clichéd. Shouldn't we think of Love in such a way as to define it as an active participation in the construction and stewardship of Creation? In an active Love, we can address not only our personally shortcomings and come to grips with imperfections, but also approach and embrace our fellow creature, whatever that creature may be.

So, in effect, let love be the file to work on the bars of our cage. I know that may sound like some absurdly moronic love song: "The File of Love" by Johnny Cash or something like that, but I'm perfectly serious. Maybe when the swords are beaten into plowshares, so also will the guns be traded in for files.

PHOTOGRAPHY

If you have any photography experience, the Echo could use you. If you are interested, contact Paul Weaver at x 8461, or Marc Hall at 977-4565.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR . . .

The Echo welcomes your comments, letters and guest columns. All written material to be published in the Echo must be typed and accompanied by your name, post office box number, and phone number. Send material to The Highland Echo, Box 2661. The Echo can be reached by calling the Student Publications Office at campus extension 8176. The opinions expressed in the Echo do not necessarily reflect the views of Maryville College.

photo by Marc Hall

by Bo McMichael
Columnist

It is a new month, but with new problems. In February no movies, and now with March moving on, it seems we have no money. Yes, movie-goers, the budget has hit rock bottom. You may ask yourself, why doesn't the newspaper or even the theaters pay our way? The reason is that we are not Siskel & Ebert, yet. We are, for now, two guys who enjoy partaking in the American pastime of movie watching in the warm and comfortable surrounding of a theater.

Well, it took every nickel and dime we had to get us to the movies this week. However, due to baseball games and the NCAA Sweet Sixteen, we had to limit our viewing time to one movie. But what a movie it was.

Bo and Chris: flat broke

Imagine, if you will, that you have died and begun your travel to the other side, and suddenly you are pulled back to reality. Once you have returned, you begin to be connected to someone else. This someone else is pure evil, and was able to jump on your back when you crossed back over to the living side.

If your imagination can handle such an imagine then you are prepared to see "Hideaway." Jeff Goldblum ("Jurassic Park," "The Fly") plays the piggy-backed, should be dead, going insane, father of the beautiful daughter, guy who is brought back by a guy that specializes in after death experiences. Alicia Silverstone ("The Crush") is back in her second role playing the innocent daughter, who the bad guy wants!

Bo: "The ultimate battle; Good vs Evil! Thanks to my partner rejoining me, after missing two movies due to outside interference, I loved it! We were planning to see another movie, however my partner wanted to see "Hideaway" so I agreed. Bad mistake! He and the movie scared the living daylights out of me. The bad thing was that it was not the movie so much, just Chris and the movie made me very nervous. All the same I enjoyed the concept of a life after death experience.

The best thing was not the ending, but because of the ending I do not have to pay for the next flick. Chris guessed the wrong ending and so now I have, at least for a week, found someone to pay for my movie."

Chris: "First, Bo, no one cares that you got lucky once. Even Bill Clinton got lucky once! Anyway, the movie was good, and I recommend it. The ending looked like someone opened the Ark of the Covenant, but other than that, it was O.K. Besides, my future wife did well, and it was nice to see her on the big screen for a few hours instead of on MTV for a few seconds.

I really liked the whole idea of coming back and the special effects were outstanding. I just wish Bo would have stopped screaming!"

We believe that it is time to enter the most sacred thing on this Earth. And it is not the Ark of the Covenant. It is the movie vault. Here are a few "hearsays" around Hollywood. "Indiana Jones IV" is being thrown the script room. However, Spielberg has to finish some business in 1996 with "Return to Jurassic Park." As for his buddy, George Lucas, the "Star Wars" trilogy is set to be out in May of 1997. The new epics are said to go back and discuss how the Empire and the Rebel Alliance came into existence.

As for comedy, we bring you Ace Venture: Pet Detective goes to Africa. Yes, that is right. Jim Carrey is going to make sequels. Who can blame him, considering that each of his movies made over 100 million dollars a piece. Look for Pet Detective in October.

photo by Marc Hall

and Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

We know Spring Break is near, and we know the beach awaits. However, if it gets too hot, go enjoy yourself in a cool theater.

On March 17, Candyman is BACK! Come on, lets go to a mirror and say it together. Candyman, Candyman, Candyman, Candyman...

Also, Dustin Hoffman, Morgan Freeman, and Rene Russo hunt for a monkey who is spreading a deadly disease in "Outbreak."

If you want to laugh and laugh some more, "Bye Bye Love" is the movie for you. It stars three divorced men looking for the second Mrs. Right. Until next time, have a safe Spring Break and we hope to see you at the movies!

photo by Marc Hall

by Lance Klosterman
Columnist

Howdy partners, I am sure all of you are ready for Spring Break. I know I am eager to work on my senior thesis over break. NOT! Once again, I will grace you with the wonderfully captivating and suspense-filled Senate report in this issue of the Echo.

I hate to keep you waiting much longer, so I will just get right to it.

Last week in Senate we did not have as much to do. The big issue is living quarters for freshmen next year. I have been notified that we are to have a large class and may have trouble fitting all of the new students into Copeland, Davis, and Gamble. Thus, Jim Galyon is heading up a committee with Stephanie Wyatt to look at our options and see if students will be packed in like sardines, or if we will manage with no trouble.

Senate plans for year's end

Once again, if you are interested in helping out, I am sure either of the two gracious people mentioned above will be pleased to hear from you.

The Senate was given a presentation on the tuition rate increase for next year. Everyone will be getting information on the exact figures soon.

If anyone wants to talk about the figures once they are released, give me a call. I served on the subcommittee that Amnesty International wrote a proposal to help fund national membership, and it did not pass.

Finally, Senate approved $2000 to pay for student tickets at the NCAA tournament games. Some students had to pay to be admitted, and that was because that money paid for only 100 student tickets at each game.

The next couple of meetings are March 30 and April 13. As usual, they are held in Thaw 216 at 12:30 p.m. These meetings will be used primarily for revision of the student handbook and Senate constitution.

If there are points in the handbook you feel need to be addressed, please talk with a Senate representative.

Petitions for Senate positions for next year will be made available after Spring Break, so get your campaign ready.

Lance Klosterman
PO Box 2306
x 8711

The Highland Echo

Paul Weaver
Editor

Sarah Stevenson
Assistant Editor

Editorial Team

Dave Downs
Campus Life

Marc Hall
Photography

Amanda Martin
Arts

Angela McLemore
Copy

Chris Stephens
Sports

Sarah West
Campus Politics

Reportorial Team

Greg Carroll, Dara DiGiacomo, Kenyon Evans, Josh Goocey, Eddie Harmon, Chee Hill, Jessica Lemler, Becky Lill, Kristie Paschel, Todd Smith, Christie Stalans, Claire Stancampiano, Kim Syphrett

Columnists

Josh Hogan, Lance Klosterman, Bo McMichael, Gevin Simpson

Advertisement Manager

Patrick Leslie

Advisor
Jeff Gary

Concerns and ideas can be shared with the Echo staff by writing to box 2661, or by calling the Student Publications Office at extension 8176. The views expressed in the Echo do not reflect the views of Maryville College.

Handbook policies: reasonable cause?

Jon Peters
Guest Columnist

So, how about that handbook? Yes, that immortal, infinitely wise rule book that we've all read cover to cover... How about it? O.K., so it would probably take an event of extraordinary measures to motivate most of us into wanting to try to understand everything in it. However, if you found yourself in extraordinary circumstances, you might be disturbed to find some of the same things that I did.

A series of events compelled me to read my trusty handbook. I wanted to know: What am I being accused of? What are my rights? Is it O.K. for a staff member just to barge right into my room without any concrete notion that a breach of policy is in progress?

You can argue with me all day that the staff member had the "reasonable cause" the handbook talks about (but fails to define) on page 108. She did, indeed, see people hanging out on a dark porch on a typical Saturday night, quietly drinking something. I suppose it wouldn't take too much of a stretch of the imagination to think that some of those cozies might have had beer in them. But, since she could not have seen any, wouldn't that train of thought have to be considered "speculation," which the handbook specifically states (on page 92) is not considered reasonable cause for a search? And even if it did constitute a search, why couldn't she have been more reasonable about it? O.K., fine. There was beer in the room. I am prepared to pay my dues for that. But what about that search...? When a cop searches your house without a warrant, there is no case. So, what about here? Well it turns out, "reasonable cause," in its vague speculative splendor, is a warrant—to whom ever feels like searching your room!! Does this seem right to you?!!

This whole thing was starting to get pretty complicated. I learned, much to my relief, that "any student may be assisted by an advocate from the college community. Student Senate selects and trains advocates for this purpose. A list of qualified advocates is available in the Student Development Office" (p. 94). Trying to actually get an advocate, however, is quite a trick. I was quite shocked to find out that no one has ever actually been trained to be one!!

That's not all, folks. I read, "Complaints regarding faculty and staff are handled in accordance with policies and procedures as stated in the faculty and staff handbooks. Copies of these handbooks are available in the Student Development Office." (p. 94) I tried to locate one of these fabled handbooks. After a lengthy quest, I finally ended up at the Dean's office, where I was told that such a handbook was not for students to be viewing. And no wonder when I finally got my hands on a copy I realized that there are no such "policies and procedures" listed anywhere!! So, which is it: that all staff people are perfect and never do anything wrong, or that students are simply not allowed to make complaints?

When a student breaks the covenant or "community standards," (p. 82) he or she is disciplined. But what happens when a staff member consistently acts with contempt for the rights of others? Should this simply be accepted? Or does it in fact "adversely affect the welfare of the college community?" (p. 82). The answer to this question can be found in the Staff Handbook itself: "Each time a student is 'let down' by someone on the college payroll, each time a student feels he or she has been treated unjustly or arbitrarily, a certain weight has been added to the negative side of the world's moral balance. It is made more likely that the student will feel freer to act in ways that are less than moral, or to condone the acts of those who do" (Stephen J. Trachtenberg, "Educational Record," Spring 1989). How unbelievably fitting!

Think to yourself for a moment: how many times have you been in your room quietly doing something you weren't "supposed" to do? Do you feel guilty for burning that candle or talking to your friend after visitation? Do you think it would be O.K. for a staff member to simply walk right into your room on a whim and bust you when you weren't hurting anyone? What if you weren't even there?!!

What bothers me the most about this whole thing is that Maryville College operates under the pretense of preparing people to live in the "real" world—where the Constitution is followed, where law enforcement needs warrants, and where people are allowed to make decisions regarding their own destinies. Ahh... the real world... Don't you think that perhaps if we really are trying to prepare people to live in the real world, that we should at least try to model our institution around its principles?

I suppose it would be unreasonable to expect that living in an institution this small would be anything like the real world. We must not forget, however, that we have some extraordinarily important rights as Americans, that protect us in spite of the fact that we attend a private school. One of these is the right to privacy. I believe ardently that this "reasonable cause" business is a complete farce, as well as a mockery of the Constitution and every student at this school. Before anyone comes in your room, they need to have more than just a desire to bust you. They need proof—a witness, or first-hand knowledge, or your permission. In other words, the same thing a police officer would need to enter your house. Goread the Fourth Amendment—and don't think for a microsecond that it does not apply to you simply because you go to school at Maryville College. It does apply to you!!!

Letters to the Editor...

To the Editor,

I am writing this letter today because I am ANGRY!!!!

This school expects the students to take the Covenant and the principles for which it stands seriously, yet apparently the staff here does not have to meet the same expectations. And yes, I know that the Covenant is not officially in place yet.

What has made me so angry? Having to take a cold shower at 4:00 in the afternoon! I know we went through this last year, and we were given some explanation about the temperature outside affecting this decision. Fine, I can accept that. But what I cannot accept is that the students have been given no warnings about when this is going to occur. I mean, if the "powers that be" would issue a statement saying that every time the temperature reaches 70 degrees, for example, the hot water would be turned off, that's fine. We can make changes to go around that. But to just do it is cruel!

Is it too much to ask to either make a phone call to Student Development when the water is going to get cut off, or to spend ten or fifteen minutes typing out a copy of the policy on this, so at least RAs have some access to that information? It would be really nice to be able to warn our residents of this situation before someone screams from cold water hitting them when they don't expect it!

Please, whomever makes this decision, please do not ignore this issue! I've been at this school for almost two years now and I still don't understand how this decision is made. Students are supposed to have a loud voice at this school—please let me know that mine has been heard.

Dara Di Giacomo

To the Editor,

This is in response to a recent editorial that appeared in the March 6 issue of the Echo. Since when did it become the responsibility of the federal government to provide a college education to people? All of us who attended public high schools had the benefit of twelve years of free education, all the way down to our books. Is this not enough?

As for the reference to the federal government spending billions on national defense (stealth bombers), last time I checked the Constitution of the United States, one of the few spelled out roles of the government is to "provide for the common defense." Clearly these bombers are doing this. I realize that most of the staff of the Echo has not lived under the threat of war in their lifetime. I hope we never have that threat again, but if we do, I want to live in a country that can provide for our defense.

While access to higher education may be a right, higher education is not. It is a privilege. Federally funded financial aid is a gift to us from the government and nothing more. It is not the responsibility of the federal government.

I would also like to know when it became the responsibility of the federal government to "serve the people" as was suggested. We are supposed to serve our government, not the other way around. Being a die-hard Republican, I feel a little funny quoting John F. Kennedy, but what the heck. "Ask not what your government can do for you, but what you can do for your government."

It is high time we got every American out of the wagon and made them help pull it, and if we are to cut spending, why not have federal subsidies for education among the cuts?

William J. Sliwa
Assistant Football Coach

"Ask not what your country can do for you, but what you can do for your country" were the words that John F. Kennedy used in his speech on the day of his inauguration. Kennedy was urging the nation and the world to work together for world peace—he was not urging the American people to serve their government mindlessly. The purpose of the government is to serve the people. The men and women on Capital Hill are public servants. When the government ceases to serve the people, the people have the right to overthrow it. Just ask Thomas Jefferson, the author of our "Declaration of Independence," or the other fathers of our nation who led a rebellion against a government that did not serve the people. The people do not serve the government; the government serves the people.

Overcoming homophobia

Photo by Marc Hall

by Gevin Simpson
Columnist

"There is nothing to fear, but fear itself" was said by a great president of the United States of America, but he probably didn't have to deal with some of the things that we have to deal with now. I am afraid of a lot of things. My biggest fear in life is failure. I'm afraid that I will not succeed in life and that I might have a family and not be able to support them. Although I believe this to be a somewhat petty fear, I do have some things that frightened me more than not being successful. I attempt to tackle each fear head on. I used to be afraid of heights, until I went bungee jumping. I used to be afraid of my mother, hell, I'm STILL afraid of my mother. I also had a fear of what we call "alternative lifestyles" or homosexuality.

In order to conquer this fear, I had to learn that people who do something different in their bedroom doesn't affect how I live my life. I don't know why other people feel that homosexuality directly affects the lives of each person a gay or lesbian person associates with. If my friend has a dog, does that interfere with our friendship? Only if Sparky overrides any decision that he makes concerning me.

Why is it that so many people fear homosexuals? Here is my hypothesis on why people are so afraid of gay and lesbian lifestyles. Of course men are afraid because men hide or suppress their own sexuality. You'll never see a situation like this with a heterosexual male: A girl asks Paul what he thinks about Chris because she wants to go out with him. Paul, being the virile extremely straight guy that he is, answers her with an emphatic "What do you mean?" or "I don't think about Chris." The easiest way to get out of something like this is to simply say "He's okay." You'll never hear a guy say, "That Chris is downright handsome," or "He's really cute." The only time guys are open about their sexuality is the proverbial pat on the ass after you've just made the play of the game or when you've just come off the field. Women are MUCH more open when it comes to matters like this. You always hear a lady saying that some other woman is attractive or cute. Women are much more comfortable with their own sex than men.

Back to my overcoming my fear of homosexuality. . . I had this Bill Clinton mode of thinking: if I don't ask, then don't tell me. This was until I was faced with a situation where I believed someone to be a heterosexual and they were actually a homosexual. The first thing that came to mind was "I wonder if he was trying to get me to . . ." Of course he wasn't, but you can understand my frustration. This just made my fear worse. Soon after this, I happened to be at the Underground in Knoxville and a good friend of mine saw a woman that he thought was beautiful. I hated to be the one to bring him down, but his beautiful woman was actually a man! I'm glad that I can laugh at things like this now but back then it wasn't that big of a joke to me. I began to try to understand that everyone has a right to a private life and that our privacy should not be made public.

I recently went somewhere I thought I would never go . . . The Carousel! For those of you who might not know what The Carousel is, it is a club right behind UT that caters to all lifestyles, but is frequently filled with homosexuals and cross-dressers. They even have a transvestite show, where the performers lip-sync to today's hits, by female artists (does this sound like an ad for the club or what?). Although you may not condone it, I had a great time after I fought off some guys. I even went to the stage and gave a tip to one of the dancers (this was after a good stiff drink of course!). The best way for me to learn what it felt like to be talked about and scorned was to apply it to my own existence. My freshman year, there were rumors going on about my own sexuality. A college official even approached someone at my job at the dining hall and asked her what she thought about my being gay or straight. It was obviously none of his business, but it made me angry that he would go behind my back like that, instead of just asking me. A man who fears something like this can only be hiding something within himself.

For those who make a big deal out of homosexuality and feel that they must redeem their world from it, remember it's not just your world buddy! Everyone has a right to be here regardless of their private lives, that is unless of course you're Jeffrey Dahmer and your private life includes eating people...

Until we find out what's really going on between Batman and Robin. . . Ladies and Gentlemen. . . There it is!

"The best possible college . . ."

On the left is bucket alley in the Fine Arts Center. Though many efforts to retar the roof have been made, they seem to have all failed as water pours from the ceiling whenever it rains.

Pictured on the right is one of the walls and part of the ceiling on the Center for Campus Ministries which has succumbed to water damage.

One thing that most buildings on campus seem to share is roof and water leakage problems.

Photo by Marc Hall

Photo by Marc Hall

6

SPORTS

Girls fall to Wisconsin-Oshkosh, end season at 23-5

by Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

The Lady Scots bid for a trip to the "Final Four" fell short March 10 as they fell to Wisconsin-Oshkosh by the final of 83-67.

The Lady Scots ended an outstanding season at 23-5 while Wisconsin-Oshkosh improved to 27-2.

A packed house saw the Lady Scots play with their opposition in the first half and it looked as if the Lady Scots might live to play another day.

In the first half the Lady Titans jumped out to a 20-12 lead early in the half. Much of the damage was done by Senior Natalie DeMichei as she poured in 10 straight points to give her team the lead.

The Lady Scots came right back. Junior Lisa Cambell started the run with a basket to cut the lead to 20-14 with 11:07 to go in the half. Then Junior Jama Cameron, bad finger and all, drilled a three-pointer. Sophomore Tracy Spires played long ball with a three-pointer of her own to cut the lead to 25-20 with 9:13 to go in the game.

Junior Jamie Parrott then got into the action when Spires found her for the basket and the foul. This three-point play cut the lead to only two with 8:53 to go before the break.

Parrott would get another three-point play with 7:36 to go, and then would give her team their first lead with 6:04 to go. The score was now 30-29, Lady Scots. The Lady Scots were up four when Freshman Christine Rajkowski found Parrott one more time to make the score 33-29 with 3:52 to go.

Freshman Meghan Casey then got into the books with a three-pointer to give the Lady Scots their largest lead of the game. The score stood at 38-29 with only 2:31 to go before half-time.

Wisconsin-Oshkosh then countered with a 9-2 run before half to put them in the lead at half by the score of 41-40.

Junior Shelley Deitz had two three-pointers during this run to give her 12 points for the half. DeMichei also had 12 for Wisconsin-Oshkosh at the break.

The Lady Scots were lead by Parrott with 15 and Cambell with 13.

In the second half the game remained close in the opening minutes and the score was tied at 50 all with 12:43 remaining.

From there Wisconsin-Oshkosh went on a 16-2 run that put the game out of reach for the Lady Scots.

During this run the Titans hit three straight three-pointers, two by Junior Sarah Heckmen and one by Deitz in a span of two minutes.

Lady Titan Senior Amy Wing then hit another three-pointer with 5:48 to go that made the score 71-54.

The Lady Scots were not able to come back and fell by the final of 83-67.

The Lady Titans were lead by DeMichei with 21, Deitz with 19, and Heckmen with 12.

The Lady Scots were lead by all-tournament selection Parrott with 34 and Cambell with 15. Cambell also collected nine rebounds.

Although the Lady Scots ended their season short of a "Final Four" appearance, they have plenty to look forward to.

The Lady Scots will lose only Seniors Lauri Ellis and Laura Sibold from this year's team.

The entire starting line up will be back as well as Sophomore Jennifer Buck who missed most of the season with a serious knee injury.

Juniors Cameron, Cambell, Shelley Johnson, Andrice Jones, Parrott, and Whitney Williamson should all be back as Seniors to help the Lady Scots try to match and improve on this year's performance.

Parrott ended the season scoring more points than anyone in Division III with 649 points and second in the nation with a 26.0 average.

"Here comes points 14 and 15"—

Junior Lisa Campbell takes control of the ball in the last game against Wisconsin-Oshkosh, March 10.

PAPA JOHN'S
PIZZA
Call your PAPA
983-PAPA

One Large
Perfect Italian Sausage Pizza

$5<sup>99</sup>
+ tax

Additional toppings .95 each. Not valid with any other coupon. Valid only at participating stores.

One Extra Large Two Toppings or Two Extra Large Two Toppings

$9<sup>95</sup> + tax $15

Additional toppings $1.25 each. Not valid with any other coupon. Valid only at participating stores.

Not always about wins and losses

Commentary
by Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

That the score was 88-86 mattered least of all. On March 4, the Maryville Collegemen's basketball team ended their season, but it was not about numbers or even winning or losing. Maryville may have scored less points, but they did not lose anything late that Saturday night.

The game was about Juniors Jeremy Burgess and Sammy Williams hitting big shot after big shot. The game was about Scott McDaniel earning more respect from a hostile crowd full of Millsaps fans than thought possible. McDaniel did not stop after he went crashing over the scorers table to save a ball. And he surely did not stop after a collision under the basket cut his head and drew blood. Not even with 1.6 seconds left would he stay out of the game.

The game was about Junior Bryan Mills and Sophomores Dee Bell and Stan Pennington doing battle under the basket against players who, on paper, should have dominated them. That never happened. In the end they were all standing on the sideline and the game was far from decided.

After these players for both teams had been asked to leave, the game became about Sophomore K.C. Haworth coming off the bench in the second overtime and playing the post as if he were born there.

Maybe even the greatest thing that the game was about was Senior John Robinette playing his final game. Words cannot describe his style of play, the class he has always shown, or the respect that he has earned over the years. No one who ever had the chance to watch Robinette play will soon forget him. If his career had to end, it ended right, with him playing hard with his team.

A few Maryville fans and ever fewer students may have seen one of the greatest games in recent MC history. But to sit and say "if only" or "what if" would be to miss the point. Sure both teams had chances, but maybe, if just for a night, the game was not about winning and losing.

As Bell walked up the bleachers an hour after the game looking down at the court it was hard for him to appreciate what he and his team had just done. It will take time, but he will. He, along with his team, will come to respect Millsaps, as Millsaps learned to respect MC.

There is nothing like the NCAA tournament, on any level, and after finishing just shy of making the field a year ago, this was a first for many. They did not show it. They all played their roles and did so much more that held their own. They proved that they belonged there. It was remarkable how they refused to let their season end. The game was about pride, and it was inspiring to watch.

So congratulations to Stan, John, K.C., Jeremy, "Red", Sammy, Dee, Coach Lambert, and the rest of the team. Thank you for all of the memories throughout your great year.

As for John Robinette, this year's only Senior, you were a leader, and the images that you have left will remain here always. The court was your classroom, and you taught us all. Thank you.

Maryville Baseball and Softball teams begin seasons

by Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

What a difference a year can make. Last year a young Maryville college baseball team struggled in the early going. This year the team is 6-1 in the early going and playing well.

The Scots opened their season at Savannah College on Feb. 25, where they played twice on Saturday and once on Sunday.

In the first game Senior Scott Watson pitched a complete game two hitter on his way to his first win of the season.

Senior John Roszell lead the MC offense with two RBIs, as the Scots won 3-0.

The second game saw the Scots fall 5-3 as both their hitting and pitching still seemed to be getting warmed up.

One highlight for the season was seeing pitchers Chris Ramsey, David Forster, and Mark McKeehan come in and hold Savannah hitless the rest of the way.

In the third game the Scots got back on track winning 18-7.

Doug Parris started the game and then turned it over to Ramsey who picked up his first win of the season.

The Rhodes Invitational was canceled, so the Scots played Christian Brothers. Head Coach Eric Etchison was pleased with his team's performance and stated, "We played them (Christian Brothers) out of Memphis, and they are a really good NALA program. We turned it up a notch there. Chris Daniel pitched five innings of one run baseball and did an excellent job. Forster came on in relief to pick up the win, and Peter Blair picked up his first college save."

The final was 5-3.

The Scots next faced Hendrix (Ark.). In this game the Scots wasted little time as they scored five runs in the first two innings. Parris pitched the complete game and a perfect game until the seventh inning. The Scots earned their fourth win of the season, 5-1.

About the season's early success, Parris had this to say, "From what I have heard, this is the best start that the baseball team has had in awhile. I feel like if our pitching holds up we will continue to get better and be a tough team to beat."

The final two of these six wins, and the first two home games of the season for the Scots, came against Tennessee Temple on March 9. The Scots played two, and both were over only a few innings into the contest.

In the first game the Scots were already up 6-1 in the second. That would be more than Watson needed as he was overpowering en route to his second win of the season. He pitched a complete game two hitter and set down eight Tenn. Temple batters with strike outs.

The Scots struck for more in seemingly every inning and the final was 12-1 in favor of the home Scots.

The second game was not much better as the Scots stayed hot on the cool March day. They out-hit and out-pitched the visitors on their way to another impressive 12-0 victory.

In this second game, Daniel pitched no-hit baseball until there were two outs in the seventh when he allowed a single. Although his no-hitter was broken up, he finished with the complete game shut out, including 11 strikeouts. This was his second win of the season.

The Scots got started right with a three run second that saw Shane O'Brien come up with an RBI double, followed by a two RBI single by Stephen Coleman.

The Scots will next play at home against Hope College at 1 p.m. This will be a double header. The Scots will then come back the next day and take on Fisk College at 1 p.m. in another double header.

The Scots will then play three straight on the road before they come back for the Foothills Classic. Two of these games will be against Methodist College and North Carolina Wesleyan College, two of the top teams in the nation. Those games will be played on March 22 and 23.

The Foothills Classic will begin on March 24 through 26.

The Lady Scots softball team has also started its season and are now

photo by Marc Hall

"Here batter, batter"—

Sophomore Misty Walker fires a strike against Emmanuel College.

standing at 1-3.

The Lady Scots opened their season at Savannah College and slit the two games.

After a March 4 game versus Hanover was rained out, they played their first two home games during a double-header against Emmanuel College. Emmanuel took an early lead on the Lady Scots when they came up with five runs in the first inning.

The Lady Scots got one run back in the bottom of the same inning and then tied the game up in the bottom of the second inning.

First it was Tobi Russell with an RBI single and then Junior J.J. Herron tied the score with a bases-loaded triple. After the visitors took the lead again in the top of the second, the Lady Scots came back with five of their own runs in the bottom of the third.

The Lady Scots continued with back to back triples to take the lead at 8-7. Then Junior Kasi Ault hit a sacrifice fly to score Herron. Freshman Brandi Wilson followed this with a triple of her own as the Lady Scots found themselves up 10-7.

In the fourth Emmanuel came back once again and this time took the lead for good. They lead off the inning with a homerun and then came up with a grand slam later in the inning to over shadow a great pitching performance by Freshman Charity Merritt. The final score was 20-12.

In the second game it looked as the Lady Scots would even the record at 2-2. Misty Walker held the visitor to only one run through five innings, and the Lady Scots were 6-1.

The top of the sixth spelled trouble for the Lady Scots as Emmanuel scored 16 runs to take a 17-6 lead. The Lady Scots did come back in the bottom of the sixth inning, but the comeback came up short as they fell to 1-3.

Some upcoming games for the Lady Scots will include a home game against Olivet Nazarene on Mar 16 at 2 p.m. The Lady Scots will stay at home for their next game against Piedmont College.

photo by Marc Hall

"Ball one!"—

Sophomore Ryan Rogers takes a pitch against Sewanee.

"Look, Mom, no hands!"--
Senior Joe Myer tries his luck at driving the Neon drunk driving simulator car.

The car was developed in 1988 to allow sober drivers to experience the dangers of drinking and driving.

The car contains an on-board computer, which can be programmed to delay the car's steering and braking response time. This simulates the slowed physical and mental response of a driver under the influence of alcohol.

The course covers a 150 by 200 foot area. The driver attempts to negotiate the figure-8 course without hitting the orange pylon cones which mark its boundaries.

A trained instructor is in the car with the driver at all times.

Photo by Marc Hall

Kirkland continued from p. 1

fixed. Have you ever wondered how it was magically fixed when you walked in your room after class and noticed the difference? No, it wasn't Superman coming to save the day. It's Kirkland at work. That hidden figure that never asks for credit and quietly completes the job to satisfaction. Kirkland says that it isn't all enjoyable. When Kirkland was asked what his least favorite job is, he quickly replied, "I hate carryin' tables and climbin' ladders."

Kirkland has enjoyed working on the MC campus. He said, "I've seen a heap of changes since I first come here." The change that sticks out most in his mind is the switch from coal, to oil and gas.

He has also seen deans come, and he has seen deans go, but he said that "Dean Bolden is my favorite." You shouldn't get the idea that he is saying this so that he can assure himself a position on staff for another thirty years. No. He says that Dean Bolden is the nicest, and the one that he has known the best.

Kirkland is a modest man and seeks no recognition for the job he does.

Room selection preference cards must be returned before 5 p.m. today.

If you don't turn in your preference card before you leave, you will need to wait until after room selection to sign up. Resident Assistants will distribute the packages to residents—commuters can pick up room selection packages in the Commuter Lounge. The room selection process is from April 3-4 in Lloyd lobby.

Family lab continued from p. 1

a good, nutritious dinner, but with our low budget we can only do so much. We try to get as balanced as we can," said Blankner. Right now the Food Pantry, as it is called in conjunction with the FEL, serves six or seven families.

The money from the grant that was awarded last year has run out; it was only for one year. However, Clark is presently writing grant proposals and searching for funds. A possible "link to the Bonner Scholars with the Food Pantry" to create a "positive thing" is being sought by Blankner, she said. The FEL and the Food Pantry are not just for Bonner Scholars, however. It has some other organizations to work with, such as Circle K and BSU.

Most food that the pantry gets comes from an organization in Knoxville called the Share Food Bank. The Bonner Community Fund allotted $2,000 to the Food Pantry to buy food.

The meals began to be served on Feb. 6 and have been going since then with the help of Blankner and three Bonner Scholars. "I'm hoping," Blankner said, "to have it become a student-run thing, even though I love it." In the future it is hoped that it can be a place where the students from MC and the students from the FEL can be together, work, and learn about each other.

The location of the Food Pantry and the FEL is in the basement of Highland Presbyterian Church. Originally, it was planned to be on MC campus, but the college does not have the facilities to house it.

While the Food Pantry is trying to set its feet to the ground, the Student Literacy Corps is growing and learning new things all the time. The Corps is composed of six boardmembers. The Chair is Senior Jenny Cummings. Cummings is a Bonner Scholar who has dedicated herself to fighting illiteracy. She represented the college's Student Literacy Corps at the Student Coalition for Action in Literacy Education, also known as SCALE. SCALE is a nation-wide organization that is based from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Just recently, a student trainer from SCALE, Matt Adams, came to MC to train the new literacy tutors. "He had a lot of cool things to say," Cummings said. "For example, he believes in learning how to read in a whole language relation, instead of using the traditional phonics."

Next year, assuming the FEL (or FEL's Food Pantry) finds the funds to run a program next fall, FEL will hopefully be "looking forward to moving on campus," Clark said. Although the funds are lacking right now, Clark is "relying on small foundations to donate, so FEL can put the little bits of the money together." This may be difficult this year because the little foundations that usually donate money to causes such as homelessness, illiteracy, and hunger to name a few, are being overwhelmed by the requests of programs that fight these social problems. The reason is that "the new Congress has stopped funding, like the grant given to FEL last year, that usually funds these programs," Clark said. Clark has dreams, though, and one is having the college "work toward integrating the class, the Practicum 343 class, into the academic curriculum." Until then, Clark keeps writing grant proposals and sending off proposals for funding.

Tri-Beta programs open to all

by Angela McLemore
Copy Editor

Little known to most students on campus are the many events sponsored by the Tri-Beta Biology Honor Society, although all students are invited to attend.

On March 10, the society hosted a presentation by Dr. Sergio Fazio, assistant professor of medicine at the University of Vanderbilt. Fazio spoke on "Transgenic Animal Models in Cardiovascular Disease."

Fazio received his M.D. at the University of Rome and Ph.D. at Siena in Tuscany.

Fazio's work focuses on type III hypercholesterolemia, a human genetic disease that causes a deficiency of the protein ApoE. This deficiency results in atherosclerosis, more commonly known as clogging of the arteries. 90 percent of the body's ApoE is manufactured in the liver. 10 percent is manufactured elsewhere in the body. Fazio hypothesized that this 10 percent is created by macrophages, many of which are located in the bone marrow. Macrophages destroy harmful materials in the body's blood and tissue.

To test his hypothesis, Fazio transplanted bone marrow from regular mice into mice genetically engineered to be ApoE deficient. The results were an increase in ApoE in these mice as well as a decrease in cholesterol. Even when fed a diet extremely high in cholesterol, the mice did not develop atherosclerosis, while ApoE deficient mice not receiving a transplant and fed the same high cholesterol diet developed severe clogging.

Fazio acknowledged the hard work of MC student and Tri-Beta President Dana Brantley in his lab at Vanderbilt during last summer. Brantley's work concerned what macrophages reside where in the body and which produce the most ApoE. Her results showed that macrophages in the lungs and kidneys produce large amounts.

On March 14, Tri-Beta hosted another guest presentation by Mike Scott, a Ph.D. student at UT Knoxville. His presentation on "Bat Ecology" featured a slide show of several bats. Scott briefly discussed the research of MC students Sherry Kincannon, Stephanie French, Patrick Raulston and Michele Simmons on bats' detection of barometric pressure and its effects on bats' feeding habits.

On April 18, Tri-Beta will present guest speaker Dr. Kenneth Bell, an orthopedic surgeon in the area. Bell's presentation is scheduled for 11 a.m. in Sutton Science Center, room 233. Refreshments will be served, and everyone is invited to attend.

Tri-Beta President Brantley and Vice President Beth Nuchols say they are extremely pleased with the excellent speakers that the society has managed to bring to campus this year. Brantley, though pleased with the turnout for these events, "would like to emphasize that while Tri-Beta's guest speakers' presentations are, of course, geared toward students in scientific fields, they are always on a level easily comprehended by everyone."

Body Shapens

1828 W. Broadway
South Haven Plaza

Student Special

Tanning Salon
Receive 2 Free Visits

With any package

984-5300

Buy • Sell • Trade The Other Record Shop

Used and Collectable records and tapes!

977-9959

2131 E. Broadway
Red Food Center
Maryville, TN 37804

MC Crime Log

- February 25, 1995 Disorderly conduct by MC students and Knoxville College students at a home basketball game resulted in the Knoxville College students being taken out by the Maryville City police and the MC students by campus security. Students received a verbal warning.

- February 25, 1995 Because there was mailbox vandalism, the post office is now closed from 11:00 p.m. to 6:00 a.m.

- February 26, 1995 Two Lloyd residents were discovered with drugs near the cemetery, and the Maryville City police and the campus security became involved. The matter has been turned over to Stephanie Wyatt of Student Development.

photo by Marc Hall

"This sure beats January"—

Sophomore Donna Haynes enjoys the warm weather as she sketches the mountains in pastels for an art project on Lloyd Beach on March 12.

DRB and Judicial Board Reports

- February 12, 1995 The two students in Copeland Hall who violated quiet hours received first offense violation which includes a warning letter placed in file and one month probation.

- February 14, 1995 The pending case involving five students violating visitation in Copeland Hall has resulted in each student receiving a first offense visitation.

- February 14, 1995 Two students in Copeland Hall broke the visitation policy and received first offense visitation.

- February 19, 1995 A case involving an alcohol violation by two students in Carnegie Hall has been dismissed for lack of evidence of actual involvement. Henceforth, Carnegie students are completely responsible for what happens in their rooms. This is in the handbook, and it is an official statement sent out by the Disciplinary Review Board.

- February 1 - 15, 1995 A case involving a Lloyd Hall resident committing phone fraud is pending.

- February 26, 1995 Two students in Lloyd Hall have been charged with drug abuse and possession of drug paraphernalia, and the case is pending.

- March 1, 1995 Five students in Copeland Hall broke the visitation policy, and the case is pending.

- March 3, 1995 A case of alcohol violation by one student in Carnegie Hall is pending.

- March 3, 1995 One student in Lloyd Hall was charged with an alcohol offense, and the case is pending.

- March 3, 1995 A Carnegie resident violated the alcohol policy, and the case is pending.

- March 3, 1995 Two students in Carnegie were found with alcohol, and the case is pending.

- March 4, 1995 There was an alcohol and quiet hours violation by five students in Carnegie Hall. The case is pending.

- March 4, 1995 A non-student was caught with alcohol in Carnegie Hall, the case is pending.

- March 4, 1995 There was a report of harassment of a student in Carnegie Hall, and the case is pending.

- March 7, 1995 One student was charged with alcohol in Carnegie. The case is pending.

- March 8, 1995 The pending case involves the drug abuse of a Gamble resident.

The Judicial Board has not met. If anyone has any questions about this report, contact Cathy Cate at extension 8215.

Student and faculty art on exhibit in the FAC

by Amanda Martin
Arts Editor

The annual Spring Faculty/Student Art Exhibit is currently on display in the Fine Arts Center Gallery. Everything from sketches to weaving to sculpture is being presented.

Three faculty members Thelma Bianco, Carl Gombert, and Jack Wieso placed works in the exhibit. Several students, both art majors and non-majors, have displayed their works as well.

Some participants, specifically faculty, have displayed work in progress, which will give viewers some idea of the process the piece must go through before being finished.

"We all like to experiment," said Bianco of the faculty. "If a student is interested in a new medium, I like to make something myself to show some possibilities."

Included in the exhibit is a display case containing book covers which January Term students made. Examples of computer graphic work and life drawing are also on display.

Some works on display have also been entered into contests for Fine Arts Scholarships. There is a reward for each class: rising seniors, juniors and sophomores.

The exhibit is open weekdays from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Photo by Marc Hall

"Nice work!"—

Beth Brakebill pursues through the student and faculty art exhibit in the FAC. The exhibit will be open until March 31.

McWhorter qualifies for regionals

by Sarah Stevenson
Assistant Editor

The Maryville College equestrian team has had a first year of which they can be proud.

Perhaps the most notable achievement has been that of Senior Megan McWhorter. In just one year, she has earned enough points to be able to qualify for regional competition.

"It's very difficult to do in one year, and she did it," said Team Coordinator Christen McCammon.

Points are earned when ribbons are won. A certain number of points are assigned to each ribbon. In order to qualify for regionals, 36 points must be earned within a year.

Although this is her first year riding for MC, this is McWhorter's last year of eligibility. She has been competing for four years.

Regionals will be held at the University of the South, Seawannee on April 1. McWhorter will be competing in the novice under saddle division.

If she wins and is in the top three, she will qualify for zones. Zones are the next level of competition. They will be held at Hiwassee College on April 22.

McCammon feels that McWhorter's chances to qualify for zones are excellent.

The top two competitors at zones will be invited to nationals, which will be held in Colorado.

The equestrian team's last show of the year was held on March 4 and 5 at Midway College in Midway, Ky.

In competition on March 4, McWhorter placed first in novice under saddle, McCammon placed first in intermediate under saddle, and Lisa Hensley placed sixth in walk trot.

On March 5, McWhorter placed third in novice under saddle and McCammon placed sixth in intermediate under saddle.

"Overall, MC did very, very well this year," McCammon stated.

Points are cumulative and carry over from year to year. This means that several members of the team will qualify for regionals fairly quickly next year.

The team's fundraising horse show will be held on April 8 at Penrose Farm in West Knoxville. It will begin at 9 a.m. and will continue all day.

Anyone who would like more information about the team or the upcoming horse show should contact McCammon at box 2447.

COOL CLOTHES

HANDCRAFTED JEWELRY

Jazzberry General

205 COURT ST • 984-0391

Walking Distance from Maryville College

Serious Clearance Sale Going on Now

MON. - SAT. 10am - 7pm
SUNDAY 1pm - 5pm

HIP HOME STUFF

GIFTS • POTTERY • INCENSE

Impressions

The literary magazine of Maryville College is now accepting submissions. They should be sent to box 2661, by April 1.

MACCO plans for spring season

by Dara DiGacomo
Staff Writer

The Maryville-Alcoa Community-College Orchestra has finalized its schedule for the 1994-1995 Spring Concert Series. All concerts that are scheduled begin at 8:00 p.m., and are free of charge to Maryville College students.

The first concert scheduled is the annual Showcase of Area Young Artists, to be held on March 27. Traditionally, there is one representative from three different age groups—high school, college, and post-college. The musicians who are selected go through an audition in December, and are chosen based on talent and on the style of music they are playing. Bill Robinson, conductor of MACCO, said that they "try to pick music that people know, that is familiar." On this year's program, for example, a clarinetist will be performing from Mozart's Clarinet Concerto in A, probably the best known piece ever written for clarinet and orchestra. Also, a pianist will be performing Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto Number 2.

The second concert in the Spring Series is a clinic/concert hosted by the Ying Quartet. The Ying Quartet is a group of string players, and their clinic will be of particular interest to string players. Robinson said, "Variety is important when offering clinics such as this one. Last year, we brought in the Galliard Brass Quintet; maybe next year we'll have a woodwind ensemble." This concert is scheduled for April 17.

The season will draw to a close with a joint performance of Handel's "Messiah," parts II and III, by MACCO and the Maryville College Community Chorus. The performance will be from Handel's "Messiah," and the Easter sections of the work will be featured. "This is an opportunity for the community to hear a different side of a work usually associated with Christmas," Robinson said. The Community Chorus is under the direction of Dr. Daniel Taddie. This concert is scheduled for May 8.

Robinson commented, "The orchestra has come a long way, but I would like to see more students from the college participate in the ensemble." To become a member of MACCO, students need to add this class, found under the music classes in the schedule of classes to their schedule cards. The ensemble meets once weekly, on Mondays, from 7:00-9:00 p.m.

"And in songs divine..."—

Sophomore tenor Eric Obermiller belts out "Hallelujah Amen" by Handel. The MC Concert Choir prepares for its annual spring break tour.

Maryville Concert Choir begins spring tour

by Amanda Martin
Arts Editor

Another spring break is almost upon us. For most students, this means relaxation and fun in the sun. For the Maryville College Concert Choir, it means choir tour.

For 10 days the 35 choir members will travel by bus from Maryville, through Kentucky, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Virginia before returning home March 27, the night before classes begin again.

The complete program includes a cappella and accompanied sacred and secular music.

The first half features sacred music by Palestrina, Sweelinck, Handel, Mozart, Brahms, Virgil Thomson, Smil, Tchaikowsky, Gratchaninof, Chorbajian, Rutter, and Nystedt. The second half features a French chanson by Lasso, four spirituals, and a medley from the Broadway show "The Secret Garden."

Performing is not the only aspect of choir tour. There are also the hours spent on the bus together. "It helps us all to get to know each other better," said junior psychology major and third year choir member Marcus Farmer. "It's a lot of fun, but you have to be a pretty mature person to deal with it."

The choir members will get some time off to do some sightseeing in Cincinnati and Philadelphia.

According to Dr. Dan Taddie, Chairman of the Division of Fine Arts and choir director, members of the Concert Choir are "competitively chosen." They "come from various parts of the United States and the world and have diverse majors and interests."

The choir rehearses three and a half hours a week. Although it is hard work, Farmer said, "It seems like all the rehearsals are worth it once everyone is performing."

According to Taddie, the MC Concert Choir has grown 25 percent since last year. "This is about the maximum size this type of choir can be," he said.

"I think it's a particularly fine group of singers and we're excited about singing in the different churches," he continued.

The choir will give a homecoming concert March 31, at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Music Hall. The complete program will be performed. "This is always a very special concert to us," said Taddie. Information about the tour is available.

Upcoming events . . .

- The Maryville-Alcoa College-Community Orchestra Showcase of Area Artists Concert will be held March 27 at 8 p.m. in Wilson Chapel. Admission prices are: $7 for adults, $5 for senior citizens and students, $1 for children under 12.
- The Maryville College Concert Choir Homecoming Concert will be March 31 at 8 p.m. in the FAC Music Hall. Admission is free.
- Theatre Auditions for "Reader's Festival" will take place April 2 at 2 p.m. in the FAC Music Hall.
- Masayo Ohashi will present a senior piano recital April 6 at 8 p.m. in the FAC Music Hall.
- The art gallery exhibit for April will be a senior exhibit by Marc Hall.

Medieval festival held on campus

by Angela McLemore
Copy Editor

The people wandering around campus in historical clothing March 4 were members of the Society for Creative Anachronism decked out in their medieval garb.

The group was on campus to hold a Medieval Festival sponsored by the MC Humanities Club. The festival culminated the club's Medieval Week.

On March 2, the club sponsored a presentation by Dr. Karl Jost on a tentative relationship between medieval Celtic society and Appalachian culture. Jost is a professor at UT Knoxville.

The Medieval Festival featured a 'Thanes' tournament, in which any knight who wishes to may compete. Any knight who has not previously fought in a tournament must be authorized by another knight before participating in order to prove his ability. One knight was authorized at the festival. Except for the authorization process, the tournament procedure is similar to that of modern day athletic tournaments.

The festival began at 1 p.m., and fighting lasted from 1:30 to 5 p.m. Only one knight sustained a genuine injury. The knight, wearing an inadequately padded helmet, received a severe sword blow to the head.

Humanities club officers are Jenny Cummings, vice president for languages and literature; Josh Hogan, vice president for history; and Angela McLemore, president. The club's faculty sponsor is Dr. Amy Livingstone.

SCA members set up two pavilions for the festival. A group of members gathered under the larger pavilion to sing and play medieval instruments throughout the festival.

Genuine medieval artifacts, medieval-style crafts made by SCA members, and photographs of previous tournaments were on display, and

Photo by Marc Hall

"I've got a secret for you"—

Senior Jenny Cummings talks with Junior Josh Hogan as SCA members cross swords at the recent Medieval festival.

baked goods were sold.

Since the festival was held on the lawn near Pearsons, many students stopped to watch the tournament action on their way to and from meals. Some faculty members and even a few people from the community attended as well. One area middle school student video-taped part of the festival for extra credit in her history class.

The cloudy, cold weather was ideal for the knights, who tend to get hot while battling in armor, but was difficult for bystanders to withstand. MC student and SCA member Liz Bentley said she was pleased with the overall turnout, though.

The next Humanities Club event, which will be co-sponsored by Dr. Charlotte Beck, will be a presentation of readings from MC's literary publication, Impressions. The event is tentatively scheduled for April 10, at 7 p.m. in Proffitt Dinig Hall. Refreshments will be served. As with all Humanities Club events, anyone is welcome to attend.

For information about the club or any of its events, drop a note in box 2587, 2018, or 2398.

Committed® by Michael Fry

The Highland Echo

MAY 17, 1995

MARYVILLE COLLEGE

VOL. LXXX, NO. 11

Inside

Bo and Chris review movies
on p. 3

Josh and Gevin,
p. 2 & 4

photo by Marc Hall

Room entry policy questioned, p. 7

Perspectives on the Knoxville church, p. 10

Election results,
p. 11

Tuition hiked 6.86%

by Josh Goocey
Staff Writer

What is one thing that both parents and students agree is bad? It's not smoking, and it's not drinking. It's tuition increase. These words makes parents and students alike cringe, and this is the situation on the Maryville College campus: a tuition increase.

Maryville College is doing its best to minimize the increase. These figures will probably lack consolation for all of the parents and students who are going to be paying $16,624 to attend Maryville College next year, but the increase is .63 of a percent less than it was last year. They are trying. The increase last year was 7.49 %, and this year it has been reduced to 6.86 %.

This decrease seems as though it is very minimal, and it is, but the rates can not be cut to nothing over the period of one year because it leads to cost deference, and that leads see Hike, p. 11

Photo by Marc Hall

"Dancing the night away"—

Spring Flingers shake it at the Royal Oaks club house. The event, which was held on May 6, proved to be a huge success for this year's Student Programming Board.

Libby, McNiell, and Morrow resign positions

by Kim Syphrett
Staff Writer

Fourteen years ago Annabelle Libby retired from her job in the Greater Cleveland, Ohio area and sought change. This academic year more transfer students flocked to Maryville College than they had since the mid-1970's: Libby led them in. May 26 will be the last day she serves as the Director of Transfer Admissions. She is ready to begin the next phase of her life.

In her capacity as Director of Transfer Admissions, she travels between nine and fourteen days a month; in October and March she travels back and forth within Tenn. and North Ga. almost the whole month. Her manner is brisk. She is the consummate professional. An interview with her reveals that she is a person who cherishes her privacy but does everything, with the fullness of her heart, for the public.

Libby is a 1952 graduate of Maryville College with a degree in English. As a member of the Presbyterian Church, it was not difficult for her to find out about Maryville College. In fact, the minister's wife at her home church near Cleveland had been a graduate of the college. She was the one who encouraged the teenage high school graduate to apply.

Of her first four years here as an undergraduate student, Libby reminisced: "I went to school here when Maryville College was very conservative. Chapel was required, and students had to attend six days of the week. Back then Chapel was held in the old alumni gym. We sat with the same group see Libby, p. 5

by Sarah Stevenson
Assistant Editor

Last fall, on the day Maryville College celebrated its 175th birthday, Dr. Sarah McNiell announced her retirement to her American history class. "It's been a long haul from when students have a crush on you to when they say, 'Yeah, you remind me of my grandmother,'" she commented. "It's time to go," she continued.

In her time as a college instructor, McNiell has taught for 23 years full time and for 7 years part-time. Her work has included heading the evening school, working with continuing education, being an associate professor in the history department, and being chair of the history department.

McNiell received the B.A. in history from Maryville, the M.A. in American history from The University of Tennessee, and a Ph.D. in American history from UT.

When asked about how her career began, McNiell said that she had only received one offer near the end of her graduate school years and was beginning to get worried. One day two of her professors appeared on her doorstep and offered her a position at Maryville.

McNiell said she accepted because "I was interested in teaching history. I had taken some education classes, but I wasn't terribly much inspired by the chance to teach in South Dakota."

It was a lucky break, as far as she is concerned. "I wasn't paying a whole lot of attention to the big future," she admitted.

McNiell said that she enjoys her profession because of the time she gets to spend with young people and with interesting colleagues. "A definite plus for me is being able to combine a career

see McNeill, p. 5

From the Staff, the Echo Editorial. . . Editorial

I was walking across the campus the other day, and I began to think about my last editorial of the year: I would have to say that one of the more difficult things about writing an editorial would be selecting a topic. It is almost as if you have the freedom of a column, but not quite. I guess a great deal of it just comes to indecisiveness. I can't decide what to write my editorial about, or for some, what my major is, and for even more, what I want to do with my life.

What am I going to do with my life? I can truthfully answer that I really do not know at this point, and I am not acting under those pretenses at this college.

How many times have you said to your advisor or a professor "I really don't know what I'm going to do with my life?" I, for one, have said that on one too many occasions— I prefer to have some sort of focus to my life, a purpose if you will.

How many times has that advisor or professor told you that "you have plenty of time" to figure out where you are going, and what you are doing?

How many of you don't buy that? I know I don't, I think.

Talking to seniors, I can't help thinking about what my undergraduate career will boil down to, a nightmare of a test, and a topic that most people have told me I will learn to hate. By the time I have completed those two tasks I will undoubtedly be ready to leave Maryville and embark upon my career (or grad school). But will I know by then what my purpose in life is?

I probably won't be able to grow up to be Superman or a firetruck either. It really sucks.

Remember when people told you that you could be anything you want to be, as long as you put your mind to it? That's probably one of the biggest lies manufactured by modern science.

Sure, I've read about the son of the migrant farmer who made it through Harvard Medical school, and the Cambodian orphan who is completing law school next year and has a bright and shining future. That's great, wonderful, but they are the exception to the rule. Not all of us can be president, or Superman, or a firetruck for that matter.

Isn't that a shame, that we can't necessarily follow our dreams.

So what do we do, where do we go from Maryville?

Does anyone have a real lot in life, a certain goal to accomplish? Or are we all just bits of flotsam, following no real pre-destined path, but not quite in control of ourselves either?

I refuse to believe that! I would like to think that we each have a choice in what we do with our lives, maybe we can't be Superman, or the president, but that doesn't mean that we have absolutely no control over our lives either.

So what do the majority of us do when the uncertainty of the future exerts itself on our lives?

We grasp at anything, vainly attempting to establish a blissful distraction from our future.

We hold fast to our families, our friends, and our relationships.

We throw ourselves into activities, seize responsibilities, and "burn our wicks at both ends."

We run till we can't see, bike till we puke, climb, paddle, and jump from cliffs.

We drink, we smoke, we get drunk, and we get stoned.

We write, argue religious and philosophical matters, and we become workaholics.

We do everything we can to ignore the inevitable question as to what our lives will be.

I know that I'm guilty of using more than one of those activities as a means of avoidance.

The real question (and I know that I've probably asked one too many in this editorial), is this— is it worth it to worry, to really lose sleep over my future nightly? I heard somewhere that the average individual changes careers three times in his or her lifetime. I can honestly say, however, that I do not want to be that average individual, I'm pretty sure that I would be satisfied with one career.

Maybe we don't need to worry, maybe we don't need to lose sleep over the whole situation. Maybe the best thing to do is to just take things as they come, and deal with life on a daily basis.

photo by Marc Hall

by Josh Hogan
Columnist

I have heard quite a bit of talk about "vision" around campus lately. Much of this talk has centered around the race for Student Senate President. At the recent forum provided for students, the term was thrown around without any real clarification. What is "vision" at Maryville College? Do we have a vision at MC?

Recently, our college hired a new professor in the History department to become a part of our college and to fill the teaching duties of our departing American historian and Chair of the department, Dr. Sally McNeill, who will be missed in our community. I had the fortunate opportunity to talk at some length with the new professor, Dr. Chad Berry. In our discussion, he mentioned his excitement about Maryville College because our community seemed to him to be one of "vision." This was something that was important to him and evident to him as it should be to us. We are a community with a vision, and this vision is expressed very clearly in the Maryville College Covenant.

Arguing for the covenant at this point may seem to be a bit late and pointless. After all, the Covenant is printed up in the handbook, and we have all been asked to sign it. I would argue, though, that many of us do not see the full import of dedicating ourselves to this Covenant. Signing the Covenant means we are willing "to act with integrity in all interactions—academic, personal, and beyond." All too often the Covenant is referred to as an "honor code" or statement of commitment to academic integrity. This is true of students, faculty, and staff. Agreeing to the Covenant means more than just, "I will not cheat on exams, papers, or quizzes." In the Covenant, we insist upon making ourselves a "better person." This does include academic integrity, and since one of our primary goals is academic integrity is especially important.

The Covenant, though, is the keystone to an overarching vision and commitment to excellence in the entire college and outside community. This covenant is that brick to which we have anchored our commitment to being "the best possible college." Our vision lies in this, and we imply that to be the purpose of the Covenant when we place it first in our Student Handbook. This is the document on which we base all the material that follows. The Covenant is not a statement of purpose—we have one of those, too.

What the vision found in the Covenant means is that this college campus will not settle for being merely a college campus, but will insist upon the forging of friendships and respect for one another. Because the Covenant was a student driven project, it states that the students will work closely—and equally—with staff and faculty to mold a community based on scholarship, respect, and integrity. It is imperative that whoever is a member of the Student Senate or is Student Senate President is a major proponent of this Covenant and is willing to build on the ideas presented therein.

I would like to stress finally that the Covenant is a living document, changing as we change and sharing our vision because it is our vision. It is not simply my vision or Dr. Gibson's vision or the Student Senate's vision. In its own words it is "a reflection of the values and ethics of the student body." One of the best features of the Covenant lies in its reflective ability; it grows and changes with us.

We are now going to have a new Student Senate and a new Student Senate President. The Senate and its President have in the past year been dedicated to building on the promises of the Covenant and what we have been trying to accomplish in the community since the idea for the Covenant was conceived in 1990. I exhort the newly elected student government representatives, the faculty, and the staff to foster the vision we are all currently involved in advancing. I also wish to state that if anyone tries to submit the Covenant, or the vision of community upon which it insists, to any personal vision, they are not offering Maryville College a vision but a division.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR . . .

The Echo welcomes your comments, letters and guest columns. All written material to be published in the Echo must be typed and accompanied by your name, post office box number, and phone number. Send material to The Highland Echo, Box 2661. The Echo can be reached by calling the Student Publications Office at campus extension 8176. The opinions expressed in the Echo do not necessarily reflect the views of Maryville College.

Bo & Chris: reality bites?

I am sure that I am right in the sense that in the deep dark jungles lies a disease that could bring the world to an end as we know it. We were able to view this film in an empty theater, however the little guy, God love 'em, found it necessary to sneeze and cough and chance he could get to see me jump and twitch in the sense that my partner had this dreaded disease. I could only be so lucky!"

Chris: "The reason I was coughing and sneezing was because of that stupid theater we were in. Anyway, it was a real reality check and of course Morgan Freeman was in...Sing it Bo! 'The Shawshank Redemption!' ...Thanks Bo. It is hard to believe that a disease could kill you that fast. So, I am not sure if I do believe it. Go see the movie and decide for yourself."

Just as nuclear war is a thing of the past, biological warfare is one of the future. It also seems that the theme of a nuclear family is fading into the sunset, and the reality of divorce and single parent upbringing is becoming the norm of our society. "Bye Bye Love" deals with the situation of being divorced, and then goes through a weekend of events with the men (Paul Riser, Randy Quad, and Matthew Modine) who are given the children on weekends. This comedy/drama deals with ideas of sex, relationships, and family.

Bo: "Many critics rate this movie as the 'Parenthood' for the 90s. My comment is that the 90s do not have to be about dropping the kids off at McDonald's on the weekend for your spouse to pick up. I am happy to say that my parents, Ginger and Burke, are celebrating their 25th Anniversary this June. I want to say that I wish them 25 more years of happiness. In a time where reality is blasting onto the screen in movies such as these two, it seems that the underlying statement is to change your life or realize that your life cannot get any better."

Chris: "You will have to excuse Bo, that Philosophy 101 class is going to his brain. But congrats to Ginger and Burke and to Ellie and Steve as well (my parents). I do not think that this movie had much humor in it. There really is not much humor in divorce. Like 'Outbreak,' it will make you think. For many people it will hit home and there never is much humor in that."

Now it is time to get back to fantasy land where a rapper and a comedian can wear badges and carry guns and shoot down the bad guys like a real movie should be. "Bad Boys" by Columbia Pictures features Martin Lawrence and Will Smith. The man from Bel Air and the man from the Fox T.V. show "Martin" are on the big screen blowing away the bad guys and dropping one-liners any chance they get.

As we entered the theater we happened to see a buddy of ours, David

Golden, and we offered the chance to see the movie with us. Here is what our first, and probably last, guest columnist had to say.

David: "Well it wasn't '8 Seconds' and generally I do not like a movie that isn't, but this was pretty damn good."

Bo: "Hey, thanks, David. Maybe now my partner will leave me alone and pick on David. Yah, right. I guess I just will have to bite the bullet. As far as the movie, it reminded me of 'The Last Boy Scout' and 'Lethal Weapon' combined. I enjoyed it a lot and look forward to seeing these two pair up again. It was nice to get away from reality and enjoy some good chase scened and some funny side talk."

Chris: "Da-vid! Da-vid! Da-vid! Well, Bo, you were right, I am still going to stay on you. 'The Last Boy Scout' huh? Where did you get that one? Dream that one up all by yourself? Not! You back-stabbing no-good... anyway. The movie. Real exciting, even though it, like David said, it was not '8 Seconds."

This idea of movies hitting home is good for your soul and spirit, however, they sometimes touch parts of you that you preferred not to be opened. That is why people go to the movies, and in April these movies tug at your heart, mind, and even your funny bone. As for next time, the true romantic Don Juan Demarco... "You mean it's not you, Bo?"...hits the screen as Johnny Depp portrays the world's greatest lover. Another kiss is shared by Nicholas Cage and David Curuso in "Kiss of Death." Also, Liam Neeson dawns a skirt and fights the battle of his life in "Rob Roy" Until next time, we hope to see you at the movies...

The Highland Echo

Paul Weaver
Editor

Sarah Stevenson
Assistant Editor

Dave Downs
Campus Life

Editorial Team

Marc Hall
Photography

Amanda Martin
Arts

Angela McLemore
Copy

Chris Stephens
Sports

Sarah West
Campus Politics

Reportorial Team

Greg Carroll, Dara DiGiacomo, Kenyon Evans, Josh Goocey, Eddie Harmon, Chee Hill, Jessica Lemler, Becky Lill, Kristie Paschel, Todd Smith, Christie Stalans, Claire Stancampiano, Kim Syphret

Columnists

Josh Hogan, Lance Klosterman, Bo McMichael, Gevin Simpson

Contributing Photographers

Kristin Kant

Advisor
Jeff Gary

An apology from the Echo

We're sorry! Due to scheduling problems, poor planning, and a temporary budget freeze, the Echo failed to fulfill its role as a part of the campus community. Organizational steps are being taken to make sure that something of this does not happen again. If you are interested in aiding with the effort, please let us know.

Paul Weaver,
editor

Concerns and ideas can be shared with the Echo staff by writing to box 2661, or by calling the Student Publications Office at extension 8176. The views expressed in the Echo do not reflect the views of Maryville College.

Photo by Marc Hall

by Gevin Simpson
Columnist

I have reason to believe that Maryville College is not the wonderful utopian institution that we all perceive it to be. No I'm not referring to the physical state of the college as we know it, but I do believe that Maryville College is hiding something. . . or someone.

It has come to my watchful eye that there are several persons who are not who we believe them to be. I am not going to go into the aspects of every single person whom

I feel is under a witness protection here at the college. I hope that no one in any position of power with the United States of America ever finds out that I know who these persons are. Unfortunately I am not allowed to mention the accused by name, but the clues that I am about to reveal to you will help you to solve the puzzle as I have.

The first person that I am referring to will be known as "James T." for the emphatic way that he/she teaches his/her courses. I have reason to feel that this person is either the son/daughter of Captain James T. Kirk of "Star Trek" fame or that they are really Clark Kent. The perfect scenario that comes to mind took place during my sophomore year in my ENGLISH 270 class. As we all know, the first semester of school is the beginning of winter for Tennessee and this professor kept demanding that we open the window, hence the Clark Kent theory. We had to open the

"It has come to my watchful eye that there are several persons who are not who we believe them to be"

window so that he/she could easily leave and save a life and return before we even knew he/she was gone. The theory can be shot down, because the person is of average build and not of any super proportions, but have you ever witnessed this person type? Whew, talk about speeding bullets!!!!

The other person is question will be called "Greystoke," because of his/her resemblance to the Lord of Greystoke in the Edgar Rice Burroughs novel Tarzan. This person is not a faculty member, but a member of staff, and he/she has an incredible urge for doing things outdoors. I have watched him/her climb the Alpine Tower in a matter of minutes, just as "Tarzan" would climb a tree. The person enjoys white water rafting, caving and is an avid jogger. Why anyone would want to cram themselves, and others, into a cave and risk life and limb all in the pursuit of a CHALLENGE is beyond me. I wonder why the college would let him/her risk the lives of students to help him/her remember the days in the jungles of Africa. Let's hope that we don't see any apes running around the campus pretending to be students and if Tarzan is working over there then where is Cheeta?

I hope everyone realizes that in my own special way I am sending praises out to the two individuals and to others like them who make learning fun and enjoyable, and they are able to take a joke. Luckily I told them about this before I wrote it so they wouldn't be offended. So until we find out that "Bill sitting on Capital Hill" finally became a law or if we really perfected making "Wagon Wheels" (Does anyone else remember this as a child, or is it just me, and am I really old?) Ladies and Gentlemen. . . There it is!

Letter to the Editor . . .

Dear Editor —

I have a few questions.

How many friends have you known for 10 years?

Of those friends, how many of them sleep in your room? Smell like you? Go everywhere with you? Fit like a glove?

Well, I had one of those friends, but recently I lost that friend and I fear it may never return. I didn't lose this friend. We didn't break up. The friend didn't move away. This friend was STOLEN.

This old friend was a vintage, mid-80's Rawlings baseball mitt, an Ozzie Smith special. It was a light tan color and it fit my hand to a tee. I won softball championships wearing this mitt. On occasions, I DID sleep with the Oz.

On the intramural softball fields last month, a very dishonest person walked away with my old friend. Now before you think I'm being too cheezy about this friend thing, consider this. Ten years ago, this baseball mitt, this hunk of leather, this worthless possession was given to me by my future wife. This was the first birthday present Lisa ever gave me.

It was a birthday present in May of 1985. In this season of birthdays and mitts, we are about to celebrate another occasion — the birth of a child. My son will be born this month and he has already been cheated out of one rite of passage in our family. I had planned to pass this mitt on to him one day. He won't get that chance.

No, little Paul Gary will never get the opportunity to wear his father's softball glove because some dishonest person felt it was right to appropriate this piece of my property to be his or her own. "Why is he griping? I stole it fair and square!" this thief is probably thinking. Well, stealing is wrong and I hope this person has a guilty conscience about it. There is nothing fair and square about what happened to me.

I hope that some day, while wearing the mitt, this person has visions of my little boy growing up without this family heirloom to call his own. And if this person reads this note, I hope these words might sink in. And as the rest of the campus community reads this note, I hope to heighten awareness and open eyes. Guard your things, people. You never know when a piece of your precious property might find its way into the hands of dishonest people.

Sure, there are other softball mitts to be bought. I wouldn't be surprised if a new glove finds its way under the Christmas tree this year or perhaps into my hands on the occasion of my birthday in just a few weeks.

In the meantime, our family is without an old friend. Whoever is responsible should know that it hurts us very much.

Signed

Jeff Gary
Director of Publications

Morrow, Executive Director of Development, Fundraising, resigns

by Claire Stancampiano
Staff Writer

After nearly two decades as Maryville College's Executive Director of Development and Fundraising, Ellie Morrow is retiring. Catching a glimpse of the pale blue Smokies from the stairs leading to her office in Willard House makes it easy to see what a major part of her life she will be leaving behind on May 31.

Morrow said "I am leaving at a very exciting time for the college. Enrollment has increased, and I have a lot of confidence in the new president."

She has many fond memories including meeting the challenge of the Kresge Foundation by raising $1 million to finish Carnegie Hall. There have also been, along with the high points of her career, some "challenging times."

One of the major reasons for Morrow's retirement is her recent December marriage. "When I got married, I made a time commitment," she said. Tentative future plans for the two include traveling west to Arizona and overseas to visit places such as Portugal and Russia.

Morrow also said, "I would like to explore whether or not I could be of some help to the Adult Literacy Program. Reading is a vital part of my life that I would like to extend to other people."

Working with the literacy program would help Morrow to keep her close ties with MC along with "...attending athletic events for many years to come." If time permits, she would also enjoy learning how to quilt.

A noticeable number of staff members have recently left Maryville College. When asked to comment on this fact, Morrow replied, "Several people in advancement left for a number of personal reasons and not because they were unhappy with the college or what they were doing here. Often, there were other opportunities that people wished to pursue."

As Executive Director of Development, Morrow has coordinated a great many fundraising events during her 18 years at Maryville. She says "I have been very impressed with the students and their volunteer efforts in recent years. You can see and feel it spreading throughout the campus with things like the Phonathon and the Bonner program. It's heartwarming to see them helping the school as much as they do."

Photo by Marc Hall

"Parting is such sweet sorrow . . ."

MC's Executive Director of Development and Fundraising, Ellie Morrow, says goodbye to a well-wisher at her farewell reception.

Libby

continued from p. 1

of people for four years and counselors sat on the end of the aisle to mark us present. Students weren't allowed in any car unless they were with their parents or a designated chaperone. We could go to town only one night a week as juniors and seniors. We didn't even have a Thanksgiving break or a Spring Break."

On the up side of conservatism, Libby admitted that a lot of marriages occurred as a result of the rule which required coed groups of students to sit together for Chapel for all four years. Libby admitted to having had plenty of upperclassmen girlfriends to take hikes off-campus with. Besides, there were lots of educational programs, weekend activities and festivals designed to encourage the students to get to know one another, according to Libby. (In fact, Dr. Sarah (Brown) Mc Niell and Stewart Mc Niell were friends as students attending the college together.) The student center was located in a makeshift hut where the P.E. Center is now. "It was very bright and a neat place to hang around," Libby assures. Apparently, there was really no way for students to go home anyway; most of the students traveled long distances to receive their education at Maryville College.

After receiving her degree she returned to Ohio to teach in the public school system. She saved her money from five years of teaching in order to pursue a graduate degree in Library Science. Her master's degree qualified her to become a librarian in the public high schools. After 25 years, she retired.

Of her decision to retire from the public schools, Libby said, "I wanted to change. And, I wanted to do something. I loved what I was doing, but I wanted to do something different — I wanted another challenge." In the meantime, "I volunteered for admissions and was also on the alumni board. I was doing so much volunteer work I just said, 'Look do you have any openings?'" So, in 1982, after completing her first career, President Dr. Wayne Anderson and Director of Admissions Larry West hired her. "Initially, I worked nine months out of the year on a part-time basis with the alumni — getting them involved. I was Acting Director of Admissions for two years. There have been many changes since I arrived."

McNiell

continued from p. 1

with what I like to do best," she said.

McNiell tries to share this enthusiasm with her students as much as she can. On e way she does this is by talking about the history of the college in her classes.

"Being interested in history makes you interested in the history around you," she commented. "I think it's nice to bring history down to how it affects real people."

She does not limit her work with history to the classroom, however. Her love of history has led to many other projects. Some of these achievements of which she is "pretty proud" include: researching and writing the book "Back Home in Blount County;" being a program scholar and lecturer for senior adult education programs sponsored by the East Tennessee Historical Society; being a member of the Blount County Public Library Board; and being a member, officer, editor, writer, researcher, and speaker for the Blount County Historic Trust, an organization of which she is also co-founder with John Nichols.

Much of her interest in local history was sparked when she was asked to study local buildings, including ones at MC, for the National Register to write funding proposals for them.

McNiell plans to keep up her involvement in these and other organizations. As for her connections to the college, she has a few plans as well. She would like to see research be done for the more recently built college buildings. While they are not up for consideration as historical sites yet, she thinks it would be good to accumulate a file of floor plans, writings that were done at the time of the building's completion, and other documents.

She also expressed an interest in volunteering in the college archives, although their present condition concerns her. "I don't feel comfortable with asking people to donate or donating myself when they are somewhere that is subject to water damage and flooding," she said.

She realizes that this cannot be at the top of the priority list and that it is a matter of finding space and funding. "I feel it is important," McNell said, "because if the college doesn't preserve it's history, I don't know who's going to."

She also plans to go hiking and go traveling with her husband in the off season. They are going to Russia in August, they have a family reunion this summer, and they are going to go visit their grandchildren.

When asked what she will miss, McNell said, "I think I'm going to miss the association with people and the stimulation of new ideas. It'll take a real effort to maintain that."

Letter to the Editor . . .

Dear Editor,

I want to counter the argument many international students have that Americans do not make an effort to talk to them. I have lots of experience from where I am speaking. I was once an international student myself in Japan, and I am currently Office Manager and English teacher in the CELL program. I know more international students than most Americans here.

It is true that many American students at Maryville College do not socialize so much with internationals, but there are some. It is also true that many internationals do not make an effort to socialize with Americans, but there are some. Those exceptions in both cases who talk with the other culture come from open and curious minds.

But the sad fact is that, as many see in the cafeteria, in the library, or outside in the beautiful weather, people on campus see clusters of Koreans, Japanese, and Latin Americans with no Americans among them. It is natural and healthy for internationals to hang around and keep their small part of their culture on campus. It is more comfortable and easier than trying every day to talk with another culture in their own land.

Enough elaboration. I am writing of my own personal experiences in the last two weeks. I graduated from MC last year; I had, and still have many international friends. I had parties, had good times, shared good experiences—all that which makes life rich with good friends.

I am now a staff member and teacher. I am beginning to understand that I am no longer welcome with the internationals as a fellow student. This has weakened friendships and disappointed me every other day. It is harsh to say, but it seems the truth.

Do you other Americans get this? Do you then hear that we don't try either? I will give a suggestion to the problem. The newer internationals who come here look immediately for ways to understand Maryville and America here, so the most ready advice comes from internationals who came before them. Those internationals got their advice from the former internationals who were there before them, and so on. Handed down through these "generations," the advice has been "Americans don't give a damn, so give up, and don't try." So, without trying, many internationals give up, don't try, and tell everyone proudly that "Americans don't try to talk to us."

I used to agree with that view, feeling I was an odd sort because I enjoyed the company of international friends. I was told always that Americans don't try, don't give a damn about them. I agreed mutely; however, there was also the lingering thought that I could not imagine those same friends, comfortable with their fellow Japanese, or Korean, or Latin American friend, even try at all to talk to a lone American or a group. The larger two neighboring groups get, the smaller the chance that any interpersonal communication will happen. Internationals feel comfortable in their large groups because then they are a majority again, and they have control.

But I must insist, I am not talking about all international students. There are those exceptions who try to get out of their comfort zone and meet worthwhile friends. They end up getting a possibly rewarding friendship that will last a lifetime across the oceans. All it took was some effort and an open mind. They listen to their friends saying "Americans don't give a damn," but they also don't make an opinion until they see for themselves. God bless you who do that! That is the true learning of an exchange program.

I basically want to take a swing, in writing, at those internationals who have already made up their mind without giving myself or others a chance to get to know them. It is truly unfair and very disappointing. If I hear it again, I will tell you where to put that piece of advice. Give Americans a chance! And you Americans, give internationals a chance if they are trying to keep an open mind. They can turn out to be some of the best friends you will ever have.

Those who may have internationals as roommates, or friends or as acquaintances, show them my letter in this paper and explain it to them, if they cannot understand everything. Let them understand that they should not be talking such bull while they sit in the comfort of their fellow Japanese, Koreans, or Latin Americans. Tell them their friend don't know it all and that they are fools for accepting such an easy answer to why some Americans and internationals don't socialize.

Those who want to argue with my point, you are invited to write. Those of you who agree, please let me and other internationals know! In their cultures, if you tell one or two, the gossip spreads to all of them like MC gossip does to all MC students. I really invite international response. I want some of you internationals to explain the "clustering" you do away and tell me what you think. If you truly give a damn, I should be hearing from one of you soon.

Sincerely,

Jeff Huffman
CELL Office Manager

Committed® by Michael Fry

DRB and J-Board Reports

On April 4, 1995 the J-Board met because a Carnegie resident had failed to comply with the Disciplinary Review Board's sanction. The student now has a certain amount of time to complete sanctions or the students will receive automatic suspension.

DRB:

• February 1-15 The Lloyd Hall resident who committed phone fraud was given a six month probation period after paying the phone charges.

• February 26 The two students charged with drug abuse and possession of drug paraphernalia have received suspensions held in abeyance for one year. This is a strict probation where the students have to attend class and talk to faculty members regularly.

• March 1 The five students in Copeland Hall who broke visitation policy have received first offense visitation.

• March 3 The Lloyd resident charged with alcohol offense has received an alcohol first offense.

• March 3 The two Carnegie students found with alcohol have received an alcohol first offense.

• March 3 The students who violated the alcohol policy in Carnegie have received an alcohol first offense.

• March 4 Two of the five students charged with alcohol and quiet hours violations received an alcohol first offense, while the other three students' cases were dismissed.

• March 4 The non-student caught with alcohol in Carnegie Hall received a letter sent to the private residence and a warning that if any other offenses occurred, the student would be banned from this campus.

• March 4 The student charged with harassment in Carnegie Hall apologized in person to the person who was harassed.

• March 7 The Carnegie resident charged with alcohol received an alcohol first offense.

• March 8 The Gamble resident charged with drug abuse withdrew.

• March 13 A case involving harassment and disorderly conduct of two students in Davis Hall resulted in a restrictive action, including no contact with one another through the end of this year or presence in one another's halls.

• March 14 Three students received a first offense visitation for breaking quiet hours in Copeland Hall.

• March 14 Four students received a first offense alcohol in Pearson's Hall.

• March 15 Three students in Pearson's received an alcohol first offense, while the fourth person was unidentified.

• March 17 Two students in Carnegie received an alcohol first offense.

• March 17 A student in Davis received an alcohol first offense.

• March 26 A student in Carnegie received first offense alcohol.

• April 8 On the football field during Blister in the Sun, three students were charged with disorderly conduct, and the case is pending.

Students unite, oppose room entry policy

by Greg Carroll
Staff Writer

Lately I've been hearing quite a bit of dissatisfied rumblings coming from students who appear to be disenchanted with our esteemed Office of Student Development. They say, "Didn't George Orwell write about these guys? When are they going to start locking us in our rooms and making us meet a curfew? When are they going to get a clue?" The latest bit of rumbling came when residents of Carnegie Hall received a notice that basically tells them that they are responsible for what goes on in their rooms even when they are not home. Of course that is not the only thing that people are up in arms about. There is the issue of reasonable cause. People coming in and out of your room is reasonable cause. Loud music or other forms of sound, even before quiet hours, is reasonable cause for a college official to enter your room. Lately it seems that a closed door is enough for these moral crusaders to impose themselves in our private affairs. When does this behavior cease? Apparently our big brothers and sisters on the resident hall staff have been amazingly genetically altered to have the eyes of a hawk and the nose of a bloodhound. In one case one of our staff members had such a keen olfactory awareness that he/she was able to "smell beer" from half a floor down in the stairwell of Carnegie. This staff members proboscis prowess was, in this instance, so extraordinary that he/she was able not only to discount the contents of a nearby recycling bin, but also to pinpoint the room from which this pungent stench was emanating. The fact that no one was in the room matters little. The important thing to note here is that we have the most well trained, motivated and capable staff in the world, insofar as busting college students for drinking in their rooms. In fact, rumor has it that the CIA has asked our staff to conduct a seminar on this very issue for all of their upper level operatives.

Amazing isn't it, students? Do you think maybe someday you and I could ever aspire to such heights? Certainly not without genetic engineering of some sort. We have found a staff that would all be welcomed as Superfriends in the Hall Of Justice, and for that we should be proud. I believe that Sir Arthur Conan Doyle once wrote about a person with abilities on par with our staff of super sleuths, but his guy only solved murders and robberies and other menial crimes; our guys stop the dreaded plague capable of decimating the worlds population - yes, folks - drinking on a college campus. Don't deny it any longer. People at our school have found a way to justify the consumption of beverages meant only to intoxicate, agitate and make people violent and aggressive. It's all right.

Once this issue is out in the open we can come together as a community, that is if we aren't still locked out of each others dorms, and address the true horror of what is happening to these few lost souls who are destroying their lives by drinking beer on a Friday night. It will all be better soon. We can work it out. If we get together with our staff, we can probably see to it that all dissenters are either eradicated or closely monitored.

In all seriousness folks, consider this picture. Seven or eight friends gathered in a dorm room playing cards, making jokes, and perhaps were being a little bit too loud. Sounds like it could be sort of fun doesn't it? So what is it about adding alcohol to this scenario that makes some people so uptight? Without alcohol, one would probably just ask them to tone it down. However, with alcohol, people would run a marathon to find an R.A. What is it about this substance that causes your internal moral alarm to go berserk? I have heard the argument that our staff does not have enough power; people say that once you are written up your case goes to the DRB and all you receive is a slap on the wrist because the attitude is that "they were only drinking." Well guess what staff, they were only drinking. Unless real damage is being done or people feel there is a reasonable (like you know what this word means) chance of someone getting hurt, then leave the students alone. So, the question is, what can we do to prevent harmless social drinkers from being confused with dangerous obnoxious assholes who ruin the system for everyone by running around and breaking things or threatening people because of their lack self-control?

The first thing I would like to see done is the addition of a student Bill Of Rights to the handbook. With this you could define students rights in clear concise terms so there will be no confusion as to procedure when they meet with Student Development. With this, you could change reasonable cause to probable cause, or at the very least, define reasonable cause. In other words, no more mysteriously acute nostrils; no more being made a suspect simply because you have more than three people in your room; and, for God's sake, no more being written up for something else when an R.A. comes by to tell you to be quiet. (Just call first, it has got to be less trouble than coming by the room). The second thing that has to be done is to set up an appeals board for DRB decisions. Right now we have no recourse if we feel that we have been wronged or had our rights violated. The third thing that needs to be done is to make students accountable for their actions only. Get rid of the current practice of making someone guilty by association. If you are in a room and you are not drinking then you should not get in trouble. No, I don't care that this person is aware of a rule violation and does nothing about it. On one level everyone says that they want a greater sense of community, but with policies such as this, students are encouraged, no required, to turn in their friends. What kind of community is that? Certainly not one based on trust. If staff tries to say that they cannot distinguish who in a room has been drinking, then I implore them to invest our money in a breathalyzer. Finally, what needs to happen is an attitude change. Fellow students, why do we let them continue to strip away our privacy and then hide behind rules that seem purposely unclear. We pay 16,000 dollars a year (and rising) shouldn't we have control over the rules that affect us?

Students unite! What I'm asking for here is not a cooperative effort to reason with staff, that never seems to work. I want complete and total defiance of an authority that makes no effort to understand our ability to choose for ourselves what is responsible behavior. I will not tolerate any further invasions of the privacy of good people like you. Student Senate, if you truly think that you have influence on this campus, then don't buckle or hide when this comes up (it will). Stand your ground against the ubiquitous Office of Student Development and deliver them the message that we, the students, control our own destiny now... and will from now on.

Student Senate makes efforts to alter room entry policy

by Alex Little
Student Senate President

The last Student Senate meeting of the year was held on Thursday, March 11, and was comprised of both this year's and next year's Senate members. Senate received a committee report from Lance Klosterman about the search process for Dr. Wyatt's replacement. Senate also discussed next year's elections in which freshmen senators, dorm senators, and commuter senators will be elected. Jeremy Landis was nominated to be Chief Justice of the Judicial Review Board and was confirmed by the Senate. Also,

Deborah Shewfelt was confirmed as next year's Student Senate Vice President. I look forward to working with next year's Senate because this year we had a Senate that looks more like Maryville. With a diverse group of Senate members I hope to promote an attitude and environment in which Senate members can more effectively address the concerns of the whole student body. This new attitude of student government was also expressed to me by junior class President Nick Schell. He wanted to convey to next year's junior class that he is honored to be president and looks forward to addressing your needs and concerns. The last topic discussed in Senate was the Room/Entry policy here at Maryville. The following statement was written by Jara Griffith and myself and we hope that it will shed some light on the Room/Entry policy.

What do you think about college officials being able to enter your room? See page 108 of the handbook to understand more fully that in the event that college policy is being violated your room may be entered. Some students see this as a violation of their rights; therefore, an Ad-hoc committee was formed consisting of John Paul Nichols as chair, Clint Wight, Jara Griffith, Dr. Carl

Gombert, Alex Little, Darren Dykes and Jon Peters. After much consideration the committee decided to clarify reasonable cause in order to provide campus wide consistency with the room/entry policy. In regards to room entry, committee members agreed that students did not fully understand their rights. Presently, a student has to give permission to a college official in order for that official to enter the room. However, if permission is not given the college reserves the right to obtain permission from the proper authorities to enter the room. We, the Student Senate, have passed a proposal to clarify reasonable cause with the hope that students will be better informed of its definition. The next step in this process is to promote a list of rights that the students presently have, but are not fully aware of. Student Senate completely supports the student handbook, under the belief that the rules of the handbook were created to provide comfort and security here at Maryville. However, no staff member or college official should use the rules of the handbook as a guise to unlawfully search the room of a student. Be watching next year's first edition of the Echo for a student bill of rights regarding Room Entry.

Speed, pitching power Scots to success — Etchison

by Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

The Maryville College Baseball team has amassed record of 28-10 and at press time were still awaiting word on whether or not their season will continue in the NCAA Division III tournament.

If the Scots' season is finished, it has already been a very memorable one and one filled with many school records.

Their record in itself is the most wins ever by the baseball team, eclipsing the previous record of 25. This was one of the early season goals for the team.

The team found different ways to win, according to head coach Eric Etchison, "Early in the year we were winning on our pitching until our bats could come around. Now that our Earned Run Average by our pitchers is up a little, we are winning with our offense," he said.

Many players have already had outstanding seasons for the ball club, none more than Senior John Roszell.

This year's male J. D. Davis recipient, an award given to one male and one female for leadership and athletic ability, had sent records crashing.

Roszell had 64 hits during his Senior campaign while hitting with a .460 average. With his 64 hits he has amassed more in a season than anyone before him.

Sophomore Chucky Yates has also had an excellent second season for the Scots and while hitting lead-off, he has helped ignite one of the most explosive offenses in Maryville College history. As an individual, Yates set school records by crossing the plate 56 times and also by stealing 46 bases.

Senior Scott Watson finished his final season with the Scots a winner, while also putting his name down in the record books. His 7-3 mark gave him 14 career wins, breaking the previous mark.

Along with these individual marks, many team marks fell as well. Besides the 28 wins, the team also had a combined batting average of .343, scored 317 runs, and had 378 hits, while stealing 147 bases. Also included in their record-setting season on the bases was the fact that they stole 147 out of a possible 159. That .920 percent also made its way into the record books.

What may have been overshadowed by all of these offensive stats are the outstanding pitching staff that this team possessed.

Junior Doug Parris, named this years Most Outstanding Pitcher, lead the team with a 6-1 record, including a 3.52 earned run average. Junior Dave Forster had an outstanding earned run average of 1.91 while pitching his way to a 5-1 mark. Then Watson, as he finished with that 7-3 mark and a 4.42 earned run average.

Keys to this team and their winning, according to Etchison, were many things. He stated that, "Sophomore Ryan Rogers and Roszell did a great job driving in runs."

Also helping out was the team's incredible speed. Yates and Roszell were also the leaders in this department.

As the year went on, a deep pitching staff, which Etchison had stated as a key early in the year, really came through.

When the team's record was 20-7, Coach Etchison stated that "The team needs to win out to be considered for the post-season play." The teams responded by winning eight. The team should find out within the next few days if they will be given a chance to improve on their 28-10 record and possibly a chance to break in their new lights.

"Speed and Pitching" —

According to Coach Etchison, speed and pitching were two keys to the successful 28-10 season the Scots put together. Below, pitcher Joe Wilson fires another fastball. Right, a speedy Scot slides in safely at second base.

Photos by Marc Hall

The Scots' record (28 wins) in itself is the most wins ever by the baseball team, eclipsing the previous record of 25. This was one of the early season goals for the team.

Schoen scholarship benefit held

by Amanda Martin
Arts Editor

When Sallie Schoen died last spring, Maryville College students, alumni, and faculty lost a true friend.

Schoen, who taught piano and other music courses at MC for 39 years, was affectionately known to her students as "Sallie." When asked to describe Schoen, her former students responded with words such as "second mother," "coach," "mentor," and "healer."

In memory of Schoen, her husband, retired Associate Professor Victor Schoen, and children have established the Sallie Warth Schoen Memorial Scholarship. On May 6 the MC Division of Fine arts presented a benefit concert by Schoen's former students. Seven of Schoen's former students performed, five of whom are MC alumni.

"It's something of a once in a generation occurrence," said Victor Schoen of the concert, "because never have this many former soloist students come back at the same time, all in honor of their teacher."

The concert featured alumni Dr. James Breckinridge, Rosemary Barrett Byers, Carol Zinavage, Dr. Mary Rucker, Stan Williamson, and former private students Takako Hayase and Joshua Dillon. They performed a variety of works by Bach, Brahms, Schumann, Scriabin, and others.

"I think back to the MC years and thank God that Sallie was there, that I was given the opportunity to experience her and all the wonderment that was her craft and the tremendous foundation that she put down for me," said Breckinridge.

Sophomore piano performance major Liza Chon is the first recipient of the Sallie Warth Schoen Memorial Scholarship. She was presented with the award at the Academic Awards Banquet held this month.

"I'm very honored the the former students want to do this," said Victor Schoen. "I know they are working hard, and I am also getting good support from students and faculty."

'Bury the Dead' concludes season

by Sarah Stevenson
Assistant Editor

The Maryville College theatre department has a reputation for producing pieces which are challenging for those who work on the shows as well as the audience. This spring's Alpha Psi Omega production of "Bury the Dead" was no exception.

Written by Irwin Shaw, the play is set during "the second year of the war that is to begin tomorrow night."

A burial detail is on the battlefield digging a mass grave. Six soldier corpses suddenly stand up and refuse to be buried. The rest of the play depicts all of the futile attempts which are made to convince them to be buried.

"There are definite Socialist influences," said Senior Brian Prather, the show's director and technical director. "It's very different from other shows we've done."

Prather recognizes the strong anti-war sentiments expressed in the script. However, he also sees it as a struggle to maintain individuality. "It's about the rising of the so-called 'common person' against an out-of-control authority."

Members of the cast and crew were a bit unsure about the show. Freshman Becky Lill said that she was uncertain about what the audience's reaction to the show would be. Yet she said, "It's a great show, and I love working with these people."

Senior Darrien Thomson expressed similar concerns. "At first,

I didn't really care for it. It appeared to be little more than peace-loving propaganda," he said. "Yet after hearing it be performed, I began to see the true message, which is the right of individuals to live peaceably any way they choose."

For the most part, the cast's reactions to the show itself and their feelings about how rehearsals went have been positive. "I agree with the show's message, so I'm glad to be a part of it," said Senior Eisha Neely a few weeks ago.

Prather also stated that he was surprised by the cast's talent and their ability to understand the script and his direction. He was also pleased that so many people auditioned.

Sophomore Kathryn McDonald agreed. "It's going well, she said before the show. "We have a lot of talented actors that I didn't know we had. People came out of the woodwork."

The cast included Melody Alexander, Christy Garland, Mark Hatfield, Curt Kiser, Scott Kiser, Barbara Kistler, Karson Leitch, Jason Leith, Patrick Leslie, Lill, John McDonald, Kelly Meacham, Neely, Tiffany Rudicil, Suzanne Savell, Todd Smith, Sarah Stevenson, Lynn Talley, Thomson, Kathy Waycaster, Sam Waycaster, and Mike Wilson.

Kim Schuenemann was the stage manager. Kathryn McDonald was the assistant stage manager and assistant technical director. The rest of the crew included Chris Lance, Michelle Lawson, Traci Tidwell, and Julie Williams.

The show ran April 27, 28, and 29 at 8 p.m. in the theatre.

photo by Marc Hall

"I heard a groan!" -- Jason Leith attempts to stop priest Patrick Leslie while Kelly Meacham looks on. The Alpha Psi Omega production of "Bury the Dead" ran April 27 through the 29.

MC, Learning Center hosted Odyssey of the Mind again this spring

by Claire Stancampiano
Staff Writer

Odyssey of the Mind, the program best described as "the spirit of creativity," ventured into its second year here at Maryville College on Sat. March 18. Vandy Kemp and the Learning Center worked extensively with OM in 1993-94. Once again, they held a successful regional tournament here on campus. Having the tournament here is a benefit to MC economically, and helps more people take an interest in the school.

OM is a worldwide creative problem-solving competition in which children from kindergarten to college can participate. They work on long term problems and compete with their final products, which can be anything from a balsa wood structure to a short play.

It gives students of all ages and backgrounds the chance to expand their learning horizons beyond the traditional school curriculum. It is a program designed to stimulate mental activity and to help young people discover interests and talents they never knew they had.

"This year we had approximately 80 teams from about 20 different schools participate," says Kathy Stancampiano, the OM Director for region VI. "The focus of this competition isn't on winning. It is on the great deal of creativity, and work, and time that the kids put into solving these problems."

Beyond the regional level, OM participants eventually compete on state and world levels if their solutions are clever enough. The world finals, which have been held everywhere from Boise to Beijing, are being held in Knoxville on the UT campus in May.

The long term problems for 1994-95 were as follows: Scientific Safari, in which teams must construct a vehicle and trailer propelled by two types of power designed to go on an actual safari involving team-constructed animals; The Mail Must Go Through, in which teams must develop a system to transport foreign and domestic mail and packages beginning at a mailbox and ending at the correct destination; Vaudeville, a classical problem in which they must perform a three act vaudeville play within 8 minutes; and A New Twist, in which teams must design and build a balsa wood structure that will undergo a series of twists while supporting as much weight as possible.

Finally, there is Time Traveler, a problem which requires teams to create a skit about traveling through time by way of a machine that they design. Each of these problems has detailed limitations and instructions for the team to follow.

The Knoxville Church, perspectives

by Kenyon Evans
Staff Writer

The Knoxville Church has flared many tempers this year with their unorthodox style of evangelism; they recently had a gathering at UT and put up posters to advertise the event. According to Jeremy Raimey, an active member of the church, "Last Thursday, I had put posters up... all over campus. Within hours, they were all ripped down, most of them, 80% of them at least." One student who ripped down a few of the posters gave this reason for his actions:

"I've talked to people who joined the church and the attitude that they have is that if you don't go to their church and follow their ways, you're going to Hell. That's not right."

Raimey feels that the reason the posters were torn down is because of how "hard-hearted this campus of people has become."

Most criticism of the Knoxville Church stems from their alleged practices of harassment and condemnation. The posters that were put up made strong comments about Christianity, including: "What has led to the lukewarmness, hypocrisy, and division in modern day 'Christianity'?" Raimey did not see the comments and attitudes of the Knoxville Church as critical of other faiths, but rather as simply "the truth." He felt that he was not espousing his own beliefs, but rather simply preaching what the Bible says. Senior Lance Klosterman said that, "[The Knoxville Church] is a highly sectarian group that has no tolerance for any other faith and this is something that's very contradictory to everything that Maryville College is about; the role of Maryville College throughout the ages has been tolerance and acceptance no matter race religion, or sex... we've even gone further by implementing the covenant which says we need to respect one another. The Knoxville Church does not respect the faith of others and, therefore, does not respect those other people."

Photo by Marc Hall

"Just another sunny day on Lloyd Beach"—

John Flanagan enjoys the sun as he waits for a wrecker to pick him up.

Raimey claimed that the idea that the church harasses people is "ridiculous" and said, "There is nobody that can say that I harass them if they tell me they do not want to study." Raimey felt that one problem is that people in the South have a tendency to politely provide excuses that he does not interpret as "no"; those who respond to his invitations with "maybe next Sunday" will be asked again by him next week. He states that he encourages people to attend his church, but claimed if someone responds with: "Get out of my face. I do not want to study the Bible with you. I could care less about God.

I do not love Jesus." then he would not pursue the matter further.

One source of allegations of harassment is those students who attended the church a few times, but then decided not to become a member. Sophomore Aaron Stone attended the church for a while but decided not to be baptized. In retrospect, he described the experience as a growth experience and "eye-opening", commenting, "[It showed me that] I need to be more aware of what I am doing spiritually and not let someone else tell me who I am." After he stopped attending the church, he was accused by one of its members of slandering the church to other people. Stone claims that this member accused him of being "phony", "cowardly", and that he was "going to Hell." Raimey responded to the accusations that he harassed people who decided not to become members by saying, "People that don't want to change, they get bitter." Stone did not feel that he was bitter against the Knoxville Church.

Another rumor surrounding the Knoxville Church is that they are a cult. Raimey responded to this accusation by saying that pointing out the error of people's ways elicits such negative responses from people. He claims that Jesus of Nazareth foresaw that his future followers would be treated in the same way that the members of the Knoxville Church are; he believes that the disciples were seen as a cult in the same way that the Knoxville Church members are. Although some consider the Knoxville Church a cult, there are a large number of people who feel that they are not. Klosterman did not feel that they are a cult, but he did comment, "The Knoxville Church and highly sectarian groups immediately go for people who are vulnerable, people who are lonely. They [the Knoxville Church] can say, 'We've got automatic friends for you if you just come with us.' This is a real danger on a campus full of freshmen; if there is such a time that a highly sectarian group would come and start snatching these people up, it would be when you have all-new freshmen and they're all very insecure about where they are and who they're going to be."

The school chaplain, Stephen Nickle, felt that "cult" is not a word he would use to describe the Knoxville Church; however, he did feel that the presence of the Knoxville Church on campus raised several excellent questions. The dominant question being: How do we decide what the social groups are for us? He believed that there are many truths that we simply accept early in childhood and then build upon those; he asserted that we all have social groups which we have subscribed to, not just the members of the Knoxville Church.

COOL CLOTHES

HANDCRAFTED JEWELRY

Jazzberry
General

205 COURT ST • 984-0391
Walking Distance from Maryville College

Serious Clearance Sale Going on Now

MON. - SAT. 10am - 7pm
SUNDAY 1pm - 5pm

GIFTS • POTTERY • INCENSE

HIP HOME STUFF

photo by Marc Hall

photo by Marc Hall

"And the winner is..." — This year's Student Senate President race was truly an event. Big campaigns and a Senate Presidential Forum were just a few of the things which added to the excitement. At left, Alex Little hangs campaign posters on campus. Above this, Russell Perry and Daring McGowan vote in Fayerweather lobby. On the right, we have the election results of the presidential race and also of all the other races.

Hike

continued from p. 1

to an increased tuition.

That means that if we leave the tuition at the same price as this year, than we will not have enough money to cover expenses and those expenses will be deferred, which leads to debt and increase tuition next year. This was the case in the 1991-92 and 1992-93 school years. In the 1991-92 school year, the rate of increase was 6.15 %, and the following year the rate increased to 11.84 % so that the costs that were incurred the year before could be paid for.

The college has formed the Planning and Budget Advisory Committee (PBAC) to determine the college's budget. Senior Lance Klosterman, who has been working closely with the PBAC, said that the committee is trying to "systematically reduce the cost so as to avoid another incident like in '92-93." The PBAC wants to slowly reduce tuition increase as the number of students increases. By doing this, the college can have a steady decrease in tuition hikes while reaching normalcy. Maryville College's rate of increase is abnormally high, but the tuition charged by the college is average. The PBAC hopes to solve this problem.

Some of the factors that helped the PBAC determine the increase this year were listed in Klosterman's letter to the students: "The total percentage increase should be less than last years increase of 7.49%." This has been accomplished. "As much as possible, there should be clear linkage between increased cost and increased expenses." Information on the reaching of this goal was unavailable. "The 1995-96 budget should have a line item for funding of the Maryville College 2000 plan included in it."

President Gibson, who has endorsed the recommendation for the 95-96 school year, says in his letter to parents that "This level of charges will permit the college to increase financial aid for the students, provide an increase compensation for faculty and staff, make some improvements in the student's residence halls, and allow for service to keep pace with inflation." The key is that even though the tuition will be increasing, so will the financial aid.

The college understands that the students who attend Maryville College want a superior education at a modest price, and they are currently doing everything within their power to reduce the tuition, but the matter will take a great deal of time and effort.

Election Results

Alex Little — President
Debbie Shewfelt — Vice President

Senior Class Pres — Debbie Shewfelt
Vice President — Becky Heckler
secretary/treasurer — Kelly Garrison Representative — Jason Brooks
Representative — Waynette Matthews

Junior Class Pres — Nick Schell
Vice President — Adam Ray
Secretary/Treasure — Mark Hatfield
Representative — Thad Alsup
Representative — Clint Wight

Sophomore Class Pres — Josh Goocey
Vice President — Ben Petty
Secretary/Treasure — Whitney Nations
Representative — Lori Leffel
Representative — Staci Kerr

PAPA JOHN'S PIZZA
Call your PAPA
983-PAPA

One Large
Perfect Italian Sausage Pizza

$5.99
+ Tax

Additional toppings .95 each. Not valid with any other coupon. Valid only at participating stores.

One Extra Large Two Toppings or Two Extra Large Two Toppings

$9.95 + Tax $15.95 + Tax

Additional toppings $1.25 each. Not valid with any other coupon. Valid only at participating stores.

12 BEST POSSIBLE COLLEGE

photo by Marc Hall

Hey, it looks like our feature, "The Best Possible College," actually had an impact on this campus. The Physical Plant has been busy this week preparing for graduation. On the right, Darrell Dunn, a maintenance staff person, repairs a hole in one of the columns at Thaw Hall.

In addition to this repair, the Pearsons column was repaired (upper left). The holes in the Carnegie parking lot (bottom left) were filled (and need to be filled again we hear), and the slats in the Anderson tower repaired (bottom right).

photo by Marc Hall

photo by Marc Hall

photo by Marc Hall

1995 - 1996

Inside

Interview with President
p.5

Scots Football
p.11

Echo Survey
p.8

Classifieds
for sale p.8

Athletic Center Receives a Facelift

by David Downs
Assistant Editor

A new face can be seen at Maryville College this fall.

It is not a particular student or professor but a place that many student athletes call a second home.

This past summer, the Cooper Athletic Center went through major renovations.

"Really, it's just lots of bits and pieces and things that were badly needed for the building," said athletic director Randy Lambert, "a lot of it you don't actually see like redoing the roof, redoing the ventilation system, and adding air conditioning in critical areas such as the classrooms and our meeting rooms."

But there are many aspects of the renovation process that can be seen.

The most notable is the weight room. It was completely renovated including a new $18,000 rubberized floor and $30,000 of new state of the art weight equipment.

"Something of interest to our general student population is we are adding some exercise bicycles and machines such as a treadmill and stepclimber or something like that," said Lambert. "That is the only thing we really lack with the weight room."

The training room also received a facelift by adding a new floor, new equipment, and a new office area for head trainer Sharon Wood.

The Honaker Room next to the weight room was divided and four new offices were built for coaches which "were badly needed for our athletic staff," according to Lambert.

see Cooper p.5

photo by David Downs

Pumping it Up!

Mike Parris, a junior, pumps some iron in the newly renovated weightroom in the Cooper Athletic Center.

New Faculty greet MC Students

by Allison Dunn
Staff Writer

There are some new faces at Maryville College this semester. They are teaching our classes and assigning that dreaded thing called homework.

There are three different groups of new faculty this fall. The first group is instructors. The instructors for the 1995 school year are Mr. Roger Myers, Ms. Debbie Nichols, and Ms. Lynn King Coning. To qualify for the instructor category, one must not yet have received a doctorate.

Roger Myers is our reference librarian. He holds a masters degree from the University of Tennessee in Knoxville. Librarian Debbie Nichols also holds a master's degree from UTK. Lynn King Coning, who is a visiting instructor of English, graduated from MC in 1989 and recently received a master's degree in English from UTK.

The second group, the assistant professors, have four new members this year. Dr. James Bishop, Dr. Sheri Matascik, Dr. Chad Berry, Dr. Reid Davis. Davis and Dr. Margaret "Peggy" Cowan are both listed as visiting assistant professors. This means that they are both here "on a year-to-year basis," according to Dr. Dean Bolden, academic vice president.

Dr. James Bishop is an assistant professor of mathematics who worked with the IBM Corporation for several years. He holds a bachelor of science in mathematics from Wake Forest University and both a master's degree and a doctorate in organizational behavior and human resource management from Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University.

Dr. Sheri Matascik is an assistant professor of music who has a bachelor of music in guitar performance. She also holds a master's in theory and is an experienced teacher and composer.

Dr. Chad Berry will serve as assistant professor of history. A Phi Beta Kappa graduate from Notre Dame, his master's in folk studies came from Western Kentucky University. Berry received his doctorate from Indiana University. Dr. Berry specializes in American History.

Dr. Reid Davis is a visiting assissee faculty pg. 5

What do Donahue and Limbaugh have in common?

by Amanda Martin
Editor

One of the weirdest things about being editor of the Echo, I've recently discovered, is that there's virtually no way to maintain the anonymity I'm used to. Don't get me wrong, I have already met and worked with a lot of wonderful people, and it's been great. The hard day-to-day work is fine too. It's this. Not only writing a column where I express my views, but leaving a mark on the paper as a whole. It's a powerful communication tool, one that must be handled with care.

There are a lot of things I'd like to talk about in the upcoming months, but first, I'd like to ramble a bit, so here goes.

There are two main goals for the paper I have this year. One is zeroing in on our most important audience, the students. This will be an on going project, and it will only succeed if I hear from you via letters to the editor or just talking to me. I can't possibly know what you need in this paper if you don't tell me!

The second goal is a bit more abstract. I have mounted my objectivity soap box on several occasions, as I'm sure any weary Echo staff member will tell you. "Save the opinion for the editorial page," I would say. "Opinions are like bung-holes—everyone has one, but there aren't too many people who want to hear about them."

Objectivity is something I learned about in class. Like any good MC student, I took what I learned and enmeshed it into the very center of my intellectual being!

Sarcasm aside, what I discovered later was that I really do believe in objectivity on our news pages, but for my own reasons, not just because it sounds like I know what I'm talking about.

It has to do with honesty. If I represent my opinions to you as truth, I am deceiving you. I believe MC students have the ability to make up their minds about important topics given the right tools: namely, objective information.

As far as opinion goes, you will find plenty of it here on the Op-Ed pages.

Maybe it's my insecurities rearing their beastly heads, but I am approaching this aspect of my job with a bit of apprehension. Being the consummate "people pleaser" that I am, expressing views that I know won't please everyone is a bit scary. I must be brave, though. In a society where Rush Limbaugh becomes a millionaire by spouting off his anti-everything crap, I can surely live through writing my little article. In the natural scheme of things, Barney the Dinosaur, fiend from the infernal regions that he is, has more compelling things to say than some of the morons who spout off on TV and in newspapers.

So, for once in my life, I'd like to thank Rush Limbaugh (and Phil Donahue, for that matter) for paving the way for me. No matter what I say, I know it won't be as moronic as what we're fed by these peons on a daily basis. I promise I won't make a habit of giving advice, (see the "bung-hole" comment above), but remember, never, never listen to people who have all the answers. I'd bet my Captain Picard book-mark they don't.

Remember, the opinions expressed on these pages do not necessarily represent the views of the college, students, or the entire newspaper staff. Then again, maybe they do. I'm not tellin'!

*Look for the next issue of the Highland Echo
the week of October 23*

by Alex Little
Student Senate
President

Little Looking Forward to a Great Year

cialists have been a great help in organizing the senate. Josh Goocey and Nick Schell have been very helpful with elections and I would like to thank Chief Justice Jeremy Landis for explaining the judicial system at the hall meetings.

This year, Student Senate will promote an environment in which elected senators and class officers will be responsible to the campus as a whole first, and to their constituents second.

Student Senate is responsible for the allocation of money from the contingency fund. The contingency fund is made up of student activity fees and therefore the student body should be made aware how that money is allocated. Any group that wishes to petition money from Student Senate should contact Aaron Stone, the InterClub Council co-chairman. Aaron's box number is 2681 and he will inform all club leaders how to petition money from Senate.

I have many ideas that I will address this year, but I cannot cover every important issue. If at any time any student feels uneasy about any campus issue, please contact your hall or class senators.

Lastly, I want to congratulate all persons elected to office this year, and I hope that you plan to take your jobs seriously. This college allows for large student participation and it is up to us to make our ideas reality.

The Highland Echo

Amanda Martin
Editor

Dave Downs
Assistant Editor

Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

Reporters

Geoffrey Benelisha, Sarah Christians, Eric Daugherty, Dara DiGiacomo, Allison Dunn, Kenyon Evans, Hayley Fuller, Jason Lay, Lori Leffel, Hunter Letchman, Becky Lill, Joe Malheiro, Kristi Paschel, Michelle Shular, Matt Waters, Sarah West.

Columnists

Alex Little, Bo McMichael, Jonathan Peters, Claire Stancampiano

Photographers

Yosef Addis, David Downs, Kristin Kant, Lori Leffel, Hunter Letchman

Computer Layout

Susan Rayborn, Traci Tidwell

Advertising

Lori Leffel, Patrick Leslie, Jamey Robbins, Matt Waters.

Contributors

Mark Hatfield, Jennifer Stadtmiller

Advisor

Jeff Gary

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR...

The Echo welcomes your comments, letters and guest columns. All written material to be published in the Echo must be typed and accompanied by your name, post office box number, and phone number. Send material to The Highland Echo, Box 2511. The Echo can be reached by calling the Student Publications Office at campus extension 8176. The opinions expressed in the Echo do not necessarily reflect the views of Maryville College.

Letters to the editor...

Recently, most of the world watched as Cal Ripken Jr., the shortstop for the Baltimore Orioles, broke Lou Gehrig's record for the most consecutive number of games played in the Major League. I will admit that I was watching the game the night he passed the record, and I shed more than a few tears.

I have been a part of the hoopla surrounding "The Streak," as an avid Orioles fan (season tickets for twelve years), as a resident of Baltimore, and as a follower of the game of baseball.

Listening to the sports analysts wax poetic about Ripken amazed me. They have compiled statistics of every type. They have done a complete comparison of the game as Gehrig played it and the game as Ripken plays it. They have called Ripken the new "Iron Man," a "Living Legend." But is he?

When I think of a legend, I think of someone who is a gentleman on and off the field, someone who can put up the numbers, who has a proven production record, someone who is a role model on and off the field.

So, how does Cal measure up to that? Anyone who has watched an Orioles game has surely seen his excellent defensive moves, his uncanny way of putting his body right where the ball is hit, countless double plays, his ability to hit in the clutch and the way he uses his size and speed to his advantage. I've heard many Orioles comment about Cal leading the team on the field. And, of course, there is his work ethic—the man has played in every game of every season for the past thirteen and a half years! That is certainly something to look up to!

Where, then, does Cal fall short?

I mentioned earlier that my family and I have held season tickets for twelve years. In those twelve, I would estimate that I have been at close to three hundred games. Being the baseball fan that I am, I would always arrive at the park before 5 o'clock so that I could watch batting practice, since that was when you were most likely to get autographs, pictures, whatever. Most of the players were really generous with their time, except

Cal. Once I got older, I would stay after the games, sometimes until one or two o'clock in the morning, waiting for the players to come out. Still, Ripken wouldn't sign, regardless of age, sex, appearance. He wouldn't even walk among the fans. He drives his car into the stadium so as not to be bothered by the "common folk."

I have seen Cal sign an autograph only one time...in a newspaper picture. The kid looked suspiciously like his daughter. Then, there is Baltimore's famous "Fan Appreciation Day," when fans are allowed onto the warning track to take pictures of the players. The team walks around the stadium, stopping in front of each section of fans. The amount of interaction varies between players...Ben McDonald likes to hold people's children and have his picture taken. Rafael Palmiero likes to hug women. Earl Weaver used to just stand and talk forever to one fan, and usually had to be reminded to move around the stadium. Cal takes a different approach, though. He doesn't come out of the dugout.

The point of this isn't about autographs. The guy is probably thinking about his game beforehand and doesn't want to be disturbed. I have seen countless little kids in Ripken jerseys with his number painted on their faces, trying to just get his attention for a second, to no avail. If I were a parent, I would think twice about who my kids were idolizing!

Even after I gained an "in" with the team, I still experienced the coldness of Cal. I have become friends with catcher Chris Hoiles, and through him I have met many of the players. Even though Chris counts Cal as a friend and has nothing but good things to say about Cal as a player, even he has noticed the wall Cal has built between himself and the general public. While Cal is a great player in every aspect of the game, he should count his blessings that the fans do not vote for the Hall of Fame. I would definitely have to think twice before voting in the affirmative.

There are worse players a kid could look up to, but I really think our society should take a look at where our athletes' image off the playing field fits into the scheme of things.

Dara DiGiacomo

Conforming to a non-conformist

Jonathan Peters
Columnist

Hello. Thanks for reading our fine publication.

Let me ask a question that has been on my mind lately. Why is it that you can go to any record shop in any mall in the free world and find the "Alternative" section seeping into most of the entire store? Does anyone else think this is a heinous oxymoron?? I guess it's an obvious question, but what is "alternative," anyway? Is it just our sorry culture's weak attempt to feel one up on itself? (Who are we fooling anyway?) But, seriously, in this day and age, where kids grow up in front of MTV aspiring to be "alternative," can a person really be an actual nonconformist?

I'm not suggesting that nonconformity is a goal in itself. In light of today's society, however, it might be a good idea to ponder what it really means.

This summer, I worked at Clemson University with a friend named Rica. Rica is an awesome person, but she sometimes describes herself as a "follower." To illustrate: a bunch of us went on a rafting trip, and were taking a lunch break on the side of the river. A person in the group kept fiddling—taking off his coat, putting it back on, and changing his mind again—completely unaware of anyone else. Rica seemed to be following his every move. When asked about it, she said, "I'm conforming to the nonconformist....what else!?"

This seemed absurdly funny at the time. Could it be, however, that aspiring "alternative" people do the same thing? It's a disturbing thought. My brother has been trying to convince me that the hippies were all just a bunch of conformists of a different breed—all dancing to the same drum, so to speak. To make matters worse, the record shop at Clemson had an album by a longtime inspiration of mine, Saint Dave (Matthews) on a horribly gaudy gargantuan display under a sickening sign with flashing Christmas lights which read, "ALTERNATIVE ALBUM OF THE MONTH." My hope in the concept was deteriorating.

Fortunately, my previously mentioned friend enlightened everybody one day with a statement which will ring eternally as complete genius. The subject of nonconformity came up, and I said that I was convinced there was really no such thing at all. Immediately she said, "No, nonconformists are people who are true to themselves!" Hmmmmmm.

Is anything else "nonconformist"? After pondering for a few months, I've decided there is. It's not hard to see, after listening to the news, or hanging out on a street corner, or having any other kind of contact with the human race for any length of time, that love, too, is completely against the grain.

by Bo McMichael
Columnist

From Cincinnati, Ohio to Atlanta, Georgia the summer began with a vengeance. The heart of Mel Gibson was extremely brave as the journey began deep in the Congo. Here is where Mad Love bloomed between Pochahontas and Batman which could last Forever only if Judge Dredd allowed Apollo 13 Nine Months to invite the First Knight and Species to a world full of water. However, if a Waterworld did exist, then the Virtuosity of The Net size would be Something to Talk About if the Minds were Dangerous.

This type of clutter signifies the true meaning of the summer box office war. Each movie has its own special ammunition to capture that one person who likes explosions, thrills, comedy or horror. As the last weekend of summer ended on Labor Day the totals rolled in to find the Caped Crusader flying on top while Hanks and company were closing fast in their rocket. Americans invested 450 million dollars in movies this year, and we hope you were one of the movies maniacs for the summer of '95.

Just as the summer ended on the 21st of September, a new league of box office wars began for the fall. The first to blow across the stage was the blood fest of "Desperado." The gun fighter/guitar player Antonio Banderas revenges the death of his beloved.

Bo: "The title says it all. The only thing that saved this movie was the credits rolling at the end of the movie. Mr. Banderas plays an assassin in a film with Stallone. I hope for his sake that his acting improves because "Desperado" desperately lacked acting. However, to look on the good side of this film, it reunited my buddy and me back at Foothills Theater."

Chris: "Well I just want everyone to know that the big guy picked this one out, so it is his own fault. And as much as I hate to agree, I must. This movie had a chance, but shortly after the lights went out it bombed. Go see "Dangerous Minds," like I wanted to that night, and tell me what I missed."

Angels and the heavens entered into the next film, "The Prophecy," when Eric Stoltz ("Pulp Fiction") and Christopher Walken ("Batman Returns") fight for the soul of a military genius on Earth as the heavens are in the midst of a civil war.

Bo: "This movie was a stone's throw away from being breath taking. However, I can settle for great. The previews are very misleading and the outcome will lead you to stop and think. I honestly believe that when a movie has that type of impact it should be seen by all. The only draw back is that the movie gives the angels of heaven a very dark look, so be prepared for anything...."

Chris: "I never thought that I would see the day Bo and I would agree on the same page for two straight. This movie just missed being one of the years best, but it is still pretty good. The ending and the person who turns out to be the hero are awesome. Just try to keep an open mind."

"The Usual Suspects" will be seen only by a few since it is playing only at selected theaters in the Knoxville area. This means that a great mystery starring Kevin Spacey, Stephen Baldwin, Gabriel Byrne and Kevin Pollack will be missed. The suspects are in a deal gone bad

and Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

and the man behind the madness is a vicious criminal named Keyser Soze.

Bo: My 5foot 3 inch friend was unable to make it, so he missed a great movie. This cops and robbers movie had twist after twist until the truth came out. This movie is definitely a must see in terms of originality.

Well the school year is here and that means more studying and minimal change in the good old pocket. So if you want to relax and you

by Claire Stancampiano
Columnist

One of my grievances with the thriving metropolis we call Maryville is the fact that after 9:00 p.m. absolutely nothing is open. Even the roads become deserted, except for the occasional traffic cop attempting to harass those high school neon riders who drive past McDonald's at least 3,000 times a night and the old lady in the giant beige Buick who is probably able to recall a time when there were no cars.

So where can an average MC student like me and the other 849 of you go for a refreshing beverage and a slight change of scenery? I believe J.D., the psychotic rich kid from the movie "Heathers" had the best answer when he said "I've been moved around all my life: Dallas, Baton Rouge, Vegas, Sherwood Ohio. There's always a Snappy Snack Shack. Any town, anytime, you can pop a ham and cheese in the microwave and feast on a turbo dog. Keeps me sane..." Yes kids, its the one thing that all of humanity knows, loves, and depends on in the middle of the night when they're on the brink of insanity for one reason or another: our local gas/snack quickie mart stations.

People don't realize quite how therapeutic a visit to these oases of petroleum and chocolate can be. Bathing in the fluorescent lights of the gas island for a few moments can be a soothing escape from any gloomy dorm room or study carrel. These 24-7 marts can also help you avoid the dreaded snack machine scenario. Returning students know this routine and freshmen will soon learn it. You wander down to the vending area only to find fat free Fig Bars left in one machine and Diet Grapefruit Fresca in the other while you are forced to look at the same people you had to see all day on campus.

But wait! From almost any window on campus, a glowing yellow and red beacon of hope can be seen. There it is, the "E-Z Stop Food Mart" sign with its comforting promises of Hot Pork Skins and Bubble Gum Slushies. These delightful products are accessible to you at almost any hour of the day and you don't even need a car to enjoy them. Patte, a Sunday evening employee, told me about E-Z Stop's 30 year history on that particular corner as well as mentioning that the store has "an array of breakfast items available." From old Winger and Depeche Mode tapes priced at $5.99 to Solstice Quick Rub topical analgesic, the E-Z Stop can lift your spirits and your cholesterol level in one fell swoop. The most interesting meat substance I could find here was Hormel's "Potted Meat Food Product" which sells for about a buck.

Your next option is the Exxon Station. It's three lights down the road; however, once you see the amount of Tennessee Volunteer merchandise available, you'll know it was worth the trip. Every Maryville College Scot needs a 14 gallon orange Styrofoam "Go Vols" cooler. I asked Emily, the employee there, if she'd heard of Maryville College and I explained that it was right down the road. A light seemed to go on somewhere.

While searching for a most interesting meat product at the Exxon station, I came across a Cappuccino machine, various Ginseng products, and a sale on "Funyons". I then came upon exactly what I was looking for- "Big Mama Giant Pickled Sausage." Exxon wins the interesting meat product contest hands down.

And now we move onto the 24 hour sanctuary of caffeine, cigarettes, Little Debbie Cakes, and obscene air freshners. The place most frequented by Maryville College students from every walk of life is the one and only British Petroleum Station. David, who only works weekends at BP (sometimes called The BP) explained why more students come to his mini-mart as opposed to the others. Peering down at me through his Tom Pettyesque sun glasses he said, "We're a whole lot friendlier here at this store...We like to entertain a little bit and not just have customers give us their money and leave."

It could be the strangely alluring religious paraphernalia that keeps students coming back to BP: for example, the oversized golden Jesus pin inlaid with cubic zirconia or the framed plaques engraved with inspirational poems and opalescent angels that go for about $5.99. It could also be the panty roses on the next shelf over that bring them back. BP's interesting meat product was Neptune Tinned Sardines.

So, the next time you hear the words, "There's nothing to do in this town," be sure to contradict the speaker with your insightful knowledge of Maryville's wickedest gas stations. Go pick up a six pack (of Coca-Cola of course), scarf down a few of something made of nothing identifiable to chemists, check out the new merchandise, and have a chat with Patte, Emily, or David. They may just expand your horizons and prep you for future job opportunities.

Late night with a can of spam

An Interview with the President Retention, Student Responsibility, Future keys to MC 2000 — Gibson

by Amanda Martin
Editor

Editor's note: On Sept. 8, I spoke with Dr. Gerald Gibson, President of Maryville College, about the role of students in the MC 2000 plan for "The Best Possible College." In the course of our discussion, Gibson emphasized three main points in relation to students: retention, student responsibility, and the student body as a whole.

Retention is a big issue for small private colleges, and Maryville College is certainly no exception. In a recent interview, Dr. Gerald Gibson, President of MC, discussed the school's improved retention rate in relation to the MC 2000 Plan for "The Best Possible College."

As part of MC 2000, faculty and staff have produced "60 day plans" which specifically target incoming freshmen. "The first 60 days are the most crucial for freshmen," said Gibson. "They are adjusting to a new life and a new challenge."

The 60 day plans are formulated by different contingencies in the college and are designed to meet students' need during these adjustments. However, the benefits from the program may be reaped by all MC students.

For example, many staff members have undergone quality service training, which, according to Gibson, promotes sensitivity to students.

The programs are much more far-reaching than this, though. Improvements on campus buildings, promotion of intramurals, increased information about off-campus job opportunities, clarification of academic expectations for athletes, and the opening of the fitness center are examples of "improving the experience" at MC, Gibson said.

Student responsibilities

MC 2000 is divided into 11 categories and "The Students" is one of them. When asked what students could do to promote the plan, Gibson replied that student enforcement of the Covenant is crucial. "It is important for student leadership to make sure we follow through with the Covenant. The Covenant's (success) depends on how it's treated, how it's introduced to new students and how returning students treat it," Gibson said.

The student body in the year 2000

Admission to Maryville College has never relied solely on test scores and grades. But in the year 2000, test scores and grades will be less of a factor than they are today.

Although the majority of MC students will be required to have grades roughly 15 percent higher than the national average, according to Gibson, there will be a strong emphasis on recruiting students who "fit."

Fitting the profile of an MC student is "not about subscription to a party line, but finding students who will succeed here, both academically and socially," Gibson said. "I think Maryville College is a very special kind of college community...we want to find ways to not have just an upper social stratum."

To that end, Gibson said the school will continue to promote financial aid so that finances will not exclude the less privileged. The establishment of a new scholarship for international students is one step in this direction.

Another method through which Gibson hopes to "avoid elitism" is through admissions policies. "We want to get away from just test scores," he said. Instead, students will be admitted who can "succeed in this environment with the right support."

According to Gibson, admissions staff will "examine folders, look at the necessary letters, et cetera, to determine which students may be less prepared academically but have potential."

The future

"Look beyond the directions and goals of the MC 2000 and look at the theme of the plan. The theme of plan 'The Best Possible College' is a call for students, faculty and staff to do our best and to strive to make this the best possible place it can be. 'The Best Possible College' is the ideal we're holding up."

-Dr. Gerald Gibson

Cooper

continued from pg. 1

The secretary's desk in the main office was moved into a separate room allowing a reception area to be completed for the front office area and new lobby furniture is in the process of being ordered.

Other minor renovations included installing a dehumidifying system, a new bottom, and gutter system on the swimming pool, adding carpet and new metal lockers in the locker rooms, and divided the two classrooms by placing a storage room between them.

The racquetball courts are currently in the process of being renovated and depending on funds, new bleachers will also be installed in the gym area.

The $1.4 million that enabled MC to renovate the athletic center was donated by Margaret Anne Cooper and her brother Robert Gaston Cooper in memory of their parents, Finis Gaston Cooper, M.D. and Ethel Burchfield Cooper who the building was named after it was built in 1970.

Finis Cooper graduated from MC in 1918 and went on to establish a respected medical career while his wife Ethel graduated from MC in 1919.

"One thing that has been a feather in our cap is our facilities have reached the level of some of the better athletic facilities in the South for Div. III," said Lambert.

Faculty

continued from pg. 1

tant professor of mathematics who is taking the place of Dr. William Kelly temporarily. Davis is a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of UTK and has taught at Maryville College on a part-time basis.

Dr. Margaret "Peggy" Cowan is a visiting professor of religion who has been with the Maryville College faculty for several years. She has been filling in for Dr. Glenn Hewitt, who is currently on disability leave. She is a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Randolph-Macon Women's College and holds a Master's degree from St. Mary's in San Antonio, Texas. Cowan her doctorate in the Hebrew Bible from Vanderbilt University.

The third group is the professors.

This year Dr. Karl Jost is the only new visiting professor. He is the visiting professor of sociology. Jost holds a Bachelor's degree from St. Bonaventure University and both a Master's degree and a Doctorate from the University of Oklahoma. He is also currently a professor at the UTK.

There are many new faculty members because "there are more students here this year to teach than there have been in the past," said Bolden. There has been a steady rise over the years of professors ranging from 47 professors/faculty members one year to 51 a couple of years later. "In order to teach everyone, we needed to make some additions," Bolden said.

MC ranked by US News

Maryville College has been ranked in the top ten best regional liberal arts colleges in the South by U.S. News and World Report Magazine for the second year in a row. This is in addition to a fifth place ranking based on a commitment to teaching. The magazine's annual "Best Colleges" issue, dated September 18 and the magazine's "America's Best Colleges" guidebook are available at bookstores.

Maryville College was ranked ninth among regional liberal arts colleges in the South. The overall ranking placed Maryville in ninth position on the list.

Come Join The Pep Band

- First appearance on 9/30
- One hour of rehearsal
- All instruments welcome

If you have any questions,
call Dara x8551

Committed by Michael Fry

Dr. William Seymour

by Sarah West
Staff Writer

Dedicated to the comprehensive agenda compiled by himself and others, the new Vice President of Student Development is focusing on students.

Dr. Bill Seymour, from Dansville, New York, is a recent addition to Maryville College.

A firm believer in the liberal arts theme, Seymour is interested in promoting the learning opportunities available in a private, church-related learning college.

"Maryville College is rare in the sense it really has the kind of environment that supports the liberal arts theme," said Seymour. "People are what makes this happen."

Dr. Seymour does not plan to make profound changes right away.

Seymour comes to MC

"The first year, I think, is a period for learning how things work or should work in a college setting," he said. The job of vice president of Student Development has a broad job description which begins and ends with serving students. The list of responsibilities includes supervising Student Development programs encompassing residence and campus life, career services, the chaplain's office, the Center for Campus Ministry, the Life Enrichment Center, and many others.

Dr. Seymour inherited many of his goals for MC such as the MC 2000 plan, a vision to make MC the "best possible college." Improvements in residence life is one of the major current objectives, and it comprises plans for residence halls to satisfactorily accommodate the growing number of students living on campus.

"Also, a Design Team is looking at the needs here for a student center and answering questions and issues that need to be taken care of before hand," said Seymour. Further development of the Fayerweather building is another concern of the Design Team.

Reorganization of the Life Enrichment Center is listed as another endeavor. This embraces the Mountain Challenge program and its growth as well as the need for counseling and support.

An already accomplished goal is the published comprehensive calendar that students received at registration. Finally, a sports program review is on docket for this year.

Seymour stated, "To a large extent, as we look at different ways of doing things or improving programs, we should allow a number of constituencies including students to have a part in the discussion."

Seymour has also added a few personal goals to his agenda. He wants to familiarize himself with the college community, specifically with students. Student Senate is one route he will take. Seymour wants to be supportive to staff and Hall Councils, and he also plans to seek visibility at athletic and cultural events.

When asked what attracted him to MC, Seymour replied, "I was selectively looking for a different environment—one that has direction, support, and cohesion."

Seymour came from Dover, DE, where he worked at Wesley College.

Other additions to student Development include three new residence hall coordinators. Instead of a Residence Director presiding over each residence hall, a Resident Hall Coordinator (R.H.C.) will be responsible for one or more housing facilities. The new R.H.C.'s include April Hicks, who supervises Carnegie and Student work; Ned Willard, who has Gamble, Lloyd, and Pearsons; and Sarah Schow, who oversees Copeland and Davis. Assistant Resident Hall Coordinator (A.R.H.C.) is another new title given to an individual who works with the R.H.C. to help serve students' needs. In Gamble, the A.R.H.C. is Scott Porter, in Lloyd, Lisa Webb, in Davis, Paige Cooper, in Copeland, Jarra Griffith, and in Pearson's, Chris Lance.

A Typical Day at MC

Photo by Mark Hatfield

It's a Dirty Job...

Mud-covered participants wallowed in the mire at the Big Brothers, Big Sisters kick-off party Sept. 7 on Lloyd Beach.

Campus safety depends on students

Heavy traffic means parking still a problem

by Hunter Letchman
Staff Writer

"Playing it safe" may be an old cliché, but for Maryville College students, it may be the best bet.

Crime has not plagued the MC campus as it has so many others, but students must still take care. Currently there are six officers employed by Campus Security. "This is a very safe campus," said MC Police Chief Eldrich Hurst, citing the crime on campus statistics published by the Tennessee Bureau of Investigation. According to the FBI, the Maryville College campus is one of the safest in the area. The statistics for this college were nominal when compared with surrounding universities and colleges. However, because MC is an open campus, the chance does exist that an incident could occur, according to Hurst. "The best way to not have something stolen is to lock your room when you leave it for any period of time," Hurst advises. "Keep your car locked if you leave it somewhere." "It is also important for students to register their vehicles so that if one is stolen, Campus Security can turn over information to the police so that it can be located as soon as possible," he continued. "Also, keep an eye out for strangers and if you see a person acting suspiciously, report him. 'Most importantly,' said Hurst, 'females should not walk alone at night. They should go in a group or at least one other person.'"

Chief Hurst stated that the biggest concern regarding safety is fire because of the age of many of the buildings on campus. If students are faced with an emergency, an officer can be reached by calling 8112, or 9-911. While the students of Maryville College can be safe from crime, they are not safe from parking tickets. Many students have found these white abominations affixed to their windshields.

According to MC police chief Hurst, there are still more parking spaces than vehicles on campus. "Students can avoid getting tickets by parking in the proper places and obeying the rules in the handbook," said Hurst. "Sometimes a student might have to walk a little to get where he or she is going." Illegal parking includes parking in the grass and parking in places which have been designated for faculty and staff or handicapped persons.

"Not only is enrollment up this year, but some on-campus students drive from their hall to their class," said Russell Perry, Commuter Representative and someone who knows a great deal about receiving tickets. Many commuters who park in Fayerweather parking lot are forced to park in non-designated spaces," states Russell Perry, Commuter Representative and someone who knows a lot about receiving tickets. Actually sometimes it is easier to walk to class because there are no guarantees that a spot will be open in Fayerweather lot. Then it takes longer to find a space than to walk.

All American Deli's
Subs & Such
Across from Midland Plaza
$1.00 off any order of $3.00 or more!
Specials Daily
982-3129
Call-ins Welcome
Mon. - Wed. 10:30 am - 8:00 pm
Thur. & Fri. 10:30 am - 9:00 pm
Sat. 11:00 am - 6:00 pm

Community Forum Focuses on Women's Issues

by Sarah Christians
Staff Writer

Fall 1995's Community Forum is all about women.

The theme Old Challenges, New Perspectives: Women in the 90's addresses many of the issues facing women, both on the Maryville College campus and throughout the world.

Timed to coincide with the Fourth International U.N. Conference on Women in Beijing, the Community Forum seeks to inform and enlighten men and women. Dr. Mardi Craig, faculty member in charge of the lecture series, said the Forum is not about man bashing. "It's not a bunch of bra burning radicals out to change the status quo," she said. Rather, it is a lecture series and the issues she said.

The speakers scheduled for the series are all women. Kathy Hatfield gives the lecture "Beyond O.J.: Solutions to the Problem of Family Violence." Hatfield is the Program Director at the Family Crisis Center in Knoxville. Hatfield's discussion will relate to the statistic that women who leave an abusive spouse are 75% more likely to be killed. With that statistic and the ever present media attention to the O.J. Simpson trial, Hatfield's talk on violence within the home is timely.

Dr. Peggy Cowan, assistant professor of religion will speak on "Feminist Theologies: Ancient Roots and New Growth." Cowan's lecture will address myths that feminist theology is anti-Christian and anti-biblical. This is where the "new perspective" comes in," said Craig.

Mary Catherine Hammon, general manager at TVA, will speak on "Breaking the Glass: The Executive Women." Hammon will lecture on the questionable existence of a glass ceiling for women in business.

Sandra Thomas, professor and director of doctoral program at the College of Nursing at the University of Tennessee will give a lecture on "Woman's Anger: A Means of Empowerment?" "[Sandra Thomas] sees anger as a way that women can make change when they need to, if they can harness it," Craig said.

Norma Mertz, professor of education at U.T. will discuss "Gender Issues in Education." This lecture will follow up on the book "Failing

At Fairness," which addresses the question of gender equality in schools and in teaching.

Nancy A. Ransom of Vanderbilt

University will address "International Perspectives on Women's Issues." This again, will relate to the Beijing women's conference.

Study tables offer help to those in need

by Eric Daughtery
Staff Writer

So you are having trouble with calculus. The extent of your Spanish ends at the Taco Bell menu, and certain chemical equations produce a reaction from you that's anything but scientific. Are you beyond hope? Not if you seek real help for your academic woes.

Maryville College offers free peer tutoring to anyone in need. Study Tables takes place in room 101 of Sutton Science Center. Tutoring is on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays from 7-9 p.m.

The subjects being offered this semester are algebra, statistics, inferential statistics, pre-calculus, calculus, computer science, English, French, Spanish, American sign language, chemistry, biology, economics, accounting, and psychology. As of yet, not all subjects have tutors, but most freshman and sophomore classes are covered.

Tutoring is done by fellow students who have been recommended by teachers of that particular subject. Tutors are available by request in other subjects.

According to Margie Ribble, adjunct instructor of mathematics and coordinator of Study Tables, even if only one student requests tutoring in an additional subject, she will try to find a tutor.

Some subjects are offered only on Thursday nights: computer science, economics, and accounting. Biology is offered on Wednesday nights only.

Tutors earn work study wages. They are not necessarily required to have the top grades in their classes, Ribble said. The desire to help others plays a big part, she said.

Anyone interested in becoming a peer tutor should contact Margie Ribble at x8275.

Library goes on-line with McQuest

by Geoffrey Benlisha
Staff Writer

McQuest is here!

The Library's automated system, known as McQuest, has been operational since April, and most students have already gotten their feet wet with the system.

Chris Nugent, Director of Lamar Memorial Library, says most students simply sat down in front of the system and figured it out.

In past library operations, students were able to locate books in one of three ways: by author, subject, or title. The McQuest system offers a new dimension: the keyword search. The student enters a keyword, and McQuest reports all usage of the word, encompassing the entire database. Several terms can be combined for searches on specific subjects.

Also, students with modems can access McQuest from their computers, enabling them to search the library essentially without movement.

With McQuest, students can check to see how many books they have checked out, due dates, and outstanding fines.

Diane Brandsborg, head of circulation, has had her duties eased by McQuest. All check-outs and fine notices are now handled by the computer, and McQuest also generates split-second statistics concerning heavily used areas and numbers of check-outs in a day. The LSA's (library student assistants) training also was made easier, due to a lesser load to remember.

The system is the INNOPAC system of Innovative Interfaces, Inc. of Emeryville, California. The library requested suggestions of nicknames for the system, finally choosing McQuest because of the Scottish sounding and school initials "Mc" and Quest's connotations of searching. For those who find McQuest particularly confusing or have not yet used it, an instructional class is offered every Friday at 4:00. It teaches the basic functions of the system, as well as the tricks and advantages that will allow students to take full advantage of the system.

Primary funding for the library's automation fund came from a donation by Tutt and Elizabeth Bradford.

Lights, Camera, Action!

Dollar movies now showing on Fridays at the Fine Arts Center

by Dara DiGiacomo
Staff Writer

You may have noticed signs around campus, especially near the dining hall, referring to movies being shown at the Fine Arts Center Music Hall. This new program is currently being sponsored by the Church and College Scholars, and is being held on Friday nights throughout the year. The goal of the program is to offer students another form of entertainment which is both inexpensive and close to the campus.

According to the Reverend Stephen Nickle, campus chaplain and advisor to the group, "the Church and College Scholars have taken the initiative, but we welcome participation by any group."

"We are trying to break even, while giving students another activity on campus," Nickle said.

There will be two showing Friday nights at 8 p.m. and 10 p.m. Admission is one dollar, which is comparable to the budget theaters, but without the half-hour drive to Knoxville. The funds go directly toward the expenses of offering such a program. Films are selected by students, and any requests should be directed to Nickle in the Center for Campus Ministry.

Yearbooks are here — Finally!!!

Last week, the question was common: Are the Yearbooks here yet?

The answer is now official. Yes. They are here.

Late last week, the yearbooks arrived on campus. Yearbook distribution began on Friday to a throng of eager customers. Distribution continued on Monday and was brisk.

Originally, the books were to be available last Wednesday. Then, yearbook advisor Jeff Gary got the word of a delay.

"It was frustrating for all of us," Gary said. "We all wanted the books, but they just weren't quite ready."

The problem was that the printer in Chattanooga was taking a last few days to make sure everything was just so.

"The printer wanted to get the job done correctly," Gary said. "And, we feel the final product is very good. It just took a little more time."

Oct. 2 Deadline for Spring Study Abroad Program Nears

by Lori Leffel
Staff Writer

There are many activities for students at Maryville College. One of the most exciting of these activities is the Study Abroad program.

Dr. Clarice Doucette and Dr. Young-Bae Kim are in charge of Study Abroad. The program is designed to emphasize international and cross-cultural experiences for college students. Students are allowed to study in a foreign country and receive credit for it at MC.

Maryville College works directly with five exchange programs in three foreign countries: Korea, Japan, Great Britain. There is also an exchange program with Puerto Rico. There are two schools in Korea: Han Yang University and Yonsei University. The school in Japan is named Konsei Gaidi. Students may also study in Great Britain at the Northeast Wales Institution or in Puerto Rico at the Inter/American University.

Maryville College not only works with these colleges directly, but informally with Alma College in Alma, Michigan as well. Alma College provides opportunities for students to study in Spain, Mexico, Germany, and France. The deadline to apply for the Spring Semester 1996, is October 2, 1995.

According to Doucette, everyone who has studied abroad has loved their experience. Many people have said that they have grown personally through their experiences. When students return from their studies abroad, Doucette asks them to write an essay on their experience. Some of the study abroad students will give Reports From the Field at Proffit Dining Hall on Tuesdays at 12:00.

Photo by Lori Leffel

Laundry Day!

Allison Pryor, a junior, folds some t-shirts at the bookstore.

-ATTENTION-

Beginning with the next issue, the Highland Echo would like to announce the addition of a

CLASSIFIED SECTION

Divisions include:

For sale, Wanted, For rent, Jobs, Miscellaneous, and Personals

The cost will be 50 cents per ten words
Send payment and advertisement to P.O. Box 2511 or 2080

We Want to Know What You Think

The Highland Echo is running a series of student opinion polls

1). Would you rather money be spent on maintaining high quality faculty or better facilities?

2). What type of music do you prefer: Metal, Alternative, Rock, Hip-Hop, R&B, Rap, Techno/Dance, Classical, Blues, Folk, Country, Reggae, Easy Listening, Adult Contemporary, or other?

-Results Will Be Posted In The Next Issue Of The Echo-

Please fill out and return to P.O. Box 2080

Cool Clothes · Incense · Jewelry · Candles · Cards · Prints

JAZZBERRY

GENERAL

15% Discount For All Maryville College Faculty, Staff, & Students!

Directions: Take a right at the Court Street Exit and drive till you see us!

Phone: 984-0391

205 Court Street

Hours: Mon - Sat 10:00 - 7:00

*Discount good through October and does not include clearance items.

Cool Clothes · Incense · Jewelry · Candles · Cards · Prints

Cool Clothes · Incense · Jewelry · Candles · Cards · Prints

I-club promotes cultural exchange for students

by Jennifer Stadtmiller
Special Correspondant

The International Club is starting the year with new members, new officers, renewed goals through a new constitution, and a new vibrancy.

According to Yosef Addis, president of the I-Club, the group's purpose is "to facilitate inter-cultural exchange on campus and in the community, to continue education about cultural diversity, and, most of all, to have fun!"

Addis, who has been the club's president for the past two years, hopes to continue the goals of cultural exchange and fun as the 1995-96 school year unfolds. In the past, in order to achieve these goals, the I-Club has hosted an annual international dinner in which food, music, dancing, and art have been shared.

It also has sponsored activities to increase social interaction such as volleyball, soccer, cookouts, movies, dances, trips, and the creation of a T-shirt to help make the club better known on campus.

"The I-Club strives to support the students and create an environment in which they can learn from all people in the world," said Addis.

For the future, club members and faculty advisor Robert Hutchens hope to increase the organization's efficiency and have recently approved a new constitution drafted by past officers and ctive members. Theyu also hope to choose a more agreeable meeting day and time, so more Maryville College students can come.

"All students faculty, and staff are welcome to begin to break down stereotypes and participate in the whole of Maryville College's diversity."

For more information about the International Club, contact Mr. Hutchens at x8184 or Yosef Addis at x8721.

Photo by Yosef Addis

Hangin' Out...

Four friends — Carlos, Hashem, Ammar and Akram take time out of the busy school schedule for a chat.

Club Info...

•The Maryville College Student Literacy Corps started the school year off early, hosting a training session Aug. 27-28 for new members and for this year's Bradford Scholars.

Currently, the MCLSC is looking towards many projects for the fall. We have tutors working in many capacities, including the Blount County Jail. The MCLSC Board meets every Thursday at 8:30 in Carnegie Parlor. Everyone is welcome to attend these meetings. For more information contact Monica Blackburn at 8345.

•If you are interested in the field of psychology or would like to know more about what we do, you can join the Psychology Club. You do not have to be a psychology or child development major to be a member. Drop your name and box number to Marcus Farmer (box #2112) if you are interested.

•The Maryville College Libertarians Club is a political club open for people of all political beliefs in the MC campus. If you would like to know more about the Libertarian Party, or if you are interested in political discussion groups, please contact Kevin Rowland at x8744 or Box 2192.

•Delta Omicron is an international music honor society dedicated to serving the community's musical need. Students must have a grade point average of at least 2.7 and be at least the equivalent of a music minor. This year's members plan to show commitment by: establishment of a tutorial program, beginning an annual alumni recital, beginning a composition contest, having a duet and small ensemble recital with DO performers, furnishing performers for the National Anthem at sporting events, etc. If you are interested in learning more about Delta Omicron, contact Mary Frazier at Box 2119.

French culture, comaraderie, bring students together in language club

by Matt Waters
Staff Writer

Croissants, champagne, and berets may become popular at Maryville College this year. Because of student interest, the French Club was organized recently. Sponsored by Dr. Clarice Doucette, assistant professor of French, the new organization's objective is three-fold.

As stated in the club's constitution, it is hoped that more awareness of the French language and culture will be generated, that students and faculty will be encouraged to learn more about French history and politics by participating in activities outside of the classroom, and that cross-cultural attitudes and experiences will be fostered on campus.

There are several goals that the club members hope to accomplish. Celebrations of French holidays such as Mardi Gras are planned. At Christmas time, the season will be celebrated by enjoying Yule logs, which are rolled cakes with jellies and icings inside. Also, there are plans to visit French restaurants, see foreign films and have discussions about them, have parties with French themes, and correspond with French-speaking people around the world.

So far, there have been two meetings of the club. At both, details of the constitution were discussed and the steering committee brainstormed for ideas for the semester.

Eligibility for the French Club is basic. Although letters of invitation are being sent to current language students and to the people who took the French placement test, the organization is open to all interested students and faculty.

Doucette believes that this is the first year for a club that focuses on French culture.

"This club will allow students enrolled or not enrolled in French courses currently to have a chance to participate in activities dealing with French culture," said Doucette. "I would like for the French club to be a vehicle for promoting cross-cultural dialogue and generating enthusiasm for other cultures."

Dr. Doucette gives credit for forming the organization to the students. "This is here because students are interested," she said. "This club comes from the students themselves. I am happy to be the sponsor because the students are giving the time and energy toward building a new club."

The next meeting for the French Club is planned for September 26 at 11 a.m. in Anderson 220. At this gathering, officers will be elected. Students of sophomore status or higher can be candidates, and nominations are open. Any interested students are encouraged to attend.

If students have questions about the club, they can reach Andrea Suddarth at campus box 2385 or Amethyst Schott at campus box 2808.

Theatre spotlights four shows in '95-96 season

by Kenyon Evans
Staff Writer

Nuns, a zookeeper, and an insane housewife run wild in The House of Blue Leaves, the dark comedy currently being produced by the theatre program. The 70's play is by John Guare, a playwright particularly famous for his play Six Degrees of Separation, which was made into a motion picture.

The plot of the play involves a zookeeper named Artie who hopes to be famous songwriter for movies. His aspirations are supported by his mistress, but his son an AWOL soldier and his insane wife Bananas complicate his plans. Nuns, military policemen, a famous director, and the director's girlfriend enter the plot while Artie's son formulates his plans to blow up the Pope. Todd Smith, the actor who plays Artie's son, described it as "better than a beer on a Saturday night."

Dr. Jill Stapleton-Bergeron, head of the theatre program, expressed excitement about the upcoming play. The program has not done a comic farce in some time, she said.

The theatre program has an excellent year lined up beyond The House of Blue Leaves. The theater program year kicked off its year with an Alumni production of The Fifth of July, a play which deals retrospectively with the lives of four former 60's activists. The play was presented to raise funds for the theatre equipment account, used to refurbish the Playhouse.

Theatre invades January term this winter with an experiential reader's theatre class. The class requires no previous experience in theatre. Stapleton-Bergeron describes it as an excellent opportunity for those who would like to experience the theatre without the commitment required in a mainstage production. Reader's theatre differs from conventional theatre in it is acceptable to hold scripts and the material may be prose or poetry as well as dramatic.

The Reader's Theatre class will perform Spoon River Anthology, a folk poem which deals with the lives of the deceased citizens of Spoon River.

A Doll's House will be the Spring mainstage production presented by the theatre program. Stapleton-Bergeron describes the play as "one of the most important plays ever written . . . it's one I've always wanted to do." It contains social commentary in dealing with individual identity and human rights. It's author Henrik Ibsen is often described as "the father of modern drama."

The season will end up with The Dining Room. Alpha Psi Omega, the theatre honors society, will present this comedy. It will be directed, sponsored, and performed by the student members.

Participation in these productions is open to everyone on campus. The House of Blue Leaves will play at 8 p.m. on Oct. 19th, 20th, and 21st in Wilson Theatre.

BOB

This painting, by Dr. Carl Gombert, is one of the many on display in the FAC gallery this month.

Jazz, children, Mozart highlight 1995-96 MACCO season

The Maryville-Alcoa College-Community Orchestra, under the direction of Bill Robinson, will begin its 1995-96 season this October.

This fall, the orchestra will give two concerts. On October 16, the Charles Goodwin Jazz Trio will be featured with the orchestra. The Trio will perform mellow jazz with orchestral favorites.

Trumpets and children's voices will be featured in MACCO's annual Christmas concert, A Holiday Tradition, slated for December 4. Dr. Larry Smihee, trumpeter and assistant professor of music at Maryville College will be featured along with two choirs from the Maryville Schools.

The MACCO season will continue through May, 1996. Four performances are planned for the second half of the season. Monday, February 12, 1996, MACCO will be joined by Maryville College adjunct instructor of organ Ashley Burell. The annual Showcase of Area Artists concert, which features extraordinary young talent from the area, will be Monday, March 25.

The Vinci Brown Alton Trio will perform with the orchestra on Monday, April 15. The Trio is comprised of flute, guitar, and cello. The 1995-96 MACCO season will finish with a performance of Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart's Requiem Mass given by the orchestra and the Maryville College Community Chorus, under the direction of Dr. Daniel Taddie, professor of music and chair of the division of fine arts at Maryville College.

All performances will be given in Wilson Chapel on the Maryville College Campus. Performances begin at 8 p.m.

Choir reunion set for homecoming

by Michelle Shular
Staff Writer

The second reunion of Maryville College Choir Alumni will be held Friday through Sunday, October 20 through October 22. The culmination of the weekend will be Sunday's Maryville College Alumni Choir reunion Concert led by John Ribble.

Choir alumna and reunion planning committee member Dot Bushing attended the first reunion in 1988. She remembers the experience of over 200 former choir members gathering together to sing songs familiar to them from their own days as members of the choir at Maryville College. Former students from as far back as 1928 were in attendance, Bushing said that many of those present had not actually been in the choir together did not dampen their feelings of togetherness and commonality. "Music is the bond that drew them together," she said. According to

Bushing, "the bond between old friends and new friends was one focused not only on love of music, but also on experiences they shared by being students at Maryville College in the past."

At least 135 former choir members have already registered for the reunion, and some will be traveling great distances for the event. Two alumni will be travelling from England, two from Canada and one from Korea. Approximately twenty-one U.S. states will be represented. Some alumni who plan to attend were at Maryville College as early as 1934 and as recently as 1993. All Choir Alumni are welcome to attend. The reunion will begin with a rehearsal on Friday followed by a barbecue, and later the choir alumni will have a sing-along. Saturday's activities will include more rehearsal time and the singing of the national anthem at the homecoming football game.

The planning committee for this year's event includes chairman Jake

Peppers, Ruth Ann Wilbanks Amentastro, John Ribble, Rosemary Ahmed Byers, David Styles, David Rogers, Dottie Bushing, Vera Proffit, Marian Stewart, the Reverend Stephen Nickle, Ken Marine, and Lynn Hachtenberg. Alumnus Charles Huffman will conduct the alumni choir members when they perform at the football game.

The Maryville College Alumni Choir reunion concert will take place Sunday, October 22 at 2 pm in Wilson Chapel. Over 18 songs will be performed including "Wonderous Love" by Paul Christianson, the "Hallelujah Chorus" from Handel's "Messiah," and the Maryville College Alma Mater. Music at the concert will be conducted by MC Alumnus John Ribble, Director of the Knoxville Community Chorus, and assistant conductor Rosemary Ahmed Byers.

The concert is free, and everyone is welcome. The concert will be televised by WBIR Channel 10.

Spike!!!

No. 2 Amy Snider spikes the ball as No. 3 Kelly Sanson looks on during the South Region Invitational.

photo by David Downin

Soccer teams kick off season

Experience helps men

stories by Jason Lay
Staff Writer

The Fighting Scots Soccer team has wasted no time in picking up right where they left off last year, winning. The team has raced to a 7-1 start.

"The guy's experience is really paying off and they are playing really well," according to Head Coach Pepe Fernandez. Last years team just missed making the NCAA tournament, so feelings seem to be that a tournament bid is within reason.

Comparing this years team to last years team, Fernandez said that, "this team has the potential to be better."

Some key players for the Scots include Bryan Johnson, Donnie Evans, Jody Tootle, and returning All-American Chris Reid, who is back from injury. All will be expected to help guide the team to another winning season.

Other players that will be needed if last years record is to be bettered are Randy Bradley, Santiago Esparaza, Lawren Lassiter, Grant Kelly, Lyle Lassiter, Jason Smith, Johnathan Brabson, and Paul-David Davey.

Some recent action saw the Scots go north and win 2 of 3.

The Scots began the trip by losing to Carnegie Mellon 5-2 on Sept. 14 in Pittsburgh. Reid and Kelly each had a goal for the Scots.

The Scots then posted 2 straight victories. First came a 5-1 win over Frostburg (Md.) State on Sept. 16. Then came a 5-2 win over Eastern Mennonite (Va.) on Sept. 17.

Of special note, in the Eastern Mennonite game, Tootle tied the schools all-time assist record of 25. Brian Moore's mark looks in jeopardy as the season is still very early.

The Scots next game will be Sept 28 at home against Emory & Henry.

Women playing well

A new look Lady Scots' Soccer team has opened their season with a 5-3 record.

"The girls are making young mistakes, but are still playing well," said Head Coach Pepe Fernandez of the teams early performance.

Fernandez is hoping that this years team will build on last years success, with upperclassmen Heather Belair and Amy McKeehan to lead the way while providing leadership to the younger players.

Some other key members for this years squad include: Blakely Johnson, Chrissy Newton, Mariana Boero, Nicole Brabender, Jessica King, Amy Poag, Amanda Carson, Christine Rajkowski, Jennifer Windrow, and Meghan Casey.

"With ten Freshmen this year it is going to take some time to come together, but we are improving and once everything falls in place we should be really solid," said Poag.

Some recent action saw the Lady Scots defeat Frostburg (Md.) by the score of 2-1 on Sept. 17.

Brabender and Windrow provided the two goals and seem to be adjusting well in their first years. The assists were from Belair and Redfern.

The Lady Scots then improved to 5-3 with a 1-0 win over interst state rival Carson-Newman. Windrop scored the lone goal as the Lady Scots defense made it stand up.

Some upcoming action for the Lady Scots will include traveling to Georgetown, Ky to face Georgetown College.

The Lady Scots next home game will be versus Agnes College on Sept. 30 at 4 pm.

"The guys' experience is really paying off and they are playing really well."

-- Coach Fernandez

Lady Scots Volleyball team off to 8-2 start

by Joe Malheiro
Staff Writer

The Lady Scots Volleyball team has started play with an impressive 8-2 start.

Waisting no time the Lady Scots captured the title of the early season Greensboro Invitational. In this tournament Senior Kelly Sanson was named to the all tournament team.

The Lady Scots then followed this up with another strong performance in defeating Carson Newman on Sept. 12.

This year Head Coach Kandis Schram has increased the number of home matches, saying that she is hoping for more support from the Maryville College students.

Schram describes this years team as "very unselfish, and one that plays with heart and desire."

Schram also stated that, "this team is very promising and has an exiting future because of all the young talent."

Last years team finished with a record of 15-15, but Senior leaders Kasi Ault and Sanson seem determined to play together as a team and earn a NCAA tournament bid.

Upcoming action for the Lady Scots includes facing up with the likes of Rhodes College, Thomas More College, and Greensboro College on the weekend of Sept. 29-30.

Later the team will content with Centre College and the University of the South among others on Oct. 6-7.

Coach Schram admits that their toughest obstacle will be the schedule.

"We hope that by playing more home matches, the response from the students will help motivate the team," said Schram.

Schram also mentioned that this is the twentieth anniversary of MC volleyball and she hopes that by "coming home" and adding more home matches, it will eclipse any recent marks set by the program.

Full of Cheer!

photo by David Downin

Pumping it Up!

The MC Cheerleaders support their team on Sept. 9 in front of the home crowd.

It's Football Time at MC

Scouts outlast Davidson 28-21

by David Downs
Assistant Editor

The Maryville College football team (1-1) set the tone early and never looked back as the Scots defeated Davidson College (1-1) 28-21.

While playing in a steady rain, the MC defensive unit intercepted the ball three times and recovered a fumble. Meanwhile, the offense racked up 322 total yards, mostly on a ground attack that saw sophomore Jason Norris run the ball 25 times for 115 yards.

"Defensively, we came up with some big plays," said MC head coach Phil Wilks. "Offensively, we were able to maintain composure. Actually we were pretty consistent in driving and moving the ball throughout the game."

The Scots started off with a 5-yard pass from sophomore Brandon Derrick to sophomore tight end Tony Shuler with 11:16 left in the first quarter, capping a 69-yard drive. The Scots added one more touchdown in the second quarter and two in the third.

Derrick, starting his second game for the Scots, completed four-of-seven passes for 48 yards and two touchdowns while rushing 15 times for 84 yards and another score before leaving the game with a minor injury.

Back-up quarterback Spencer Beaty replaced Derrick and scored himself on a 17-yard run in the third quarter.

Wilks attributed some of the success against the Wildcats to special teams play.

"Our special teams play was as good as I've seen—a blocked kick, a fumble recovery, and no major returns, mistakes, or penalties." Defensively, the Scots dominated Davidson as senior Nick White picked off one Tom Dugan pass. Later Chad Johnson, filling in for White, intercepted two more including one with 1:32 left to stop a possible game tying drive.

Jon Davis led the Scots with 10 tackles while linebacker Jason Lay and safety Lorenzo Howard each added nine and seven tackles a piece.

The Scots' next home game is Sept. 30 against Clinch Valley.

Rumblin' Stumblin' Bumblin'

Sophomore tailback Jason Norris drags a North Greenville College defender with him down the field. Despite Norris' valiant effort, the Scots fell in their season opener to the South Carolina school by a score of 15-7. The following week, the Scots went on the road and defeated Davidson 28-21 for their first win of the year.

Photo by David Downs

Scots can't break opening day streak

by David Downs
Assistant Editor

The Maryville College fighting Scots debuted new white uniforms for their season opener against North Greenville (S.C.) College (2-0).

However, despite the new uniforms, Maryville College (0-1) was unable to end an almost 10-year opening game victory drought, losing 15-7.

Having a game under their belts, the Mounties overwhelmed MC by amassing 347 yards total offense, despite a respectable performance by the Scot defense.

"I felt like we played real well on defense," said head coach Phil Wilks. "We gave up a couple of big plays that resulted in scores. I think the squads ability to handle adversity and keep their composure probably was the biggest thing to come out of that game."

The Scots had a chance to tie the game late in the fourth quarter, but with 12 seconds left and no time outs, MC quarterback Brandon Derrick was sacked.

The sack stopped a drive and the game that saw the Scots convert on fourth down twice with a catch by junior Andrew Johnson and an 18-yard scramble by Derrick.

"That was just a combination of a lot of things—probably the inexperience of the offensive unit as a whole hurt us at that point," said Wilks about the last drive. "But we still brought the ball all the way down the field and gave ourselves an opportunity to be throwing the ball again to tie the game up. Even being down there to have a chance... that's a plus."

Many new faces played on both sides of the ball.

Sophomore Brandon Derrick started his first game for the Scots completing 8-of-22 passes for 68 yards and an interception. Also seeing action in the game at quarterback was freshman Spencer Beaty.

"Both Brandon and Spencer came in and did a great job at the end of the ballgame to take us on a drive," said Wilks. "They are both doing a great job and both have contributed to a lot of the success we had."

Jason Norris also played a respectable game, carrying the ball 11 times for 66 yards, while Johnson and sophomore Nathan Davenport each had three receptions for 28 and 27 yards respectively.

In the secondary

MC defenseman Kyle Duke hustles to bring down a North Greenville receiver in the season opener.

Photo by David Downs

Inside

Bo & Chris
p.4

Letters to the Editor
p.5

Ghost story
p. 6

Job opportunities
p. 11

Scots on a rollercoaster
p.14

Homecoming '95: a week to remember

by Becky Lill
Staff Writer

The floats are disassembled, the banners folded, the bleachers empty, and party clothes put away as we say goodbye to an eventful week.

Homecoming at Maryville College encompassed the week of October 15-21, culminating in a victory against Sue-Bennett College and a night of celebration at Harper Place.

On Saturday, the Fighting Scots battled against the Sue-Bennett Dragons. When the dust settled, the Scots pulled through with a 14-10 victory.

The MC pep band was present to lend its support to the team. The MC alumni choir also performed, singing the national anthem and the alma mater.

Then the Homecoming court was presented and the queen was crowned.

Kelly Sanson was crowned the 1995 Homecoming Queen. The class representatives were as follows: Waynette Matthews, senior; Jarra Griffith, senior; Nadia Edoh, senior; Kelly Sanson, senior; Megan Miller, senior; Kerry O'Keeffe, junior; Meghan Casey, sophomore; and Jill Crisp, freshman.

From 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. on Saturday, the Student Programming Board hosted the 1995 Homecoming Dance at Harper Place. The theme was "Enchanted Knights."

Residence hall competition was also an important part of Homecoming week. The residence halls participated in a "Most Beautiful Eyes" contest, a see Homecoming p. 6

Clowning around

Junior Mark Hatfield entertains himself and the crowd during the Homecoming parade.

photo by David Downs

Dozens of courses offered for J-term

by Kristie Paschel
Staff Writer

Travel. Tour. Bike. Swim. Watch. Listen. Read.

These are a few of the activities that January Term '96 has to offer. Students can earn up to three hours of experiential credit by choosing from a variety of courses. Traveling will be required in some of the classes. Time and place varies from class to class as does cost.

Here are some of the out-of-the-country and out-of-state trips that will be available:

•Encounter with Other Cultures

with Dr. Michael Torres will allow students to visit different South American cultures and to learn about the region's marine life by snorkeling.

•Ecuador High Altitude Expedition will explore different climatic zones through climbing in the Andes Mountains.

•Global Studies at the United Nations with Dr. Gilbert Johnston will take students to New York City, where they will examine both the governmental and the non-governmental organizations of the UN.

•Photography in Venezuela

with Dr. Michael Torres will provide students who are experienced with the country and the culture with an opportunity to produce the ultimate image of beauty on film.

•A Winter Gathering with Cheri Torres and Carolyn Morton will explore winter from a renewal standpoint by several outdoor activities, including a one week retreat in Black Mountain, NC.

•Bike Virginia will be a goal-oriented course in which students will travel 380 miles over a period of six days from Abingdon to Williamsburg.

•The Gospel Music Connection with Larry Ervin will allow students to experience the tradition of black gospel music by creating and refining a five to six-day out-of-state performance after the three week course.

Some courses will have day to day off-campus activities as the majority of their coursework:

•Building Hope: Habitat for Humanity with Dr. Elizabeth Perez-Reilly will allow students to help Knoxville and Blount County

see January term p. 8

Hard times reveal lasting friendships

by David Downs
Assistant Editor

A few short months ago, I knew a guy who was in a serious accident. This was no ordinary accident, but an unusual accident that literally changed his life. In this case, we'll just call him Lucky.

In short, Lucky was riding on an intertube that was attached to a truck when he hit a tree at somewhere around 45 mph. After being taken to Blount Memorial Hospital, he was airlifted to UT Medical Center in critical condition. See, Lucky had not only broken his jaw in four places and basically shattered his left leg below the knee, but he also had lost one-third of his body's blood.

Well, to make a long story short, Lucky was very carefully put back together. If you want to categorize it, put it in the "you are very lucky to be alive" file.

The theme of this story is not about his many injuries, but about the support that Lucky received from the many people who cared for him. Most of these people can be found at Maryville College.

As many of you already know,

Lucky is me. Needless to say, I wish that it would never have happened, but it taught me a valuable lesson. This lesson was one of friendship.

A friend is defined as "a person whom one knows, likes, and trusts."

I believe that in life, relationships, anger, and even the changing of the seasons come and go, but the people that you call your friends last forever.

These friends were there for me when I needed them, and they showed me that I was an important part of their lives.

I remember the first time that I was actually conscious enough to know what was going on. It was the night after the accident, and I was still a mess. I awoke to find my three best friends (THE BOYZ) standing there around me. The one thing that stands out in my mind about that night (except that my roommate passed out at the foot of the bed) was that those guys could actually make me laugh. I knew that when they left, I would be back in the operating room for another seven hours as the doctors reconstructed my jaw. Yet, somehow, they made it seem like we were all back in room 210 in Carnegie about ready to battle out another round of college football on Sega.

While in the hospital and at home recovering, I received tons of cards, balloons, and phone calls, but the thing that I appreciated the most were the prayers and support that everyone gave me, especially from the people that make up this college.

Sometimes I feel that I am very undeserving of the friends I have. I can never repay the love and care that they showed me. I can only say that I am grateful that you guys are a part of my life and that my life is a part of MC.

by Alex Little
Student Senate
President

Student Senate has met twice since the last issue of the "Highland Echo". At the September 28 meeting, the Senate was presented with two financial proposals and one club charter proposal. "The Impressions" publication requested one-thousand dollars for their expenses. The proposal was presented and then tabled.

The Maryville College pep band requested and received two-hundred twenty-five dollars from Senate. A group of students petitioned for a club charter, and the French Club charter was approved. Students who have an interest in the French culture are now encouraged to join.

Finances, freshman visitation policies considered by Senate

At the October 12th meeting, four proposals were presented to Senate. Carnegie Hall petitioned and received money for its Second annual Halloween Festival. Carnegie's Halloween Festival will be open to everyone in the community, as well as to MC students who live in other residence halls.

The Erskine Tutorial program petitioned Senate for two-hundred twenty-five dollars. Erskine's proposal was tabled due to lack of representation. Senate then heard from the Literacy Corps. The Literacy Corps then petitioned and received two-hundred fifty dollars for their membership fee to SCALE, a national literacy organization. Also, sophomore class president and parliamentarian Joshua Goocey petitioned Senate to have 24 hour weekend visitation in the freshman residence halls. After much debate, Student Senate unanimously approved the proposal. This proposal now has to pass by the Vice President of Student Development, the President and the Board of Directors.

In order to keep consistent with the Covenant, it is my responsibility to make sure that all possible steps to reach the goals of the Covenant are taken. Our Covenant stresses that we live as a community with mutual understanding, appreciation and respect. With the vast majority of upperclassmen residing in either Carnegie or Pearsons, we have indirectly hindered upperclassmen from mingling with the lowerclassmen in the residence halls.

Also, lowerclassmen do not have the same visitation rights as the upperclassmen in Carnegie or Pearsons. The present visitation policy infringes on lowerclassmen's visitation rights and does not allow them to grow in social maturity like our Covenant's opening statement suggests. Even though it is difficult to have complete equality between upper and lowerclassmen, let us hope that this proposal will help us to integrate freshmen with upperclassmen. Finally, please be careful when driving at night because there are people jogging around campus.

The Highland Echo

Amanda Martin
Editor

David Downs
Assistant Editor

Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

Reporters

Geoffrey Benelisha, Sarah Christians, Eric Daugherty, Dara DiGiacomo, Allison Dunn, Kenyon Evans, Lori Leffel, Hunter Letchman, Becky Lill, Joe Malheiro, Kristie Paschel, Michelle Shuler, Matt Waters, Sarah West.

Columnists

Alex Little, Bo McMichael, Jonathan Peters, Claire Stancampiano

Photographers

Yosef Addis, David Downs, Kristin Kant, Lori Leffel, Hunter Letchman

Computer Layout

Susan Rayborn, Traci Tidwell

Advertising Manager/Designer

Patrick Leslie

Advertising

Lori Leffel, Jamey Robbins, Matt Waters

Contributor

Geoffrey Vinson

Advisor

Jeff Gary

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR . . .

The Echo welcomes your comments, letters and guest columns. All written material to be published in the Echo must be typed and accompanied by your name, post office box number, and phone number. Send material to The Highland Echo, Box 2511. The Echo can be reached by calling the Student Publications Office at campus extension 8176. The opinions expressed in the Echo do not necessarily reflect the views of Maryville College.

Korea offers new experiences, new perspectives

by Kristin Kant
Staff Photographer

We students learn a lot of vital information in the classrooms of Thaw, Anderson, Sutton, and the FAC. Science professors teach us about the makeup of the world. History professors inform us of what the world was like in the past. Social science professors tell us how the world interacts, while art professors show us how the world expresses itself. So here we are learning about this great planet and all of its contents, yet we are confined to a mere few acres of its surface. It makes sense that we as students of the world should get out and actually see some of it. After all, there is no better classroom that the world itself.

The Study Abroad Program allows students to experience life in another culture and in another place. This program is open to all majors, and most people go abroad during their junior year. MC has several exchange programs with countries like Japan, Korea, Puerto Rico, and Great Britain, but students are not limited to just these nations. All the world is available.

Last semester, I had the opportunity to study in Seoul, South Korea at Yonsei University. I chose Korea because of its tradition in Eastern thought. I figured that if I wanted to experience a non-American culture, this would be the place to do it. Naturally, I was a bit nervous and scared about the trip. Korea is 13 time zones away, and I wouldn't be able to run home to Mom and Dad if I needed anything. Indeed, my experience in East Asia led me to explore my capabilities as an independent, resourceful person.

To my dismay, I found that I was a little overly confident. I had traveled outside the U.S. before, but only to Western countries. This part of the world, though influenced somewhat by America, is vastly different from what I was used to. At first, the differences were overwhelming—language, social customs, food, chopsticks!

But as the semester rolled on, I adapted to the Korean culture and began to see similarities between it and our own American culture. I also became aware of the values to which Koreans are so dedicated. Witnessing the values of a strict nuclear family, total respect for elders, and motivation to succeed and be better, I felt a change in my own perspective of what was important.

I discovered a great deal about myself and grew into a more independent, mature person. I explored the landscapes of Korea and China with some awesome friends. I developed a taste for fermented cabbage (kimchi) and squid and made a lot of money teaching English. I missed my friends and family. I survived two cases of strep throat, two bus accidents, a dorm fire, several political demonstrations with riot police and tear gas, and falling off of a horse twice!

I gained an appreciation for the American lifestyle, especially for Western toilets. I left East Asia with a superb education on what the world is all about.

To experience Study Abroad, a very simple application process is required. Further inquiries may be made to Dr. Clarice Doucette in the Languages Department of Anderson Hall.

The art of self-expression

Jonathan Peters
Columnist

Ever notice how words can sometimes be a completely inept medium for expressing thought? It seems to me that war, conflict, distrust, cynicism, hatred, gossip, and a host of other problems associated with humanity are often a direct result of simple miscommunication.

Suppose someone asks you, "How was that concert?" and you said, "It sucked!" If you had that conversation with ten different people, it would result in ten different impressions of that concert, none of which are probably even close to what you experienced.

I thought about what it would be like if everyone's thoughts happened out in the open where everyone else could see them. Would you think the same things if everyone could see that you were thinking them? Would you fart in a crowded room if farts took the form of thick black smoke? (This would definitely clear up any miscommunication problems between people). I realized, however, that this would also create a whole host of other problems, such as stripping humanity of its essence. What is that essence? Well...

A few summers ago I drove out west with my friends Dave and Andy (who are currently having oodles of fun in Montana). On the way out, we found a place in South Dakota that can only be described as the most beautiful place in the universe. We spent an entire day there, and once in a while the subject would come up of how we were going to explain how completely incredible this place was to our friends. We tried to take pictures, but none of our cameras worked that day—as if the spirits of the place were intervening on our experience, telling us that we were on sacred territory, and were completely under its mercy.

Andy was absolutely in heaven. As an artist, his skill and passion lie in his ability to convey impressions of the world in his drawings. At home, a restaurant, or pretty much anywhere you go, Andy's felt pen will be constantly carving impressions of the world onto a napkin, or whatever else is handy, with astounding expressiveness. But then, what is art exactly? When an artist paints a landscape, does it ever look exactly like that landscape? Perhaps art can be loosely defined as the products of human expression— from that attempt to make a painting look like a landscape, or to depict graceful defiance of gravity through dance, or to get a point across in a muddled column, etc., etc.

You might still think, "I'm no artist! I don't draw, sing, dance, write, make tattoos, or hang out in the Fine Arts Center," but I must disagree.

Even by saying, "that concert sucked," you are expressing a human impression, through the art of conversation, to a fellow human. It might not be the "Mona Lisa", but I'm not talking about quality. I believe that the effort to express ourselves is the essence of humanity, and it is one of those special ingredients that distinguishes us from the fungi family.

So, what did you think of that concert, anyway???

At the Movies with Bo &amp; Chris

by Bo McMichael
Columnist

"The good, the bad, and the ugly can sum up our feelings about the movies we have ventured to see these past few weeks." Let us not guide you in the wrong direction, there are many movies in the theater that will put a smile on your face. The funny thing is that we have not been able to grace those movies with our attendance. Many would say that this could be blind faith or even the luck of the draw, but we seem to think it is Bo's fault.

"Seven" brings Morgan Freeman and Brad Pitt together in this murder mystery that will make you think twice about sinning. The movie's killer is a secret; however, his seven deadly sins are not. This sick puppy has characterized his murders by the seven deadly sins of books such as The Divine Comedy and The Canterbury Tales.

Relief from stinkers badly needed

Bo: "I can't tell you how good this movie actually is! Going to see it will be worth every penny you put down. 'Seven' brings back the dark, gloomy, and frightening sense of real life to the theater. A word of warning to those with weak stomachs, though, bring a friend. That is why Chris needs me to go..."

Chris: "This movie has remained at the top of the charts for a reason. From start to finish, this one is a keeper. It's about seven of the most brutal murders ever thought of, and the plot is carried out to a tee. 'Seven' is without a doubt the best movie we have seen in awhile, and just for the record, Bo was the one wiggling in his seat."

"Showgirls" stars the grown up version of Jesse ("Saved By The Bell"), Elizabeth Berkley. She is a Las Vegas stripper whose dream is to make it big. The show has been slammed with an NC-17 rating and banned by many theaters around the nation.

Bo: "Well ladies, we had to see it. And men, the ladies will be smiling when they hear that the movie was down right bad. Now don't get me wrong, their was nudity, sex, and women; however, they forgot the important characteristic of a Hollywood movie, and that is acting. Ms. Berkley might be able to dance, but she will not be winning any Oscars come May.

Chris: "I guess the only thing that was going to shut Bo up was to go see the movie, and it will shut everyone up. There really is not a good word to put down about this one. I will take Sharon Stone over that 'Saved By The Bell' reject anytime. Do not even bother with this one."

"Halloween: The Curse of Michael Myers" brings the most feared killing machine back to the screen from a six year coma. Myers is now down to his last family member and will do everything in his power to finish his mission.

Bo: "This movie redefines the word ugly. The funny thing is I can always see the bright side of things. This Myers movie ties up a lot of loose ends. If you are like me, whether it is Freddy, Jason, or Michael, you just have to waist the money and be proud to say, 'I saw the movie and it sucked.' This is not the same thought of my little buddy, though. I had to put my jacket over him and hide him as people walked through the theater. But this was only the beginning of his criticism towards my pick, and I am sad to say my rights as movie picker have been revoked!"

Chris: "Yes, that is right, people, Bo has picked his last movie. This one was the last straw. Bo, a few friends and, I sat together, and the company was the best part. The fact that there were about 50 little high school, snot nosed brats dealing with their hormones also made it not worth the time. Has any one seen 'Dangerous Minds' yet? Please tell me it was good. I need some kind of hope that there is good movie out there."

Late breaking news... "At the Movies" has now gone to reviewing sporting events. Yes, that is right, the two movie-goers have been dueling it out over the National League Series, which features both of their home town baseball teams, the Cincinnati Reds and the Atlanta Braves.

Bo: "I could go on record and state that the Reds deserve to be in the World Series and that Marge

and Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

Scott is a great lady. I could even mention how the fans of Cincinnati really support their Reds. But you would not want a critic who would lie to you, now would you? My buddy has not said much about the series, and neither have I. The only thing I remember him saying is, 'Why can't you be from New York, or some where other than Atlanta?' Gee, I love that guy!"

Chris: "No comment. Well, maybe just one...Go Cleveland!"

"Strange Days" are coming with "Powder" and the "Vampire from Brooklyn." The "Dead Presidents" might make a surprise visit, which would be "To Die For." These movie will be on our wish list for the fall. Hope to see you at the movies...

by Claire Stancampiano
Columnist

Remember when Velcro was considered a brilliant invention and no one had heard of David Letterman? It was the last time you actually believed your parents knew what they were talking about and the last time "Saturday Night Live" was funny. I'm talking about the era that VH-1 has so appropriately deemed "The Big 80's".

What was so big about them? My friend Christina Conte's hair for one thing. Picture a typical eighth grade lunch period. All was well until someone hurled a green grape across the cafeteria. The only thing capable of stopping the grape was the stiff, gargantuan, tepee shaped mass that Christina liked to call her bangs. After much deliberation, we decided the best plan of action for this hair crisis would be to carefully extract the grape and head directly for the bathroom with a can of Aqua Net (aerosol, of course).

What's so big about the 80's???

Politics, which in actuality haven't changed a great deal, consisted of a bunch of men arguing about some oil and some hostages really far away. No one had a job, and most of our parents were divorced or in the process of getting a divorce. Our president couldn't remember what he had done with a bunch of really large guns, and although my theory was never proven, I believe to this day that those guns were hidden in Christina's bangs. Most of us weren't too concerned with Tom Brokaw or "USA Today" when there were Diamond Back Pacers to be ridden and Atari's to be played.

The favorite pastime of America's youth for a few years, was the Atari Home Video Game System. Everybody had one, and those who didn't found access to one. If you had failed your spelling test, there was nothing more soothing after an arduous day of elementary school than a couple hours of "Pac-Man" and "Space Invaders."

Who can forget flawless teen idol Samantha Maselli? Each week she donned her fluorescent swatch watches and acid washed mini-skirts on "Who's the Boss?" For the guys, feathered hair, was the stuff, not to mention those highly flattering, multi-pocketed, parachute pants in which you could store some writing utensils, your entire lunch, and your life savings.

Let's face it. Music of the 80s sucked rocks. Groups like "Duran-Duran" and "Wham!" got together and sat down one night with a synthesizer and composed all of the songs for all of their albums in about 23 minutes. However, the average 20 year old (including me) gets a strange glazed look on his or her face whenever this music is played. VH-1 makes a butt-load of money airing those old videos because the music takes people back to a time when life was relatively simple and they didn't have to think much.

John Waters made a hit string of coming of age movies, all starring Molly Ringwald or Rob Lowe. We thought Pizza Hut and Burger King were meccas of nutrition.

Life was good, but not great. So, why do we look back upon this decade of mediocrity with such fondness?

We love the 80s because they were the last time we knew what to expect.

The 90s were coming, and with them would come more knowledge, wealth, and technology than our minds could imagine. We were sure that the minute the ball dropped in Times Square, Dick Clark was going to proclaim that from then on, all toothbrushes would be computerized and cars would run on old issues of "The Enquirer" magazine. Alas, we are halfway through the 90s, and what we have is something ridiculously labeled "Generation X," made up of apathetic kids with broken Atari's.

Today we are mature, philosophical, survivors of adolescence whose brains are overflowing with knowledge from being in school. We're not really sure quite what to do with all of the information we've been given, so it makes sense that we would have immense affection for things reminding us of life during a time when it was semi-normal.

Letters to the Editor

5

Dear Editor,

I would like to address the article published in last month's issue of the Highland Echo concerning Cal Ripken. Without going into great detail, the article basically stated that fans should have second thoughts before declaring Cal Ripken a legend or hero. Being as blunt and discreet as I possibly can, I would have to say that the statement is about the biggest load of bull I have heard.

Let's think about baseball players for a moment. How many times in just the past few years has a baseball star come under fire for something he has done. Almost weekly, there is another player who is accused of some kind of serious violation of the law. We, being baseball fans, have unfortunately reached the point where news like this does not bother us.

Now think of something else. Cal Ripken has been playing professional baseball longer than almost every other active player. He has been the focus of thousands of articles in hundreds of publications. Not one, however, have I read about any kind of scandal, crime, or anything bad in general about Cal. He has showed himself to be an outstanding human being. In today's world, especially with all the negative media, this task is not an easy one to accomplish.

Now, as far as not signing autographs or caring for the fans, I can only say one thing. Ha! For years I have participated in organized sports. I know the importance of a pre-game warm-up. For some people this may be throwing the ball around; for others it may be sitting and thinking. For others it may be both. As one of the few remaining baseball legends, Cal knows the importance of preparing for a game. He appreciates his fans. If he did not, he would not put so much effort into preparing himself. I would rather watch him make spectacular plays all through the game than have him shake my hand for a brief instance. But hey, that's just me.

I will leave you with one last thought. The night Cal Ripken broke Lou Gehrig's record several events occurred. First, he went to see his family (if you think a player should put his fans over his family, you need to change your thoughts). Second, he took time to jog around the whole field to shake hands with his fans. This was done in the middle of a game on a hot summer night. Cal was probably a little tired anyway from the game. Imagine how he must have felt afterwards. Yet, he still did it all for the fans. I am sure also that if he had it to do all over again, he would not change a thing. Now I ask you, do you think he cares? To my dying day, I will consider Cal Ripken Jr. one of the most caring and greatest baseball players and human beings who has walked the face of God's earth.

Signed,
A Concerned
Baseball Fan

Dear Editor,

In our society video games are considered child's play and not something to be enjoyed by mature adults. I work in an arcade on weekends so I have been exposed to this phenomenon for some time. For the most part video games are played by males under the age of thirty, although there are exceptions to this stereotype. The more violent the game is the more popular it is. Mortal Kombat or Killer Instinct for instance, have a vast following among blood thirsty players. These two games are simply fictional games where the player tries to brutally beat up or kill a human controlled or computer opponent. Mortal Kombat was the forerunner of the "blood and guts" games and has been popular enough to have two sequels.

Although the games are just games, do they have an impact on easily influenced players such as kids? From my experience, the answer is a resounding YES! I have seen younger kids come in and spend all of their money trying to rip out someone's heart or melt them into a pool of acid. To the kids it is more than a game, it is a goal to see who can learn the different characters' moves first and of course to kill the person they are playing in the most graphic way possible. The shocking part is that the parents not only know of this hobby, but I have even seen the mothers hold up the list of "finishing moves" for eight-year-olds.

This is troubling to know that it is O.K. for kids to fictionally murder a character by some parent's standards.

So is there any way that the industry can be regulated? Chances are that they will never be abolished, only labeled. The home versions of the games do have warning stickers on them for the parents to look at, but they are about as useful as the labeling of music. Another problem lies in the fact that the games are enjoyable to play. I watched people play Killer Instinct for a long time at work before I dropped in my first two quarters. I became instantly addicted to Killer Instinct and played it for most of the summers. A player can get so into the game that when they do a certain move for the first time they are overwhelmed with an adrenaline rush. This happened to me when I got my first "Ultra Combo" (a series of moves to beat the daylights out of the opponent with just one movement of the controller at a certain time of the match).

These games have been around for some time now and will continue to have sequels in the future. Although even college students will play video games regularly, they can distinguish between fact and fiction. Parents and older siblings should watch out for the younger more influential generation. Find out if they are playing these games and either talk to them about it or prohibit them from playing them. If kids are allowed to grow up "playing pretend" with such violent games, who knows what their morals will be as adults.

Signed,
Bryan Thomas

Look for the next issue of
The Highland Echo
the week of November 6.

We Want to Know What You Think

The Highland Echo is running a series of student opinion polls

- 1). Would you rather money be spent on maintaining high quality faculty or better facilities?
- 2). What type of music do you prefer: Metal, Alternative, Rock, Hip-Hop, R&B, Rap, Techno/Dance, Classical, Blues, Folk, Country, Reggae, Easy Listening, Adult Contemporary, or other?

-Results Will Be Posted In The Next Issue Of The Echo-

Please fill out and return to P.O. Box 2080

Committed® by Michael Fry

GHOST ENCOUNTERS OF THE WEIRD KIND

by Hunter Letchman
Staff Writer

It is a common belief of the students here at Maryville College that there are more than people roaming this campus. Many believe that some of the buildings are haunted. There are numerous stories about spooky happenings in many of the buildings, especially Anderson Hall. However, the stories are not limited just to Anderson...

Anderson Hall is one of the oldest buildings on campus, if not the oldest. Many of the buildings have been added or burned. Anderson, however, has stood the test of time. In that amount of time, it has seen many people pass through its halls.

One such presence who supposedly still roams the halls is Whiskers. According to rumor, Whiskers is either an old security guard or a Civil War soldier. The story says that he has a wooden leg and drags it on the floor. Often, late at night while Security is making rounds through Anderson, after all doors are locked and the halls are empty, footsteps are heard on the second and third floors. Lights come on and doors open and shut by their own accord. Keys are sometimes heard jingling. On some occasions, a red light is seen moving through certain rooms or the halls. Curtains are said to move by themselves.

One story tells of a student who had stayed late to work in the computer lab when it was located on the third floor of Anderson Hall. His girlfriend was with him, and when he left, he heard footsteps directly behind him and assumed that it was she. Upon reaching the second floor landing, he turned around to speak, but no one was there. He later discovered that she had gone to the bathroom on the other end of the building from the staircase on which he had been standing.

A very highly respected English professor once had an encounter in Anderson Hall. She often worked late her first year at MC. On one such night, the professor was in her office when she heard someone walking down the hall. She said that it sounded like the person was hurt because one leg made a dragging sound, as if it were hindered by a heavy cast. The person walked down the hall and stopped directly outside the professor's office. This made her very nervous because it was so late. After ten minutes of not hearing anyone walk away, the professor decided to investigate. She opened the door and found that there was no one in the hallway. Upon seeing the empty hall, she gathered her things and made tracks for the door. She said she thought it strange because, "I had that office for years, and I can hear anyone walk on that creaky wooden floor. If someone had been there I would have heard it."

But even stranger things have happened in Anderson. At 4 a.m. each morning, a housekeeper enters Anderson Hall to clean the building. One such morning, the housekeeper unlocked the front door and started to go upstairs when she heard someone vacuuming on the third floor. The housekeeper thought that it must have been another housekeeper and proceeded up the stairs. When she reached the second floor, the vacuuming stopped. She thought it strange and continued up the stairs. She checked the entire third floor and located no one. The vacuum was found locked away in the closet where she had left it the previous day.

Although many of the stories revolve around Anderson Hall, it is not the only building touched by the spirit world. Residents of the third floor of Pearsons Hall report hearing someone walking on the fourth floor. Normally that would not seem out of place, except for the fact that Pearsons Hall only has three floors. It did have a fourth floor at one time, but it burned three times, so MC officials decided to leave it as is. Supposedly someone died in the fire of 1972, and often times a presence is seen at the window in Pearsons' attic.

Davis Hall is not exempt from bizarre incidents either. One night last year, two students awoke at the same instant to discover both of their clocks flashing 666 in unison.

After the "Tall Paul" concert

one year, all of the lights on the second floor of Thaw Hall came on at exactly the same time. Security made sure that the building was empty and that all of the doors and windows were locked for the second time that evening. The officer on duty turned out all of the lights and left the building. Five minutes later, the lights were back on. This time, another officer was called for backup and the entire building, including the attic and the basement, was checked. Still nothing was discovered to be the cause of the trouble. The lights were again shut off, this time at the main circuit breakers. The doors were locked and the officers continued patrol.

But five minutes later the lights were back on again. After thoroughly checking the building again, the lights were left on.

There is also rumored to be a ghost in the Theater. This story is focused around a student who worked in the Theater. Sharon Crane was the student's name, but the ghost goes by Lilly. Crane died in a fatal car wreck on a dark rainy night on the way to a production. Her funeral was held in the theater, and now Crane's ghost, Lilly, supposedly roams the Theater and sits in empty seats during productions and practices. Lilly also likes the catwalk. During each performance, a vital prop will always turn up missing until the end of the show, when it will then turn up wherever it was last seen.

Strange things have even been reported in Gamble and Copeland Halls. In Copeland, a pentagram keeps appearing on the walls in a room on the fourth floor, where it is rumored that a student committed suicide. In Gamble, much stranger things have happened.

Last year, a student who lived in room 202 was asleep in his bed at 4 a.m. when the fire alarm went off. The student was shaken awake by someone he thought to be his roommate. He noticed that the bed was shaking, as were the pictures on the walls. The next morning he found a message, saying that his roommate had stayed at his girlfriend's house the previous night.

This student thinks that he was awakened by the ghost of Kenyon Lacy, a basketball player who lived in the room the previous year and suffered a fatal heart attack over the summer. Often, the same student returned to find the windows open in the dead of winter, when it was obvious that he would not have left them that way. This happened during second semester frequently, when he did not have a roommate.

These could just be strange coincidences, but I'm not going to spend a night on the third floor of Anderson Hall just to prove them wrong!

Impressions seeks submissions, staffers

by Geoffrey Vinson

Are you an artistic individual? Do you aspire to become this generation's Dickinson, Escher, or Mapleshorpe? Or perhaps you just want a shot at making an easy (?) 50 bucks.

In either case, your chance for fame (or notoriety) has arrived. Impressions, Maryville College's artistic and literary magazine, is seeking contributions for original poetry, short fiction, art, and photography.

All students, regardless of major, are encouraged to submit material. An outstanding entry from each category will be awarded a prize of 50 dollars.

For those who would like to be involved behind the scenes, there are remaining staff positions that need to be filled. As always, staff members may contribute material.

Students interested in contributing material or joining the staff should direct their inquiries to Dr. Charlotte Beck, faculty advisor for Impressions. Dr. Beck's office is located in Anderson Hall, room A209, and her phone extension is 8240. She may also be reached through e-mail.

More information on meetings and submission deadlines will be forthcoming, but submissions can be entered at any time, so do whatever it takes to get yourself into a creative mood and get to work!

Homecoming continued from p. 1

sand volleyball tournament, a scavenger hunt, the "Velcro Olympics," "Anything Goes," a coffee house, a banner competition, and a float competition. Carnegie Hall won first place in the overall competition, with Copeland finishing second and Pearsons third.

In addition, the theatre performed the "House of Blue Leaves" on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday.

The Homecoming parade was held Saturday. The floats, the homecoming court, selected alumni, cheerleaders, the equestrian team, and the pep band made their way around campus to get everyone "in the spirit."

Holly Bailey, coordinator of student activities, encouraged more student groups to participate next year. "This year was wonderful and we had a great deal of participants, but next year we're really looking forward to encompassing the whole campus, and not just the same groups."

SONNY & JOANN COANE
Owners

7140 E. Lamar Alexander Pkwy.
Townsend, TN 37882

615/448-1220

Fax: 615/448-1219

LOCATED AT APPLE VALLEY FARMS

BEGIN YOUR ADVENTURE WITH US!

Million Man March has spiritual tone at MC

by Dara DiGiacomo
Staff Writer

On October 16, 1995, the national spotlight focused on Washington DC for a different reason than the usual. At the request of African-American leaders, namely Ben Chavis, Cornell West, and Louis Farakhan, African-American males from all over America went to Washington to participate in a day of fellowship and unity and to show their support for African-American women and families.

This caused a large amount of turmoil in the black community of America, not only because of who was leading the march, but because the National Association for the Advancement of Colored Persons spoke out against it. Churches spoke both in favor of and against the march. Some people said that it is the message that should matter, not the messenger, but others disagreed.

In Blount County, though, the march took on a different role in the lives of Maryville men.

Larry Ervin, the cultural diversity officer for Maryville College, sent out a call to black men across campus asking them to declare October 16 a holy day. He and the Black Student Association planned several events both on and off-campus to heighten awareness of issues facing the black community.

"Students and administrators are being very supportive," Ervin said, citing that many professors gave students options on how to make up missed academic work and athletic practices. One of the events on campus, a forum discussion held in the Center for Campus Ministry, gave students, faculty and community members the chance to discuss many personal issues.

The Million Man March of Maryville had one major difference from the national march in that women were responsible for some of the planning and publicity for the local march and also attended the forum. Vivian Hill, the Fine Arts secretary, said of the forum, "It was good to see so many people discussing the issues."

Lorenzo Howard, president of the BSA, commented that he also thought that this was a welcomed event. "We had a good turnout for the forum," Howard said. "It was good to feel like a part of the community, like I belong here, not just going to school here."

Howard expressed hope that the Million Man March might have a lasting effect by making people aware of different cultures. "This might change the way someone thinks," Howard said.

Ervin also hoped to see some positive changes come out of the March. "This isn't about how we can change America; this is about how we can impact the Blount County community. In a time where two out of every three black homes are headed by women, black men need to stand up and take their responsibilities."

Another event that occurred as part of the Million Man March was a march from Maryville to the Martin Luther King Junior Community Center in Alcoa.

Long-reaching effects from the March cannot yet be interpreted. Still, both on a National and a local level, organizers and bystanders hope for the best.

Job Fair provides opportunities for students and the community

by Sarah West
Staff Writer

Interviewing tips, resume preparation, and first impressions . . . "Job Fair '95" will not only offer employment opportunities, but it will also better prepare job seekers for the steps to employment.

Hosted by the Blount County Chamber of Commerce, Job Fair '95 will feature local and area companies on October 27, from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. at the Sky City Plaza in Maryville. The Chamber welcomes all Maryville College students to this free event. High school seniors, college students, retirees, or anyone looking for a new job or a job upgrade are also invited.

Director of Career Services Mark Cate said, "The job fair is an excellent opportunity to make contacts with local employers. We have a lot of students who want to stay in this area, and they need to begin creating a network with possible employment opportunities."

Professional speakers will be present to inform about an array of topics including employment testing, application process, interviewing tips, resume preparation, job searching, job maintenance and job advancement. These free presentations will begin at 11:30, 12:30, 4:30, and 5:30 and will last up to 45 minutes.

"This is a wonderful way for business and community to come together and express one another's concerns," said Jim Brown of Tennessee Vocational Training Center and Chair of the Job Fair.

Participating in Job Fair '95, sponsored by the Blount County Chamber of Commerce, will leave job seekers motivated, informed, and ready to work. The following businesses will be present: Airport Hilton, American National Insurance, Blount Memorial Hospital, Citizens Bank of Blount County, Cobble Personnel, Inc., Colonial Hills Nursing Center, Downey Oil Co., Fairfield Inn, First Tennessee Bank, Interim Health Care, Kings Foodservice, Inc., Lockheed Martin Energy Systems, Inc., Nipponenso Tennessee, Inc., Northwest Financial, Pellissippi State, People Personnel, Inc., Pope's Greenhouse and Florist, Quality Inn Airport, Randstad Staffing Service, Shoney's Restaurants, Smoky Mountain Little River Motorcycle Shop, Tennessee Department of Employment Security, TAD Staffing Services, Thermocopy of Tennessee, Inc., Wal-Mart, Williamsburg Villas, and Wolf Tree Experts, Inc.

For more information, call the Chamber at 983-2241.

Prepare yourself for a world that needs
you.

- Master of Divinity
- Master of Arts in Old Testament
- Master of Arts in New Testament
- Master of Arts in Church History
- Master of Arts in Theology
- Master of Arts in Christian Education
- Master of Arts in Counseling
- Master of Arts in World Missions and Evangelism
- Master of Arts in Religion
- Master of Theology (Th.M.)
- Doctor of Ministry

For more information, call
800-428-7329

SOUTH HAMILTON BOSTON CHARLOTTE

Gordon-Conwell
Theological Seminary

130 ESSEX STREET
SOUTH HAMILTON, MA 01982

DRB and J-Board report

8/26

•One student was found with alcohol in Gamble Hall and received alcohol first offense.

8/30

•In Copeland Hall, three students broke the visitation policy and were given visitation first offense.

9/1-30

•A student was charged with theft of a telephone pac-code. The case is pending.

9/1-30

•A student was charged with harassment of another student on campus. The case is pending.

9/9

•Five students and two non-students were caught with alcohol in Carnegie Hall. Of the students, four received first offense, and one was given a second offense.

9/9

•On the football field, a student was charged with vandalism, but the case was dismissed because of a lack of evidence.

9/15

•Four students were found with alcohol in the International House and were given their first offense.

9/17

•One student was charged with an alcohol offense in Gamble Hall and received first offense.

9/21

•First offense was the verdict for two students in Davis Hall for breaking the visitation policy.

10/9

•In the Sutton Science Computer Lab, one student was charged with harassing another. The case is pending.

January term

continued from p. 1

communities by completing housing construction projects after a series of training sessions devoted to the background of the Habitat program.

•Exploring Jazz and Blues Music with Dr. Larry Smithce will require that students experience the sound of this music in bars and restaurants, especially in the Old City in Knoxville.

•Highland Homeland: The Great Smoky Mountains with DeAnna Hatch will require students to spend one week at Tremont and engage in hikes, music, and storytelling to better understand the mountains and the problems that threaten them.

•Planet Management with Dave Powell will explore the Earth and its many problems. At least five field trips are planned, including a trip to Chattanooga aquarium.

•Place in Southern Literature with Dr. Charlotte Beck will encourage students to realize the importance of setting in literature by having them travel in groups to the places of topics in the literature.

•See You at the Movies with Dr. Clarice Doucette will emphasize all movie genres and their impacts on the audiences and the greater society through watching movies.

Courses that emphasize on-campus activities with a possibility for occasional trips off-campus are also available:

•Cartoons with Dr. Carl Gombert will explore comics and their evolution. Students will be expected to create an original portfolio of modern cartooning.

•Disappearing Blount County with Dr. David Carlidge will work toward dissecting the risks and benefits of our county's transition into an industrialized county. The course will emphasize writing and research.

•Aquatic Safety with Kandis Schram offers opportunities for certification in first aid, CPR, and advanced lifeguarding through studying water safety.

•Fit for Life with Sharon Wood will focus on fitness of the body and mind through nutrition and stress management. This class is closed to athletes.

•Tools for Living Well with Dr. Robert Bonham will emphasize the need for a change in the human attitude in order to gain a healthy sense of peace and way of thinking.

•An Exploration of Racial Awareness with Dr. Sheri Matascik will reach for self-awareness and heightened sensitivity toward all people through role-playing and videos.

•Human Sexuality with Dr. Robert Ramger will confront students with the issues of today. Reading will be required, along with an oral report.

•Leadership in Action is aimed at students with leadership ability. Student entry must be approved by the Experiential Education Committee.

•Masks with Thelma Bianco will explore the functions of masks and will result in the creation of masks by the students.

•Model UN Security Council with Dr. Young-Bae Kim will provide students with an opportunity to voice opinions on world issues and to host the high school Model UN.

•Piecing Society with Dr. Sherry Kasper will advance understanding of quiltwork in society by studying its history and by taking trips.

•So You Wished You Could Play the Piano with Dr. James Bloy is an opportunity to learn piano playing skills. Practice time apart from regular class time is required.

•Experience in Readers Theater with Dr. Jill Stapleton-Bergeron will allow those students who are interested in stage yet intimidated by it to test their skills.

In addition to these courses, several core curriculum courses will be offered. Check with your advisor or the Registrar's office for course listings.

Pre-registration for all January Term courses will be held on Tuesday, October 31 for juniors and seniors and Tuesday, November 7 for freshmen and sophomores. It will begin at 12:30 p.m.

Registration for January Term will be on January 8, 1996, and classes will begin at 1 p.m. that day.

What it feels like to be Queen for a day?

Kelly Sanson is seen here surrounded by her friends after she was crowned Homecoming Queen 1995. Other students that were nominated for Homecoming Queen were Waynette Matthews, Jarra Griffith, Nadia Edoh, and Megan Miller.

photo by David Downs

Bishop, Davis join MC faculty

by Allison Dunn
Staff Writer

One plus one equals two new professors. A math and a management professor, that is.

Dr. James Bishop is the new assistant professor of management. He received a bachelor's degree in mathematics from Wake Forest University, a master's in finance from Virginia Tech, and a doctorate in organizational behavior and human resources management from Virginia Tech. He also spent many years working with the IBM Corporation.

Dr. Reid Davis is the new assistant professor of mathematics. Davis is a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of UTK, where he earned his doctorate in mathematics. He was here last year for a semester and refers to himself as a "second-semester freshman" because he's still learning about the school.

Bishop teaches both principles of management and human resource management. He also advises senior thesis students. The experience has been "very interesting," he said.

Bishop said that he believes the students at MC are not much different from those he taught at Virginia Tech during his graduate school years, but what he can "see and do outside of class [with students] is very different." Bishop remarked that a professor is more likely to see and speak to their students on a campus this size than on a larger one.

Bishop attributes this largely to his observation that people both on campus and in the community "seem to trust you for what you say you are."

Bishop was born in Roanoke, Virginia, and stayed in that general area until joining the forces of the IBM Corporation to do "programming support." He eventually left IBM to return to Roanoke and study and teach at Virginia Tech. A little-known fact about him is that he "tried out for the 1968 Olympics in weight-lifting," and still holds some records for weight-lifting on the state championship and national levels (before the weight-class changes).

Davis, who is temporarily replacing Dr. Bill Kelly, has applied for the permanent position, where he would continue to teach probability and statistics, pre-calculus, and calculus II.

Davis was born in Knoxville and raised in Johnson City. He has taught at both UTK and Knoxville College, where he spent a year as KC's math department head.

Davis voiced admiration for the professors at MC because they are "devoted to teaching."

He also expressed concern because not many of his students come by for one-on-one assistance. "No matter how intimidating the thought may be, talking to your professors about your classes is a good idea, even before there is a problem," Davis said.

Women's Circle formed at MC

by Sarah Christians
Staff Writer

One of the brand new organizations on campus this year is the Women's Circle. Started by a group of students in Dr. Kathy Shiba's Psychology 349 class on the psychology of women last year, the Women's Circle seeks to provide support and information for women on campus and in the community.

Comprised of one facilitator and anyone who wishes to attend, the Women's Circle meets from 12-1 p.m. every Tuesday. The facilitator acts as the advertiser and moderator, choosing topics and making sure the discussion doesn't get out of hand. There is no hierarchy, and all decisions for the group are made by consensus vote. "It was not any sort of...student—professor sort of thing. It was just a group of women," said Dr. Mardi Craig, faculty coordinator of the Community Forum series "Women In The Nineties: Old Challenges, New Perspectives". Meetings are "bring your own lunch" and often switch locations weekly. When there is a speaker scheduled, meetings are most often held in the Fine Arts Center. Meetings with no speaker, or meetings where the topic being discussed is not considered "hot" are most often held at Crawford House.

Men are most definitely welcome, but not for all meetings. Some topics are considered too personal or controversial to discuss with men around. "But," said Julia Cain, a senior at Maryville College and one of the group's coordinators, "that's really not a problem because men aren't showing up." Any topics from which men will be excluded will be decided on before the meeting by a consensus vote. "Men are really welcome. We often feel like we're in the place of educating men about how we feel and sometimes we just don't want to do that," said Cain. "We need a space where we can just be together...we all have the same experience of gender..." Men would be excluded from discussions on surviving rape and other similar topics. "We really would applaud [men] coming and we really would enjoy their perspective, most of the time."

Discussions and speakers are often timed to coincide with the week's Community Forum lecture. "We try and complement Community Forum," said Cain. Often members of the Women's Circle attend both the lecture and the post lecture luncheon in order to more deeply understand the topic and the experience.

Both the Women's Circle and Community Forum are a great way to more fully understand the experience of women at Maryville College.

"You can call me Al..."

Junior Bishop Moore displays his keyboard talent at Friday's Coffee House. Bishop and several other students performed a Paul Simon hit.

MC hiring students for phone-a-thon

The Maryville College annual Phon-athon will be held on, Nov. 6-9 and 13-16. Organizers are looking for students to help with the fundraiser. Workers will be paid five dollars an hour and free food will be provided.

Interested students should send a note to Beckie Heckler, box 2384. The note should include: name, year, phone number, campus box number, and available nights on Nov. 6-9 and 13-16.

-ATTENTION-

The classified ads are still in the works. If you'd like to place an ad, please get it to us by the end of this week.

Divisions include:

For sale, Wanted, For rent, Jobs, Miscellaneous, and Personals

The cost will be 50 cents per ten words

Send payment and advertisement to P.O. Box 2511 or 2080

Official class rings on sale in bookstore

The Maryville College Bookstore announced that the Official Maryville College Class Rings are in the final stages of production. The juniors and seniors who ordered their official class rings in mid-October will soon be receiving them. The ring is sponsored by the bookstore in cooperation with the Office of Alumni and Parent Programs.

The class ring is offered via pri-ivate invitation for a limited time once each semester. It is available only to students who have completed a minimum of 59 credit hours and have junior or senior year status. The ring features an original design of the Anderson Hall tower and the college's founding date of 1819. The official class ring is offered in men's and women's styles in a choice of 10 or 14 karat solid gold.

While the official class ring can only be ordered by eligible junior and senior students during a limited time period each semester, samples of the rings are on display daily in the bookstore. The next time that the official rings can be ordered will be during the spring semester. Milestone, the supplier of the official ring, offers a convenient interest-free monthly payment plan.

Yearly Membership
Only $15.00 per month

207 Cusick St.
Maryville, TN 37801
977-8335

Get Fit! Stay Fit!

MC looking for full-time counselor for students

by Eric Daughtery
Staff Writer

Maryville College students who are in need of counseling may be better served in the upcoming year.

Recently, a plan was approved by Dr. Gerald Gibson, MC president, to add a full time counselor. This marks a change in the counseling services offered by the college.

Previously, all counseling was handled by the Mountain Challenge staff, but due to the ever increasing size of the program, a change was deemed necessary.

According to Dr. Bill Seymour, Vice President of Student Development, "The Mountain Challenge staff was stretched so thin with everything it currently does, we felt we needed someone who would be able to concentrate on counseling full time."

Counseling will still be offered on a one to one basis, but group counseling may also be available. There is also the possibility of some residence hall programs being set up in conjunction with the counselor.

The college has already started advertising for the position and hopes to have it filled by Thanksgiving. The full time counselor will start work in January.

Dismas House provides new experience for volunteers

by Matt Waters
Staff Writer

In 1974, Vanderbilt University Chaplain Jack Hickey dreamed of a place for ex-offenders to readjust to society while living with peer support. He saw the problems that these former prisoners faced — no family and a possible return to a life of crime. Hickey decided to make his dream a reality, and out of his efforts emerged the first Dismas House.

Founded over twenty years ago, Dismas House is a community of ex-offenders and adult and student volunteers and residents. What makes Dismas House different from a halfway house is that the students and adults have interaction there.

The goal of the organization is essentially to reinstate ex-offenders in society by the creation of a supportive family background. This re-introduction is accomplished by giving the residents new responsibilities with their basically independent living.

Although a great deal of support is provided to them, the former prisoners must find jobs for themselves, pay rent on a regular basis, and perform household chores. After the work has been completed, however, there are plenty of opportunities for recreation. Volunteers can join the residents for evening meals to develop lasting friendships and provide necessary public interaction. Also, the pool table is a much-frequented item in the House.

Dismas House is a low cost system that is monetarily supported by the community. Expenses are kept to a minimum by the public donations of furniture, food, and basic materials. The staff paychecks are modest, and volunteers provide much of the help to the House. Also, the rent collected from the residents helps to defray the budget costs. Additionally, there are fund drives to collect money, and many churches donate their resources.

Less than one-third of the previous inhabitants of Dismas House are repeat offenders; whereas approximately 70 percent of former prisoners who received no Dismas support return to prison within three years.

Furthermore, a stay at Dismas House is less costly than the incarceration of criminals. The expense for one House resident for one year is approximately six-thousand dollars, and the typical cost for one person in a prison for one year is more than three times that figure.

The Rev. Stephen Nickle, MC chaplain, is the chairman of the Blount County Dismas House. He has worked with Dismas and has been on the board for four years. Nickle is chiefly in charge of recruiting students, providing support for the staff, and giving foresight for Dismas. He works closely with Kristen Chapman, the director of the Blount County branch, and together they serve as a receptacle for questions and support within the organization.

Nickle said that students definitely should get involved with this worthwhile community project because, "It is radically different from what most students have known. This part of the culture is distinct from the students."

According to Nickle, Dismas serves several purposes. First, it gives a different perspective to ordinary citizens. "Launching into a situation with different people is like nothing we have had before. We can learn about our own assumptions, and we can see ourselves more clearly," he noted.

Another feature of the program is the opportunity to learn about the justice system. Students can educate themselves on criminal justice and its effect on society.

Nickle said that Dismas is also beneficial because of the "experience of receiving great gifts from folks that we might not perceive as having great gifts to give."

Finally, Dismas House is a "model of how a community can come together to respond to hurting in our midst. Dismas takes on the voice of the community, the students, and society."

Dismas House is always in need of volunteers because new faces are needed in order to keep the community alive. Interested students or faculty can contact Nickle, x8298 or Abigail Blankner, x8122, for more information.

CARNEGIE HALL TRICK OR TREAT FESTIVAL

WHEN: OCTOBER 31, 1995
WHERE: MARYVILLE COLLEGE - CARNEGIE HALL
TIME: 6:00PM - 9:00PM

Come Trick or Treat with Us!!!

Cate named Director of Alumni and Parents Programs

Mark Cate, who has been the Director of Career Services for Maryville College since July, 1994, has accepted the position of Director of Alumni and Parents Programs for MC. The appointment will be effective November 4.

Cate has been employed by MC since 1991.

Jobs, Jobs, Jobs...

These are just a few of the opportunities available through the Career Services office. All jobs are part-time student positions.

Child Care

Need day care workers to work between the hours of 2-6pm Mon.-Fri. Child Kingdom Day Center - $4.50/hour.

Role Models for normal family living needed at Blount County Children's Home. $5.50/hr. 3-11 weekdays; 8am-3pm or 3-11 pm weekends.

Nursery Worker - New Providence Presbyterian Church. Sundays 9:45-noon, Friday 10-11 a.m. $5.00. Care for babies.

Nanny, home health, and other sitter positions also available.

Business

American Express Financial Advisors has a position for a financial services assistant. Do computer proposals, marketing -will train. Salary negotiable.

First American Bank. Apply 505 S. Gay, Knoxville. Mon. 1-3 pm, Wed. 9-11:30 a.m. Part-time teller positions in Sevierville, Northwest Branch, Harriman, Oak Ridge, Clinton. Light typing, basic math, cash handling experience. Excellent interpersonal and communication skills. Also general and operations clerk -Mon-Fri. 6am-11am; Mon, Tue, Thu 4:30-8:30 pm, Fri 5-9pm.

Part-Time Supervisor - Roadway Package System. $250/week. Full benefits including stock. Small package experience preferred.

Miscellaneous

Cobble Personnel offers a variety of laborer and other positions with well known local manufacturers. Work a flex schedule, weekends, or be on call.

Package Handlers - RPS. 6-11PM or 2-7am. Start $6.00-$6.50-$1.00/hr. raises after 30 and 90 days including tuition assistance.

Spartan Express - General Clerk, $7.15/hr. Flex schedule Monday-Friday. Can time share. 20-30 hrs./

week. Answer phone, type.

Comair Airlines - Customer Service agent. $5.50/hr. Baggage handling, work on ramp, process passengers.

Currier - Mortgage Investors Group needs someone to pick up mail from once office in Maryville and take to Knoxville. Salary approx. Flex hours. $100/month.

Little River Village Campground needs maintenance worker, office help and deli clerks. $5.00-up with merit raise after 10 days.

Revco Drug Store needs a pharmacy technician. $4.25-4.50 Mon-Fri, 15-30 hours per week.

Food Service

Chili's in Knoxville is hiring servers ($2.13 plus tips); cooks, bartenders, bussers, hostesses ($6.00/hr.) Flex schedule, 10-15 or more hours per week.

Chisholm Trail Steak House needs servers, bartenders, kitchen help evenings and weekends. Salary d.o.e with benefit program.

Shift Manager position at Kentucky Fried Chicken. Up to $6.50/hr. Part-time flexible schedule.

Retail

Mitchell's Formalwear - West Town. Sales associates positions 20 hrs. week. Salary D.O.E.

Proffitt's needs sales associate/customer service. $4.50-$4.75/hr. Flex schedule.

Applebee's in Gatlinburg needs servers, bartenders, hostesses, kitchen help. Flexible schedule - weekends. Will match or exceed your current rate of pay.

There are many local businesses that accept applications on a continuous basis. Come by Career Services to check out the list.

'87 SUZUKI SAMARI, 4 X 4. RUNS GREAT. $3,850. CALL JAN AT EXT. 8220 OR 982-5841 AFTER 5:00 P.M.

Alumni Choir Reunion

Take it from the top —

Alumni from more than 30 different states and Great Britain gathered on Sunday for a reunion concert — one of the highlights of homecoming weekend.

Yearbook photos to be taken

Neil Crosby, the photographer famous for telling you "Thank You for Shopping at K-Mart" after he takes your picture, will be bringing his 'blue light special' camera back to campus this week.

Crosby will set up in the lobby of Pearsons to shoot student photos for the yearbook. The photos will also be available for purchase.

Each year, the yearbook strives to get as many student portrait photos in the paper as possible, says yearbook advisor Jeff Gary. In the next few weeks, there will also be times for faculty and staff photos he added.

"This year, we want to see as many different faces as possible in the yearbook," he said. "So please take a moment to stop by."

Call-ins Welcome

All American Deli's
Subs & Such
Across from Midland Plaza
$1.00 off any order of $3.00 or more!
982-3139
Mon. - Wed. 10:30 am - 8:00 pm
Thur. & Fri. 10:30 am - 9:00 pm
Sat. 11:00 am - 6:00 pm

Specials Daily

'87 SUZUKI SAMARI, 4 X 4.

RUNS GREAT. $3,850.
CALL JAN AT EXT. 8220 OR 982-5841 AFTER 5:00 P.M.

Reihl injured in rehearsal accident in Wilson Theatre

by Kenyon Evans
Staff Writer

Some people say that it is difficult to appreciate things until they are taken away. If that's true, the theatre is learning to intensely appreciate its Technical Director, Alan Reihl.

On Wednesday, September 20, Reihl suffered injuries while working on the set for the latest show, "The House of Blue Leaves."

Reihl was responsible for overseeing the production of sets for the plays, in addition to numerous other tasks. Kathryn McDonald, assistant technical director and stage manager for the latest show, "The House of Blue Leaves" commented, "He just contributes so much to the theatre that I can't even begin to break it down."

In order to elevate canvas flats to paint them, Reihl and two members of the cast were using a counter weight system to pull up the flats. The weight system was jamming, so Reihl began to add weight to the system. The system is a story above the theatre and is above a hole in the theatre which goes down into the basement. While Reihl was adding weight, the rope snapped, hurling Reihl and the weights down toward the hole in the theatre. He caught himself on the hole in the theatre level and kept himself from falling another floor into the basement, shattering both his heels when he landed on them.

Reihl's injury has prevented him from continuing his work for the theatre. It is unknown when he will be able to return. He has undergone surgery on one foot and the fate of the other foot is under discussion.

Reihl's absence has had quite an impact on the theatre. Sarah Stevenson, an active member of the theatre program, commented, "Alan's not being here has affected me the most on an emotional level... it feels so different without him here. In the past two years I've gotten to know him pretty well, and it's strange not to have him around for support."

Many members of the cast share Stevenson's sentiments. Todd Smith commented, "He is the most qualified technical director I've ever met."

"It's definitely going to hinder the production," said McDonald of Reihl's absence. "It probably won't shut it down, but it will definitely hinder it."

Dr. Jill Stapleton-Bergeron, director of the MC theatre, said Reihl's absence was inspiring the students to work even harder than normally since they had to take care of a lot of jobs that Reihl would normally perform. "We suffer because we miss him," she said, "but I think it speaks well for his leadership prior to the accident that the students who work technical stuff under him were able to come in and take over. To me, that says a lot about what he has taught them."

Taking it easy

Aaron Stone and Tiffany Rudicil take center stage in the MC theatre production of "The House of Blue Leaves." The play was one of the many events that highlighted Homecoming '95.

Fine Arts Calendar

Upcoming events

•Davy McCammon, tenor, will give a senior recital on Thursday, Oct. 26, at 8 p.m. in the FAC Music Hall. He will be accompanied by pianist Jennifer Stadtmiller.

•Dr. James Bloy, organist, will give a faculty recital on Friday, Nov. 3, at 8 p.m. in the FAC Music Hall.

•Jennifer Stadtmiller, soprano, will give a senior recital on Friday, Nov. 10, at 8 p.m. in the FAC Music Hall. She will be accompanied by pianist Rhonda Mayfield.

•The FAC art exhibit for November will feature the textile designs of Georgia Bailey. Bailey will give a gallery talk on Monday, Nov. 6 at 7 p.m.

Cool Clothes · Incense · Jewelry · Candles · Cards · Prints

JAZZBERRY

GENERAL

15% Discount For All Maryville College Faculty, Staff, & Students

Directions: Take a right at the Court Street Exit and drive till you see us!

Phone: 984-0391
205 Court Street

Hours: Mon - Sat 10:00 - 7:00

*Discount good through November and does not include clearance items.

Cool Clothes · Incense · Jewelry · Candles · Cards · Prints

Cool Clothes · Incense · Jewelry · Candles · Cards · Prints

Interclub council sets new goals for this year

New co-chairmen take the reigns

by Kristie Paschel
Staff Writer

Interclub Council is back in session this year with new co-chairmen and clear goals. The Council has had an on and off relationship with Maryville College over the past few years, but it is back and ready to resume its responsibilities.

The Council's purpose is to coordinate more communication between the different boards of MC that schedule student activities. This communication is important in assuring that there is no double scheduling of events among committees.

The Council also plans to aid in the development of a co-sponsor relationship between the MC boards so that each board can operate more efficiently and effectively.

Holly Bailey, Coordinator of Student Activities, stressed that the Council's desire is to have people from each campus organization on the board even though all groups are not represented at the present time. "Our real goal is to have everyone represented," said Bailey.

This is the second year in a row that the Interclub Council has been officially active after a long recess, according to Bailey.

The Council's first meeting was Tuesday, October 12. Aaron Stone and Yosef Addis presided as the new student co-chairmen.

Attendance at the weekly 1 p.m. meetings is open to all students who are interested. Meeting locations change from week to week. See Student Development for exact meeting places.

Timberrrrrrr!

A hurricane in Tennessee?

Coastal states were not the only areas of the country to feel the effects of hurricane Opal. Broken tree limbs left evidence of the storm's power over much of the campus.

photo by David Downs

Freshman senators, class officers elected

by Michelle Shuler
Staff Writer

They are some of the newest leaders in our campus community, and they are also our peers and classmates. Their names are Sarah Knisley, Jill Crisp, Allison Cornish, Lee Cleavinger, and Joy Bailey, and they were all chosen by their fellow students during the freshman senate elections.

By now we have all heard or seen these names. For weeks they were on posters covering walls, doorways, and bulletin boards all over campus. But how exactly did these people become candidates? And for the freshmen who elected them, what will they be doing for their class?

As to the first question, Alex Little, Student Senate president and organizer of the elections, held an informative meeting for all interested freshmen in which he explained to them what would be involved in the process. The hopefuls were then required to have petitions signed by five to ten classmates. Once the signatures were obtained, the candidates were placed on the ballot.

The elections were then held. Freshmen who wished to vote did so in the cafeteria, in residence halls and in Fayerweather Hall.

Little said that he was surprised both by the number of students interested in running and by the voter turnout. He also expressed hope that the new officers will realize the importance of their positions and will take their jobs as the voices of the freshman class seriously.

This brings us to our second question: What, precisely, are their jobs? These are the job descriptions according to Cathy Cate, director of campus programs and sponsor of the elections. Lee Cleavinger and Joy Bailey, the new freshman senators, will attend and be voting members of the Student Senate. President Sarah Knisley, Vice President Jill Crisp, and Secretary/Treasurer Allison Cornish will be non-voting members of the senate and will be responsible for the specific issues and concerns of the freshman class. They will also be involved in fundraising and organizing activities for the class.

"I am honored and pleased to be chosen as freshman class president," said freshman class president Sarah Knisley. "I hope that the class will be satisfied with the job [we] do."

Students can impact the decisions made by their representatives by communicating with them. Problems or concerns of members of the freshman class can be addressed to Sarah, Jill, Allison, Lee, or Joy.

Remember
Community Shares
in the 1995

Giving Campaign

Scots find winning ways

by David Downs
Assistant Editor

Despite a bumpy start, the Maryville College Scots have crawled out of the cellar and are on the verge of going over .500 for the first time this season.

Having started the season 1-1 with a loss to North Greenville and a victory of Davidson College, the Scots moved to 3-3 with impressive victories over Rhodes College and Centre College.

On Sept. 22 the Scots traveled to Sewanee, Tenn. where they were narrowly defeated by the score of 19-20. The game was decided as the Tigers batted down a two-point conversion attempt that could have sealed the win for the Scots with 1:10 to play in the game.

Maryville got on the board with 10:34 left in the second quarter on a 3-yard run by Sophomore Brandon Derrick. The scene was set up by a Tiger fumble that the MC defense recovered at the Sewanee five-yard line.

The only other score of the first half came on a Derrick pass to Sophomore Brian Claudis with :12 seconds left before intermission.

The next score of the game came at 3:30 in the fourth quarter as Sewanee went up by the count of 20-13. The Scots responded with a 63-yard pass from Derrick to Sophomore Nathan Davenport. Davenport had three receptions in the game for 110 yards and a touchdown. The coaching staff decided to go for two and the win, but were denied when a Tiger defender batted the ball down in the end zone.

On September 30 the Scots returned home to host Clinch Valley College at Honaker Field.

MC started the game off strong by taking a 23-19 lead at half-time. However, the Scots were hurt by turnovers for the second straight year against Clinch Valley. The visitors made them count as they scored 27 unanswered points in the third quarter to put the game away.

The Scots returned to their winning ways with two key road wins against Rhodes College and Centre College.

After being down by seven at half-time, the Scots fought back. With 8:56 to go in the third quarter, Sophomore running back Jason Norris scored on a three yard run, and with Brouhard's kick, the score was tied at 14-14.

In the fourth quarter Brouhard again came up big by kicking a 34-yard field goal with 9:58 to go to give MC the victory.

The Scots won their second straight by defeating nationally ranked Centre College.

The Colonels got on the board first with 7:02 left in the first quarter as Kris Garrett avoided defenders on his way to a 55-yard touchdown. For the day Garrett had 165 yards on 22 carries and one touchdown. Much of his yard did come in the first half.

Give him six!

Sophomore Brandon Derrick celebrates as he reaches pay-dirt against Clinch Valley College.

Just before the end of the half Derrick score from a yard out to tie the score at 7-7.

In the second half Junior running back Armand Akiboh scored on a 41-yard run with :26 left in the third quarter. Norris added another score with 7:06 to go in the game on a one yard pass from Derrick.

The final margin was provided by Chris West who stripped the ball from Garrett and returned it 55 yards for the score.

Derrick lead the Scots, going 8-17 for 183 yards and a score. Davenport pulled down four of those balls for 158 yards receiving.

Can anybody stop me?

Derrick drags defenders during the Scots' Homecoming victory.

Scots win Homecoming

by David Downs
Assistant Editor

The Maryville College Scots survived a homecoming scare by defeating Sue Bennett 14-10.

The Scots (4-3), who are on a three game win streak, scored early as Sophomore wide receiver Nathan Davenport caught a 58-yard pass from Sophomore Brandon Derrick in stride for the touchdown.

The Dragons finally scored on a 27-yard field goal with 13:31 left in the second quarter.

After half-time Sue Bennett gained the momentum early in taking the ball down the field on their first possession and scoring on a 20-yard run by Chris Thomas with 8:34 left in the third quarter. This made the score 10-7 Sue Bennett.

Offensive Coordinator Carter Cardwell said "I'm disappointed that we did not score as many points as I thought we could. I think that it was more of us not executing as well as we should."

"It's tough coming off a big win at Centre and then playing a team that hasn't won a game," Cardwell added.

With 14:56 left in the fourth Derrick scored to make it 14-10 MC.

The MC defensive secondary had another big game as they held the Dragon offense to only 57 yards. The Scots also had three sacks.

"I think we just need to keep doing a better job of coaching them," said Cardwell, "they're playing hard."

Lady Scots looking for strong finish

by Joe Malheiro
Sports Writer

The Lady Scots Volleyball team is continuing to impress this season by running their record to 15-8.

Although they struggled in the final week of the Maryville College Invitational Tournament, losing to The University of the South and Centre College, the Lady Scots did very well over all. Senior Kelli Sanson, who leads the team in kills (174), was named to the all-tournament team. Senior Kasi Ault, second on the team in kills (160), and Sophomore Joey Cody, who is third on the team in kills (138), were both nominated for all-tournament honors.

Other statistical leaders are: Ault with 38 solo blocks, Amy Snider with 22 solo blocks, and Kelli Debold with 10 solo blocks.

Coach Schram commented that she "is very pleased with the enthusiasm and heart that the girls are showing right now."

The Lady Scots still have a tough road ahead, with a home match scheduled against Centre College on October 25. Following this will be the Maryville College Triangular Tournament with Carson - Newman College, and Covenant College on October 28.

Coach Schram said that her players are "excited about the remainder of the season and are still hopeful that they will receive an NCAA tournament bid."

The Lady Scots were ranked as high as Eighth in the South, but have since fallen out of the rankings.

The coach feels that overall the team is healthy with the exception of Sophomore Brandi Wilson who is nursing an ankle injury. Wilson, who received all-tournament honors earlier in the season, is still playing well according to Coach Schram.

Coach Schram would like to see a good turnout for the remaining home matches. She stated, "It would be a big boost for the team to have a good crowd to support them."

The team feels that "this is the 20th anniversary of Maryville College Volleyball and it would be uplifting to see a good student turnout to finish off the regular season."

photo by David Downs

Up, up, and away!

Joey Cody out jumps the competition in a recent match.

Equestrian team's dedication paying off

by Becky Lill
Staff Writer

Perhaps the word "horse" conjures up a picture of wild Mustangs galloping across the western plains, manes flowing in the wind. Or perhaps you envision Arabians with their sinewy flanks, sculptured features, and flaring nostrils.

Maybe, being college students, you think first of the industrious Clydesdales that pull the heavily laden Anheuser-Busch beer wagons.

And what do the words "fall sports" bring to mind? More than likely, you think of Saturday football games or Sunday soccer matches. Maybe crisp afternoon baseball and softball games. Most of us do not think of horses and sports together, and most of us do not realize that Maryville College has its own Equestrian Team.

An equestrian team, for those who may be unfamiliar with the sport, is a team of trained riders who compete in such things as walking, trotting, cantering, and jumping.

Members of this year's team are as follows: Christen McCammon, coach; Megan McWhorter, assistant coach; Tiffany Rudicil, Elaine Gibbs, Kelly Lyon, Rennay Stephens, Farrah Williams, and Emily Huffman. Dr. Craig is the faculty advisor for the team. Also included on the team are Webster, Tory, Wings, Stark, Rugby, Baby, and Morgan. These are the horses that the girls train with and care for.

The Equestrian Team was founded in the fall of 1994 by Christen McCammon. McCammon, riding for 14 years, has played polo, fox hunted, and trained horses. Horses are a passion of hers, and she wanted them to be a part of her life here at MC.

The team began with only two riders, although membership increased to seven before the year was over. During this first season, the equestrian team was recognized as a club sport on campus, hosted the first annual MC Horse Show, had a rider qualify for regional competition, and became an official member of the Intercollegiate Horse Show Association. This allows them to compete with other schools.

At these competitions, there is a different judge each day to insure fairness. The horses and tack are provided by the host school and are chosen by random selection before the class competition begins. The competitors mount their horses and perform in their class with no warm-up.

After the entire performance, the riders are given a score and a ranking. Each ranking is worth a certain number of points which are accumulated over the year. If the points total 36 or more in any one class for an individual, that rider will qualify for regionals. They can then advance to zones, and then onto nationals.

The overall goal of MC's equestrian team is to promote sportsmanship and team spirit, to foster the riding ability of each member, and to favorably represent MC in the IHSA. So far, they are doing just that.

The team has already participated in two competitions. The first was the Eastern Tennessee Hunter Jumper Association on October 7, in Bristol, Virginia. Here, Kelly Lyon placed third in her division, Rennay Stephens placed fifth, Tiffany Rudicil placed fifth, Elaine Gibbs placed sixth, and Emily Huffman also placed sixth.

The second was also an ETHJA competition on October 14, in Morristown, Tennessee. Rudicil won two division championships for jumping. Huffman placed well also.

Although it may look easy to some, it requires a lot of time and dedication. It is mentally and physically challenging because the riders are working with a live animal. It is not a piece of pigskin or leather to be controlled at will, but a living breathing being with feelings and instincts. Horse and rider must be aware and attuned to each other as well as their surroundings. To learn to think and feel like their animals, the girls have to spend a lot of time with them.

They must ride at least three times per average week and every day on the week of a show. The girls who ride English saddle practice at a private barn in Townsend, while Williams and Stephens, who ride Western, practice here in Maryville.

McCammon is quick to point out that "all of the girls are very dedicated and are working very hard. Being a member of the team is hard work and a big responsibility, but they are all doing very well."

Tiffany Rudicil states, "I am very proud of McCammon's efforts at starting the team. Personally, I have fallen in love with the sport and I feel that we have made great strides as a team. We are very dedicated to the idea of representing MC well."

It is very important to the ladies that this be recognized as a sport as both the girls and their horses train extensively for their competitions. They must be conditioned both mentally and physically in order to compete, and they place just as much emphasis on practice as do the other sports teams on campus. Their sport requires the same training, dedication, skill, spirit, and magic as do the others.

The stables are a big part of the girls' lives. It is here that they find peace and quiet, joy and excitement. Hay. Sweet feed. Saddle soap. Tackcloths. Brass polish. Leather. Just the simple thrill of horses. The Equestrian Team appreciates any support and would like to encourage more people to become involved. Why not take the time to attend a competition, or talk to one of the riders?

The official IHSA schedule is as follows: October 28-29, University of the South, Seawane, Tennessee; November 4-5, Moorehead State University, Moorehead, Kentucky; and November 18-19, Midway College, Midway, Kentucky.

Youthful Lady Scots growing up

by Joe Malheiro
Sports Writer

The Lady Scots Soccer team is boasting an impressive 11-6 record, as the youthful team begins to come together.

The Lady Scots, coming off of a 3-0 win over Greensboro on October 21, are enjoying a successful season. Coach Pepe Fernandez is very pleased with his team's play thus far, especially considering the number of young players. Coach Fernandez said, "The Lady Scots have been a big surprise this season; they have exceeded the expectations of many people." Fernandez also said "the reason the girls are so surprising is because they start six freshman."

The coach lists Sophomore Amanda Carson, Amy McKeechan, and Freshman Jennifer Windrow "as players who are showing leadership and playing very well." Windrow is on a record pace with 14 goals scored and seven games still remaining. The single season mark stands at 23 and Fernandez feels that she may break that before the season ends.

The biggest remaining game for the team is to be played against Emory University. Emory is ranked among the top 10 teams in the country, and the Lady Scots will have to face them on the road in Atlanta. The game is to be played on October 28.

The Lady Scots have climbed the rankings and are currently positioned in the number nine slot in the South Region.

The coaches and players are very excited about the future of the team and the potential they have due to the youthfulness of the team this year.

However, they are also quick to point out that this season is "far from over", and the team approaches each game seriously. With all of the young talent, and the leadership of the upperclassmen, this team will not be overlooked for the remainder of the season.

photo by David Downs

It's mine!

Nicole Brabender fights for the ball in a recent home game against Greensboro.

Scots looking for NCAA bid

by Joe Malheiro
Sports Writer

The Fighting Scots are having another successful soccer season as they push to try and gain a bid to the NCAA tournament.

The Scots took a major step towards getting their first ever NCAA Tournament bid with a 3-1 come from behind upset win over Greensboro College on October 21. Greensboro, ranked eighth in the nation, fell to 15-2-1 over all.

The team is currently 12-3, and ranked fourth in the south. Coach Fernandez "is excited about this season." Fernandez believes that if the Scots win the rest of their games, they will have an "extremely good chance" to make an appearance in the NCAA tourney.

Fernandez stated that Junior Chris Reid is playing well right now, along with goalkeeper Randy Brady. Others mentioned by the coach were Juniors Lawren and Lyle Lassiter as "playing extremely well."

Big time not always better

by Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

Wouldn't life be great with no strikes or free agents? Where the only thing that mattered was not money? Where words like love and desire meant something? Well I think that I may be on to something. And although I can not speak for every non-scholarship program in the country, around here the game seems to be played for all of the right reasons.

No, we are not perfect, but I feel really good about what kind of image athletes here are sending out. They are not here as a pit stop to "the next level". This is it, and it doesn't matter. People here realize that in a few years we are going to wake up and have to work at a certain job for the rest of our lives. Who cares?

You know, when I go home for Christmas and see all of my friends, it seems like all they want to do is sit around and talk about Friday nights and how great things used to be. And then a few, and I mean very few, talk about what it is like to be on scholarship. You want to know who seems the happiest? I think the people that are playing in programs just like this one here at Maryville are the happiest. I would rather be here than at home talking about what was or what could have been. And I understand that the day I was born, playing at Ohio State just was not in the equation.

To sit and watch a soccer or a basketball game here is pretty close to perfect. A spectator sees only players pouring their hearts out. And for what? Nothing as trivial as keeping their scholarship. Nothing as individualistic as getting someone to notice them. It is for the greatest thing that competing can give a person. It is for their love of the game. What a simple thing, that gets overlooked so many times when you hear about hold-outs and free agency and scholarships being taken away. Lawrence Philips? What are you doing now? And how about that Silvan guy from the University of Tennessee? Did they really love what they were doing? Well if I loved something I sure would not throw it away like that.

I can't speak for what it is like to play at a big time program like that, but people here seem pretty happy with where they are and what they are playing for. The only unhappy people are the ones who probably would not be happy anywhere.

A chance at an NCAA tournament bid every now and then, a few All-Americans here and there. What is there not to love about playing for the pure satisfaction of the game? It is about winning and losing, but also about much more. There are great athletes and good athletes here, but either way, they are all student-athletes playing for their love and looking toward the future.

New Additions...

There have been a few new members added to the Maryville College community and we would like to take this time to welcome them.

First we sent out congratulations to Head Women's Basketball Coach Kelli Cook who recently gave birth to a healthy baby boy. On October 12 Coie Jacob Cook was born weighing 10 lbs. and 6.7 oz.

Next we would like to welcome

Bill Putman, the new Director of Intramural Sports and Recreation. He is looking forward to getting the students involved and listening to their ideas. The open recreation schedule will be posted in each dorm and tournament schedules for the fall will come out in about a week. His number is 8016, find out what is going on in the intramural world.

Inside

Music Review

p. 3

Echo
Survey

p. 5

The President's Roundtable
p. 6

Scots
Basketball
Roster
p. 10

Residence Hall policies under review

by Amanda Martin
Editor

For students who have opinions about life in residence halls, now may be the perfect time to express their views. Across the board, both students and staff are working on changes in various policies.

In the bubbling cauldron known as residence hall policy, student dissatisfaction has been brewing for months. According to Dr. William Seymour, vice-president for student development, the student satisfaction survey which was conducted last spring indicated that the level of satisfaction in academic areas, such as faculty and the library, was above average when compared with the levels of satisfaction from other colleges. However, "the students' level of satisfaction with residence halls was lower than average."

As a result of both student complaints that he has received and his own dissatisfaction with various residence hall policies, Alex Little, MC student senate president, has formed a residence life committee comprised of student representatives from each hall: Brian O'Conner, Gamble; Laurie Lindsay, Copeland; Rissa Miller, David; Eric Obermiller, Lloyd; Kristin Kant, Pearsons; and Adam Ray, Carnegie. Darren Dykes and Charsie Robertson also serve on the committee as student representatives.

At the first meeting on Thursday, Nov. 2, Little told the committee, "The [student] handbook does not site a process that I feel is consistent with student needs." The goal of the committee, according to see Residence halls p. 7

photo by Kristin Kent

Autumn at MC

The MC campus has been ablaze the last couple of weeks with the fall leaves in their peak.

MC faces lawsuit over injury in gym

by Amanda Martin
Editor

As the result of an on-campus injury to a student, Maryville College is facing a lawsuit for over $2 million.

According to a story which appeared in the Daily Times on Tuesday, October 31, MC student Anthony Johnson and his parents, Doris and Dennis Johnson, filed suit against the college, MC President Dr. Gerald Gibson, and the MC Board of Trustees. On Dec. 12, 1994, Johnson suffered head injuries when he collided with the gym wall during a pick-up basketball game. "He spent eight days in the intensive care unit at the University of Tennessee and [suffered] extensive additional medical treatment for his injuries," the Daily Times story said.

The suit claims that the college was negligent because it did not provide for the safety of the students in the gym during "ordinary body contact." The Times has previously printed two different versions of how the injury occurred. On Dec. 14, the story reads that

Johnson "suffered a head injury about 3:30 p.m. when he dived for the ball during a pickup basketball game with several fellow students." A follow-up story which ran on Thursday, Jan. 19, 1995, states that another student "was driving for a lay-up and Tony came up from behind to block the shot, which he did.... But when he landed, awkwardly, Tony's left leg catapulted him head first into the concrete wall five feet behind the baseline."

The Daily Times reported that the suit said that Johnson, "suffered permanent injuries 'including but not limited to his head, brain and spine'."

The story states that, "The suit...claims the college knew the close proximity of the wall to the basketball courts posed a danger as demonstrated by installation of protective padding on the cinder block wall adjacent to the basketball goals in the main gymnasium."

Alden E. Stuart, MC vice-president and treasurer, said, "We've received the complaint and it is now with our insurance company and our attorneys, who will be responding to the complaint."

Beware of those 20-year-old dumps

by Amanda Martin
Editor

It's the best kept secret in the world, but we all know about it. Because it doesn't have a name, I'll call it "the 20 dumps."

When I was a child, I remember adults referring to "the awkward age," a period of life, usually defined by age, in which one experiences a tremendous amount of upheaval. I had heard so much about age 16, for example, that when that year of my life passed relatively quietly, I felt somewhat surpassed.

Age 13 is another one they warn you about. Adults often apply the cliché, "too old for toys, too young for boys" to this age. I'll admit, I personally was not a pretty sight at age 13, but I certainly didn't experience a tremendous amount of trauma at this particular awkward age.

But boy, was I surprised when I hit 20. To make a long story short, almost precisely on my 20th birthday, I "hit the wall," and boy did I hit it hard.

What I have discovered in the almost four years since, is that almost everyone I know experiences a major emotional crisis in one form or another around age 20, give or take a year. Although "the 20 Dumps" manifests itself in different ways for different people, there are some common traits I have observed:

• Drinking is one of the most common crutches victims of "the 20 Dumps" use. A person does not have to be Otis from "The Andy Griffith Show" to still lean on the booze once in a while. If, after a stressful week of solving the worlds problems in political science class, discovering the cure for cancer in biology, or defining the very nature of God in religion class, the only thing that appeals to you that is remotely enjoyable is getting smashed, chances are you are experiencing some of the stress symptoms associated with 20 D.

• Intense spiritual crises often reach a climax at this age. Perhaps this is because of the tremendous number of new ideas we come into contact with in college. Or maybe because, since we are learning to think for ourselves, we can no longer accept something as THE TRUTH just because our mommies and daddies told us so.

• General insanity is another symptom of 20 D, and it refers to completely reckless behavior: dangerous physical activity, unprotected sexual activity, maniacal driving habits, etc. I think this is because it makes Dumps victims feel alive. This may stem out of the next symptom...

• Depression is an ugly monster with whom everyone must grapple at one time or another. There is nothing more depressing than 20 year-old Dumps.

I've described some of the symptoms, but what causes them?

I think it is a feeling of being generally lost. During this phase of our lives, its time to take the final plunge and grow up. By growing up, I don't mean being able to handle responsibility-- a lot of us can already do that. I think this is the sort of growing up in which we settle in to who we are. That doesn't mean we won't continue to change and grow, but it means that we have a perception about who we want to be.

Not all of us can get to this point easily, though. Not knowing who you are, coupled with facing life out on our own for the first time is really scary. It's even worse when we are carrying a lot of emotional baggage that we need to let go of.

This brings us to the question, "What can we do to get ourselves out of this inferno?" The only solution I could come up with is to wait and to find supportive people to talk to, and often.

I am not saying that I am over 20 D, but I think I've made it through the worst of it, so I know it's possible, even though it doesn't seem like it in the midst of the crisis.

by Alex Little
Student Senate
President

On Thursday, October 26, student senate held its third meeting in Thaw Hall. At this meeting we heard a treasury report from Nadia Edoh and committee reports from various committee chairs. Impressions, a publication of literary and artistic works of Maryville College students, petitioned and received $600. The Inter-

Senate discusses residence policies, constitution

national Club petitioned and received permission to be a student senate chartered club/organization.

The senate discussed key issues essential to campus community. For example, our constitution comes under review this year. Our Covenant will be the basis for any changes or deletions to the constitution.

The last key issue discussed was residence life. A campus wide survey done last year indicated that students responded to questions regarding residence life in a way that warrants attention. On Thursday, November 4, the residence life student senate committee met to discuss some possible ways to formulate a housing/room consolidation policy that is fair and consistent across the board. I am very concerned about our present residence life policy. If any student has anything they would like to contribute to the pool of ideas our committee will be considering, please call me or leave your suggestion in campus box 2261. All ideas will be considered, and I look forward to hearing them.

Lastly, Maryville College grants the student senate a lot of responsibility. However, in the past, we, as students, have not commanded much responsibility as we should have. With the residence life committee, I implore students to make suggestions and express grievances. If we, as students, do not take the initiative to express our grievances and desires, our student senate will become an organization with a diminished role in student affairs.

The Highland Echo

Amanda Martin
Editor

David Downs
Assistant Editor

Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

Reporters

Geoffrey Benelisha, Sarah Christians, Eric Daugherty, Dara DiGiacomo, Allison Dunn, Kenyon Evans, Lori Leffel, Hunter Letchman, Becky Lill, Joe Malheiro, Kristie Paschel, Michelle Shuler, Kim Syphrett, Matt Waters, Sarah West.

Columnists

Alex Little, Bo McMichael, Jonathan Peters, Claire Stancampiano

Photography Editors

Yosef Addis, Kristin Kant

Photographers

David Downs, Lori Leffel, Hunter Letchman

Computer Layout

Susan Rayborn, Traci Tidwell

Advertising Manager/Designer

Patrick Leslie

Advertising

Lori Leffel, Jamey Robbins, Matt Waters

Advisor

Jeff Gary

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR...

The Echo welcomes your comments, letters and guest columns. All written material to be published in the Echo must be typed and accompanied by your name, post office box number, and phone number. Send material to The Highland Echo, Box 2511. The Echo can be reached by calling the Student Publications Office at campus extension 8176. The opinions expressed in the Echo do not necessarily reflect the views of Maryville College.

Wake Up?

by David Downs
Assistant Editor

Ugly
Life of Agony
///1/2

Life of Agony's sophomore debut is not nearly as powerful as their freshman release River Runs Red, but it is definitely an album that deserves notoriety. Lead singer Keith Caputo is one of the best underground singers as is evident on songs like "Lost at 22" and "How would it be," which is one of the best songs on the album.

The remake of the song "Don't you (forget about me)" from the movie The Breakfast Club is a surprising favorite on the album. Caputo and Co. pound their way through this 80's classic.

The majority of the album is written by talented bassist Alan Robert, with Caputo and drummer Sal Abruscato adding various lyrics and musical arrangements. Lead guitarist Joey Z. explores new realms on this album as evident in songs like "Other side of the river" and "Damned if I do."

This group is so adverse that classifying them would not do them justice.

American Standard

7 May 3

///1/2

This up-and-coming band is one of the best new groups to come onto the music scene since Hootie & the Blowfish. Resembling an early Pearl Jam/Stone Temple Pilots on songs like "Cumbersome" and "My My," this Florida foursome redefines adversity by adding songs such as "Lame" and "Roderigo," which resembles Hootie's "Not Even The Trees."

7M3 has a small club sound behind the intense vocals of frontman J. Ross, the artistic lead guitar of J. Pollack, bass lines of Casey Daniel, and the drum playing of Giti Khalsa. The tempo of the album is constantly changing from a mellow, laid back sound to raucous guitar screams and blaring vocals.

Tails

Lisa Loeb & Nine Stories

///

While setting a trend of her own with hom-rimmed glasses, Lisa Loeb is setting her own trend in music with a unique sound that compliments her depth as a singer. After the success of the #1 smash "Stay" from the Reality Bites Soundtrack, which is also included on the album, Tails is devoured in acoustic guitar and beautifully structured lyrics. Lyrics like "she can't tell me that all of the love songs have been written/cause she's never been in love with you before" from the song "Sandalwood" defines the emotion of this album. Add in a mysticism from the album's first release "Do You Sleep?": "I saw you as you walked across my room/You looked out the window, you looked at the moon./You sat on the corner of my bed, and you smoked with the ghost in the back of my head," makes this album a respectable debut by a talented musician.

Classic	////
Excellent	////
Good	///
Fair	///
Bad	/

Do you have a new CD that you would like to see displayed in Wake Up? Call x8729 to make arrangements for a listening time

Jonathan Peters
Columnist

A prominent professor on campus recently offered a friend of mine in one of her classes some advice. She suggested that being a good musician does not necessarily make someone a good role model. I realize that any opinion, accompanied by about fifty cents, might buy a cup of coffee. But, I really think her opinion to be really sound advice which can be interpreted in a positive way.

A friend of mine was complaining once that as a music theory major, he didn't have anyone to look up to. Guitar players, he said, can look up to people like Trey Anastasio, or Zappa, etc. But who does he have?

So who is your hero?

He'd have to think, "Wow, that guy sure can think fast," or, "Wow, he really knows his secondary dominants!!" He was sort of joking about it, but it really made me think about the people I personally look up to. Take the "Smashing Pumpkins" for example. I sometimes really enjoy listening to the music, but I realized that if I really had to spend a lot of time with Billy Corgan, he would probably get under my skin in a hurry. He can definitely come up with some explosive music, but does that mean I should model my life after him? Probably not.

It's not just guitar players that have this stuff to think about, though. Society is full of esteemed figures of various kinds. Michael Jordan might be able to look good on a "Wheaties" box, and that prominent professor might be able to get up in front of a classroom and say, "Well, I know a heck of a lot about...." but does that make them any better role models?? Maybe....

But what exactly are we talking about anyway, this "role model" business? It seems like this is one of those terms that everyone has a definition for, but doesn't ever really think about. I guess the impression I've always been given is that a role model is someone who fits a position in society that we "ought" to try and be—someone to steer us down the right path. I've noticed that humans tend to be imperfect beings, however, and that putting too much stock in any human role model is bound to be disappointing. Perhaps that's why the concept of God is so powerful—people like to make a perfect, unwavering model for themselves. This is something that humans often fail to offer—especially when everyone's specific path is amazingly different from everyone else's.

I mean, what if you want to be the world's best "ud" player? (it's an 11-stringed Turkish instrument which I don't know how to spell.)

by Bo McMichael
Columnist

One year down and not too many more to go-- light the candle and pass out the party hats, because one year of movie reviews is in the books. Sure, death threats have been made, and bodily harm usually results after every movie. (The bad thing, of course, is that it usually occurs between us and no one else). We have viewed thirty seven movies together, and maybe that is one too many to see with one person never thinks the movie is bad. However, in the grand scheme of things, we have been able to see all different types of movies, from horror to romance, and still we seem to enjoy ourselves. Movie addiction is definitely a sick disease!

A year later, still at the movies

So, with it raining outside and the cold winter coming in, what is at the old cinema? The answer is simple: a little murder mystery, an action film, and some low budget humor.

We begin with the psychological thriller, "Copycat". This stars Sigourney Weaver and Holly Hunter in the race for their lives. The killer is reconstructing the most bloody deaths of the Twentieth Century. Sounds like a movie to tag along too?

•Bo: "Well fellow readers, I have no comment on this review. This is due to the fact my great pal decided to go see it with out me while I was on a road trip. chance to see a sneak preview of it the following week. This sounds like a CONspiracy!"

•Chris: "Yes people, I ditched the big man and went solo for an evening. The movie wasn't in the same class as "Seven," but it was worth the money, and I recommend it.

A beautiful and sexy model makes her film debut in the action thriller "Fair Game". This model turn actress is know as Cindy Crawford. She teams up with Stephen Baldwin to run from the KGB after doing something she should not have done.

•Bo: "If you are asking yourself, 'does this not sound like a typical action movie?', the answer is a loud 'YES.' This is neither the Cindy men see in "Sports Illustrated," nor the Cindy women see in the work-out videos. The Cindy in "Fair Game" is definitely different. The only bad part is that this Cindy needs acting lessons, because it looks like she took them from Elizabeth Berkley ("Showgirls"), if you know what I mean?"

•Chris: "So the girl can't act. I do not think anyone could have saved this one. Some of the chase scenes were pretty good, but face it, she is on the page instead of in the movies for a reason.

Alternative film making has hit "At the Movies" head on, and it brings laughter to many. The next two movies are like sequels. The first is "Clerks," which can be found in video stores. This unique black and white film has low budget written all over it. The movie takes place in a convenient store, and goes through a day in the life of a clerk and his buddy who runs the video store.

The next move is "Mallrats" and is basically the same thing, only in a mall and in color.

Bo: The only thing I could say is that as for this movie, they spent a little bit more money since they used a mall instead of a store. I guess the

and Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

funny thing is that when my buddy and I saw this film, we were lucky to be the only ones sitting in the theater. Siskel and Ebert we are not, but we are gaining on them!"

Chris: "I really can't tell you to go see the movie, but it is a good laugh and is well worth a dollar when it comes to the cheap movies."

It is time to blow out the candle and move towards the movies of the future, and the holiday season is right around the corner and it is time to go to the movies.....

by Claire Stancampiano
Columnist

I was sitting at work the other day, complaining while simultaneously eating, as usual, when my boss said something that struck a chord with me. For those of you who don't know, I am the Queen Goddess of the Financial Aid Office, and I work for the dynamic duo consisting of Patti Dunkin and Venita Jones. If you ever have the urge to go into overwhelming debt, feel free to come in and see us.

Venita looked at one of my co-workers and jokingly said, "You wouldn't believe how much Claire has changed since she was a freshman. To see her now you wouldn't even recognize her." I knew how different I was, but it never occurred to me that anyone else had noticed.

Lately, I have been feeling like I need some Prozac, and the feeling goes beyond the pressures of thesis and my Bonner hours. Venita's words made me realize that I am ready to leave school. I am ready to go do things and quit writing ten page papers about stuff that has already happened.

Pre-Maryville College, all I wanted was to get the hell out of high school, and my first year here I was a hyper-spastic freshman who was going to college so I could make more money when I "grew up." I had no major and no career goals. The logical progression of my thought goes like this: "I was a little, lost freshman and now my life has direction and meaning." This is not my case. However, many things have changed over the last few years.

My immediate response to Venita's comment was, "Yeah, I used to bathe." As for my appearance, it has greatly altered since I began school. I never use to leave the house without makeup and clean hair, whereas today I am doing really well on a day when I don't wear the clothes I slept in. Needless to say, after a year and a half of Marriott macaroni and cheese and two more years of late night McDonald's French Fries and ranch dressing, the climb to Dr. Schneibel's office in Anderson Hall has become increasingly difficult.

"What are your goals for the future Claire?" people ask. My reply has changed from "I don't know," to "I'll do anything that will pay off my loans." The latter response may sound cynical, but it comes as the result of a transformation in my thinking. A clear picture of just how much I don't know has developed in my brain over the last few years. For this reason, as cliché as this may sound, I will always keep my options open.

I have also come to realize that those who think they will make $35,000 at their dream job fresh out of college, because they participated in every possible extra curricular activity, should get over themselves. I have heard from many an alum not to rule out the job offer managing the "Pizza Hut Employee Newsletter" in Boise.

One idea people love to thrust upon already highly stressed college students goes something like this: "It'll be different in the real world." This sentence immediately conjures up images of shackled adults working 19 hour days in dimly lit surroundings with no breaks except to stop to get beaten for not working hard enough. The fantasy world of undergraduate studies is, of course, a wonderland of fun and relaxation. People who tell you this are either bothered because you're in school and they aren't, or they are obviously unhappy with their own lives.

This idea used to scare me too until Dr. Harry Howard, an actual representative from the real world, explained it to our public policy class my sophomore year. He said simply that there was no such thing as "the real world," and that everyone lived in the same world no matter what they did. Dr. Howard's theory applies to everyone except for the handful who come on MTV Wednesday nights at 10 o'clock. My life still doesn't have much direction, but I have a lot more control these days, which I like very much and I believe comes with acknowledging one's own "grown-upness." I came here thinking you had to have a plan for everything in life, but my 21 long years on this planet, especially the last 3.25, have taught me that nothing ever turns out the way you think it will. If someone had told me that my freshman year I was going to go to Venezuela, cut all my hair off, intern at a TV station, and fall madly in love, I would have told them that they were a nut bar.

Letters to the Editor

5

Editor, The Highland Echo

I have often felt moved to write to the Echo, but hesitated because my point of view is so radically different from that of most of your correspondents. Lately, however, I have had a lot of time to ponder my experiences of the last 10 years at MC, and I think my time has come to share.

I guess I have a fairly unique perspective, since I have juggled roles as administrator (I currently direct the Non-Credit Community Education program), student, parent of a "traditional" student, and lifelong member of the Presbyterian Church that founded this institution and supports it in voluntary covenant today.

I have seen a lot of changes in my time here. Many friends and colleagues are no longer around, and many very special students who impacted the college in their own unique ways are now out in the big "real" world while I hang on, hoping to continue to find ways to participate meaningfully in the life of an institution I believe in wholeheartedly.

One of the most visible records of the changes I have witnessed is the Echo, itself. There have been many, uhm, shall I say creative editors and staffers there, and the quality of the product has varied widely during their tenures. For a few of those years it seemed as if the paper served only a few, very opinionated and very "whiny" students. There have been periods when it seemed to almost disappear altogether—an amazing idea since one of the most fundamental traditions of collegiate life is that of expressing opinions, however radical or unseemly they may be to us old fogeys who think we run the world.

Currently, there is a lot to be proud of about the Echo. Not the least of these is the timely issue covering Homecoming weekend. Congratulations on publishing while the news was still news!

It was thinking about the whole issue of communication that finally prompted me to express myself here.

It is a chronic weakness that has plagued us, whether it is among colleagues, between students and faculty/administration, or between the college and the larger community. A conversation I had with a student concerning the recent Homecoming activities helped me realize what a different perspective I have about the heritage we share. By participating in one of the "old-folks" events, apparently a few students got to experience a little sense of how important traditions are to an institution. By being better informed about the college's heritage, these students are in a better position to affect its future.

There are many, many people who have given generously of their time, money, and prayers for Maryville College. I recognize the stirring of that generous impulse among many others—students as well as staff—who are presently occupied in the daily life of MC. The Echo is an instrument which, properly used, can encourage that impulse. By enlarging its focus to include the ideas and opinions of the entire range of the campus community, you will be doing the institution, and your fellow students, a great service.

Keep up your good work. The Echo is a very important resource for sharing ideas, discussing issues, and keeping our heritage alive. Thanks for letting me utilize it, too!

Signed,
Lew Clark Rudisill

The Echo Opinion Poll

Here are the results to the survey questions from the previous issues: Of the 106 students who voted, the majority preferred money be allocated to bettering facilities rather than maintaining high quality faculty. Also, more students preferred listening to country music than any other, although a variety of music types are represented in the category "Other." Help make the opinion poll successful by mailing your opinion to Box 2247.

Facilities

Opinion Poll

1. Would you like to see Colin Powell run for President?

Yes ___ No ___

.....

2. Who is your favorite cartoon character?

Call-ins Welcome

All American Deli's
Subs & Such
Across from Midland Plaza
$1.00 off any order of $3.00 or more!

982-3139
Mon. - Wed. 10:30 am - 8:00 pm
Thur. & Fri. 10:30 am - 9:00 pm
Sat. 11:00 am - 6:00 pm

Specials Daily

Correction

One of the great things about ghost stories is the diversity with which they are told. In different versions, the facts may be slightly different.

On of the ghost stories printed in the last issue of the Echo had a factual error that we must correct, though. It was reported that Sharon A. Murphy Crane died in a car accident. She died from complications following routine surgery. We regret this error.

Yearly Membership
Only $15.00 per month

207 Cusick St.
Maryville, TN 37801
977-8335

Get Fit! Stay Fit!

Committed by Michael Fry

"MY WEAKNESS IS WEARING TOO MUCH LEOPARD PRINT."
-JACKIE COLLINS

Vick's Secret

Not So Fashionable Underwear for Not So Fashionable Guys
THE MYSTERY IS YOURS TO KEEP...PLEASE!

THE MYLAR BIKINI BRIEFS ARE IN 3 FOR 1 LONG JOHNS (WITH FEET) 1 ONLY ON SUPER SNUG THONGS

10/20

MICHAEL FRY

http://www.vickssecret.com

E-Mail: MichaelFry@aol.com

New visitation policy passed by senate Administration must make the final decision

by Kim Syphrett
Staff Writer

Policies on 24-hour visitation in lower-classmen residence halls have been an issue for some time. Recently, Student Senate unanimously passed a proposal that would directly effect the life, perhaps lifestyle of Lloyd, Gamble, and Davis student residents. And, the MC administration, together with student organizations, is working to insure that the outcome is palatable to all.

A new 24-hour visitation proposal was re-submitted by sophomore class president Joshua Goocey this fall. Goocey submitted the proposal for the first time last year in March, but the Senate had a different agenda at the time, so the proposal died. "Alex [Little] was initially opposed to it, but after he read and saw my rationale he said, 'You're right, Josh!'" and that was because of the Covenant," said Goocey.

Goocey placed stress on the Covenant because "it lays responsibility in the student's hands, it makes us directly responsible for our actions. . . it is our creed of respect. It says [that] we don't need rules. Moreover, we can abide by this basic premise of agreeable and healthy human conduct among students."

Little stated that as Student Senate President, he is "directly and strictly concerned with the Covenant." Little stated, "it is up to the students to present their ideas" to the powers that be and attempt to gain their support. He proclaimed that it is "my job to insure that those concepts are expressed, and the foundation I use is the Covenant. I realize that it may be impossible to have complete equality between upperclassmen and lowerclassmen but that must be the goal."

Goocey indicated that the housing policy, which includes restricted visitation to some residence halls, "has been a big issue since the 90's, at least. People have tried many times before to get 24-hour visitation in freshman dorms."

The course the proposal will follow includes reviews at multiple levels of the MC administration, including the Resident Life committee, the Student Development staff, Office of the president, the president's cabinet, the Student Development committee, and the board of directors. Each committee attaches their recommendation and the board of directors makes the final determination on the fate of the proposal.

When asked to comment on the new proposal, Dr. William Seymour, vice-president of Student Development, said, "There are bigger issues in terms of residence life."

Dr. Seymour suggested a few other considerations, such as the number of residence halls is few, the residence requirement needs to be reviewed, there are questions about who lives where and in what kinds of groups, campus involvement of commuters, etc. "Gender, class, and visitation are not the only issues," said Seymour. "I know you can accommodate a larger number of student needs through creativity," he added.

"There is a good possibility [the proposal won't pass through the Board]," said Goocey. "They are much wiser than I—they see things that I can't."

Swimming proficiency requirement eliminated

by Kenyon Evans
Staff Writer

By action of the faculty, September 21, 1995, the swimming test is no longer required for graduation from Maryville College. No current or future student will be subject to the requirement.

To the relief of many students, especially seniors, the MC faculty recently decided to abolish the swimming proficiency requirement. For many years, in order to receive a degree from MC, students were required to pass a swimming test.

The swimming proficiency requirement evolved from the previously required physical education courses. Swimming used to be among the selections that one could choose to fulfill the physical education requirements; in the early 60's, the aquatics course became required unless one could pass a swim test or prove that they were competent swimmers. Now, according to Academic Vice-President Dr. Dean Bolden, "The logic or the rationale for having the swimming test is no longer apparent to anybody, not to students and not to faculty. It apparently lasted longer than whatever reasons were originally there for creating the requirement."

The proposal to drop the requirement passed unanimously during the first staff meeting.

Matascik, Berry join MC family this year

by Allison Dunn
Staff Writer

Among the new faces at Maryville College this year are two faculty members who have migrated from "up North." Dr. Sheri Matascik and Dr. Chad Berry have journeyed from afar to teach music theory and history, respectively.

Matascik, who teaches music theory, aural skills, orchestration, and guitar, is originally from Monaca, Pennsylvania, near Pittsburgh. She received her doctorate from the University of Pittsburgh after having received a bachelor's degree in guitar performance and a master's degree in music theory, both from Youngstown State University.

Matascik has also taught English at Youngstown, as well as music theory and recording at Kent State University. During January Term she will teach the course "Facing Race—An Exploration of Racial Awareness."

Matascik, who moved to Maryville with her husband, said she finds it quite different here than it is up North. People are "much friendlier down here," she said, and the "personal touch" of MC is very "distinguishing" with "its own sense of community."

Though educated in the classical tradition, Matascik enjoys classic rock and alternative music, although "alternative really isn't alternative anymore, it's almost mainstream now."

Berry graduated Phi Beta Kappa from Notre Dame University. He received his masters in folk studies from Western Kentucky University and his doctorate in U. S. history and American studies from Indiana University.

Berry is one of the youngest professors here this year, and "remembers best what it's like to be an undergraduate." He taught at Indiana University before coming to MC, and, comparatively speaking, said the students here are "more demanding in the best sense."

Berry is originally from South Bend, Indiana and is now residing in Maryville about a block away from the college with his wife and fifteen-month-old daughter, Madeline. "I love it here, and I would die here," said Berry.

President's Roundtable formed at MC

by Sarah West
Staff Writer

In the days of King Arthur, knights came together over a roundtable to eat and to discuss important issues. At Maryville College this year, we have our own roundtable.

The President's Roundtable, an informal gathering of student leaders and senior administrative staff members, met on October 31 at Willard House to address student concerns.

"I really enjoy the opportunity to meet informally with students," said Dr. Gibson, President of Maryville College.

Many issues were discussed, and the administration took notes. One such issue is the lack of information on student activities available to commuters. Resident and commuter students agreed that activities need to be made more visible to commuters. The administration has already thought of one solution—enhancing the idea of the MC Weekly, a newsletter of weekly events, so that it is made more available through E-Mail and hard copies on bulletin boards in the cafeteria, Isaac's, the commuter lounge, etc.

Another concern voiced was the general condition of campus buildings and the response of the administration to maintenance problems. Other topics included the alcohol policy for 21-year-olds who do not live in Pearsons, the quality of food, residence life, and the relationship between students and staff.

Dr. William Seymour, vice-president of Student Development, said, "The primary purpose of these meetings is to provide the opportunity for the administration to understand students' concerns, and for the students to hear the administration's view."

Gibson stated that he believes that frequent, informal contact with students will have a positive effect by opening lines of communication and bypassing red tape.

The students chosen are not necessarily the presidents on campus. Instead, the group was selected for diversity to attempt to represent the various levels of involvement on campus.

"The success of these meetings may be measured by the responsiveness of the administration to try to come up with solutions by seeking different ways of doing things," said Seymour.

Regarding the October meeting, Gibson said, "Problems were put out on the table and identified. Now, we will work on these."

The administration plans to continue the President's Roundtable meeting once a month in order to improve conditions on campus.

Gibson also remarked on the high quality, thoughtfulness, and good will of MC students, and said he

Comps may be stressful, but not necessarily fatal

by Becky Lill
Staff Writer

In a process somewhat distinctive to Maryville College, before being graduated, students must take a comprehensive examination in their field to test the "breadth and depth of understanding in the field, and to assess how well material from individual courses has been integrated." Hence, the terrifying idea of "comps."

Comps really are tests covering the major ideas in a major field. They do not focus on individual courses, but on the field as a whole. The tests are designed to evaluate the synergism of ideas, concepts, trends, and methodologies that individual courses have evaluated, but that the student may not have drawn together.

Dr. Dean Boldon, academic vice-president, urges students not to get,

"caught up in the details." "It's best to look at the big issues and to integrate the major ideas," he said. "Comprehensive examinations are a learning experience. They will help the students learn to interrelate the fundamental ideas in their fields."

Every student must take the examination, but the format of all the departments is not the same. According to the MC catalog, "the nature of the examinations varies from department to department." Some of the exams are standardized and some are composed of questions developed by professors in that department. Some of them are written examinations and some are oral, while a few even require a recital.

The composition and evaluation of comps is a collaborative effort among every member of that particular department, so as to provide a broad scope of knowledge about the field and to ensure fairness.

All of the departments meet with students before the date of the exams to explain their purpose and format. They also try to help students with study suggestions. Some departments hold scheduled review sessions or distribute exam questions from previous years.

These sessions are highly recommended by professors. Dr. Susan Schneibel, division head of the humanities department, urges all students to attend the meetings. "The worst thing possible for any student is not knowing what to expect," she said. "These tests are not overwhelming."

Dr. William Dent, division head of math and computer science, said that, "It is very important that students take these exams seriously. If a student starts early, he can talk to professors and his advisor when he runs into questions. This is a benefit unavailable to those who wait until the last minute."

According to the catalog, "The grade received on the comprehensive examination becomes part of the total academic record and quality points may be added or subtracted according to performance." Students who receive an "F" grade must take the exams over, but no more than two re-examinations are allowed. Every student must receive a passing grade on the exam within two years of his first attempt.

Residence halls

continued from p. 1

Little, is to re-write the residence life policy and to submit the proposal for approval by student senate and the administration.

The committee will address issues ranging from room placement and consolidation to the campus alcohol policy. Little stated that the current room placement policy is, "when related to the covenant, hypocrisy."

"You probably will not have the same fervor I have until you've been screwed by the system," Little said to the committee.

"Dr. Seymour has been excellent in saying, 'We have to have a policy now,'" he added.

"I think it [working on the policy] should be a joint venture with Residence Life and the students," said Seymour. "I think there is some middle ground there."

The Residence Life staff is already looking into some of the issues that the committee plans to address. Stephanie Wyatt, director of Residence Life, said her staff is planning to form committees comprised of both students and staff to look into policies concerning living off campus, the Pearson residency requirement, room selection, and "housing alternatives."

"We'll be looking at issues of policy, safety, and the facilities," said Wyatt.

Committees which will address the issues for Residence Life will include the residence life committee, hall councils, and the RAs as a group. Residence Life is also "looking to be starting renovation plans" at some point, said Wyatt.

Although physical changes on the buildings will take time because the college must raise funds in order to enact the changes. However, he added, that programmatic changes can be made now.

"I'm not saying that everything will change, but discussion and ideas will be considered," he said. At Wesley College, where Seymour held a similar position before coming to MC this year, students devised their own policy which was approved. "It was a great policy," he said.

Of conditions in the halls, Seymour added "The students know because they're living with it."

The Highland Echo Classifieds

For Sale

CD's—Arrested Development, Vince Gill, K.W.S., Baby Face, 4 Non-Blondes, AC/DC, Shabba Ranks, Patra. Call 981-8327.

Fan in good condition. Call 981-8758.

Jobs

#12 - Comair Airlines - Customer Service agent. $5.50/hr. Baggage handling, work on ramp, process passengers.

#29 - Revco Drug Store needs a pharmacy technician. $4.25-4.50 Mon-Fri, 15-30 hours per week.

#39 - Applebee's in Gatlinburg needs servers, bartenders, hostesses, kitchen help. Flexible schedule - weekends. Will match or exceed your current rate of pay.

#41 - Proffitt's needs sales associate/customer service. $4.50-$4.75/hr. Flex schedule.

#45 - Nursery Worker - New Providence Presbyterian Church. Sundays 9:45-noon, Friday 10-11 a.m. $5.00. Care for babies.

#52 - Shift Manager position at Kentucky Fried Chicken. Up to $6.50/hr. Part-time schedule.

#61 - Chisholm Trail Steak House needs servers, bartenders, kitchen help evenings and weekends. Salary d.o.e. with benefit program.

#63 - Little River Village Camp-ground needs maintenance worker, office help and deli clerks. $5.00-up with merit raise after 10 days.

#70 - Currier - Mortgage Investors Group needs someone to pick up mail from one office in Maryville and take to Knoxville. Salary approx. Flex hours. $100/month.

#75 - Spartan Express - General Clerk, $7.15/hr. Flex schedule Monday-Friday. Can time share. 20-30

hrs./week. Answer phone, type.

#79 - Role Models for normal family living needed at Blount County Children's Home. $5.50/hr. 3-11 weekdays; 8am-3pm or 3-11 pm weekends.

#83 - American Express Financial Advisors has a position for a financial services assistant. Do computer proposals, marketing - will train. Salary negotiable.

#85 - Need day care workers to work between the hours of 2-6pm Mon.-Fri. Child Kingdom Day Center. $4.50/hour.

#87 - Part-Time Supervisor - Roadway Package System. $250/week. Full benefits including stock. Small package experience preferred.

#93 - Honey Baked Hams in Knoxville needs seasonal workers. Flex schedule anytime Monday-

Friday between 9:30am-6:30pm and Saturday 10am-5pm. $4.50/hr. Positions in counter sales and production/processing. Must be available up to Christmas.

#94 - Local person needs (1) help with learning Smith Corona Wordprocessor functions and some typing; (2) planting fall plants, potting; (3) need an art illustrator for a children's book. Located near college. Pay negotiable.

#96 - Home Depot in Maryville has 35 part-time positions available!!! Pay starts at $6.00/hr.-up d. o. e.. 20-30 hrs. per week. Very flex sched. between 6:30am-9pm Mon-Sat.; 10am-6pm Sunday. Come by Career Services office to request application. Positions are in sales and cashier. Math test, personnel test and drug test required. Positions start mid January.

#97 - Tennessee Bar & Grill hiring cocktail servers, food servers, cashiers, cooks and utility persons. Located at Knoxville Airport. Call Judy 977-6777.

#98 - Work with the Summer Olympics this summer in Atlanta!!! Resume required. Locations also available in Savannah, Athens, Birmingham, AL, and Ocoee, TN. See Jan Bible in Career Services for more information and for application

*For more information on Jobs, see Bible in Career Services.

**These are just a few of the opportunities available through the Career Services office. All jobs and part-time student positions.

Wanted

Mini-recorder is wanted in good condition. Call 981-8758.

BSA looks forward to a bright future

by Kristie Paschel
Staff Writer

Maryville College's Black Student Association has connected its long-term goals to the 1995-96 academic year in the form of several activities.

This is the BSA's third year as a cultural organization at MC. Like the International Club, the BSA concentrates its membership on the specific cultural differences between groups as a way of preserving African American culture within the MC community.

BSA officers are: President Lorenzo Howard, Vice President William Caldwell, Secretary Katrina Woods, Treasurer Tara Smith, and Chaplain Azariah (J.J.) Anderson.

When asked about the long-term goals of the BSA, Smith stated, "We're working on unity as far as African Americans."

Some of the other goals of the BSA are to uplift the black males, improve minority retention, and address academic problems.

BSA has several activities planned for the year. The most traditional of the activities will occur during Black History Month in February when BSA will host its annual "BSA Weekend."

The activities will last through the weekend with scheduled events on the agenda. For Friday night, BSA has invited black MC Alumni back to the college for a variety of activities. On Saturday night, it will hold a forum, have a dinner, and sponsor a ball for its members. Sunday is reserved for the annual BSA pageant in which the members will conduct a talent show.

The celebration will continue 1

the following week with the annual Voices of Praise Gospel Jamboree. At the end of the month, BSA will host its annual VOP concert.

Membership is open to all African Americans. The meetings are every Thursday at 12:30 p.m.. For more information, contact Larry Ervin, coordinator of Minority Services, at x8222.

Pep Band established at MC

by Matt Waters
Staff Writer

The home football and basketball games have been missing one thing over the past few years. There were plenty of cheerleaders to excite the crowds, but there was no band to carry on the enthusiasm. However, one student recently set out to amend this situation.

Junior Dara Di Giacomo has made instrumental efforts to start a pep band, efforts which have gathered a lot of support from both staff and the student senate.

Composed of people who can play nearly any instrument, the pep band is sponsored by Dr. Larry Smithee, assistant professor of music.

According to Di Giacomo, this is not the pioneer year for the pep band. She organized one last year for Homecoming.

The pep band is composed largely like a high school band. However, compensations have been made for certain instruments. "An example of this is that we have a saxophone covering a trombone line because we have no trombones," Di Giacomo said. "Also, I have done a lot of arranging for different instrumentation."

Being able to read music is currently not as important as knowing how to play an instrument, she said. "The ability to read music is preferable to playing solely by ear, but that is not an issue that has come up yet."

It is not feasible to have sensitive or soft instruments played in the band. According to Di Giacomo, "Typically, guitars and other stringed instruments are not part of it because those instruments are extremely sensitive to the elements. Also, their sound does not carry well unless it is amplified, which is just not an option at this time."

It is not necessary to own an instrument in order to participate with the organization. "Most of the players have their own instruments, but we do own some instruments which could be loaned on a temporary basis," she said.

The pep band performs chiefly at home football games. The next performance of this year will be November 11 at the football game.

The organization can perform at events other than football. Because some sports regulate the times a band can play, though, the playing at games may be limited. Regardless, Di Giacomo said, "The band will be available to play at sporting events throughout the year." The pep band also performs at activities other than sports games.

Mountain Challenge plans Ecuador Trip

by Hunter Letchman
Staff Writer

Mountain Challenge is one of the many unique programs that Maryville College has. It is an outdoor experiential education program designed to build leadership and teamwork.

This year, there are many outdoor events on the calendar. These events include the low ropes course, the Alpine Tower, mobile ropes courses, rock climbing, caving, hikes, map and compass, paddling, raft trips, and the annual bike trip. There is also an expedition to Ecuador, which is scheduled for January term this year. Ten people will be given the opportunity to climb a mountain in Ecuador.

Participating in some of the events sponsored by Mountain Challenge is also a good way to get in shape, according to Bruce Guillaume, director of Mountain Challenge. "The programs that we sponsor promote physical fitness," said Guillaume.

Guillaume said that Mountain Challenge is an excellent way to reduce stress. "The programs are very effective. We get excellent feedback from the students."

Students can participate in Mountain Challenge by contacting the Crawford House at x8125.

DRB and J-Board report

9/1-30

•A student charged with theft of a telephone personal authorization code was required to pay restitution.

9/1-30

•A student charged with harassment of another student on campus received a restrictive probationary period due to a lack of evidence.

10/9

•The case involving a student charged with harassment in Sutton

Science Center was dismissed for a lack of evidence.

10/9

•Two students were charged with a visitation violation and received First Offense.

10/12

•A student in Lloyd was charged with illegal entry, disruption of quiet hours, disorderly conduct, and failure to comply. The student received warnings and First Offense quiet hours, but the last two charges were dropped because of a lack of evidence.

10/19

•In Davis Hall two students were charged with a visitation violation. The case is pending.

10/26

•A student was charged with vandalism of campus grounds and disorderly conduct. The case is pending.

10/26

•Two students were charged with possession of alcohol in Lloyd Hall. The case is pending.

Club Info

•Looking for a fun and amazing experience for your spring break, then go the alternative route!! For more information and to get involved, contact Holly Bailey x8013 or Abigail Blankner x8122.

•A food drive is now in progress. Stop in the CCM to get your box to fill with nonperishable foods. Many families in Blount County do not have enough to eat, especially around holiday times. Once you have filled your box, bring it back to the CCM and we will have them delivered. Thank you. More information: Abigail, Volunteer Services, x8122.

•The college Democrats are underway this year. Charter members are Alex Little, Russell Perry, Chee Hill, Kelly Stewart, and Jason Thompson. The faculty advisor is Dr. Scott Brunger. The CDs began last year when the student senate accepted its charter. They meet every Wednesday at 6:30 p.m. in the commuter lounge, second floor in Fayerweather Hall to the left of the stairway. All interested students are welcome. For more information, call Michelle Shuler at 983-4459.

The International Club and the Student Programming Board will co-sponsor a dance in Pearson's Dining Hall on Friday, Nov. 9, from 9 p.m. - 1 a.m. The dance is free to students and tickets are not necessary. Dress will be casual.

Bloy celebrates new outlook with recital

by Michelle Shuler
Staff Writer

Dr. James Bloy is performing with a new vision both literally and symbolically. He has recently undergone a corneal transplant which has greatly improved his sight. In celebration, on Friday, October 3, Bloy gave a faculty emeritus organ recital.

Bloy is a former chairman of the Fine Arts Division. As a professor at Maryville College he taught, among other classes, music history and private organ lessons. When he retired in 1993, he continued to be involved in music as Organist at Broadway United Methodist Church here in Maryville. But as he continued to play the organ often, he noticed his vision slowly fading.

His loss of vision can be attributed to a congenital disorder, corneal dystrophy. Before his retirement, Bloy had previously been a recipient of two corneal transplants.

His impairment had caused him to lose his vision completely in one eye during the 1970's, so when his corneal graft began to fade he knew that immediate action was necessary. Realizing that he had only one choice, Bloy submitted himself to yet another corneal transplant.

The procedure was a success, and in thanksgiving, Bloy decided to celebrate in the manner most fitting for a man of his talents, and began work on this faculty organ recital.

The week before the recital, Bloy could often be found on campus practicing. The amount of practice was not totally out of necessity though. With his improved vision, he not only finds it easier to practice, but he is getting much more enjoyment out of the time he spends at the organ because he can now concentrate less on seeing the music, and more on the music itself.

"I guess I'm realizing all over again how beautiful the world is," Bloy said.

photo by Kristen Kant

Boooooooo!

Several MC students got in the spirit this year and carved jack-o-lanterns. Halloween was celebrated in Carnegie Hall with the Trick or Treat Festival.

Computer enhanced quilts on display in the FAC

Quilted, graphite, and stitchery drawings will be on display in the Fine Arts Center Gallery at Maryville College in November.

Georgia Burleson Bailey, a 1979 graduate of the University of Tennessee at Knoxville, has combined the sewing machine and her drawings along with the computer to produce her own unique art form. Through an electronic scanner, she enters quilts and graphite drawings into a Macintosh computer. Then, Bailey uses the software to work with the designs.

Bailey has made approximately 45 quilts since 1981. Many have been commissioned, and she has given some of them to her children, grandchildren, and great-grandchild.

"Almost anything that has to do with quilts is usually saved and treasured for many years," said Bailey.

The exhibit runs through the end of the month. Weekday gallery hours are 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. For more information, call the Fine Arts Center at x8150.

The Lighthouse

Dance Club & Cafe

681-4197

118 E. Broadway

Monday Nights

Maryville College

7 - 12

MC ID Required***

DJ Music
Requests & Suggestions
I Welcome I

*Non-Maryville
College Students
Admitted As MC
Students Guest Only

Live Bands
Fri & Sat

Restaurant Hours: 8-5:30
Dance Club: 7 - 12

Cool Clothes · Incense · Jewelry · Candles · Cards · Prints

JAZZBERRY

GENERAL

15% Discount For All Maryville College Faculty, Staff, & Students***

Directions: Take a right at the Court Street Exit and drive till you see us!

Phone: 984-0391
205 Court Street

Hours: Mon - Sat 10:00 - 7:00

*Discount good through November and does not include clearance items.

Cool Clothes · Incense · Jewelry · Candles · Cards · Prints

Cool Clothes · Incense · Jewelry · Candles · Cards · Prints

Cool Clothes · Incense · Jewelry · Candles · Cards · Prints

Hoops time at MC

Mens Basketball Schedule/ Roster

Womens Basketball Schedule/ Roster

Day	Opponent	Location	Time
11/18	Centre	Maryville, TN	3:00
11/21	King	Maryville, TN	7:30
11/25	MC Invit.	Maryville, TN	TBA
11/26	MC Invit.	Maryville, TN	TBA
12/2	Greensboro	Maryville, TN	3:00
12/4	Emory & Henry	Emory, VA	7:30
12/10	Ferrum	Ferrum, VA	2:00
12/16	TN Wesleyan	Maryville, TN	3:00
1/6	Tusculum	Greenville, TN	4:00
1/7	Tusculum	Maryville, TN	3:00
1/12	Rust College Tourney	Holy Springs, MS	TBA
1/13	Rust College Tourney	Holy Springs, MS	TBA
1/16	Lee	Cleveland, TN	7:30
1/20	N. Greenville	Greenville, SC	7:30
1/23	Covenant	Lookout MT, GA	7:30
1/31	Sewanee	Sewanee, TN	7:30
2/3	N. Greenville	Maryville, TN	7:30
2/5	Savannah	Savannah, GA	7:30
2/10	Rust	Maryville, TN	7:30
2/12	Savannah	Maryville, TN	7:30
2/14	Emory & Henry	Maryville, TN	7:30
2/17	Ferrum	Maryville, TN	3:00
2/21	Centre	Danville, KY	7:30
2/23	Tournament	Maryville, TN	TBA
2/24	Tournament	Maryville, TN	TBA

Date	Opponent	Location	Time
11/17	VA Bank Tippoﬀ Classic	Arlington, VA	TBA
11/18	VA Bank Tippoﬀ Classic	Arlington, VA	TBA
11/19	VA Bank Tippoﬀ Classic	Arlington, VA	TBA
11/22	Tusculum	Maryville, TN	7:00
11/26	Centre	Danville, KY	2:00
11/30	Emory & Henry	Maryville, TN	7:00
12/2	Belmont	Nashville, TN	2:00
12/7	Milligan	Maryville, TN	7:00
12/9	Christopher Newport	Maryville, TN	1:00
12/15	Greensboro	Maryville, TN	6:00
1/4	Lycoming	Maryville, TN	7:30
1/6	MC Invitational	Maryville, TN	TBA
1/7	MC Invitational	Maryville, TN	TBA
1/11	Ferrum	Maryville, TN	6:00
1/13	Rust	Holly springs, MS	3:00
1/20	Tusculum	Greenville, TN	2:00
2/3	Warren Wilson	Maryville, TN	2:00
2/5	SCAD	Savannah, GA	6:00
2/10	Rust	Maryville, TN	6:00
2/12	Thomas More	Crestview Hills, KY	6:00
2/15	Milligan	Milligan, TN	7:00
2/17	Roanoke	Maryville, TN	1:00
2/21	Centre	Maryville, TN	6:00
2/24	Emory	Maryville, TN	6:00

Name	Cl	POS	Hometown
Thad Aslup	JR	W	Manchester, TN
Bobby Baker	FR	W	Williamsburg, KY
Woody Beard	JR	P	Pisgah, AL
Spencer Beaty	FR	G	Jamestown, TN
Dee Bell	JR	P	Dawson Springs, KY
Edgar Bocarisa	FR	W	Gibraltar
Greg Boyce	FR	W	Palm Bay, FL
Jeremy Burgess	SR	G	Danville, KY
Reggie Chery	FR	P	Palm Bay, FL
Scott McDaniel	SR	G	Danville, Ky
David McGreal	SO	G	Rockledge, FL
Bryan Mills	SR	P	Knoxville, TN
Parker Overman	FR	W	Maryville, TN
Shane Paschell	SO	P	Puryear, TN
Andrew Payne	FR	G	Heflin, AL
Josh Perkins	FR	G	Maryville, TN
Brandon Stiles	SO	G	Knoxville, TN
Freddy Taylor	JR	G	McMinnville, TN
Jon Vaughn	JR	P	Hopkinsville, KY
Sammy Williams	SR	W	St. Anne, IL
Rusty Wilson	SR	P	Knoxville, TN

Fall wrap-up

by Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

With the lose of the Fighting Scots soccer team Nov. 4, all but one of the fall sports teams had finished their seasons. All had outstanding seasons, as all were above .500.

The Lady Scots Volleyball team finished with a record of 19-10 and had a very good year. This was the teams 20th anniversary year.

A very young Lady Scots soccer team did much more than compete as they finished with a final record of 12-8.

The mens' soccer team had their season end Nov. 4 at the hands of the No. 1 ranked team in the nation, Methodist (18-0). The Scots ended their season with a record of 15-4. Next year the Scots will try to build on this first ever trip to the NCAA tournament.

The Fighting Scots football team (4-5) will wrap up their season this week against Emory & Henry (9-0).

Name	Cl	Pos	Hometown
Jennifer Buck	JR	G	Powell, TN
Jama Cameron	SR	F	Sevierville, TN
Lisa Cambell	SR	C	Alcoa, TN
Meghan Casey	SO	G	Winchester, TN
Erica Flores	FR	G/F	Melbourne, FL
Lolita Johnson	FR	F/C	Nashville, TN
Andrice Jones	SO	F	Crossville, TN
Beth Loveday	FR	G	Seymour, TN
Jamie Parrott	SR	F/C	Livingston, TN
Christine Rajkowski	SO	G	Knoxville, TN
Tracy Spires	JR	G/F	Seymour, TN
Whitney Williamson	SR	G	Cosby, TN

SONNY & JOANN COANE
Owners

7140 E. Lamar Alexander Pkwy.
Townsend, TN 37882

615/448-1220
Fax: 615/448-1219

LOCATED AT APPLE VALLEY FARMS

BEGIN YOUR ADVENTURE WITH US!

Complete basketball coverage in next issue...

Scots searching for win No. 5

by David Downs
Assistant Editor

Luck ran out for the Maryville College Scots on Oct. 28 as Methodist College (5-3) ended MC's three-game winning streak with a 23-13 victory in Fayetteville, North Carolina.

The Scots (4-5) were plagued from the first snap as quarterback Brandon Derrick scamped down the field for a first down, only to have it called back when officials ruled the play dead, thinking fullback Mike Stocker had the ball.

Methodist got on the board first with 10:45 left in the first quarter on a DeCarlos West one-yard run.

MC answered with 6:26 left in the first with a 15-yard run by sophomore Jason Norris. Norris carried the ball seven times with 22 yards.

"We were very productive running the ball," said Head Coach Phil Wilks.

One main reason was the return of Ammond Akiboh, who was used sparingly the last few weeks. He gained 62 yards on eight carries.

With 46 seconds left in the half, the Monarchs scored again on a two-yard run by West to take the lead at halftime, 14-7. West led the Methodist rushing attack with 112 yards on 23 carries.

The bottom fell out when Eric Deese returned a Spencer Beaty interception 51 yards for a touchdown, making the score 20-7 with 6:14 left in the third quarter. Monarch place kicker Tony Bueja added a 33-yard field goal in the fourth with 8:52 left.

MC fought back and scored with 5:02 left in the game on a 20 yard pass from Beaty to Nathan Davenport but the Scots still came up short as the game ended 23-13.

The offense amassed 318 yards total offense behind the running of Akiboh and Norris and the hands of Davenport, who had four catches for 88 yards.

Davenport is averaging almost 30 yards a catch this season.

Another person that has stepped up for the Scots, according to Wilks, is junior Bo McMichael, who was moved from guard to center for three-year starter Jimmy Carpenter, who was injured in practice before the Rhodes game.

"The last couple of weeks, they've [the defense] played real well and they are getting a little better each week," said Wilks.

Linebacker Chris West, starting for an injured David Wagner, recorded 17 tackles, while line backer Jason Lay continued a stellar season by recording 15 tackles.

"We're playing with a lot more confidence right now," said Wilks, "I think it has been an improvement as a whole group."

The Scots will finish their season this Saturday against Emory & Henry to try to finish .500 for the season.

Excuse me, comin' through

Sophomore Jason Norris goes tumbling over defenders in the game against Clinch Valley.

Photo by David Downs

And that's all I have to say about that!

lievable pitching and by refusing to lose in game six, they have become the team of the Nineties and no one can take that away from them.

This baseball season contained a lot of other great stories as well. How about Mr. Baseball Don Mattingly finally making the post season. It really did not matter that his team lost in the first round. He and his team played well and he can now rest in peace, some day.

One of the major reasons why Mattingly had to take a fast exit from post season play was "The Big Unit". Randy Johnson has made a name for himself and is making people all over say, "Nolan who?"

The last great story of this past baseball season was the Cleveland Indians. Forget that they were overwhelmed in the World Series by a team on a mission. Does anyone remember the Indians from a few years ago? What, were there about a hundred fans in the stands on a daily basis? Along with a new stadium, they have developed a new tradition of winning and they gained a lot of respect... And that is all I have to say about that.

Enough Baseball. How about football? There are no longer teams that are so far out in front that there is no reason to watch. You say Dallas? Well, even with Deion they are going to hit some bumpy strides. Remember Washington? Dallas looked very beatable without one person. And San Francisco is really fading fast. Yes, they will make a run, but without their superstars, it isn't going to happen.

Between expansion teams and a few young teams growing up (Cincinnati), there is great competition around the whole league. Tampa Bay and St. Louis are just a couple, but if the Saints can beat the 49ers and the New York Jets can beat the Dolphins, anything is possible.

A few players also have some great stories. Between Vince Evans and Warren Moon, they have thrown the ball to Mars and back. And is Marcus Allen ever going to ever stop scoring touchdowns? They're what reporters should be writing about. Not Deion and players like Keith Jackson.

What a waste. He waits to see how his team is doing before he decides to report. I know what I would tell him... And that is all I have to say about that.

Finally Basketball. OK, so Michael Jordan is back and Shaq is out for awhile. These aren't the stories that people should be reading about. Things like expansions teams and players with names like "Big Country" should be the future of the game. Teams like Seattle and New York have got a couple of the biggest monkeys on their backs and I don't see them shedding those monkeys anytime soon. Don Nelson saying that the Knicks are going to run the ball up and down the court? So where does that put Patrick Ewing? I would think, standing right next to Randall Cunningham in the west coast offense. Ewing is old and Oakley has too much hair to be running up and down the court. Besides, they do not call him the "Oak Tree" for nothing. Sure, maybe they will run, but they won't win. And back to Seattle. They know how to win, until it matters. I mean I know that Nick Van Exel (ex-Cincinnati Bearcat) is good, but good enough to beat the Super Sonics? Well, guess so. The thing with basketball is that really nothing ever changes. Jon Koncak will still make millions to wear a perm and sit on the bench, and Charles Smith will still be overrated. About the best thing the game has going is that Kurt Rambis is back in action for the Los Angeles Lakers. Something 'bout that you just have to love... And that is all I have to say about that.

Just a few more things to wrap-up. Thank goodness for stars like Cal Ripken Jr. He may have saved baseball, because no matter how mad we were at the players and the game, how can you be mad at him? And what about players like Tim Wakefield? The man could not win a game in Triple AAA and ends up being the ace of the staff for the Boston Red Sox. And two last things, even though the Cubs will be pretenders forever, Ryan Sandberg should help. Now the only thing left to be said is please, will someone let Pete Rose in the Hall of Fame... And that is all of have to say about that.

by Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

It seems to me that the world of sports may finally be turning itself back in the right direction. With O.J. starting to step aside, the basketball lock-out over, the baseball strike paused, the NHL lock-out figured out, Mike Tyson out of jail, and now that Deion has picked a team maybe we can all start to refocus our sights on what is important.

The most recent major story to hit the news is the Atlanta Braves getting that monkey off their back and winning it all. Not being a huge Braves fan, and being from Ohio, I will not say that I personally was elated with this, but it was a good story. They worked to be World Champions and can be proud of what they did. With unbe-

12

HALLOWEEN

IF YOU WERE A KID AGAIN, WHAT WOULD YOU BE FOR HALLOWEEN?

Nick Curtis
Indiana Jones

Kara Buechell
The Yellow Power Ranger

Lindy Wilks
a Magpie

Rissa Miller
Medieval Princess

Matt Wilks
a Clint

Ben Batchelor
UT Football Player

David Downs
a Mule

Scott Moss
Ace Frehley (formerly of KISS)

Dave Dupont
Headless Horseman

Dr. Peggy Cowan
a cherub

Clint Wight
Barney

Karson Leitch
Tonya Harding

Nadia Edoh
a ballerina

Megan Miller
a Southern Belle

Becky Lill
Nancy Kerrigan

Michelle Harris
Pocahontas

Joe Wilson
Stormtrooper from Star Wars

Denise Andrews
The Pink Power Ranger

Brian Hastings
Candyman

Amanda True
Brad Pitt's shower curtain

Amanda Martin
a Booger

Bo McMichael
a Big Ball

Inside

Movie Review p. 4

Phone-a-thon raises money for MC
p. 7

Coping with finals
p.8

Basketball coverage
p. 14 & 15

Survey says students satisfied with education

by Traci Tidwell
Staff Writer

Are you satisfied with your educational experience here at Maryville College? According to a recent poll taken here at MC, the general answer is "YES!"

Last Spring the faculty at Maryville College attempted to discover how students feel about the MC experience as a whole. Many students participated in a national survey which helped MC administrators gauge how effective the faculty, educational and campus life programs really are. The study revealed that, in comparison to other 4-year private institutions, students are overall more satisfied with the quality of education at MC. The top five reasons MC students were most satisfied, in order of satisfaction, were: (1) the college's good reputation within the community; (2) the knowledge of the academic advisors about major requirements; (3) the faculty's knowledge in their individual fields; (4) the approachability of academic advisors; and (5) the helpfulness and approachability of the Library staff.

The top five sources of dissatisfaction of MC students were (1) an inadequate selection of food available in the cafeteria; (2) the uncomfortable living conditions in the residence halls; (3) the inadequate student parking conditions; (4) the effective utilization of student activity fees; and (5) an insufficient number of weekend activities available for students on campus.

The intent of this survey, according to Dr. Mardi see Survey p. 6

photo by Kristin Kant

Is this decking the Halls?

Carrie Gorman gets tangled in the mistletoe at MC's annual "Hanging of the Greens," which was held on Sunday, December 3.

Holt to join MC staff as new counselor

by Becky Lill
Staff Writer

Bruce Holt, director of counseling, is the latest addition to the Maryville College staff. Effective January 2, Holt will begin his service work on campus for the Career Services office in Fayerweather Hall.

Student services available at Maryville College are on the increase. One of the increases has to do with the separation of the Mountain Challenge and counseling staffs. Previously, all counseling on campus was handled by the Mountain Challenge staff and graduate interns from UTK. Due to the steadily increasing growth of the Mountain Challenge program, though, it was decided that a change would be beneficial for the college.

The solution to the problem was to create the Director of Counseling position. This change will enhance future developments for Mountain Challenge, as the staff will be able to concentrate full-time on the program and will be better able to cope with the campus and corporate developments it is facing. The new position will also provide expanded counseling for students at a greater professional level of service. The main obstacle now is getting students to speak with a counselor.

Oftentimes, the idea of getting counseling assistance has a negative connotation; however, counseling is not reserved for "heavy" psychological problems.

This service can help students with topics ranging from organization and time management to alcohol and drug abuse. "I want students to know that my office is a place where they can come if they simply need to 'blow off steam,'" said Holt. If they are having a bad day and need to talk to someone, drop by the office. I freely give advice."

Dr. Bill Seymour, vice-president for development, stated, "From my experience, college students deal with many different obstacles. I really encourage them to seek out the help of the counselor when they need it. Here's a person who has the experience to help them cope more

see New Counselor p. 6

Is there really a Santa Clause?

by David Downs
Assistant Editor

Many years ago when I was but a small lad, I, like millions of other children, rolled out of bed and sprinted into the living room. Presents were scattered all around the room, especially by the Christmas tree. But something was very odd. On the brown carpet in our living room, there were white footprints that began at the fireplace, went to the presents, then to the cookies and milk, and back to the fireplace. Santa Clause had been there. The milk was empty and the cookies were gone, even the carrots had been eaten on by the reindeer. When my parents got up, my Dad took me out back to show me a big pile of white stuff, presumably snow from Santa's sleigh.

Now I look back and think of how stupid I was back then. If I just would have put all the evidence together: the shoe prints fit my Dad's boots and the white stuff was just flour (it couldn't have been snow seeing that I was living in L.A. at the time and it hasn't snowed there since the Ice Age).

The moral of this tale is that my parents went out of their way to make Santa a real, believable character in my life. And why you may ask? Santa is believed to live in the North Pole all year long with Mrs. Clause and a handful of elves that spends each day making the toys we receive. Santa has been the traditional, legendary character that brings children presents on Christmas Eve. What better role model could you think of?

Unfortunately, we all grow up and discover that Santa is merely a fixation of our imagination. I'm at the age now where my parents take me out shopping and buy me the presents that I want; then they wrap them up and put them under the tree. But, back to the point. Where in reality can we find "the real Santa?"

I suggest not traveling to the North Pole (it is kind of cold this time of year), but to merely look around at the community that surrounds us. Each year thousands of kids wake up Christmas morning to find nothing under their tree, that is if they have a tree. To them, Santa truly is a fixation of their imaginations. Many of these kids can be found right here Blount County.

One of my fondest memories of childhood rests in my belief in Santa and the morning when I could wake up and find lots of toys under the tree. I also remember the millions of times I went to the mall and sat on Santa's lap as I asked him for everything that can be found at the local toy store (unfortunately enough for me, these toys now reside at the local car dealership or in some sort of expensive catalog). Just imagine the smile on a kids face when he runs to the Christmas tree on Christmas morning and finds that Santa Clause has come. My point is that we, as a community, can be the legendary Santa by just donating a small toy to a charitable organization so a child can have the Christmas that we all had. One person can't make all the difference in the world; there will still be poverty, hunger, and injustice; but one person can make a difference to that one special kid who will wake up Christmas morning to find that Santa has come to see him. Isn't Christmas a time for giving anyway?

Marriott, vending prices still a problem

by Alex Little
Student Senate
President

On Nov. 9, student senate held its third meeting of the year. At this meeting two proposals were passed. The International Club petitioned and received 100 dollars and an amendment was proposed by Debbie Shewfelt for a senior committee to be added to the student senate constitution as a standing committee.

Usually senate deals with a lot of proposals from campus organizations and these proposals often initiate serious debate. This year, however, has been somewhat different. Many of the problems we have had to deal with are rooted in other areas. For instance, the parking situation in Lloyd had been a source of confusion for Lloyd residents since the beginning of the semester. Matt Webb and the traffic committee have met to determine what could be done and the residents of Lloyd have put together a beautiful petition which expresses their grievances.

Another major concern that I want to address is the Marriott Food Service here on campus. Marriott has done a survey which shows a downward slope in student satisfaction in every category imaginable over the last five years. Dr. William Seymour, vice-president of student development, has changed the meeting procedures with Marriott in order to identify some of the problems. Let us hope that we can find some solutions to the problems with Marriott soon. As students we should not permit ourselves to go into the next semester with the food service the way that it is.

Early in the year I noticed that the vending machine prices have risen. This is totally unacceptable. A student should be able to venture to the vending machines and secure a snack and a soft drink for one dollar. Students have also pointed out that on the weekends the vending machines are often empty or offer a poor selection. Seymour and I have looked at some possibilities for the vending machines and more than likely we should have some news for the student body early next semester.

Finally, the Residence Life committee is moving right along, and I would like to thank all of the residence hall senators, as well as Darren Dykes and Charcie Roberson for their participation. As I mentioned in the last issue, senate has formed the residence life committee to address the concerns of the students. WE, the students, are responsible for our own happiness in the residence halls. With this in mind, I implore students to drop a grievance in my box or in the box of your residence hall senator. I hope that everyone will do well on their finals and will have a happy winter break.

The Highland Echo

Amanda Martin
Editor

David Downs
Assistant Editor

Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

Reporters

Sarah Christians, Eric Daugherty, Dara DiGiacomo, Allison Dunn, Kenyon Evans, Lori Leffel, Hunter Letchman, Becky Lill, Joe Malheiro, Kristie Paschel, Michelle Shuler, Kim Syphrett, Matt Waters, Sarah West.

Columnists

Alex Little, Bo McMichael, Jonathan Peters, Claire Stancampiano

Photography Editors

Yosef Addis, Kristin Kant

Photographers

David Downs, Lori Leffel, Hunter Letchman

Computer Layout

Susan Rayborn, Traci Tidwell

Advertising Manager/Designer

Patrick Leslie

Advertising

Lori Leffel, Jamey Robbins, Matt Waters

Advisor

Jeff Gary

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR...

The Echo welcomes your comments, letters and guest columns. All written material to be published in the Echo must be typed and accompanied by your name, post office box number, and phone number. Send material to The Highland Echo, Box 2511. The Echo can be reached by calling the Student Publications Office at campus extension 8176. The opinions expressed in the Echo do not necessarily reflect the views of Maryville College.

Wake Up?

by David Downs
Assistant Editor

"Alice in Chains"

Alice in Chains ✓✓✓✓

Hailing from Seattle, Alice in Chains has returned to the music scene with an album that critics are calling their "rebirth."

Their fourth album brings about the return of lead frontman Layne Staley, who left the band after their third album, an EP named "Jar of Flies", due to a fight with a heroin addiction. Staley is reunited in this album with former bandmates Jerry Cantrell (guitar), Mike Inez (bass), and Sean Kinney (drums), this new album deals with everything that Alice in Chains is made of: drugs, chaos, danger, and death.

Staley's vocals are once again the leading force behind this album, as he continues to pound out lyrics that are not only reminiscent of his fight, but also of the same type of energy that propelled the band to the top of the Seattle music scene. Songs like "Grind" and "Brush Away" resemble the same hard energy that Alice in Chains has brought to audiences with their first two albums, "Facelift" and "Dirt." They also add songs like "Heaven Beside You" and "Over Now," which are dominated with acoustic segments that resemble their last album, "Jar of Flies."

Staley, who wrote most of the lyrics himself, provides mysticism in the song "Head Creeps" in which he sings: "So crazy feel the hate / Yeah, I've got years to wait / I know it's not too late / Lending clean hands to fate."

On the song "God Am," he gives his religious beliefs: "So Lord, I see you grinnin' / Must be grand always winning / How proud are you being able / To gather faith from fable."

Despite Staley's voice and lyrics, the album is well-supported with the intense, yet in some songs melodic, guitar playing of Cantrell. Throw in Inez on bass and Kinney on drums, and Alice in Chains has returned to occupy the throne they sat on in former days.

"One Hot Minute"

The Red Hot Chili Peppers ✓✓✓

"One Hot Minute" the follow-up to the 1991 megaplatinum album "Blood Sugar Sex Magik," is not The Red Hot Chili Peppers best album to date, but it definitely has its strong points. The biggest positive aspect of this album is the group's newest member, Dave Navarro, formerly of Jane's Addiction.

Navarro adds a spice to the group that has been missing during its more than 10 year career. From the first track, "Warped", to the last song, "Transcending," Navarro blares out guitar rhythms and leads that exemplify the revival of the Chili Peppers.

Navarro is joined with the usual tattooed bunch: Chad Smith on drums, Flea on bass, and Anthony Kiedis on vocals. Kiedis perpetuates his dynamic vocals on songs like "Aeroplane," "One Hot Minute," and the already popular, "My Friends," which is reminiscent of the hit song "Under the Bridge" from their previous album.

Flea continues to explore new realms in bass playing and even takes a stab at vocals on the song "Transcending," which is dedicated to his deceased friend River Phoenix.

The best description of The Red Hot Chili Peppers newest album "One Hot Minute" is found inside the CD cover below a picture of the group: "Through the years, The Red Hot Chili Peppers have roosted in the hen house and wallowed in the pig sty."

by Claire Stancampiano
Columnist

The other day I saw a commercial advertising a hot line that you could call and get help dealing with holiday stress. I can hear those calls now: "I just don't understand it [uncontrollable sobbing]. How could the marzipan stick to those cookie sheets? The Sears employee told me they were 100% Teflon!"

The fact is that the words "holiday" and "stress" are highly contradictory, even oxymoronic. However, each year millions of people drive themselves into a writhing ball of seasonal fury. If you are one of these millions and would like to avoid spending the better part of '96 getting over Christmas, read on.

I've witnessed the crazed look in my mother's eye that comes about at the prospect of having to deal with the first, foremost, ever-present problem of the relatives. Married people know them as their "out-laws." The short time off you are given for the holidays is continually threatened by their presence. Even if you like them, the mere fact that they are coming over means you can't lay around in your pajamas all day watching obscure Christmas specials.

College students, don't be snowed! The idea of visiting family members you haven't seen for quite a while can seem almost exciting; However, after being home about three hours, you'll realize working on that paper on the psychological tendencies of deaf adolescent lab rats in the murky depths of Thaw Hall doesn't sound half bad.

"Holiday Stress" is an oxymoron

To prevent unwanted familial interactions, first, simply turn off the ringer on your phone. Second, practice all those assertiveness techniques you learned on "Oprah:" Firmly tell them "Hell no. You're not coming over" (or perhaps something a bit more tactful since it's Christmas). It's that easy. College students, call your old friends and get them to let you play with their new Christmas presents.

The other big issue related to holiday stress is, of course, money. By of it). The neighbors commented on the oddness of the tree's shape and its lack of needles. We told them to shut up and that we were adopting a new transcendentalist lifestyle.

Don't you want to strangle those people who bat their eyelashes at you on July 17 and say, "I've got all my Christmas shopping done. How about you?" Don't get upset. Just follow these easy directions. At the last minute, make it a Wal Mart/Big Lots/Target Christmas. These stores stock tons of stuff you've always wanted but never knew it. Luckily, these items usually cost anywhere from 79 cents to $1.09. A beer cozy and a pair of jingle bell earrings from the discount rack for mom, pine tree scented plug-in air fresheners for the siblings and cousins, and for dad, a six pack of Manwich ground beef seasoning. Voila! You've covered the entire family for under ten bucks.

Trim holiday food prices by forgetting all that turkey stuff and ordering a couple of pizzas (for a snazzy Christmas motif, ask for green peppers and pepperoni). Avoid the cookie-baking situation altogether, or you might be forced to call the hot-line. Instead, get a bag of Oreos and slap on some frosting and some colored sprinkles. No one will ever know the difference. I hope I have helped ease the holiday stress situation a bit. You can work yourself into a frenzy around this time of year, or you can be resourceful and content.

Finally, for those of you who would like a more avant-garde Christmas tree, try using all those different colored socks you only have one of to make a garland, or tie them directly on the tree to decorate individual branches.

HAPPY HOLIDAYS !

Claire's quick egg nog recipe

If you're worried about your holiday caloric intake, follow these easy steps for a low-cal treat.

1. Add drops of red or green food coloring to your ice cube trays before freezing.
2. Drop the colored cubes into a vat of vanilla Slim Fast.
3. Garnish with a fresh sprig of pine and tell your guests it's reduced fat egg nog.
4. Enjoy!

the time you purchase the tree, the gifts, the food, and all the other little chachkas from Walgreen's, you are looking at a serious chunk of change.

No problem. At all costs, avoid those yuppie tree lots where they charge $47 for a tree because they claim it is a "white spruce short needle." Get in your car, drive about 20 minutes to some woods, and go find a tree for your living room. This way you get a lot more selection free of charge. During one of our food stamp Christmases, my mom, brother, and I actually did this (way before the Griswald's ever thought

Classic	////
Excellent	////
Good	///
Fair	✓✓
Bad	✓

Do you have a new CD that you would like to see displayed in "Wake Up?" Call x8729 to make arrangements for a listening time

Happy Holiday

At the Movies with Bo &amp; Chris

by Bo McMichael
Columnist

Take out your wallet, and fasten your seat belt because the movies are here. When it rains new movies, it pours! The second week of November is the starting point of the holiday movie blockbusters. The festival season brings everything imaginable to the big screen. However, Christmas is beginning early this year, and the gifts under the tree are worth opening now!

Jim Carrey is back as the world famous Pet Detective in "Ace Ventura: When Nature Calls." The mission is simple: find an African tribe's sacred white bat. However, nothing is simple for good old Ace. And along with my and my buddy's comments, we are blessed with a guest writer. She is none other than our Editor and huge Jim Carrey fan, Amanda Martin.

•Bo: "I was not very amused. The funny thing is that after the movie was over I found myself laughing even more. His humor has leaned towards the 'Dumb & Dumber' side of the comedy line. To many people, that type of humor is unacceptable; but his 65 million dollars at the box office shows little dislike of his acting performance."

•Chris: "Well I am not a huge Jim Carrey fan, but even if I was, this was not up to par. I saw 'Dumb and Dumber' and it was a lot better than this. I know that most of the people I saw it with enjoyed it, but for those of you who did not make it, wait until it comes out to the dollar movies. I still cannot believe that he got paid millions of dollars for a movie like that."

•Amanda: "This movie was nasty and gross from start to finish. I loved it! I am really sorry to disagree with you guys in my first review, but lighten up! I thought this movie was way better than 'Dumb and Dumber,' but not as good as the first "Ace" movie. I think that Carrey's movies have become less funny with each one until this one came out; but "When Nature Calls" has the best bodily function humor I have ever seen in a movie. Guys, I know you laughed all the way through it, so don't lie! Trust me, folks, the rhinoceros scene is worth the five bucks!

So many movies, too little time

The next gift under the tree is Bond, James Bond. "Goldeneye" is the 17th installment of the Bond legacy. Pierce Brosnan is the fifth Bond. In "Goldeneye," Bond, the dinosaur of the Cold War, is fighting the Russian renegades of the old Soviet Union.

•Bo: "The Joker (Batman) said it best when he said, 'where does he get those wonderful toys.' Mr. Brosnan is the best Bond since Sean Connery put on the black tuxedo and ordered a martini 'shaken, not stirred.' The world needs a good guy who can shoot the bad guys, fix his tie, and kiss the girl all in one moment."

•Chris: "Up until now I had never seen a James Bond movie. Other than the first scene it was pretty good. The action was there, along with all of the other things that seem to follow Bond around. He must have a tough life, I tell ya. I think that these first two movies were just a prelude to better things to come. I am not sure how much better they were, but they were better."

Election time has come a year earlier this year. The candidate for President of the United States is Michael Douglas, and his lovely wife to be is Annette Bening. The only problem is that the American people might not agree with the match-making in the White House. "American President" is the new film by Rob Reiner (Sleepless in Seattle)

•Bo: "We saw this film down in Atlanta. Yes, the little guy and I took a road trip to the Olympic City. We visited the place where I would love to be married — Planet Hollywood, and topped the day off by seeing the movie that will win the 'Best Picture' award at this year's Oscars. I cannot say enough good things about the movie. Go see 'American President' — it will make you believe in this great system of ours: The United States Government."

•Chris: "Yes! We have a winner. Other than the fact that I had to see it in that town with all of the Atlanta Braves stuff, this was a keeper. From start to finish, it will make you smile and laugh. It also will touch your emotions. The only thing that could have made it better was if I would have had a date. Bo is a great guy and everything, but he is just not my type. I think that if he and I see many more of these movies together, people are really going to start talking."

Wesley Snipes and Woody Harrelson play two subway cops who always seem to find trouble underneath New York City, and this holiday season the "Money Train" is pulling into a theater near you.

•Bo: "These two guys bring more laughter to the screen than the 'Lethal Weapon' partners. This comedy/action film is just what the doctor ordered; however, my buddy seems to think that they should not have taken the money. What a saint!"

•Chris: "Yes, I had a little problem with this one. It was pretty straight forward, and the action was good, but what seems to be overlooked is that these guys were the bad guys. I know it is fun to root for them, and that is why everybody will like this one. The two partners will make you laugh, and you just have to feel sorry for Woody."

Martin Scorsese directs Robert De Niro, Sharon Stone, and Joe Pesci in a tale of a Las Vegas gambler who opens his own casino in the 1970's. "Casino" is longer than a regular card game. This film is three hours and ten minutes long, so make sure you eat a big lunch.

•Bo: "My buddy went solo on this one. He had three hours to waste. I decided to see two other movies instead."

•Chris: "I think that Bo knew something that I didn't. That is why he did not go see it. What a waste of a bunch of really first class actors. The movie has some violent scenes, but after more than three hours, the people sitting around me were just as violent. I saw this one to get out of the house on Thanksgiving, and after it was over, I was just thankful it was finished."

"Nick of Time" stars heart-throb Johnny Depp. The movie occurs in real time: Depp is given 90 minutes to kill the governor of California, or his daughter will be killed.

•Bo: "The movie begins at High Noon, and ends at 1:34 p.m. This new type of action-thriller brings you to the edge of your seat and kicks you right over the edge. I enjoyed the film; however, I never found out why the assassination was going to take place."

•Chris: "Only Bo goes to see that many movies just over the short break we had. I thought I was doing well to make it to two. Maybe if he had a real life, he could find other things to do. No, really, Bo is o.k."

Tom Hanks and Tim Allen give their voices to a cowboy and a spaceman. "Toy Story" is the first full-length computer-generated film. A key note is that it cost 50 thousand dollars for one minute, and the film was about 90 minutes long. WOW!

•Bo: "I spent the first ten minutes thinking that this was an interesting way to make a movie, and for the other 80 minutes I thought toys were real. As I looked around the

and Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

theater, I could see all ages enjoying this amazing film. Disney has earned itself a standing ovation."

Well, only seven gifts are unwrapped and there are 16 more movies to go. When December 1st roles around, "Wild Bill" will feel a "White Man's Burden," and as the weeks go on things begin to "Heat" up in "Father of the Bride II." "Nixon" and "Sabrina" are on "Cut-throat Island" with "Grumpier Old Men" in "Sudden Death." These are only a few of the movies that will be in a theater near you. Enjoy the Holiday season, and go out to see a movie. In the next issue, we want your thoughts about the Holiday Blockbusters. Call ext. 8606 and tell us what you think is the BEST movie of the season.

Committed by Michael Fry

Letters to the Editor

5

Dear Editor,

I hope you will allow me to use your medium to express my gratitude to all of the fantastic faculty, staff, and students who participated in our first annual "Scots for Christmas" program. This program originated within the athletic department and a fantastic turnout by a variety of student-athletes spread to the entire campus wanting to get involved. Your efforts made a memorable Christmas for over fifty youths in the Maryville area. Once again thank you for putting smiles on all of those faces.

Sincerely,
Kandis Schram

Dear Editor and Maryville College Students,

During the Student Senate meeting Thursday, December 7, the Student Programming Board, with the support of five other campus organizations, proposed a petition for funds to support a 1996 Blister in the Sun novelty act. This would be much like the Velcro Olympics we had at Homecoming. The members of SPR were more disturbed by the breach of rules while our petition was being discussed, which are supposed to govern our Student Senate, than we were by the outcome of the vote. In addition, I felt as if several factors were overlooked or misconstrued by some of the voting senators.

These factors are as follows:
-Student Programming Board asked and was budgeted for 27,000 dollars based on the average costs of the events we were to program for the 1995-96 year. We received 24,000 dollars, which is obviously a 3,000 deficit.

-SPR, along with the other organizations, were petitioning Senate for half the cost of the event. This amount was 750 dollars. Last year Senate contributed 1650.00. This was the total amount for Bouncing Box, Sumo Wrestling, and Human Bowling at Blister in the Sun. We did not request the total amount again this year because of what increase we did receive in the budget.

-Due to the requests of the students at recent community forums, SPB is trying to provide more dances and band parties during second semester. These dances and band parties can cost anywhere from a thousand dollars and up, depending on the event.

I can see that it is hard for anyone not directly involved in the planning of such large scale events to understand the high costs. Never the less, in order to bring in the quality programs our students are demanding, the funding must first be allocated. Unfortunately, as a result of this vote, it will be MC students who lose out next spring due to the present constraints on the SPB's budget. In other words, either the novelty act for Blister in the Sun, or other traditional events will have to be eliminated from next semester's calendar.

Allison Pryor
SPB Chair

Toys sought for needy children

Baskets for Kids is a program which puts together baskets of toys, books, and surprises for children ages 2-18 who have to be in the hospital for treatments over the holidays. If you would like to sponsor a basket for a young person or donate items to go in a basket, please contact Kathie Shiba x8270 or 681-9784. Kathie is a member of the Parent Group of East TN Children's Hospital. She will be delivering the baskets to the children.

by Jonathan Peters
Columnist

This last week I got another rare opportunity to witness a "Phish" experience. Wow: "Divided Sky," "Bouncing Around the Room," "Stash," "Fast Enough for You," "Sample"...They were on fire!! Improvisatory variation is their trademark, so it's really cool to see the action in progress, rather than listen to tapes. Sort of like the difference between seeing a picture of an elephant and having one step on you. Every once in a while something would happen, though, distract me from the music, and make me think about the people there.

Once, when I was at a show in Chattanooga, there were some people standing behind me who seemed like they really hadn't bargained for what they had gotten into. I could be totally wrong in assuming to know what they thought, but it seemed that they had come with a slightly different impression of the concert than I did. They seemed to think that a concert is a big social Mecca place where you get really drunk, act really stupid, and make a lot of noise with all your cool-looking friends. Oh, and a band happens to be playing in the background, but never mind them....

At one point during the show, when Phish went into one of their famous atonal jazz jams, a girl behind me yelled, "Eeeeeeeew, this sounds GROSS!" In my opinion, loud people are not nearly as annoying as ethnocentric loud people. This really made me think, though.

Personally, I used to not like jazz, especially atonal jazz. But then I realized that if you're wearing concrete slippers, you're not going to want to go anywhere new. I realized that those notes really aren't completely random: they're beautiful to some people. Saying that a particular style of music "sucks" is not just insulting the particular organization of notes, but the entire mass of people who listen to it. Saying "Allah sucks" in many parts of the world will get you into some serious trouble. Why then is it that people think that saying, "Country music sucks," or "Eeeeeeeew, this sounds gross" is somehow any better? As the great Bob Dylan said, "...and don't criticize what you can't understand." Stuff like this makes me want to ask people, "Why did you come to this concert?"

But anyway, about those lyrics. I've heard people say they don't like Phish because their lyrics don't have any "substance" to them. People, it seems, want someone to tell "the whole world what's the deal" (311 Music). Granted, it may be difficult to interpret any deep philosophical meaning into such songs as the epic "You Enjoy Myself." After a climatic frenzy, he says, "Boy, man. Was aufscianddrivemetofarenzi!" over and over. What does it mean? Who cares! They're musicians, not messiahs. After building a fifteen minute musical masterpiece, they can say something completely incoherent and it will not bother me in the least. Anything more might be too much. As the late and great Frank Zappa said, "Shut up and play your guitar." Or as Jesus said, "A wicked and adulterous generation seeks after a sign and no sign shall be given to it..." (Matthew 16:4). The music itself is the point, which goes back to what I was talking about earlier.

There are, actually, many lyrics to which a person can relate. One chorus in particular that applies to life at Maryville College during finals week is found on the CD "Picture of Nectar," inspired, no doubt, by some extraordinarily interesting class:

Who can unlearn all the facts that I've learned

I've sat in their chairs and my synapse burn

The torture of chalk dust collects on my tongue

Thoughts follow my vision and dance in the sun

All my vassal constrictors become slowly undone

Can't this wait 'till I'm old, can I live while I'm young?

Can I live while I'm young?

"Concrete slippers" will hold you down

The Lighthouse

Dance Club & Cafe

681-4197

118 E. Broadway

Monday Nights

Maryville College

7-12

MC ID Required***

DJ Music
Requests & Suggestions
I Welcome!

*Non-Maryville
College Students
Admitted As MC
Students Guest Only

Live Bands
Fri & Sat

Restaurant Hours: 8-5:30
Dance Club: 7-12

Survey

continued from p. 1

Craig, associate academic dean, was to determine what students want in their overall college experience. "When we come to ask you," said Craig, "we really do want to know."

Craig, in conjunction with Dr. Bill Seymour, vice-president of student development, and Dr. Dean Bolden, academic vice-president, hope to be able to improve MC and the conditions for which the students have expressed concerns. Many of the responses to these surveys are dependent upon the financial capabilities. Furthermore, the administration reserves the right to determine whether or not any changes will be made. To keep a formal record of the students' concerns, the administration plans to continue polling the student body on a yearly basis.

New Counselor
continued from p. 1

successfully with these obstacles. I believe he'll be able to help quite a bit."

Holt pointed out that it is hard to be a college student. "This is the time when you are really creating your identity," he said. "You're leaving home, and you have responsibilities and freedom. This is your time to define yourself as an adult, and I'm here to make that transition easier."

Holt, who received his bachelor's degree in sociology and his master's degree in counseling and human services from Florida State University, was selected to fill this position from a large number of applicants.

The Director of Counseling position will allow for group as well as individual counseling. It will also provide the college with the resources for development programs and learning opportunities in interpersonal growth.

According to Holt, information exchanged in counseling sessions will be completely confidential. "I feel that it is important to be honest about experiences," he said. Counseling is a collaborative effort between student and counselor. We will try together to come up with the best plan of action to help students cope with their problems."

"I don't have all the answers. What I have are suggestions. There is no gospel according to Bruce Holt. I don't have the lock on the way to live. I use my training and experience to be able to say 'this is not necessarily the answer, and this is not what you must do, but this is what makes the best sense."

Holt, who lives in the area with his wife, Becky; his nine-year-old daughter, Alison; and his five-year-old son, Jacob, said that he is very excited to be here. "I hope that I am as good for this campus as I'm sure it will be for me."

The Echo Opinion Poll

Of the 52 students who voted, 59.6 percent said they would like Colin Powell to run for president, 32.7 percent would not, and 7.7 percent were unsure. Top ranked cartoon characters are in the graph below:

Opinion Poll

1. With what aspect of this college are you least pleased?

.....

2. What is your favorite sitcom?

Correction

In the last issue of the Echo we reported that Dr. Sherri Matascik received her doctorate from the University of Pittsburgh. Although she did teach at UP, she received her doctorate from Kent State University. We apologize to Dr. Matascik for this error.

Students earn money for MC in Phone-a-thon

by Kenyon Evans
Staff Writer

Maryville College is now about $150,000 richer thanks to the latest phone-a-thon. About 40 students called potential givers until they could call no more.

The money raised this year exceeded that of the previous phone-a-thon. Beckie Heckler, the student coordinator of the event, and Anna Graham, the Director of Annual Giving, both arranged and managed the event.

The phone-a-thon lasted eight nights, from Nov. 6-16 with around twenty students working each night. The students called alumni, parents, and friends of the college. "It's not an easy job to do what we do because you have to be very careful to word what you're saying correctly so that you can get the increases in gifts that you want," said Heckler, "You need to be knowledgeable about what's going on on campus, and . . . you also need to know how to handle [rough] situations."

According to Graham, 40 percent of the donors increased their gifts from the previous phone-a-thon.

One of the bonuses of the phone-a-thon is the alumni/student interaction. Heckler said that alumni are usually very interested in what's going on at MC and enjoy discussing that with current students. Eric Obermiller, who is a member of the phone-a-thon staff, said that, "Calling alumni is a lot of fun . . . especially talking to the ones that talk to you and tell you stories about when they were here. Those who are the really interesting calls and even if you only get a few of those calls a night, it really makes it worth it."

To relieve the pressure of toiling away at their phones, the students found solace in harmlessly pranking each other. "It gets very stressful after calling and calling and calling," said Heckler, "You need to get distracted every once and a while, so we had a lot of calling from one person to the next person and making jokes and stuff like that, which helps ease the tension."

"We spoke with over four-thousand parents, alumni, and friends," said Graham. "I was very impressed seeing the students in action."

Heckler was grateful to the students who participated and hoped that such strong student involvement would continue: "We had a great student body workhorse, so to speak, and they did a really great job . . . it was a really good effort." Obermiller echoed Heckler's positive response: "It's a lot of fun and we're doing something good for the college, so I feel good doing it."

Internet service almost ready

by Sarah Christians
Staff Writer

Maryville College students have been clamoring for Internet service for a long time now. Supposedly, it was to be up and running at the beginning of this semester. That didn't quite work out. Then definitely by mid-semester. October came and went without MC Internet. Now, according to Dr.

John Nichols, professor of mathematics and the Internet Committee member, everyone on campus will have world wide e-mail "certainly by January."

Nichols, along with Leon Binder, director of data processing, submitted a proposal to the National Science Foundation last year, requesting funds for an Internet access. Earlier this year were funded and have been hard work establishing a "net node."

MC's access will be through a company in Knoxville called U.S. Internet. Nichols, Binder and several lab assistants have been working to install the software for the next few months. It's currently up and running on one computer, which they are using to debug the system. Although students will have to use the lab for Net access for now, Nichols said dial-up access (from your home or residence hall) is not out of the question. A dial-up system could be up and running by "later next year."

With this new Internet access, MC students will have access to any site in the world. MC will have its own home page with directives to every division and every professor, and eventually every student. Someday, e-mail might even be used in the admissions process.

Nichols plans to publish a timetable of new Internet features, which will be posted on notice boards throughout campus.

Class helps students deal with stress

by Michelle Shuler
Staff Writer

With finals coming up, stress management is a big issue for most Maryville College students. Students who need help managing stress have an opportunity to learn more about dealing with the problem.

Activities taking place during "Celebrate the Mind" included "activities was Dr. Robert Bonham, professor of music, teaches a January term course "Exploring the Wholistic life." Bonham said he likes to gather information about handling stress and to "pass it on" to others. As a musician, Bonham developed an interest in reducing stress before and during performances. Because performing in front of an audience is a naturally stressful situation, Bonham said there are two choices: either "work harder or try to alleviate what's getting in your way." This advice, said Bonham, can apply to any stressful situation.

The first point Bonham makes when teaching students about stress reduction is that "Your body is your greatest possession." Necessities such as food, exercise, and sleep may seem obvious, but are often neglected. An athlete would not stay up all night before an important game, said Bonham, but many students will not hesitate to take on an all-night study session before a final exam. The object, according to Bonham, is "creating a balance."

Bonham also noted that there were two kinds of stress: external and internal. External stress is caused by uncontrollable circumstances originating outside of a person. Internal stress comes from how these circumstances are interpreted. When it comes to stress,

Bonham says, "the world is really neutral. How we respond to the world, how we interpret the world creates how we feel about it."

Bonham also discussed the interplay between the body, the mind, and the emotions. Simple things such as how a person sits or stands can have an effect on how that person feels. Breathing also has quite an impact on combating stress. He recommended regular breathing from the diaphragm and said that normal breathing has a calming effect, helping a person to deal with physical stress.

Another problem, Bonham said, is "creating stress over things that don't even exist." He relates "We stress-out a lot about things that haven't even happened." He warned that changes in dealing with stress cannot be accomplished overnight, and suggested working on different aspects of stress separately.

photo by Kristin Kant

Do you recognize these feet?

The MC campus has been plagued by vandalism this semester. Along with the columns in front of Pearson's Hall, vandals have struck in several dorm buildings and on the campus grounds.

Success in finals comes from more than just studying

by Kristie Paschel
Staff Writer

It's that time of year again when good wishes, joy, and prayers are spread among the students. That's right, it's time for finals! The students and the staff at Maryville College are ready to call it a year, but before the holiday excitement begins, they must take the "final challenge." This means hours of preparation and a weekend of cramming.

The students at MC are more than willing to expose their plans to wait until the weekend before finals to start studying. Junior Kevin Rowland takes great pride in saying, "I'll begin studying after I watch the Indiana Hoosiers defeat the Kentucky Wildcats Saturday afternoon."

Junior Kimber Hicks has a similar agenda for hitting the books.

She explained that she would start to study on the Friday night before finals "unless there's a full moon."

As for the snacks that MC students will be munching on, the odds are that there will be lots of ice cream, coffee, and cookie dough, not to mention Rowland's unlimited supply of Vivarin.

While studying will take up much of their time, students stress the importance of frequent study breaks to achieve success in the classroom.

While some students said that they will break for a movie or some TV, others, including Hicks, will opt for an evening of "It's OK" hugs and then some sleep.

Students also place much emphasis on lucky charms for fear that a break with tradition may offset performance on finals. When asked if he will be wearing his famous hat during finals, Rowland exclaimed, "Of course I'll keep my lucky Cubs hat on. I feel naked without my Cubs hat, and it's hard to be serious when you're naked."

But it will take a lot more than luck to succeed in the classroom, and many students have already drawn conclusions on whose exam they will need to study the most for. When asked whose exam she will spend the most time studying for, senior Jarra Griffith answered, "Dr. Kasper's."

Other professors whose tests made the students' lists of "Killer Finals" were Dr. Susan Schneibel, Dr. Sam Overstreet, and Dr. Chad Berry. When approached for her response on this nomination, Schneibel said, "I hope it's an indication of their interest in the course and the degree to which they take the material seriously and not just abject fear."

Schneibel also had some advice to offer to students who are uncertain of how to prepare for finals. "They simply need to review the tools of the toolbox and study what they have already studied."

Schneibel stressed that the professors take just as much time grading the exams as the students do in taking them, so the importance of the finals is twofold.

However you plan your study time, just remember that finals are the final obstacle between you and the holidays. Remember Dec. 11-14 is more than the epitome of stress; it is also a chance to succeed.

photo by Josef Adkins

I've got a headache this big...

Senior Kelly Meacham takes a load off and mentally prepares himself for this week's finals.

Merry Christmas !

MC faculty to speak in spring Forum

Bonham, Howard, Sullivan, Ramger, and Keith to present lectures

by Sarah West
Staff Writer

Don't panic. They're not really leaving, but five of MC's favorite professors will give their "last lectures" this spring.

"If you were retiring, what would you say in your final lecture?" This is the question that Drs. Robert Bonham, Harry Howard, Mary Kay Sullivan, Robert Ramger, and Marsha Keith will address in the 1996 Community Forum.

Along with the Humanities club, Dr. Amy Livingstone of the social sciences department is directing this effort which, she said, has been popular on other campuses.

"It [the Forum] gives students the chance to first of all appreciate teachers in another way, as people a part of a larger scale of the community, and their perception of their disciplines," said Livingstone. She referred to the meetings as an "opportunity to celebrate the richness of our faculty. The unique thing about this particular forum is that it encompasses a broad spectrum of disciplines."

In terms of a liberal arts education, Livingstone believes that this Spring Community Forum is not only a reflection of this theme, but also a reinforcer of its values. She explained that the common theme shared by a variety of disciplines will bring some intersection, as well as differences. In her opinion, liberal arts education students should be able to appreciate and understand each of these last lectures.

When asked about her expectations, Livingstone replied, "To quote Dickens, I have great expectations!"

In the long term, Livingstone hopes the meetings will be successful enough to warrant a repetition so other faculty may participate.

The idea of the last lecture series was actually formed by two alumni, Jenny Cummings and Angela McLemore, who were members of the Humanities club last year.

Livingstone emphasized that everyone, including students, faculty, and the community, can learn by attending these special meetings, which she hopes might even be worked into the curriculums this spring.

photo by Yosef Addis

Learning to work together

African studies students participated in a model Organization for African Unity recently.

Committed by Michael Fry

Scholarship funds available to students

Do you need money to help finance your education at a Presbyterian-affiliated college? If so, you may be interested in competing in an two-part award competition which is administered by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Office of Financial Aid for Studies.

Approximately 40 scholarship awards in the amount of 1,000 dollars will be offered to students who successfully complete the requirements for the Samuel Robinson Award competition.

This competition, established 1940, is open to full-time Maryville College juniors and seniors. In order to win the grand sum, students must memorize and recite the "Westminster Shorter Catechism" and write a 2,000 word essay on an assigned topic which is designed to increase the writer's knowledge and understanding of the "Westminster Shorter Catechism." Students must also write "a brief statement of faith."

Students must complete both parts of the competition, or they will be disqualified; however, if an essay is judged to be "unacceptable," $100.00 awards will be given for accurately completing part one. Also, the Rev. Stephen Nickle, director of campus ministries, is planning to form a group to assist students in memorizing the "Westminster Shorter Catechism." This is a no lose opportunity for the earnest applicant!

For applications and additional information, interested students should contact Nickle, in the Center for Campus Ministries either in person or by phone, (x8298).

Getting in the spirit

Todd Smith adjust a wreath during the Hanging of the Greens

photo by Kristin Kant

Committee to study campus health care issues

by Kim Syphrett
Staff Writer

Through the effort of a new administrative initiative, Maryville College students may have on-campus health care options in the future.

Recent Round Table meetings with MC President Dr. Gerald Gibson, students, and his Cabinet members have generated discussion regarding the low scores given in the health services area on the student satisfaction survey which was dispensed to students during the spring semester of 1995. On this survey students were asked whether the "staff in the health services area were competent." According to Dr. William Seymour, vice-president for student development and Bruce Guillaume director of the Life Enrichment Center, the scores in this area were lower than the norm when compared the scores for other institutions. Other schools rank higher in the area of health care and counseling because, as Seymour explained, "We don't have one (a health care facility)."

In response to this problem, changes have been made in counseling, and the college is pursuing on-campus health care alternatives."

To that end, the health services committee has recently been initiated. "Alex Little appointed four students for that program earlier this month," said Seymour. The committee is not new; however, "They reviewed and critiqued the health services last year and they ultimately reviewed the contracts we have with facilities off-campus," said Guillaume. Currently, MC has an arrangement for students who do not have health insurance to receive health care services off-campus at nearby facilities for a reduced cost. "We are fortunate to have clinics and a hospital nearby, but anytime someone gets sick they have to go off-campus. And, they may have to find rides to help them get there. . . So, the idea is to create a plan that is helpful to students."

Seymour also said that, while there is a need to be "realistic and look at the associated costs of such an issue," he would like to see an arrangement where there is both "a full-time campus nurse and a part-time doctor who can arrange to come on campus at certain times of the week for student appointments."

Guillaume, who is the staff advisor to the committee, said that "health care is such a rapidly changing field right now that it is difficult for off-campus health care providers to offer us discounted services. . . I think that what happens to our students is that now they have to pay fees, etcetera; so, the on-campus facility would make it easier for our students to get care. My big question to the health care committee is "What can we do on-campus?" and "How do we do that?"

Students who would like to express their opinions about the issue of campus health care should contact Guillaume or the Student Development office.

DRB and J-Board report

10/12

•One student was charged with vandalism in Gamble. The case has been sent to the Judicial Board.

10/19

•Two students from Davis Hall received First Offense for violation of the visitation policy.

10/26

•The case involving a student charged with vandalism and disorderly conduct resulted in the dropping of the first charge due to insufficient evidence and a requirement to pay a citation for the second.

10/26

•Of the two students charged with alcohol in Lloyd Hall, one received First Offense and the other Second Offense.

10/28

•In Lloyd Hall, a student received a warning for failure to comply.

11/15

•A case is pending regarding two Davis Hall students who broke the visitation policy.

11/16

•A student in Carnegie was charged with illegal entry/unauthorized use of keys. The case is pending.

11/17

•A student charged with vandalism of campus grounds. The case is pending.

11/18

•One student was charged with vandalism and illegal entry in Pearsons. The case is pending.

11/19

•A student in Lloyd Hall was charged with violation of quiet hours. The case is pending.

11/19

•A student, in Lloyd Hall, was charged with an alcohol offense. The case is pending.

11/21

•Two Copeland students who were charged with an alcohol offense. The case is pending.

11/21

•Two students, in Lloyd Hall, were charged with theft/unauthorized use of property. The case is pending.

11/21

•Four Lloyd Hall students were charged with theft/unauthorized use of property. The case is pending.

11/22

•A Carnegie student was charged with an alcohol offense. The case is pending.

11/22

•A student was charged with illegal entry in Lloyd. The case is pending.

11/25

•Two students in Lloyd were charged with failure to comply/visitation according to a break house agreement. The case is pending.

11/25

•A Lloyd student was charged with illegal entry, failure to comply, disorderly conduct, and harassment. The case is pending.

J-Board Report

10/30

•A case involving two students charged with harassment resulted in one "guilty" and one "not guilty" verdict.

Happy Holiday

Three Irish exchange students become Scots for a year

by Lori Leffel
Staff Writer

The search for the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow has led three Irish students to Maryville College.

Simon Graham, Laurie Lindsay and Brian O'Connor have journeyed from the land of the leprechauns to study and to experience American culture.

Simon Graham, who is twenty-one years old, is from a town called Moira in Northern Ireland. He studied at the Queen's University of Belfast before transferring to MC through the Business Initiative Program. This program enables students from Ireland to come to America to learn what business is like in a different culture and environment. There are 126 students presently participating in this program, and students must go through a lengthy process before they are accepted, including several interviews, an application, and an essay.

Graham, who is an electrical and electronic engineering major, will complete this year at MC and return to Ireland to finish up his senior year. According to Graham, the whole setting of MC is great. He loves the people here, and he thinks that the campus is beautiful. Out of the 50 schools participating in the Business Initiative Program, Maryville College was Graham's first choice for a school in America. Graham is also on the Mountain Challenge staff.

Laurie Lindsay is also twenty-one and is from a town called Londonderry in Northern Ireland. He transferred to MC from the University of Ulster. Like Graham, he came to MC through the Business Initiative Program. Lindsay's, who is a banking and finance major, also plans to return to Ireland after this year.

Lindsay has observed that classes at MC are a lot different from classes in Ireland. Whereas the classes in Lindsay's native land are mostly large and lecture based with little interaction between the students and the professors, Maryville's classes are comparatively small.

Lindsay is presently a member of the MC football team. He played rugby in Ireland and said that rugby is very different from football. For example, there are no breaks in rugby and the players play for eighty minutes straight. A time-out is allowed only if a player is injured.

Brian O'Connor, who is eighteen-years-old, is from Dublin. He is a pre-med major. O'Connor moved to America to live with his dad about three years ago. He has lived in Illinois, Florida, and Alabama, where he attended high school.

O'Connor, who is a former member of the MC football team, is also an experienced soccer player. He is also a member of student senate.

The "Scots Stomp" takes MC by storm

by Hunter Letchman
Staff Writer

It hit Nashville and New York, and now it has invaded Maryville College. Country Line Dancing came to MC on Thursday, November 30.

The "Sadie Hawkins Barn Dance" was sponsored by the Student Programming Board. A dance instructor was enlisted to help teach everyone the complex line dances. About 50 people attended and had a great time learning many dances, such as the "Sweetheart Shoddyce", the "Two Step", "Tush-push", the "Scots Stomp", and a new dance that student Robert Street created, known as the "Woman Stomp." This original step made its debut at the barn dance, and if it catches on, the "Woman Stomp" could become the hottest new dance craze sweeping the nation. Street believes the dance has "many possibilities," and hopes that many people will like it.

"Word on the street" is that Street might try to organize a barn dance every Friday night if students show enough interest. He has even volunteered to teach the lessons. "It would be something fun to do on the weekends to get everybody more involved on this campus," Street said. They might start as soon as next semester if things work out.

If you are interested, let SPB know. Their office is located on the ground floor of Fayerweather Hall, x 8012.

The Highland Echo Classifieds

Internships:

Attention Juniors! Applications for the 1996 Summer Experience Program at Maryville College are now available in Career Services. Candidates chosen for the program will be provided with a free room in Carnegie Hall and will be placed in a major related job for the summer. All positions are paid. You must have completed your junior year by May 1996 to be eligible. If you have questions, please come by the Career Services office or call ext. 8220.

U.S. Department of Energy
1) Research Program. Students majoring in physical and life sciences, engineering, math, computer science, or the social sciences are invited to apply for the summer student research program. Must have completed one year of college.

Stipend provided. Appointments are for 10 weeks in the summer in Oak Ridge, PA, South Carolina and Virginia. Deadline to apply is the third Tuesday in January.

(2) Professional Program - 2.5 GPA. Major in science, engineering, computer science, environmental science, math or science education. Oak Ridge and Pittsburgh locations. Deadline to apply is February 15, 1996.

Career Services has more information.

Food Service Management - locations locally and across the nation for summer. Management majors above the freshman level and students with food service experience may apply. Stipend, room and board provided. Applications due by January 12, 1996.

Lockheed Martin - Must have completed freshman year, have a 3.0 GPA and be pursuing technical/scientific degree. Application deadline is January 31, 1996.

Summer Internship along the Texas/Mexico Border - Puentes de Cristo, a binational Presbyterian organization serves in the areas of community health, social services, and Christian ministry. Spanish skills not required but helpful. Career Services has more information.

Other Internships opportunities: Land Between the Lakes, Colgate-Palmolive, Wears Valley Ranch, Schuylkill Environmental Center, National Air and Space Museum. The time to explore the possibilities is NOW. Most internships have very early application dates.

OTHER OPPORTUNITIES

1996 Summer Olympics - come by Career Services for application and the listing of jobs available in various locations. Resume required.

The Student Conservation Association - Work with the National Park Service, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service or other national and state agencies. Selection process begins March 1 for summer. Apply NOW.

The Highland Echo Classifieds For Sale:

Mary Kay products. Call x8553 or x8528 for more information or for a free facial.

Natural Science 150/Astronomy book in good condition for $35. Call x8327.

Jobs:

Seniors interested in interviewing with Proffitt's-McRae's for entry level positions, please come by the Career Services office to sign-up.

Home Depot - New Maryville store is taking applications for part-time work. Go by to apply. Be sure to mark your application "MARYVILLE COL-### LEGE STUDENT".

Honey Baked Hams - Knoxville. Need seasonal workers. $5.00/hour. Flexible schedule. Call Chris Watson, 584-8886.

Kay Bee Toys - Foothills Mall. Flexible schedule, competitive hourly wage. Come by Career Services. Refer to Job 90.

Tennessee Bar & Grill - hiring cocktail and food servers, cashiers, cooks and utility persons. Receive a $200.00 bonus just for being hired! Come by Career Services. Refer to Job 97.

Hertz Rent A Car - On-lot transporter at the airport. $4.50/hour. Schedule flexible and varies. Come by Career Services. Refer to Job 100.

Child Care - Sit with two girls 2:30-5 pm Monday-Friday; Thursday 7-10 pm. $50/week. Start in January. Come by Career Services. Ask about Job 106

Git down!

Alex Little shakes it at last month's international club dance

photo by Yosef Addis

Kids on the Block teach local children

by Becky Lill
Staff Writer

Remember the days of making puppets out of Dad's old socks, and putting on puppet shows in washing machine boxes?

Puppets have definitely not lost their popularity over the years, especially not on the Maryville College campus. MC has its own puppeteering troupe called "Kids on the Block." The group consists of Jarra Griffith, Kristin Kant, Emily Huffman, Sherry Oden, Rena McCullough, Jennifer Woodhouse, Elaine Gibbs, Katie Greer, and Kelli Lyon. Many of these members are Bonner Scholars.

Kids on the Block started in the northern United States in 1977. A teacher trying to mainstream a child in a wheelchair into a public school devoid of children with serious handicaps did a puppet show with a boy in a wheelchair to educate the other children on his disability. This idea of using puppets to educate children on more serious matters quickly became popular, and Kids on the Block troupes spread throughout the world.

The MC troupe works in conjunction with Blount County Civil Services to educate children in the community on a wide range of social issues and problems. They split up into smaller groups and travel to various elementary schools twice a week to do shows on topics such as personal safety, divorce, cerebral palsy, sexual abuse, and emotional problems, as well as on many other subjects.

Griffith, who has been with the program since it began on campus in 1992, said, "I really get a lot of satisfaction out of KOB. It's a lot of fun, and I get to meet a lot of wonderful children. It's a wonderful feeling to know that I've helped a child understand something really important."

The troupe spends a lot of time in preparation for its skits. Learning to work the puppets, memorize lines, and to do voices takes quite a bit of practice; it takes dedication and a real desire to help others to be a member although it is very relaxed, and there is a lot of improvisation.

Kant, another fourth-year member said, "I feel that KOB is a wonderful experience. I get to have fun while I'm helping to educate children. It really gets me out into the community, and it's a nice break from the tedium of school."

Kids on the Block is always looking for volunteers. Male puppeteers are especially in demand this year. Anyone interested should contact the Center for Campus Ministry, Jarra, or Kristin.

Merry Christmas

AIDS awareness week observed on campus

On Friday, December 1, individuals in 190 countries across the globe observed AIDS Awareness Day. At Maryville College, the Wellness Task Force and the residence hall councils made efforts to raise campus awareness of this day. Red ribbons were given to students, faculty, and staff to wear to help support this world event.

As of June 20, 1995, over 1.16 million AIDS cases have been reported to the World Health Organization. This has been a 19 percent increase since July 1994. AIDS is the leading cause of death among males ages 25-44, the fourth leading cause of death among women 25-44, and the sixth leading cause of death for all sexes between the ages of 15-24. AIDS has also been found to be higher among black and hispanic populations. By December 1, 1994, there were 441,528 individuals who were diagnosed with AIDS, and among those, 270,870 died by the end of 1994.

If you have questions concerning AIDS call 1-800-525-AIDS.

Copeland Hall sponsors sex week

by Matt Waters
Staff Writer

Let's talk about sex. Really!

Recently, Copeland Hall sponsored a theme week about sex. Topics on the agenda included rape, understanding the sexes, and a mock game show. Basically, the week dealt with the education about sexual activity, according to Brian Hastings, a freshman who attended most of the events.

The rape education session addressed the problems of the victims, including what they endure before and after the assault. Participants in the activity learned what to do in the event of a rape, namely not bathing in order to preserve the evidence and, more importantly, reporting the crime.

Participants also discussed behavior which is "off-limits" when being intimate. "We learned that it is best to ask for permission to touch and not be presumptuous," said Hastings. Another item which was raised is that rapists and victims cannot be stereotyped. "They are mainly people you know or your next-door neighbor," said Hastings. "Rapists rape people they know, most of the time."

Another session was "Sex Jeopardy" with host Jarred Younger. A spin-off of the popular television show, the event was tied to topics such as urophilia, child molestation, symptoms and treatment of sexually transmitted diseases, and necrophilia.

"I thought that it was a good way to get young people's attention about sex through a popular game show," said Hastings. "I found it very interesting."

The third activity during the theme week was about understanding sexuality. Taught by Dr. Robert Ramger, the session dealt with men and women understanding each other.

The theme week was open to all campus members. "It was a good theme week, overall," said Hastings, "and it was well put together by those involved."

Yearly Membership
Only $15.00 per month

207 Cusick St.
Maryville, TN 37801
977-8335

Get Fit! Stay Fit!

We're jammin' now!

Tiffany Rudicil performed with the Maryville College Jazz Ensemble on Tuesday, Nov. 28.

photo by Yusef Aditi

Happy Holidays

Choirs perform Christmas music at Maryville College

by Lori Leffel
Staff Writer

On Friday, December 8, the Maryville College Concert Choir, along with the Maryville College Community Chorus, performed its annual Christmas Concert. Both choirs are under the direction of Dr. Daniel Taddie, professor of music.

The Concert Choir performed Benjamin Britten's "A Ceremony of Carols," which is an interpretation of Old English Christmas carols. The choir was accompanied on the harp by William Lovelace.

Soloists included Beth Brakebill, Jennifer Brashears, Starr Hudson, Marcus Farmer, Melissa Monroe, and Celeste Willocks.

The choir consists of MC students who are chosen after auditioning. Many of the members receive scholarships for performing with the choir.

The Community Chorus consists of both MC students and community members. The group performed J.S. Bach's "Magnificat" and other classic Christmas carols. MC student Funmilayo Eke was among the soloists for the Bach piece. The Chorus was accompanied by Peggy Rogers, Organist.

Impressions seeks staff members, submissions

by Geoff Vinson
Guest Writer

The staff of Impressions, Maryville College's artistic and literary magazine, is seeking submissions for the 1996 issue. Original poetry, short fiction, photography, and artwork from both students and faculty, regardless of major or division, will be published in the upcoming issue. There is a limit of three contributions per person. While there is no specified limit on the length of poems or fiction pieces, there are limits on the size of artwork that can be used. Please check with Amanda Martin for questions you may have regarding this matter. Additionally, artwork must be in either ink or charcoal, and photographs must be in black and white. The 1995-96 Impressions staff is: Geoff Vinson, managing editor;

Paul Weaver, layout and design editor; Amanda Martin, art editor; David Downs, publicity manager; and Dr. Charlotte Beck, advisor. New staff members include Melissa Pike, Sara Baker, and Jeanna Beck. The positions of fiction and poetry editors have yet to be filled. Interested persons should contact Dr. Beck or Geoff Vinson.

All types of submissions may be given to Dr. Beck, Anderson Hall, room 209.

MACCO celebrates the holiday season

The Maryville Alcoa College Community Orchestra (MACCO) presented "A Holiday Tradition," featuring the music of the season on Monday, December 4. Performing with the orchestra was trumpet soloist Dr. Larry Smithee, assistant professor of music, and the choirs of Maryville's Foothills Elementary School and Alcoa Elementary School. The program included works by G. F. Handel and Leroy Anderson as well as medleys of carols and the annual carol sing with orchestra and audience.

Nationally renowned watercolor artist Jim Gray was the special exhibiting artist. Lithographs of his work are being sold to raise funds for Friends of Great Smoky Mountains National Park.

Cool Clothes · Incense · Jewelry · Candles · Cards · Prints

JAZZBERRY

GENERAL

15% Discount For All Maryville College Faculty, Staff, & Students

Directions: Take a right at the Court Street Exit and drive till you see us!

Phone: 984-0391

205 Court Street

Hours: Mon - Sat 10:00 - 7:00

*Discount good through November and does not include clearance items

Cool Clothes · Incense · Jewelry · Candles · Cards · Prints

Cool Clothes · Incense · Jewelry · Candles · Cards · Prints

Cool Clothes · Incense · Jewelry · Candles · Cards · Prints

Lady Scots off to strong start

by Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

and

by Joe Malheiro
Sports Writer

Off to a 6-2 start, the Lady Scots Basketball team is expecting big things this season. Head Coach Kelli Cook has much reason to be excited about the upcoming season.

The Lady Scots are returning much of the same cast that made it to the final eight a season ago. Leading the way is the NCAA Division III Pre-season Player of the Year, senior Jamie Parrott.

Coach Cook said "we are all hoping that this year we can go all the way."

If the Lady Scots are going to go all the way they are going to have to do it without 6'1 senior forward Lisa Campbell. A starter all of last year, Campbell had her season suspended with knee surgery after she was hurt in the First Virginia Bank Tippoff Classic.

With the loss of Campbell, sophomores Chris Rajkowski and Meghan Casey will be asked to step up and help to carry the load on offense.

Filling in for the injured Campbell will be sophomore Andrice Jones along with freshman Lolita Johnson.

Other players back to help lead the way are juniors Jennifer Buck, who is returning this year after a knee injury sidelined her for most of last year and Tracy Spires, as well as seniors Jama Cameron and Whitney Williamson.

Freshman Beth Loveday and Lasley Roberson have been seeing playing time early this year, and will be expected to contribute off the bench.

On November 30 the Lady Scots hosted the Wasps of Emory & Henry. The Lady Scots did not play their best basketball, as they committed 23 turnovers. They did however, lead 40-27 at half.

In the first half, Parrott lead the way with 15 points. She was forced to pick up the scoring after Jones was forced to leave the game following an injury. Jones had scored an early seven points, including a three point play to make the score 25-16 with 8:12 left to go in the half.

In the second half it was all Lady Scots as they ran away from the Wasp's.

Parrott began the second half right where she left off, immediately scoring a basket and a free throw, only 15 seconds into the second half.

Later in the half it was Rajkowski who took over, nailing a three point bomb from deep in the corner to make it 59-35 Lady Scots. She came back quickly, driving down the lane and laying it in to make the score 61-36 with 12:13 to go in the game.

The final score was 81-55

The Lady Scots were lead by Parrott with 31 points and seven rebounds. Jones added 10 points and 4 rebounds.

Emory and Henry was lead by senior Jackie Green with 18 points, junior Sallie Lefler with 11 points, and sophomore Angie Simpkins with 11 points and 6 rebounds.

The Lady Scots will next play at home on Dec. 15 against Greensboro College. Then, following a home game against Lycoming on Jan. 4, the Lady Scots will host the MC Invitational on Jan. 6 and 7. Teams will include: Maryville, Marymount, Thomas More, and Franklin & Marshall.

photo by David Downs

Hey, Dee, check this out!

Senior forward Sammy Williams throws one down in the Scots home opener against Centre College. The game was played on Nov. 18.

Some history to talk about at Maryville College

by Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

Over the past few months I have written a few columns. For the most part they have been about Maryville College, while some have focused on just sports in general. Writing about MC is easy, writing about other things is a bit more difficult. I guess it just shows what is really important in my life right now.

This column is again about Maryville. It is about the past, the present, and a small insight about the future.

Seeing all of the freshman athletes this year really gets me to thinking, scary as it may be. Is what I really wonder about is if they have any idea about some of the history here at MC. I mean I know that I have only been here for going on three years, but I know that I will never forget just the small amount of history that I have seen.

In my short time here I have seen so many great games and great performances. Starting with my freshman year, the first memory comes from Honaker Field. The event was a victory over Emory & Henry. The week preceeding was filled with alumni coming in to talk to the team. They were hardly able to finish sentences about a team that they had never beat and that this school had not beat in 13 years.

On that Saturday seniors Peter Oaks, Nick Wilson, and many others played their last game. They had played so many together, but now this one game became the only one that mattered.

The importance of that win really did not sink in until after the game. This is when I saw Wilson and Oaks together. Surrounded by past players and current ones, they were in a world all to themselves. They knew what they had done, as they forever left their mark on that field.

The following winter I went to see a basketball game. Although I remember very little about the outcome, I remember two players working together to a point of being unstoppable. They were then-seniors Honey Brown and Leah Onks. Leah Onks went on to be an All-American and became the all time leading scorer here at MC. It is hard to believe that in a few years people may not even remember them.

To think of all the different athletes and all the different games. Even now I think of what students in a few years will remember. Will they remember pitcher Scott Watson, the all-time winningest pitcher? Will they even remember that baseball team that set a record for most wins just a year ago? Will they remember Chuckie Yates and all of his steals?

Another basketball player that really made last year memorable was Jon Robinette. Minutes before he played his last home game, while the announcer was reading off all of his accomplishments, he marched up into the stands to thank and hug his family. It was like something out of the movies. During his whole career he was all first class and it rubbed off on all of the people around him.

Will anyone ever forget Laure

Sibold? To think of that almost hurts. From the soccer field where she dominated at goalie, to the basketball court where she provided anything she could, she was the consomeny athlete. Maryville would be lucky to ever find another Laura Sibold. Her smile touched teammates and friends and her career here should never be forgotten.

The last person I will never forget is senior Jeremy Landis. Although he never set any records or made too many headlines, he was always there. As Jeremy walked around the field after his last practice it was hard to keep control of all of many feelings. I have been his teammate and his friend for along time and I wish that everybody would always remember everything he did and everything that he stood for on the football field.

Scots looking for consistency

by Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

and

by Joe Malheiro
Sports Writer

The Fighting Scots Basketball team has started out the 1995-96 campaign with a 3-3 start and are looking for big things ahead.

Last year's team finished with a final record of 20-7, losing their final game of the season to Millsaps College in the second round of the NCAA Division III tournament.

This year's team is a senior dominated, featuring four seniors and a junior among the top five. These starters include: seniors Jeremy Burgess, Rusty Wilson, Sammy Williams, Scott McDaniel, and junior Dee Bell.

The Scots opened the season off right by defeating Centre College, at home on November 18, by the score of 68-53. In the game Burgess lead the way with 14 points.

The Scots next game came against King College on November 21 at home. The Scots dropped this game by the score of 67-63. In this game, Burgess again lead the way with 19 points. Williams also helped with 18 of his own points.

On November 25 the Scots hosted the Maryville Invitational Tournament. Last year the Scots won this tournament on a last second shot by Burgess to defeat Mt. Union, Oh.

The Scots again returned to the championship game by defeating Embury-Riddle in the first game by the score of 82-78. Williams paced the Scots with 27 points, 22 of these coming in the second half.

The Scots then faced off against Marietta College in the final. The Scots would have no last second heroics as they dropped this contest by the score of 76-66. Leading the way for the Scots were Williams with 15, junior Jon Vaughn and Burgess both added 13.

Head Coach Randy Lambert had this to say about Williams, "We have asked Sammy to step it up some offensively, he has exceeded expectations so far and is very talented. Sammy needs to be more consistent. He is extremely talented and could be playing even better than he is right now."

Lambert also mentioned that he is optimistic and exited about the season ahead. Lambert stated that he is "looking for offensive consistency," something that he said is "very important to our success as a team." Currently the team is "playing in spurts," which was evident in the Marietta game when the team did not score in the final five minutes of the contest.

Also important for the Scots this year, according to Lambert, will be "more production out of our post game and to depend a little less on our perimeter game." A strength so far this year has been the teams defense.

Lambert says, "Right now the team is playing well defensively, better than last year, but our focus right now is to play consistent on offense. We hope to get on a roll going into the Christmas break."

Some recent action for the Scots saw them defeat one of the top teams in the South Region as they outlasted Greensboro College by the final score of 85-80. The Scots did it the hard way, as they battled back after trailing early in the contest.

With still 14:30 left to go in the first-half, the Scots trailed 16-8. This would be the largest lead for Greensboro, as sophomore Jason Pogue came off the bench to spark the home team with two straight three-point baskets to make the score 14-16 with 12:58 to go before the break.

At half-time, Greensboro held to the narrowest of margins, leading 41-40.

In the second half the Scots came out shooting, lead by Williams. He hit two early three-point baskets to give the Scots the lead at 17:23, with the score at 48-44.

The Scots would take the lead for good on two free throws by junior Dee Bell with 10:58 to go.

Leading a balanced attack was Wilson with 18 points. Also contributing were Williams and Burgess with 16, Bell with 10, and McDaniel added 11 assists.

Sophomore David McGreal also provided a spark on 3 for 3 shooting, including a three-pointer and four assists.

The Scots next play at home on December 16 against Tenn. Wesleyan. This will be their last game before the break. The Scots will play Tusculum after the break on Jan. 6 and 7. The first game will be at Greenville, Tn and the second will be at Maryville.

photo by David Downs

Anything you can do, I can do better!

Junior post player Dee Bell leaves the floor behind as he soars to the basket. The Scots beat Centre College by the score of 68-53.

Congratulations

Congratulations to Men's soccer players Randy Bradley, Chris Reid, and Jody Tootle for recently being named to the All-South Region team for their play this year.

Last year the soccer team was also honored as Reid was named an All-American. This year Tootle took his place and received the honor of being named an All-American.

With all of these players returning next year, watch out.

continued from p. 14

That has been the past and the present. People here now should really try to make an effort to watch athletes like All-Americans Jamie Parrott and Chris Reid. In a few years new athletes will come on to campus and they won't know anything about the people here now. Others that should be seen and remembered are senior basketball players Scott McDaniel, Jeremy Burgess, Sammy Williams, Whitney Williamson, and Jama Cameron. And soccer players Jody Tootle and Amy Paog and so many others. And I can't forget about sophomores Nathan Davenport and Brandon Derrick on the football field. There are so many other volleyball players and soccer players and baseball players that could fill so many pages. Both past and present, all have already made their own statements here at MC.

I know that I could not justify even trying to put every athlete in here. I know that as I write, there are others getting ready to make a name for themselves. I just wish that the younger athletes here would take the time to get to know the older ones as well as they can. If for no other reason than to find out about some of these past athletes and games. I know that my knowledge is limited, but the time is now to try to get to know some of these people. Maryville is a lot like ESPN, great performances everyday. All schools have stories, Maryville has legends.

SONNY & JOANN COANE
Owners

7140 E. Lamar Alexander Pkwy.
Townsend, TN 37882

615/448-1220
Fax: 615/448-1219

LOCATED AT APPLE VALLEY FARMS

BEGIN YOUR ADVENTURE WITH US!

T'was the Night Before Christmas?

Twas the night before Christmas, when all through the Residence Halls
 Not a professor was stirring, not even Dr. Schneibel;
 The stockings were hung on the doors with care,
 In hopes that St. Nicholas soon would be there;
 The college students were nestled all snug in their beds,
 While visions of final exams danced in their heads;
 And my roommate in his 'kerchief, and I in my cap,
 Had just settled our brains for a short night's nap,
 When out in front of Carnegie there arose such a clatter,
 We sprang from our bunkbeds to see what was the matter.
 Away to the window we flew like a flash,
 Tore open the blinds and threw up the sash.
 The moon on the breast of the sprinkled snow
 Gave the luster of mid-day to the benches below,
 When, what to our wondering eyes should appear,
 But a miniature sleigh, and eight tiny reindeer,
 With a little old driver, so lively and quick,
 We knew in a moment it must be St. Nick.
 More rapid than the MC squirrels, his coursers they came,
 And he whistled, and shouted, and called them by name:
 "Now, Dasher! now, Dancer! now, Prancer and Vixen!
 On, Comet! on, Cupid! on, Donner and Blitzen!
 To the top of Carnegie! to the top Anderson Hall!
 Now dash away! dash away! dash away all!"
 As dry leaves that before the wild hurricanes fly,
 When they meet with an obstacle, mount to the sky,
 So up to the Residence Hall-tops the coursers they flew,
 With a sleigh full of grades, criticized term papers, toys, and St. Nicholas too.
 When they meet with an obstacle, mount to the sky,
 So up to the Residence Hall-tops the coursers they flew,
 With a sleigh full of grades, criticized term papers, toys, and St. Nicholas too.
 And then, in a twinkling, we heard on the roof
 The prancing and pawing of each little hoof.
 As we drew in our heads, and was turning around,
 Down the fire escape St. Nicholas came with a bound.
 He was dressed all in fur, orange and garnet from his head to his foot,
 And his clothes were all tarnished with Marriott's gook;
 A bundle of grades, criticized term papers, and toys he had flung on his back,
 And he looked like Dr. Overstreet just opening his pack.
 His eyes—how they twinkled! his dimples how merry!
 His cheeks looked like roses, his nose like a cherry!
 His droll little mouth was drawn up like a bow,
 And the beard of his chin was as white as the snow;
 The stump of a pipe he held tight in his teeth,
 And the smoke it encircled his head like a wreath,
 He had a broad face and a little round belly,
 That shook, when he laughed, like a bowlful of jelly.
 He was chubby and plump, a right jolly old elf,
 And we laughed when we saw him, in spite of ourselves;
 A wink of his eye and a twist of his head,
 Soon gave us to know we had nothing to dread;
 He spoke not a word, but went straight to his work,
 And filled all our small stockings; then turned with a jerk,
 And laying his finger aside of his nose,
 And giving a nod, up the trash chute he rose;
 He sprang to his sleigh, to his team gave a yell,
 And away they all flew like a bat out of hell.
 But I heard him exclaim, ere he drove out of sight,
 "Have a Merry Christmas Maryville College, and to all a good-night."

*Merry
Christmas*

Top Ten Reasons Why Santa Won't Visit MC

10. Santa uses toilet paper to wipe his butt, not to decorate the college.
9. Lloyd Beach is a definite "No Sledding Zone."
8. Rumors persist about students spiking egg nog.
7. The term "Deck The Halls" has been used too frequently.
6. There is no place for Santa to park his sleigh.
5. Santa is scared that landing on Fayerweather would cave in the roof.
4. St. Nick does not use a stairclimber.
3. He's afraid students will leave sour milk and stale cookies from Marriott out for him.
2. Can you say "attack squirrels?"
1. One word: Mistletoe.

Merry Christmas

*The Highland Echo
 would like to wish everyone at Maryville College a safe and Merry Christmas!*

The Highland Echo

February 14, 1996

MARYVILLE COLLEGE

VOL. LXXXI, NO. 5

Inside

Jon & Claire
p. 3

MC student cartoons
pp. 6 & 7

February Meetings
p.8

Basketball coverage
pp. 10 & 11

MC survives crippling winter storm of '96

by Amanda Martin
Editor

It may be a while before any of us find ourselves again singing, "Let it snow, let it snow, let it snow."

On Friday morning, Feb. 2, MC students and all of East Tennessee awoke to find a winter wonderland, complete with ice, sleet, snow, and record breaking low temperatures. No sooner had students and faculty completed the first classes of the semester then classes were canceled for three days.

According to Emily Yarborough, director of communications, the decision to cancel classes is made jointly by Alden Stuart, vice-president and treasurer, and Dean Bolden, academic vice-president. The "verdict" is then given to Yarborough, who contacts local radio and television stations.

The weather conditions, although severe, were not unexpected. According to Yarborough, evening classes for Thursday were canceled before a drop, pellet, or flake fell from the sky.

"It seems strange to call the stations during the daytime," said Yarborough. "I'm used to leaving my list on my night stand and calling at about 5 a.m."

Although the roads were generally impassable for several days, MC students were guarded—Norm Batchelor of campus security was snowed in. He slept in a dorm room in Lloyd Hall when he was not out patrolling.

Batchelor was not the only MC staff member to

WANTED!

The Highland Echo is offering a ten cent reward for the capture of the elusive "Snowball Bandit" pictured here. He was considered to be armed and dangerous until his weapons melted last week.

photo by Kristin Kent

New student center drafted for future

by Sarah West
Assistant Editor

A proposed new student center is now on the docket of changes to take place in the upcoming years at Maryville College.

After a committee of students, staff, and faculty brainstormed for possible components of the student center, the committee submitted a list of suggestions to architects for a master plan.

When asked what the purpose of the student center would be, Dr. William Seymour, vice president of student development, replied, "To use a cliché, it will be the 'campus living-room,' a place where people come together, meet, talk, relax, enjoy themselves, have some entertainment..."

Renovating and adding on to Bartlett Hall is one of the possibilities for the center's location. Bartlett, which is located across the street from Fayerweather Hall, has historical significance because it was once a YMCA and MC students reportedly helped make some of its bricks. Seymour explained that Bartlett, which is now being used by maintenance and house-keeping, could be turned back into being the student facility it once was.

The plan will be finalized by the end of the semester, but the student center will not be here until the money is raised. "I'm hoping within a five-year time frame the student center will be completed," said Seymour. "I feel, after listening to others, the student center is tops on lists, if not two or three, in terms of major projects."

The proposed student center has sitting areas, a cafe/snack bar/alternate eating place, a balcony level, a grand stairway in the tower, a game room, an exercise room, an aerobics room, multi-purpose meeting rooms, a bookstore, a post office, a health center, rooms with copiers and fax machines, and offices for clubs, organizations, Student Senate, Student Programming Board, and maybe the office of Admissions.

The committee was focusing on a new facility until students saw what Bartlett could become. Of course, a new building has not been
see Student Center p. 5

Covenant, procedures neglected by some in MC Senate

by Amanda Martin
Editor

"It's showtime!...."

said one Student Senate officer to another at the beginning of debate over the Student Programming Board's request for more funds at the final Senate meeting of the fall semester.

Unfortunately, when the credits rolled at the end of this side-show, the Maryville College Covenant was not to be found.

And if one searched out the rules of order for parliamentary procedure, one would find them under a secondary title, maybe "Key Grip," or "Best Boy."

The proposal was, of course, voted down. If the vote was the only thing that happened at this meeting, there would be very little to report in an article of this length. It is the job of the Student Senate to accept or reject proposals as it sees fit, according to certain principles of procedure and of the Covenant.

But as Hamlet said, "Ay, there's the rub!"

For at this meeting, a small group of officers and senators cast aside procedure and the ideals expressed in the Covenant in order to hammer home their personal opinions against the proposal. Although the majority of senators either asked fair questions or did not ask any at all, it was this small group which turned the meeting into something of a "free-for-all." Therefore, the actions which we take issue with have nothing to do with the SPB, or with the proposal itself, but with the conduct of some officers and senators.

Although there were many specific incidents to illustrate what I mean by "cast aside procedure and ideals expressed in the covenant," two examples in particular stand out in my mind the most.

One is the general technique of some of the senators during their questioning of the SPB representatives. According to procedure, there is a point in the meeting in which senators are allowed to speak only to ask questions. In many instances, however, these "questions" were nothing more than thinly veiled speeches masked in the form of somewhat unanswerable, certainly irrelevant, questions (such as the timing of the proposal...it was too early, it was too late, etc.) which were clearly an attack. Although this "masking" is not officially against procedure, the spirit in which the senators addressed the "questions" was definitely questionable when related to the Covenant.

The Maryville College Covenant, officially observed last week on campus during Covenant Week, states that, "Our community has an obligation and responsibility involving relationships and mutual understanding, appreciation, and respect." If segments of the senate do not believe they should vote for a particular proposal, we would suggest that this opposition can exist in an atmosphere of "understanding, appreciation, and respect."

The second example of procedure violations rests with the officers. The requirements that officers (and senators) follow procedure and insure fairness are clearly outlined in the book "Rules of Order," by James E. Davis, (pp. 149-150). When asked his impression of the role of the officers, Dr. William Seymour, vice-president for student development, said, "My impression is that the officers are supposed to be objective, particularly the chair."

This objectivity was lost when the SPB was not allowed to respond to a presentation of their senate charter, a section of which was manipulated in bold type on an overhead projector. "The board manages a programming budget..." was, to anyone in attendance who was even remotely objective, a clear accusation of fund mismanagement.

Again, the issue has nothing to do with the proposal itself, or with SPB, but with the breaking of procedure.

But procedure was followed to the letter in one area—when it was time to cut SPB representatives off while they were answering questions, they were cut off on time every time!

So where does the Echo stand in all of this? We submitted a proposal requesting $2,470, similar to a proposal which was granted last year, which would pay for items for which we are not budgeted: spot color (color writing, etc.) and a color photo for the front page; syndicated cartoons; computer upgrades; and funds to pay a computer layout person. The proposal was tabled, and we eventually pulled it in order to revise our figures (since we have produced two issues since then). We plan to resubmit this month.

We have received verbal support for this proposal from officers and senators alike. Furthermore, students voted overwhelmingly for these measures a couple of years ago in a campus-wide survey. However, any professional newspaper with any sort of objectivity does not combine fiscal policy with editorial policy. It is the duty of The Highland Echo to report items that are important to the student body.

Are we, by reporting our views on this issue, biting the hand which we will shortly be asking to feed us? Maybe. As a result, we might not get our way. But color is nothing compared to our integrity.

There is a valuable lesson here to be learned by all student leaders: sticking to the duties which we agreed to perform when we took our jobs, whether it be editor of The Echo, or student senate officer or senator, does not always mean we will get our way. If my job means I must put aside personal feelings and ambitions in order to perform my duty, I will. Likewise, if the senate is about to pass a measure which an officer or a senator does not agree with, that does not mean open season on the rules, nor on the Covenant. If it is your job not to state your opinions because you are an officer, or to ask fair and objective questions in spite of personal feelings because you are a senator, then your course of action should be clear.

So, we will see if all of the Maryville College students senate will be able to weigh proposals objectively. We challenge the "silent majority" of senators to defend the senate and MC students against any and all covenant and procedural violation, manipulation, and neglect.

We also challenge students to get involved by attending senate meetings. If there are current members who cannot be objective, fair, and respectful, we need to vote for new representatives who can.

by Alex Little
Student Senate
President

The student senate met once during January term, and many issues were discussed. Vice president Debbie Shewfelt explained the proposed design plans for the new student center to the senate and entertained questions from the floor.

Mike Kenady petitioned and received $40 for the Carnegie sponsored "Battle of the Bands."

The last pressing issue we discussed was the progress of the Resident Life Committee. As mentioned in previous articles, I convened the Residence Life Committee to address the inadequacies in our residence life policies. Over the course of the semester, the committee came up with solutions to five major concerns facing the student body. These concerns were: the lack of indoor space for bike racks, the room consolidation policy, a roommate's rights lists, a room selection process, and a revised alcohol policy. All of the proposed policies except the alcohol policy have been approved so far.

Senate meetings are open to all students. For meeting time and place information, ask a class or hall senator.

The Highland Echo

David Downs
Assistant Editor

Amanda Martin
Editor

Sarah West
Assistant Editor

Chris Stephens
Sports Editor
Reporters

Sarah Christians, Dara DiGiacomo, Allison Dunn, Kenyon Evans, Lori Leffel, Becky Lill, Joe Malheiro, Kristie Paschel, Michelle Shuler, Kim Syphrett, Matt Waters.

Columnists

Alex Little, Bo McMichael, Jonathan Peters, Claire Stancampiano

Photography Editors

Yosef Addis, Kristin Kant

Computer Layout

Susan Rayborn, Traci Tidwell

Advertising Manager/Designer

Patrick Leslie

Advisor
Jeff Gary

Cartoonists
Chris West, Scott West

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR . . .

The Echo welcomes your comments, letters and guest columns. All written material to be published in the Echo must be typed and accompanied by your name, post office box number, and phone number. Send material to The Highland Echo, Box 2511. The Echo can be reached by calling the Student Publications Office at campus extension 8176. The opinions expressed in the Echo do not necessarily reflect the views of Maryville College.

Widespread panic has strong gravitational pull

by Jonathan Peters
Columnist

Extraordinary circumstances like blackouts, unpopular verdicts, or massive amounts of snow in places which aren't meant to have it, seem to do something very unique to the human decision making process. To illustrate: at Kroger last week, people were trying to give money to the guy driving the bread truck before he could even get to the loading dock behind the store. People at the "Bela Fleck" concert that night were on their feet cheering ravenously after each solo because ice was falling from the sky. Naturally, they would have been cheering for "Bela Fleck" and the boys anyway, but this was a special kind of insane and out of control energy unmatched at most concerts (except maybe "Phish").

When I was a kid, my friends and I were enamored with fireworks for some time. Believe it or not, there were many positive, valuable lessons learned from this experience—like learning how to buy money orders, keep records, research state laws, develop honor codes with friends having the common goal of blowing up everyone else, etc.

However, various negative effects were also seen as a result of this phase, including hearing loss, detention time in school, various battle burns, and the omnipresent distrust of neighborhood conservatives.

One of our favorite things to do would be to cut the sticks off a bunch of bottle rockets and stand around them when they would go off. The rockets would take off in a flurry of fire and smoke in completely random directions swerving around us uncontrollably until they exploded.

It's about the most exciting thing a twelve year old ought to see.

Anyway, seeing people panicking in the Kroger parking lot brought back some of these fond memories. Don't get me wrong, I completely understand not wanting to get stuck with no food in a snow storm in the mountains. I also understand the concept of wanting to be prepared for the worst. But then, people who are really prepared don't have much sympathy for the poor folks running around Kroger in the sleet with crazed blood-shot eyes screaming, "give me milk, or give me death!"

I guess when something like that strikes, it brings out the werewolf in people. I lived just south of L.A. when the riots broke out, so that kind of concern was fairly prominent in my outwardly conservative neighborhood at the time. Seeing a group of people smash a store front and take off laughing down the riotous, burning street with anything they could carry kind of made us wonder if they were actually making a conscious decision to protest the seemingly unfair verdict, or if they just got caught up in the overwhelming energy of widespread panic—kind of like one of those bottle rockets with no stick.

It's a frighteningly natural tendency. I just talked to one of our security guards, Norm Batchelor, who was at Kent State when that famous riot happened in the sixties. According to Norm, the shootings happened when an undercover police officer taking photographs of an anti-war protest was confronted by a group of students. When the students demanded to have the man's film so they wouldn't be expelled from the university, the officer took out a gun and started waving it around and yelling, "you son's of bitches!! etc., etc..." The National Guard commander, seeing a guy who looked like a student waving a gun around and cussing, frantically ordered open fire. Random, uncontrolled shootings ensued which left at least "Four Dead in Ohio" (Crosby Stills Nash and Young).

So, how does one survive the gravitational pull of panic caused by such phenomena as massive snowfall in Tennessee? Well, a wise person once said that trying to prevent adrenaline butterflies is considerably less effective than trying to get them to fly in formation. In other words, focusing excitement tends to be considerably more healthy. This saying applies to nearly any situation—from getting on stage, to taking a test. After all, no one wants to end up like the guy in "The Shining."

Weddings, dachshunds, and St. Valentine's day make a good mix

by Claire Stancampiano
Columnist

The thing called love... there's nothing about it that hasn't been picked apart, poeticized, analyzed, turned into an acoustic song, and proclaimed uproariously after a few mugs of cheap white zinfandel. Even the way it rolls off your tongue, "love," has a very soothing effect on the soul.

My mother made her own wedding dress. She bought fresh flowers that morning and put them in her straw hat. My parents had selected a justice of the peace who was a woman, and when they arrived at her house that day to be married, she was doing some marriage counseling in her kitchen and asked if they might wait awhile to perform the ceremony. So they had their reception first, which consisted of going to Woolworth's for hot fudge sundaes. The Justice performed the marriage in her housecoat and flip flops with two dachshunds at her side. They asked her to say "husband" and wife instead of "man" and wife as my dad stood there in his Italian platform shoes. They went home and Ellen, the woman responsible for my creation, had a party with chocolate cake, wine, and chicken liver paté in the shape of a dog (symbolic of two dogs my parents had at the time) and with my dad's friend Bob, an artist who made moving 3-D constructions in frames.

This to me is one of the most romantic stories I've ever heard, even though later my parents decided they still liked each other, but no way in Hell could they live together.

St. Valentine was Italian, a definite bonus in any situation, but where did the practice of purchasing personalized ice cream cakes for our lovers begin? According to the Encyclopedia Americana, there were a number of St. Valentines. The Valentine we know was considered the patron saint of love and was martyred on February 14; thus the tradition, which has long since been "vulgarized," began. Valentine's day started out having deep religious significance, so if you don't want to participate in the day's activities, tell people you're offended by their lack of respect for your belief and dedication to the martyred St. Valentine.

"The sending of actual love notes did not begin until the Middle Ages" and with the development and organization of the postal system, homemade tokens and cards of affection became even more popular. Then "Hallmark" and "Whitman's" got a hold of the day, and the whole thing went to pot.

Boys like Valentine's day because it gives them the right to be romantic and not be laughed at by other boys. I like Valentine's day, even though it is a holiday that has obviously declined in meaning throughout the centuries, because more than anything this clinically depressed world needs a day to celebrate love, in any form.

Scott West's "Weird Perspectives"

Polkadotas

At the Movies with Bo &amp; Chris

Romance + adventure + drama = The Right Stuff

by Bo McMichael
Columnist
and Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

Christmas might seem three-hundred and twenty-one days away; however, Santa Clause has come early. Or could he be overdue?

The holiday season is over, and that goes for the year of 1995 as well. The top grossers were "Toy Story" at $200 million, and "Batman Forever," totaling a close second at 184.2 million dollars. Although many people saw these films, we will also mention the lowest grossing films of '95. (Who dipped into their pocket for the lowest grossing film and enjoyed them in the process?) Does "Cutthroat Island" ring a bell? "Judge Dredd," "First Knight," "Nixon," and "Money Train" all shared the "Island of Death" disease in 1995. The film industry was said to be in financial trouble with high budgeted films going a bust, such as, the famed "Waterworld." The funny thing is that Hollywood banked in a record 5.4 billion dollars in ticket sales.

This marked the most ticket sales in entertainment history.

The best thing about this record-breaking year is that it is over, and a new year awaits. There is no telling what the movie makers have in store for us.

The New Year started with a bang, or was it a flute, sacs, or a drum? You never can tell with Mr. Holland. "Mr. Holland's Opus" spans almost thirty years of American history, and in the process makes everyone want to become a teacher. Richard Dreyfuss stars as a piano player who decides to try his luck at teaching due to slow times with his tunes. Many years later he realizes that this is the place to stay, and the effect he has on his students is incredible.

Bo: "I am very biased when it comes to movies dealing with teaching, especially when a movie is as deep as this one. My buddy was absent; however, that does not mean you should be. This movie will touch places in your soul that you never knew were there. The Oscar is calling for Dreyfuss, and you will know why if you see him and his opus."

Does anyone want to go on a cruise? The ticket will cost about six dollars, and you won't even get wet. The only thing you have to do is watch out for a "White Squall."

This new movie by Ridley Scott ("Alien," "1492") stars Jeff Bridges and seven young men searching for their place in this world. Bridges plays a tough-minded sailor in a world where heroes are needed.

Bo: "'The Lord of the Flies Goes Sailing in the Caribbean' would be a proper title to this movie. The only thing different is that Ridley Scott brings the terror right into the audience, just as he did with 'Alien.' You might want to take some medicine because sea sickness is inevitable. This is a must-see from start to finish.

We have given you a tear-jerker and a stomach-twister, now let us talk about the romance in the theaters for '96. "Bed of Roses" brings a man and a woman together. Flowers are suppose to be a woman's best friend (or is it diamonds?). Christian Slater and Mary Stuart Masterson are the figures in this fairy tale for the Nineties. Masterson plays a young business woman who is romanced by a persistent florist, Slater."

Chris: "Hey, I finally get to voice an opinion! That Bo, what a guy. I had some wonderful company, and, needless to say, it wasn't Bo! However, I think that I enjoyed the movie much more than she. I am a huge fan of the movie "Some Kind of Wonderful," starring Masterson. She is a personal favorite. So when Mary Stuart Masterson shows up, I'm there. This movie was short and sweet (86 min.) and I enjoyed every minute of it. Give the one you love a great Valentine's Day present and take him or her to see this one.

"When God created the Earth he also made 'Beautiful Girls,' the movie that every college student should see. This movie reunites old high school friends, and, in the process, sparkles with love, life, and comedy throughout. The star list is a mile long in this battle of the sexes with Matt Dillion, Lauren Holly, Timothy Hutton, Rosie O'Donnell, Natalie Portman, and Uma Thurman."

Bo: "Bring a date, bring an old buddy, or just bring a smile, because this movie is worth the ticket stub. I went solo on this movie. The bad thing is that it was sold out by the time he reached the ticket booth. I will be polite and say he was only upset. I am sorry, big guy. In "Beautiful Girls," the show is stolen by 13-year-old Natalie Portman ("Heat," "The Professional"). She was incredible."

Chris: "Upset is the understatement of the century, big man. I hope everyone goes to see this one and tells me how great it is, just so I can have that many more reasons to give Bo grief about seeing it without me. Thanks for nothing."

A quick review of some other films that are playing now in local theaters: "12 Monkeys:" Brad Pitt was excellent, but come with an open mind about the future. "Othello:" This Shakespeare play adapted to the big screen will leave you with a taste for literature. "From Dusk Till Dawn:" George Clooney (Dr. Ross Green from "ER") makes a house call, and his cure is a large stake and some fire. This vampire flick is more of a comedy than a horror. "Screamers:" This futuristic film is interesting and will be on video soon, so wait! "Bio-Dome:" You will laugh if you like Pauly Shore."

Due to the snow, sleet, and ice there was a multitude of movies we were unable to view; however we've heard great things about "Broken Arrow," "Leaving Las Vegas," "The Juror," "Black Sheep," and "Dead Man Walking." So go out and see some films, because we are definitely getting "Cabin Fever." Until next time, we hope to see you "At The Movies....."

Way Out West

by Chris West

He was good. Real good. But Mary still knew a few tricky shortcuts.

Way Out West

by Chris West

One day Hamburglar just snapped!

Wake Up?

by David Downs
Assistant Editor

"Empty"

God Lives Underwater
✓✓✓✓✓1/2

This underground band has finally surfaced to conquer a world that is thriving for its sound. With an alternative/industrial/techno sound, God Lives Underwater has emerged from the depths as a new sound in alternative rock. Their first single, "All Wrong," with lyrics like: "Here I my anger and me / Temper makes it hard to see / This situation I'm in again / Everything must come to an end now," has begun to appear regularly on radio stations throughout the country. Other songs like "Don't know how to be" and the techno love song "23" combined with the musicianship of band members Adam Kary, Andrew McGee, Jeff Turzo, and David Reilly, who also wrote all the lyrics, totals a combination that transforms this album into a religious experience.

"Mellon Collie and the Infinite Sadness"

The Smashing Pumpkins
✓✓✓✓✓1/2

The Smashing Pumpkins return after a vacation following their mega successful sophomore effort, "Siamese Dream." "Mellon Collie and the Infinite Sadness," a double CD set, combines so many different musical sides that labeling this album would not do it justice. The album's first release, "Bullet with Butterfly Wings," with lyrics like: "The world is a vampire / Sent to drain" has been a continuous MTV favorite, and their new release, "1979," which is currently skyrocketing up the charts, defines today's image of the current generation: young, free, and fearless. The best aspect of this album is the more instrumental and acoustic music in songs like "Galapagos" and "Take Me Down." Combined with songs like "Bullet" and "Zero," this album includes almost every element found in music. Guitarist James Iha proves himself as one of the best accessories in the band with his methodic, yet sometimes powerful, guitar playing. While other band members D'Arcy and Jimmy Chamberlain complete the sound that The Smashing Pumpkins are identified by. Frontman Billy Corgan, with a new bald haircut, reflects the excellence of this album. His voice, another characteristic that is identifiable of the band, drives the songs into every possible avenue that can be explored. Despite having a number of songs that are satisfactory, Corgan and Co. have released an album that is well worth the time to listen too.

Pearl Jam Live from Brixton

✓✓✓✓✓

The inside cover of the CD reads: "they came, they saw, they conquered." Pearl Jam has not only mesmerized audiences, but they have also survived one member change and a battle with Ticketmaster over ticket costs. Yet, they continue to set a standard that other bands ferociously try to achieve. This two CD set, imported from Italy and recorded live in Brixton, is honestly the best performing live CD that I have ever listened to. Included in this set are four previously unrecorded songs, including "State of Love and Trust" from the "Singles" soundtrack. This live CD set reinforces Pearl Jam's reputation as one of the best live acts to see in concert.

Classic	✓✓✓✓✓
Excellent	✓✓✓✓✓
Good	✓✓✓✓
Fair	✓✓
Bad	✓

Do you have a new CD that you would like to see displayed in "Wake Up?" Call x8729 to make arrangements for a listening time

Bowling for Scholars

by Carl Gombert

When physicists fight . . .

Student Center continued from p.1

ruled out. Another meeting to show the campus the preliminary plans for the student center and campus alterations will be scheduled. The committee is seeking input from others.

The "conceptual" changes to the campus include renovations to the third floor of Thaw Hall and the third and fourth floors of Fayerweather Hall to make use of this space. In order to achieve the goals of 1000 full-time students and 800 residents by the year 2000, new ideas for future housing are being considered, such as townhouses, apartments, etc.

Traffic patterns could be modified to be more pedestrian-oriented. Since maximizing the beauty of the MC campus is priority, large parking lots are being kept out of the center of campus. The Center for Campus Ministries (CCM) and the Fine Arts Center (FAC) are also being considered for change.

"The architects," Seymour said, "have tried to be creative while maintaining the beauty of the campus and the things we like now."

Of course, all changes are contingent upon the raising of funds. Students, especially those with suggestions, should attend the upcoming meeting when the plans will again be exhibited.

On Thursday, February 15, an open forum on the Master Plan for the campus will be held for students at 3 p.m. in 216 Thaw Hall. Preliminary plans and the drawings for the new student center will be reviewed. Everyone is welcomed and encouraged to attend.

The Echo Opinion Poll

The opinion poll questions in the last issue were: 1. With what aspect of this college are you least pleased? and 2. What is your favorite sitcom? Of the 40 students who voted, 23 percent said they were most displeased with the cost of tuition at Maryville College, 19 percent disliked the parking conditions, and 16 percent were discouraged with residence life. Some of the other categories mentioned were student apathy, food, and advice on academic criteria. "Friends" was listed as the favorite sitcom of 29 percent of those voting, "Seinfeld" won 13 percent, and "Living Single" received 10 percent. Some of the other favorites were "Frasier," "Mad About You," "News Radio," "Home Improvement," and "The Andy Griffith Show."

Opinion Poll

1. With what aspect of this college are you most pleased?

.....

2. Who is your favorite actress?

"But Mom, there are PEOPLE under my bed!"

"Do you think they'll serve refreshments?"

Cartoons courtesy of Dr. Gombert's
January term
cartooning class!

Einstein's Early Theoretical Attempts

NO SWIMMING

Callie McPherson 1-18-96

"I say we ruff her up a bit, then we'll see if she doesn't have a bone to spare."

Intelligent LIFE

* "It MUST Be some form of HUMAN Pleasure..."

MA AN' PA ALWAYS SAID I HAD POTENTIAL
BUT I NEVER REALIZED HOW MUCH.

ALL MY FRIENDS GOT JEALOUS
WHEN THE MARY KAY SALESLADY
CAME BY AN' OFFERED ME A JOB,
SHE SAID I HAD GREAT SKIN.

AN' WHEN THE ARMY RECRUITIN' GUY
CAME BY AN' TOLD ME ALL 'BOUT
MY FUTURE, AN' HOW GREAT IT COULD BE, 'CAUSE I HAD A LONG LINE OF KILLER INSTINK.

WIT' POTENTIAL, GREAT SKIN, AN'
A GOOD KILLER INSTINK, WHO NEEDS COLLEGE.

Con-Artist

Special thanks to Chris West, Scott
West, and Dr.
Gombert for their cartoonseries, which we will run during the semester!

The tree of knowledge

Pastor Hoss Emert is known for going overboard when trying to attract visitors.

Seinfeld

A Pyromaniac's Worst Nightmare

February meetings still an MC tradition

by Matt Waters
Staff Writer

In an atmosphere of freedom and sensitivity, Maryville College bears witness to God's revelation in Jesus Christ who challenges all human beings to search for truth, to work for justice, to develop wisdom, and to become loving persons.

So reads the college's Statement of Purpose, and so lies the ground-work for February meetings.

As gatherings to explore various sectors of spiritual beliefs, these meetings provide a challenge of sectarian and moral growth and advance. Chaplain Stephen Nickle summarized the sessions as "faith in action."

Traditionally, February meetings are a time of revival and renewal for those involved. They are also a period of recommitment, and the combination of preaching, discussion, and outreach are meant to touch the lives of the participants.

This tradition carries over into modern times, and the undertone continues to inspire personal spiritual action with an emphasis on ethics.

The sessions will be led by Dr. George Tinker, associate professor of cross-cultural ministries at Denver's Iliff School of Theology. Tinker will discuss the role of religion in Native American society as a balanced combination with Christianity. One of his sermons will focus on the coyote and the gospel. Tinker will compare such Native American themes with the ideas found in the Bible.

The Rev. Stephen Nickle reinforced the fact that the meetings' goal is not to make Christians out of non-Christians, but to promote original thoughts.

These will help us both examine our faith and focus on new ideas or growing edges of our own faith," he said.

"It is all in process, growing at an appropriate pace. February meetings are a challenge to growth, not a statement of 'believe or burn'."

Most advertising for this annual event has been done on campus through the support and funding of the Staley Foundation in New York. The discussions are for the whole campus community, and all interested persons are welcome to attend.

The meetings are applicable to anyone, regardless of religion. "We as a community are about searching for truth, working for justice, developing wisdom, and becoming loving persons," said Nickle, quoting the statement of purpose.

photo by Kristin Kant

Talkin' with the Prez...

Senior Becky Heckler took time out during the "100 Days Celebration" to greet MC President Dr. Gerald Gibson.

Snow

continued from p. 1

sleep in dorm rooms. In order to keep the cafeteria running, four Marriott employees bunked in Carnegie over the weekend. According to food services Director Marge Bradley, she asked the employees to bring some extra clothes on Thursday so they would be prepared to stay in case the roads got bad.

"It was very hard for them because only four of them were here," she said. Normally, about 24 employees work on and off during this time period. Also, many more students ate in the cafeteria than usual during that weekend. The four workers ended up serving about 300 meals three times a day. It was not until Saturday that more workers could get to campus.

"The students were very patient, and we really appreciated it," said Bradley.

Message to CELL students from Kelly Franklin

If you are thinking that you may graduate from MC, please read this carefully! If you are SURE that you won't graduate from MC, you don't need to read this.

From this year, the College has begun to implement a new curriculum. One of the changes involves freshman orientation, and that change will make a difference in the classes you will need to take to graduate.

Under the old curriculum, students who entered as part-time students with CELL had to take freshman orientation and inquiry classes (Inquiry 110 and Orientation 110, 4 credits total) when they became full-time students at MC if they wanted to graduate here. Some of you may have already taken these courses; if you have you can also stop reading this note now.

Under the new curriculum, international students who are non-native speakers of English will have a choice. They may take a new course called "International Students Seminar 130" (3 credits), which will meet the requirement for freshman orientation. Or, they may take the regular freshman orientation, which will be offered every fall. The ISS 130 for internationals will be offered each semester.

This ISS 130 will REPLACE the part-time English class. So, part-time students will basically be taking one more regular college class instead of the part-time class, which only gave 2 credits and did not fulfill any other requirement for graduation. For example, part-time students this semester are registered for 6 to 8 credit hours PLUS the 3 hours of ISS 130. They get college credit for the part-time course and also meet the requirement for freshman orientation.

We hope the new course will make life easier for the part-time students their first semester. However, students who took the part-time course in the past but who have not taken the freshman orientation and inquiry class WILL need to take ISS 130 or the regular freshman orientation before graduation. Here are your choices:

1. You can register for a special section of ISS 130 that will be offered this semester. The class will start meeting the week of February 12; we will set class hours to fit your current schedule. It will meet for a total of 5 hours each week.

2. You can plan to take ISS 130 next fall.

3. You can take the regular freshman orientation seminar (Fresh. seminar 120) next fall. Note: you might NOT want to take this class, because you will not be a new student. You will already know most of the things being taught (library use and MC information in general) and you may be bored.

If you can add the ISS 130 this semester, I think it will be the easiest method for you to meet the requirement.

If you will take ISS 130 this semester, please come by my office as soon as possible. The cost should be nothing, since you are already a full-time student, unless you are taking many courses and this might create an overload (more than 18 hours). If this will give you more than 18 hours I would recommend that you wait till next semester, anyway.

Stuart to retire; MC searching for new VP

by Sarah West
Assistant Editor

By the end of February, Maryville College may have a new treasurer/vice president of business affairs. Alden Stuart, the vice president of business affairs since 1990, is retiring.

"This person affects the college in many different ways," said Dr. William Seymour, vice president of student development.

Seymour described the position as "multifaceted" since it encompasses the operations of the business office, fiscal affairs, accounting, payroll, the fiscal plant, budget reports, auditing, the management of Isaac's and the bookstore, maintenance, non-credit programs, and personnel reports.

Dr. Gerald Gibson, MC president, appointed a search committee, including Seymour; a board of director; Debbie Shewfelt, a student on the Planning Budget Advisors Committee; a staff member; and a faculty member. The committee has been meeting since early January to locate a group of potential persons for the job.

The committee is looking for someone who has experience in fiscal affairs in an higher education setting and who can manage programs and lead MC to meeting the MC 2000 goals.

After reviewing approximately 100 applications, the group has selected 11 semifinalists who will participate in a phone interview. Next, recommendations will be made for on-campus interviews. Finally, Gibson will hire the new "caretaker of the budget."

After saying that the process should be completed by the end of February, Seymour said, "I am pleased with the work of the committee."

Stuart's wife, Beth Stuart, currently runs the bookstore and Isaac's.

ATTENTION ARTISTS!

Submissions are now being accepted for the upcoming March exhibit in the Fine Arts Center gallery. The deadline for contributions is February 23. For more information, contact Thelma Bianco at x8154.

DRB and J-Board report

11/16

•One student in Carnegie was given a warning for illegal entry/ unauthorized use of keys.

11/17

•A case involving vandalism of campus grounds was dismissed.

11/18

•The case involving a student charged with vandalism of campus grounds and illegal entry at Pearsons Hall resulted in restitution.

11/19

•First offense was the consequence of an alcohol violation by a student in Lloyd Hall.

•A student in Lloyd Hall broke the quiet hours and received a warning.

11/21

•Two students in Copeland Hall were charged with an alcohol offense, but the case was dismissed.

•The two Lloyd students charged with the theft/ unauthorized use of property received a warning.

11/22

•A case involving a Carnegie student charged with alcohol was dismissed.

•A student in Lloyd received a warning for illegal entry.

11/25

•Two students in Lloyd received a warning for failure to comply/visitation according to a break house agreement.

12/4

•A case involving a student in Lloyd charged with disorderly conduct and harassment was dismissed.

•Of the seven students in Lloyd charged with alcohol offense, five received first offense, one second offense, and one was dismissed.

12/5

•Two students in Gamble received a warning for disorderly conduct.

12/9

•The six students charged with illegal entry and alcohol offense in the P.E. Building received a first offense and were required to complete ten hours of community service.

12/11

•A case involving a student charged with failure to comply in Lloyd was dismissed.

12/14

•A case involving a student in Copeland charged with unauthorized use of keys in pending.

1/10

•Two Davis Hall residents received a warning for visitation violation.

1/12

•The case of a Carnegie Hall student charged with harassment and failure to comply is pending.

1/13

•Two Gamble Hall residents received first offense for an alcohol violation

1/18

•A case including a Carnegie Hall resident charged with an alcohol violation is pending.

J-Board

10/27

•The case involving two students charged with theft and dishonesty in the book store resulted in restitution.

The Highland Echo Classifieds

•THE CHILDREN'S MUSEUM (Boston, MA). Summer Program is a fulltime, 10 week exhibit interpreter position, 9am - 5pm. Salary is $6.30/hour. Application deadline is March 30, 1996

•SPRING ENVIRONMENTAL PROFESSIONALS: The Environmental Careers Organization, a national, nonprofit, educational organization, is seeking resumes from current students and recent grads who are interested in 3 - 4 months paid internships with leading government agencies, corporations, consulting firms, and nonprofits. Projects available year round and nationwide. Majors: Biology, chemistry, engineering, computer science, environmental studies, recreation. Interested applicants should submit a resume and cover letter to: The Environmental Careers Organization,

286 Congress Street, 3rd Floor, Boston, MA 02210-1009. CAREER SERVICES HAS ADDITIONAL ENVIRONMENTAL INTERNSHIP LISTINGS AS WELL AS IN MANY OTHER AREAS OF INTEREST. MOST SUMMER INTERNSHIP APPLICATION DEADLINES ARE VERY EARLY IN THE YEAR

•MINORITY STUDENT ADMINISTRATIVE SUMMER INTERNSHIP PROGRAM Oak Ridge Associated Universities, Oak Ridge, TN geared to the professional development and career orientation of minority students with interests in, or related to, accounting, human resources, training, budgeting, computers, purchasing, and facility management. Typical majors sought include but are not limited to: business, management, economics, computer science. Must be member of minority group; i.e. Black, Asian Pacific, American Indian, or Hispanic. Non U.S. citizens must fill out work eligibility forms. GPA 3.0 is required but less will be considered. Must have completed junior or senior year college or first year graduate school. Compensation is between $335-$420/week. Housing assistance available. Deadline to apply is February 16, 1996. Come to Career Services for more information.

•GOVERNOR'S INTERN PROGRAM FOR GEORGIA RESIDENTS: Must be currently enrolled junior, senior, grad student or law student; 2.5 GPA or higher. Summer is full-time 40 hours from May 27 through August 2. Pay is $750.00 for undergrads, $1000 for grads. Application deadline is April 15.

•FISH AND WILDLIFE ASSOCIATES, INC.: Positions for Fishery Biologist, Chemist, Environmentalist. Salary is $8.60-$15.00/hour. Hiring begins in February and continues throughout the year for seasonal and full-time.

•CAREERS '96 COMING TO NASHVILLE CONVENTION CENTER MARCH 11 AND 12. Meet privately with Nashville's managers from top firms (technical, restaurant, sales/retail), save time and money in your job search. To be considered for pre-arranged interview send resume to FAX: 407-683-7839 or mail RCI, 1655 Palm Beach, Lakes Blvd., West Palm Beach, FL 33401 (include code #NSH61). Admission is free. Oak Ridge Associated Universities, Oak Ridge TN offers temporary, part-time, and summer job opportunities in addition to the full-time listings which are kept on file in Career Services.

•DEAN WITTER REYNOLDS, INC. Knoxville. Need someone to do telemarketing 4-6 hours per week, two evenings per week. Very flexible. $6.00/hour plus bonuses. Must have pleasant voice and good English and communication skills. This prestigious company name would look good on a resume! Come by Career Services for application procedure.

•CHECK THE JOBS BOARD IN FAYERWEATHER LOBBY. ANYONE MAY COME BY THE OFFICE TO LOOK THROUGH OUR BOOK

ON-CAMPUS INTERVIEWS

•PROFFITT'S/MCRAE'S will be on campus March 1. Come by Career Services if interested in interviewing for full-time management

Scots return home, fall to Rust

by Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

The Maryville Scots basketball teams were in need of a late season rally. After a win at SCAD earlier last week, it looked as if the team may have finally gotten on track. The team started out 6-5, with game after game coming on the road. The Scots returned home on Feb. 10 against Rust College in the second game of a double header with the Lady Scots.

It was a game that saw the Scots jump out to an early lead and even look like they might run away with the game. This never happened.

After falling behind in the opening minutes, Senior Sammy Williams hit a three-pointer to give the Scots the lead 8-6 with 16:31 to go in the game.

Sophomore Spencer Beaty then added another three-pointer to up the lead to seven, 14-7, with 14:14 to go before the half.

Minutes later Senior Jeremy Burgess went over the 1,000 point mark for his MC career with a three-pointer. That made the score 17-9 with 12:29 to go in the opening half. The next several minutes saw Senior Scott McDaniel take over. He scored nine points in the spurt, and helped his team to a 32-18 lead, with only 4:52 to go in the half.

Greg Boyd then brought down the house with a follow up slam of a Jon Vaughn miss to end the half. At the break the Scots held a 37-29 lead.

In the second half both teams started slow, but it was Rust that made the first run. They raced out on the strength of an 11-2 run that put them into the lead at 40-39 with 13:40 to go in the game.

For the remainder of the game, neither team could put the other away. Vaughn tied the score at 59 all and then again at 61 all in the final three minutes.

With just over a minute to go, Rust's Gerald Davidson hit what proved to be the game winner, as it gave Rust a 63-61 lead.

The Scots had a final chance after a missed free throw, but could not convert. The final score was 63-61.

With every game a must win for the Scots, this loss hurt their tournament chances. They were led in the game by Beaty, McDaniel, and Williams, who all had 12. Burgess added 11. McDaniel also dished out eight assists.

The Scots next three games will be at home. On Feb. 12 they host Savannah, on Feb. 14 Emory & Henry, and then on Feb. 17 Centre College comes into town. Their final regular season game will be at Centre College on Feb. 21.

On Feb. 23 and 24 they will participate in the American Weavers Classic here at MC. Games will be at 6 pm and 8 pm on Feb. 23 and at 2 pm and 4 pm on Feb. 24.

photo by Yosef Addis

Give him two!

Senior Brian Mills secures the ball in a game against Rust on Feb. 5. The Scots fell 63-61.

Lady Scots beat Rust; record night for Parrott

by Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

In a night that was Senior Jamie Parrott become the all-time leading scorer in MC history, the Lady Scots defeated visiting Rust College by the final of 97-39.

The Lady Scots were led by Parrott, with 41, and Junior Jennifer Buck with 14.

From early on in the game it was evident that it was Parrott's night.

After a Tracy Spires basket to start the game, Parrott added her first two field goals to make the score 6-0 only a few minutes into the game.

After Senior Whitney Williamson hit a three-pointer, Parrott added another basket to make it 16-8 with 15:22 remaining in the half.

With a little over nine minutes to go in the half, it looked like the Lady Scots and Parrott would have to wait another day to see the record fall. The Parrott took over. She scored 14 points before halftime, running her total to 20.

The Lady Scots were up by the score of 49-22 at the break.

After a couple of MC turnovers, they began to score at will. Parrott had 16 more points in the first 13 minutes of the second half.

Then with the crowd at a fever pitch, and Parrott now aware that the record was in sight, Freshman Beth Loveday found Parrott out in front of everyone, and Parrott laid it in. With 4:47 to go in the game, the record was no more. The game was paused as her mother and father came out of the stands and she was presented with flowers.

Lovejoy added two free throws and a basket late. As did Sophomore Meghan Casey, as she had two late buckets to finish out the game.

The Lady Scots were in the giving mood as they dished out 23 total assists. Sophomore Chris Rajkowski, Williamson, and Parrott each having six, along with Lovejoy and her five.

Lovejoy had this to say about her record breaking assist.

"I just hope she remembers it when she looks back. I wanted to be the one who gave it to her. I know this is a once in a lifetime moment and I just wanted to be the one who gave it to her. I knew she would hit it."

So it was freshman to senior and it was as if Lovejoy was meant to pass Parrott the ball since she arrived here at MC this year. According to Coach Cook, Lovejoy can pass with the best of them.

"Beth's strong point is her passing. She has the great ability to pass the ball and she sees the floor better than anyone that I've ever seen. She is just going to get better and better," said Coach Cook.

About her five assists, Coach Cook added, "five impressive assists."

The most important thing for the Lady Scots was that they did win. They improved their record to 15-3.

After the game Parrott had this to say about the record and the season.

"We are all thinking tournament now. The loss to SCAD really scared us. We called a team meeting and we said we had to pull it together and that we couldn't lose anymore games. I really just go out to play. This wasn't something I set out to do. I just wasn't to play hard for however many minutes I get," said Parrott.

The number one team in South Region did have a setback earlier in the week, with a 79-72 loss at SCAD. The Lady Scots were led by Parrott with 25, Buck with 11, and Freshman Leslie Roberson with 10 points. The Lady Scots were up at the half, 49-41, but were unable to hang on for the win.

The Lady Scots next game will be at Thomas More College on Feb. 12. The Lady Scots defeated Thomas More earlier in the season to win the Maryville College Invitational Tournament. Thomas More did play the Lady Scots tough, with the home team pulling out a 85-75 win.

After a road game at Milligan College on Feb. 15, the Lady Scots will play their final three games at home. On Feb. 17 they will host Roanoke College, on Feb. 21 Centre College will come calling, and then on Feb. 24 rival Emory will come to Maryville to finish the season.

Howard honored

Maryville College Senior Lorenzo Howard was named a Division III All-America honorable mention for his efforts on the football field here last fall.

Howard, with still a year of eligibility remaining, will forgo his final year in order to graduate with a degree in business management.

Howard was second in the team in tackles and played huge in the Scots upset win over Emory & Henry with four interceptions.

Parrott leaves her mark on Lady Scots

by Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

It seems to me that the best things seem to happen to those whom both least expect it and most deserve it. The best example of this would be Maryville College Senior Jamie Parrott. On Saturday, February 10 she held everybody in the palm of her hand, and never even knew it.

"I really didn't even know that I was getting ready to break it. Then the team huddled and they told me that I had only eight more points to go until I broke the record," said a relieved Parrott after the game.

What record was at stake? Parrott became the Maryville College all-time leading score in basketball history. She surpassed the mark set by previous All-American, Leah Onks. Parrott scored 40 points to up her total to 2,223 for her career.

After the game a gracious Parrott said, "This is a really great honor. I owe so much to my teammates. I really couldn't have done it without them."

As I said, Parrott had every one in the palm of her hand and she had know idea until late in the contest that she was getting ready to write her way into the MC history book. Her parents knew that the time was coming. All of teammates knew, as was very obvious, seeing the effort they were making to get her the ball. And the fans became aware and were all prepared to honor the Pre-Season Player of the Year with a standing ovation when the moment called for it.

Speaking to Parrott and Head Coach Kelli Cook after the game, it was easy to see that she was an honor and an accomplishment fitting of the person. It seem that everyone was keeping track of the points except for Jamie. She had to just be happy to be playing basketball.

Michael Jordan may have been cut in high school, but Parrott had met obstacles well before that. She did make somebody eventually notice in grade school and then waited until her senior year high school to be given a real chance to prove herself.

Since she has been at MC teammates and opponents have taken notice. Along with her parents, the proudest person in the building must have been her coach.

"She has a great family and is a class act. She is a great girl and it is well deserved. I had called her parents to let them know. I am just real proud of her," said Cook.

When Parrott arrived her on campus she was far from the player that she is today. And even now, what she lacks strength, she makes up with her determination and courage.

The best thing about speaking to the leading scorer in NCAA III (29.6) is that she was quick to mention not only the people who get her the ball, but that this season is about wins and losses and not records. She was more worried about the team and the tournament than anything else. She was gracious to everyone and you couldn't help but to be happy for her.

Coach Cook ended by saying, "I couldn't help but to smile."

A player knows they are doing something right when the coach can do nothing but smile.

It is sometimes hard to find things to write a column about. A couple of times I have seen things here and just known. To have everybody pulling for you must be something, and on that night everyone helped a little to get those 40 points. Parrott did not come out of the game in the second half until the record was her own. The game was delayed and then re-started. But after Jamie had sat down, it was as if everyone else rested with her. She has more points than anyone in this schools history, she may very well have more heart as well. Congratulations Jamie.

Cupid's Corner

Andrea Suddarth- You really are the arrow that has been shot through my heart! Happy Valentine's Day! Forever yours, D	Mark I hope this Valentine's Day brings you as much joy as you have brought me in the time I've known you. Love A	Dave Powell Hope your Valentine's Day is not filled w/ pollution and clamour but recycled and renewed with poetry and good grammar!	Hy Valentine's Day! Kelly, Katherine, Daniel, Cassabdra, Jessica, Carol, Jennifer, robert, cheri, Rainey, Lauren, and Melissa. Love Darin	Buck, I love you with all my heart. Happy Valentine's Day to a wonderful fiance and soon to be husband. Love, Helen
A Wong I'm so glad to call you friend and wish you a very happy Valentine's Day! Love, A	To my dearest Nickolas, I hope you have the most wonderful Valentine's Day ever. With Love, Crapper	RESIDENTS OF CARNEGIE HALL Wishing you a Happy Valentine's Day! April	Wendy, Happy Valentine's Day to a wonderful friend and confident. Love, Helen	Jarred, Happy Valentine's Day to a wonderful older brother! Love ya, Amy
To Kristen, Thanks for the past two and a half years. I love you very much. Chris	Jennifer- Remember that Cupid is just an undersized naked version of Archie Bunker in a diaper. Happy B-day...Love, AKM	Tiff, Rena, Jenn, Wayne, Wendy, and Keli, You guys are the best! Happy Valentine's Day!	B.S.T. Happy Valentines Day! S.True.R.	Nadia, Hope this Valentine's Day is as special as you are. Love, Amethyst

Hey Boy- What's the difference between a gum wrapper & dock doo? Happy Valentine's Day! I Love You- Nibbles	Sarah Wagner Can you ever forgive a person that is willing to admit that he was wrong all along? Happy Valentine's Day!	To Dr. Dan Taddie "Danny Boy"- When I am with you, I'm giddy as a whino. Promise you'll always Be my "love rhino!" Hungrily, AKT	To the Big Pappa- Roses are red Violets are blue There's a girl out there That's waiting for you! (Hopefully me too!) Denied+Immortality= Freak Boy	Tentboy Thanks for an interest- ing year and 1/2. I wish you the best always! Schmoopy
YOSEF, Roses are red Violets are blue You're a great cook And a gentlemen, too!	To The Monopoly Men: Hope your Valentine's Day is like a stroll on the Boardwalk. . . before Dave owned it. The Hat	Dear Bo and Aaron, We greatly appreciate the use of your muscles and brainpower in releasing my poor car from the grip of the unforgiving ice. Thanks again. Happy Valentine's Day! Love Emily and Sarah	To: Scott Moss From: Your Japanese Jaguar I have been admiring you from a far. I long for your touch! Be my valentine.	Jarra and Ticca,  Thanks for turning out to be great friends!  A.M.
To Frog Face (Paige), "Happy Valentine's Day" Love, Toad Face	To: David H. Happy Valentine's Day! I've seen you around and so far I like what I've seen.	Joy, Happy Valentine's Day. You are my rose- Love, Matt	Little- Have a Happy Valentine's! Best of Friends -Allie	Chris, Hope my Babe has the best Valentine's Day ever!! I love you Baba! Andrice (Babe)
Nick, Romance & fudge cake. I love you, Amanda	Amy, Happy Valentine's Day! Love always, Joe	To Jon Hey baby. . . wanna wrestle? from Tom	To My Buddy (W.F.)- Happy Valentine's Day! Love Ally Cat	J, If the end, Is where it began, Then all must be forgiven D
Jeff Gary Can Cupid cure Al Davis? Go Raiders!! Dave	Happy Valentine's Day Sarah! From, Tom	Jeff Gary Thanks for all the love that you show the staff! The Highland Echo and Chilhowean	To Charles Bedomian, Whatever! from Whomever	To Kelly F. Hey hot buns! From your own Baker's Dozen
Jennifer, To my Baby Doll. Love You Dee	To Nadia from Georgina "Happy Valentine's Day"	Happy Valentine's Day Wino! Darin	To my dearest, Happy Valentine's Day! 458458458	Jeremy QB, "I Miss Your Hands!"
To The Boyz- Happy Valentine's Day! -The Mule (aka Freak)	Happy Valentine's Day Whitney. I Love You! Pokey	Wendy, To my Valentine. Wishing you the happiest of days. John	Jess, LuLu, and Cass, Happy Valentine's Day!	Mitsu, Happy Valentine's Day! Amy
Rob, Happy Valentine's Day! I love you, honey. Sweetie	Mike, Hey Sexy! Keep pumpin' those irons! Love ya, Kitten	Happy Valentine's Day to all my porcupines!!! Love, Flossy	GC, My sweet Hungarian cherub, soon we will run away to Vermont forever!	To: Lisa Gary Ten years and counting! Happy Valentine's Day. Jeff

The Highland Echo

March 12, 1996

MARYVILLE COLLEGE

VOL. LXXXI, NO. 6

Inside

Claire's Column
p.3

Theatre
Review
p.3

At the Movies
Oscar time
p. 4

Alternative Spring Break
p. 6

Baseball and Softball
p. 11

Students voice opinions at Open Forum

by Matt Waters
Staff Writer

Students were given the opportunity to express their true sentiments about Maryville College at the recent open forum.

Conducted in the Center for Campus Ministry, the event was open to all students concerned with issues at MC. The twenty students in attendance were able to voice their opinions about several aspects of the college to Jason Thompson, Karen Strachan, and Sherrie Brents, concerned students who initiated the meeting in order to bring students together to discuss these issues, and consider solutions.

Many issues were raised during the hour-long meeting. Foremost on the list of topics presented were the cons about MC. Several complaints were made about the limited variety of courses, majors, and minors offered. Also, the fact that Isaac's was closed during the recent snowstorm was mentioned. Some students felt that the snack shop should have

see Forum p. 6

photo by Kristin Kant

Hey people, lighten up!

MC students Kristin Kant, Jason Brooks, Joe Overton, and Jim Carpenter look on at the recent Open Forum that was held in the Center for Campus Ministry.

Internet access now available at MC

by Becky Lill
Staff Writer

Maryville College recently jumped into the computer era with upgrades in the campus computer systems; the major upgrade to the system is a node that provides internet access to MC computers. Because of a grant given to the college by the National Science Foundation, the college has been able to purchase several new computers and the internet node.

Bringing the internet to MC has been a long time in the making, and the process is still not complete. Internet access at MC is still in a testing phase; Leon Binder, the Director of Data Systems, commented, "In the process of installing and testing a whole new implementation like this, there are problems. But, we chose to allow students to have access to it as soon as possible." The internet has been down often enough that the lab assistants post a large note informing students whether the internet access is functioning or not. Dr. John Nichols, co-author of the grant that made MC internet access possible, commented, "You can't just turn a switch one day and have everything, so we've had to phase things in . . . we don't consider ourselves fully operable yet."

Internet access allows every student to send and receive electronic mail (E-mail) and browse the world wide web, a network that links computers from around the world. Through the internet, students/professors can communicate with specialists and organizations that deal with very specific fields. Nichols commented that the internet provides opportunities for "research, communication, and, if time permits, a little fun."

The next phase of the plan to fully implement the internet is dial-in service, an option that would allow students and faculty to call up the school computers and access the internet from their rooms/offices. Binder said, "It [dial-in access] certainly will be available by Fall."

The committee responsible for making decisions regarding the internet at MC consists of Binder, Nichols, Dr. Robert Naylor (Division Chair of the Natural Sciences Division), and see Internet p. 6

Swiss chocolate and the designated hitter...

by Sarah West
Assistant Editor

Lately, I have been hearing some troubling statements that I hope are not indicative of a prevalent attitude on this campus. Although I respect others with beliefs differing from my own, I may detest a few of the really obnoxious ideas, like sexism.

Sexism, a concept full of energy and emotion, may conjure images of Anita Hill or Demi Moore. Many sexists are in denial of their prejudice because of this all this label may suggest. For example, I heard a male student say that he was not sexist, but still he would never vote for a woman for president.

Another guy said, "Why won't women be happy on the pedestal we put them on?" This statement was especially infuriating for three reasons: 1. this pedestal often seems more like a footstool; 2. I do not believe women need men to put them on a pedestal; 3. many women would be happy if men would simply treat them with mutual respect.

This is not to say that I do not appreciate a gentleman who opens a door for me, as long as he understands that I can open the door for myself and still have strength left over for bearing children and washing dishes.

"Girls make better grades than guys only because guys don't care," said one male peer. I do not know if girls make better grades than guys on average, but the logic in this assessment is overwhelming. If guys were intellectually superior, they would see the importance of getting the most out of education.

Intelligence is not relative to sex.

I am not blind to the differences between men and women, such as physical strength; I just believe that men and women should treat one another with mutual respect. When both are equally qualified for a position, job, or award, neither should be discriminated against on the basis of sex, except when the sex may justly have significance in situations like the appointment of a resident assistant in an all female residence hall.

Some believe that if a woman is as credible as a man, then she can prove it through her work. The fact that women can demonstrate their ability is true, but being prejudged country evidenced by her decision not to marry to protect the throne from outside influence. A present day hero of mine is Christine Todd Whitman, governor of New Jersey. She has gained popularity by proving that being a woman does not mean being weak or "soft" on issues. Women have accomplished so much throughout history and especially recently that I cannot comprehend how some could believe that the worth and positive potential of women are less than that of men. Men do not have the monopoly on leadership qualities. To my example of Whitman, a male student responded, "Whitman is not a woman. She's a... She's lost her femininity!"

One brave junior, Jason Thompson, actually agreed to let me connect his name with his statement. Trying to restore my faith, he said, "Behind every good man is an even better woman."

Sexism makes me feel as if someone has knocked the breath out of me or is trying to suffocate me before I have the chance to prove my worth.

as incapable is uncomfortable. When others are predisposed to doubt one's ability, it may make that one feel uneasy and inferior. It should not, but it does to me, at least. Sexism makes me feel as if someone has knocked the breath out of me or is trying to suffocate me before I have the chance to prove my worth. Being challenged on a quality of myself I can change is one matter, but being challenged on one I cannot is unfair.

I think of some of the great women in the past and present and am determined to do my best because I am a human—one that just happens to be female. I have always admired Elizabeth I, Queen of England during the sixteenth century, because of her dedication to her

To all those who fear a woman president because of her "PMS-induced irrational tendencies" such as bombing other countries like Switzerland after exploiting its chocolate reserves, I ask if men have not fought for similar, if not worse, reasons, such as greed, religious intolerance, and the use of the designated hitter in the American League. Regardless, women would not have to resort to violence, according to some men, who dote on the amazing speaking ability of females. Negotiations would increase, and—who would have guessed—the answer to world peace would be woman.

Maybe the answer to world peace is the resolution of sexism, and it could begin on this campus.

Senate had busy February

by Alex Little
Student Senate
President

Student Senate met on February 29, and a lot of business was conducted. As usual we opened our meeting with a treasury report and committee reports from various senators. At this meeting, commuter senator Matt Webb reported to Senate on the state of parking around campus, especially at Lloyd Hall. Webb and the Traffic Committee are working very hard to find a solution to the parking problems on campus. Joshua Hogan came before Senate to request $250 for the Humanities Club for a book signing party and the remainder to be used as a running expense account.

The Health Services Committee brought forth a beautiful proposal for a health care facility on campus. The cost of this service to the students in an additional $25 per semester to the Students Activity Fee. The new health service will provide a full-time nurse on campus and a visiting physician. Students will be able to see the nurse and doctor free of charge. For further information contract our Vice-President of Student Development or come to the Student Senate sponsored campus forum on March 12 at 7p.m. in the Center for Campus Ministry.

Student Senate passed a host of residence hall legislation in order to improve residence life. For so long we have lived under policies that were either non-existent or were not written by students. Those days are long gone, and with that in mind, Student Senate

Continued on p. 5

The Highland Echo

David Downs
Assistant Editor

Amanda Martin
Editor

Sarah West
Assistant Editor

Chris Stephens
Sports Editor
Reporters

Sarah Christians, Dara DiGiacomo, Allison Dunn, Kenyon Evans, Lori Leffel, Becky Lill, Joe Malheiro, Kristie Paschel, Michelle Shuler, Kim Syphrett, Matt Waters.

Columnists

Alex Little, Bo McMichael, Jonathan Peters, Claire Stancampiano

Photography Editors

Yosef Addis, Kristin Kant

Computer Layout

Susan Rayborn, Traci Tidwell

Advertising Manager/Designer

Patrick Leslie

Advisor
Jeff Gary

Cartoonists
Chris West, Scott West

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR...

The Echo welcomes your comments, letters and guest columns. All written material to be published in the Echo must be typed and accompanied by your name, post office box number, and phone number. Send material to The Highland Echo, Box 2511. The Echo can be reached by calling the Student Publications Office at campus extension 8176. The opinions expressed in the Echo do not necessarily reflect the views of Maryville College.

Liberal arts students: overqualified and underpaid

by Claire Stancampiano
Columnist

Don't even talk to me about being broke. Next time, when those of you who are lucky enough to be able to call home and request funding, do so, please don't forget to ask your parents if I can borrow five dollars.

"I don't have any money" is the battle cry that unites all students in the universe, except the select few clad head to toe in J. Crew threads who have mom and dad to pay off the Citibank Visa (don't you dare complain about this comment; you know it's true).

So, in an attempt to break out of my fiscal exhaustion, I recently ventured out to try and obtain another part-time job. "Where would I like to work to supplement my soul-fulfilling hours in the Financial Aid Office?" I asked myself. After washing my hair and dragging out the only pair of dress pants I own, I drove around for awhile collecting job applications from various establishments in which I believed I could tolerate working. The following are some actual questions I encountered that were taken directly from the applications, and the answers I would have liked to have written in response.

Fill out your employers for the past ten years. O.K., I was 11. I baby-sat and cleaned my room for a grand total of $2 a week. I have 3 and 1/2 years of college and a higher intelligence level than all of Foot-hills Mall combined and I'm begging you to hire me to spritz perfume on old ladies or sell Army tank size sneakers to torpid high school freaks? I don't think so. Next question please.

List the pay you received at your last job and what you are expecting to be paid now. Work study pays me $4.25 an hour, but for 10 hours a week of distributing green beans overcooked in pork fat here at Shoney's, I'd like around $40K a year.

Explain any special skills you have. I can apply Chapstick evenly without looking in the mirror; I can easily conquer the hill by Primo's Gym in a stick shift, and I am able to determine from which fast food establishment in Blount County any random batch of fries came.

What are your personal interests and hobbies? Are you a member of any organizations? I heartily enjoy procrastinating and mocking guests on the Ricki Lake show. I am also an advocate for prohibition of violence toward small woodland creatures. I believe all of these activities will greatly enhance my ability to deliver pizza for the all-powerful establishment of Little Caesar's.

Elementary, Middle, and High Schools attended and nature of courses taken. Crayons I and II, Advanced Co-Ed Dodge Ball, and Intro to Desk Organization. For this question, I also considered simply writing "skipped."

List three personal references that are not previous employers or relatives. O.K., that leaves no one. I'm not putting Dr. Schneibel down because she'll tell them I don't like structure. Employers don't care what my friends think, so I'll just pick a few random numbers out of the Maryville phone book to fill the slots.

Have you ever been convicted of a felony? If so, please explain. (after which they give you about a line to respond) What kind of response are they looking for that would persuade them to hire you? Got drunk. Stole Cadillac. Held up Hardee's. Real sorry. Won't do it again. I was glad not to have to check the "yes" box.

Needless to say, after about 3 or 4 of these applications, my answers tended towards sarcasm. I thought briefly about working with the local newspaper, but quickly realized I was too good a speller and that keeping up with Blount County citizens' library fines would ultimately give me brain damage.

If businesses really want to know potential employees, they should eliminate these ridiculous applications from their hiring process and just ask, in person, stuff like "Hey, do you know any cool magic tricks?" and base their decision on the creativeness of the person's answer. Donations are being accepted in Box 2527 so that I can eat until May.

A Doll House Review

by Sarah Cristians
Staff Writer

Henrik Ibsen isn't called the "father of modern drama" for no reason. Of his realistic plays, "A Doll's House" is the most well known and perhaps best loved. The Maryville College Theater's production of "A Doll's House" delighted audiences on opening night. With a new twist on a classic play, MC Theater stunned the audience as well as touched their hearts.

In 1887-88 when he wrote "A Doll's House," Ibsen revolutionized the world of drama. In 1996, the talented cast of "A Doll's House" went beyond effective expression and into the realms of true art.

"A Doll's House" deals with human needs in a "shocking" way, enough for people to walk out of the theater a hundred years ago. Some audiences may view it as a play championing women's rights. Others will see beyond the feminist manifesto of the late twentieth century and realize it to be "shocking" not because a woman leaves her husband and family to find herself, but because the woman put up with an insufferable situation for so long. In the play, the lead character Nora must borrow money from a villainous character in order to save her husband's life. In this process of salvation, she commits forgery and endangers the reputation of her husband as well as her own freedom. Dr. Jill Bergeron, director, says: "The issues [Nora] deals with...are just as topical as they were a hundred years ago." A Doll's House is just "one of those plays".

Because the play is set in 1959 as a brand new daytime soap opera, Dr. Bergeron wished to make the context of the play "more accessible for today's audience." She also made it clear that she "didn't want to do a museum piece." All the actors look like, act like, and speak like modern people. There was a curtain call before the actual play had started in front of a lit set. The actors were in character, getting into another character. MC's production of A Doll's House was really two plays in one, complete with stage and studio casts, a producer, and "on air" and "applause" signs, which were cleverly displayed.

Act One, or Episode One as the producer referred to it, introduces the audience to the web of lies Nora lives in. Ibsen's dialogue made the audience hate Torvald and Krogstad and love the kindly old Dr. Rank. In Act Two, the drama increases. Krogstad confronts Nora, and Mrs. Linde hints at secrets between herself and Krogstad and between Nora and Dr. Rank. Krogstad threatens to expose Nora's forgery in retaliation for her husband dismissing him at the bank, an act that would ruin every part of Nora's existence. Act Three begins with Mrs. Linde waiting for Krogstad, to convince him not to expose Nora. In the limited amount of time she has, Mrs. Linde doesn't convince Krogstad not to

continued on p. 5

Scott West's "Weird Perspectives"

Kramer Kreamer

At the Movies with Bo &amp; Chris

It's that time of year again, the Oscars have come to MC

by Bo McMichael
Columnist
and Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

Siskle and Ebert watch out! Bo and Chris have made it to the Hollywood spotlight for the first time. We have been asked to venture into the ultimate task, and that is finding the highs and lows of 1995 in the film industry. This means we get to pick our favorite films as well as the actors that were in each film. The only catch is that we can only pick the movies that we viewed in 1995.

The number reached 49 movies in the year of '95'. We will begin with the worst movie and we both agreed that "Showgirls" definitely tops our list as the most useless film in '95 or maybe even the decade? The next categories are divide up into specific divisions. Horror: Chris-"Seven", Bo-"The Prophecy" Drama: Bo-"The Usual Suspect", Chris-"White Man's Burden" Comedy: Chris & Bo-"Mallrats" Action: Chris-"Money Train", Bo-"Goldeneye"

The best film of 1995 goes to the political ballot, and the winner is "The American President." This film has it all drama, comedy, and out right fun.

The next awards are focused on the actors themselves. We both agree Kevin Spacey played the best villain; however, Chris believes that his acting in "Seven" out does his performance in "The Usual Suspect". Bo sees it the other way, and picks Spacey in "The Usual Suspect". Our heroin category goes to Michelle Pfeiffer in "Dangerous Minds" The hero goes to Mr. John Travolta in "White Man's Burden". The actress that made us laugh out loud goes to Drew Barrymore "Boys on the Side", and Sandra Bullock "While You Were Sleeping." The actors also have been split in controversy over the funniest man in Hollywood. Chris-Martin Lawrence in "Bad Boys", Bo-Chris Farelly in "Tommy Boy." The "James Dean" award (coolest) goes to Christian Ricci in "Casper." She is the only woman in the world that can talk to a ghost and get away with it. The Actor with coolest nerves, and ice cold veins has been split. Chris goes back to the Boys of Bad and picks Will Smith, and Bo picks

the Cape Crusader, Val Kilmer, in "Batman Forever."

The next section is devoted to that special moment in the movies. The funniest phrase goes to Martin Lawrence in "Bad Boys" when he asked Will Smith, "Why do I always have to get the Popeye Chicken eating ____." However, in a close second goes to Val Kilmer in "Batman Forever" as he asks Chase, "Is it the car, chicks dig the car." The best kiss goes to Chris O'Donnell and Drew Barrymore in "Mad Love." The best sex scene is given to Antino Banderas and his beautiful lover in "Desperado." The stomach-turning award goes to the seven murders in "Seven". The biggest award of the Oscar's at Maryville goes to the "American President" for the most intense speech. For the ones who have seen this movie will known, and for the ones who have not yet seen this terrific movie, the only thing we can say is that "My name is Andrew Sheppard and I am the President of the United States."

Well ladies and gentlemen that, concludes the first annual awards at MC by Bo and Chris, now lets think about the present day facts. The list of movies out in the theaters in March range from poor to breathtaking. "Mr. Wrong" is the poorest of the many. Ellen DeGeneres stars in her first feature film, and this could be her last film. Bill Pulman stars opposite her as Mr. Right gone wrong.

The next film is "Happy Gilmore." Mr. Adam Sandler is back in front of the big screen; however, the jokes are far and few between. If you have watched the previews on television you have laughed enough. The only exception is if you happen to be a professional golfer, and if this runs true, you will laugh extremely loud and long.

Al Pacino is the mayor of New York in his latest film. "City Hall" is very well developed, although the length is very long as well. Bridget Fonda and John Cusack seem to be missing something? The sexual relationship was left on the cutting room floor. This hurts the movie; however, good old Al was incredible!

If you see "Dead Man Walking," and come to the conclusion that this was an incredible breathtaking movie, then we are thinking on the same track. Sean Penn and Susan Sarandon are featured in this Tim Robbins film about a man on death row. The intensity builds so dramatically that you might find yourself rocking in the chair frantically. Go See It!

Anchors away! Kelsey Grammer is the Sea Captain of the S.S. Stingray in this comedy underwater. "Down Periscope" is "Hot Shots" with an H2O twist. Kelsey's crew is young and full of humor. The submarine trip is worth getting wet!

The last of the picks this time is a story of the maid who was involved with Dr. Jekel, or was it Mr. Hyde. "Mary Reilly" is her name and Julie Roberts, a Sandra Bullock wanna-be, plays the maid and love interest for Mr. Jekle/Hyde (John Malkovich). The film is very gory, and not as scary as the previews make it out to be; however, the story was well done.

The reason for the quick summaries is that one buddy was missing in the reviewing process. It seems that Chris has thesis and ball games to cover. As for Bo, he has only the movies to worry about, and we hope to have him back next issue, well at least Bo does.

Special Report: Direct from Hollywood, California; On March 25, 1996, the Super Bowl of movies appears on ABC at 9:00p.m. The 68th Academy Awards show, a.k.a the Oscars, is the biggest Hollywood event. This year they have allowed two Juniors at Maryville College to make the final decision. What a great LIFE!

Supporting Actress: Mira Sorvino in "Mighty Aphrodite"

Supporting Actor : Kevin Spacey in "The Usual Suspect"

Acres : Sharon Stone in "Casino" and Susan Sarandon in "Dead Man Walking"

Director : Mike Figgis in "Leaving Las Vegas"

The Best Picture of 1995 Academy Awards are "Apollo 13" and "Brave Heart". See you at the movies.....

Way Out West

by Chris West

"Ah hah! I knew it!"

Way Out West

by Chris West

Old McDonald knew that his son, Ronny, was a little different from the rest of the kids.

Wake Up?

by David Downs
Assistant Editor

Handed out by the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences, the Grammy Awards is the ultimate award for a musician. Although the awards have come and gone, here are my personal winners for a few of the awards (i.e., I am not one of the actual 10,000 members that are allowed to vote).

Record of the Year—

"One Sweet Day" Mariah Carey and Boyz II Men

"Gangsta's Paradise" Coolio

✓ "One of Us" Joan Osborne

"Kiss from a Rose" Seal

"Waterfalls" TLC

Joan Osborne has entered into a world that loves the sound that she provides. Her first single, "One of Us," asks what it would be like if "God was one of us" and is quickly rising up the Billboard music charts. Her energy and spirit that surrounds her music defines the reason why this artist deserves the Record of the Year.

Album of the Year—

"Daydream" Mariah Carey

"HIStory Past, Present and Future Book I" Michael Jackson

✓ "Jagged Little Pill" Alanis Morissette

"Relish" Joan Osborne

"Vitalogy" Pearl Jam

No question: Alanis Morissette is nothing less than awe-aspiring. She sings with the rage of an adolescent teenager with a voice that is distinctive to only herself. The singles that have been released off her album, "You Oughta Know," "Hand in my Pocket," and "Ironic," show her mature songwriting ability but songs like "Head Over Feet" and "Forgiven," that have not been released, just intensify her ability as a dynamic singer and a passionate songwriter. This album is one of the best total packages that a listener can buy.

Best New Artist—

Brandy

✓ Hootie & The Blowfish

Alanis Morissette

Joan Osborne

Shania Twain

This South Carolina band has done in one year what it took Napoleon and Alexander the Great years to do, and that is to take over the world. Hootie is listened to by adolescents and adults alike, which gives them such a broad listening range. I look forward to hearing Hootie's new album slated to be released in April. If you ever have a chance to see these guys in concert, DO IT!! They put on a great show.

Pop Duo or Group—

"I Can Love You Like That"

All-4-One

"Love Will Keep Us Alive"

Eagles

✓ "Let Her Cry" Hootie & The Blowfish

Blowfish

"I'll Be There For You" The Rembrandts

"Waterfalls" TLC

No question here: Hootie for President!

Alternative Music Performance

"Post" Bjork

"Foo Fighters" Foo Fighters

"To Bring You May Love" PJ Harvey

✓ "MTV Unplugged in New York" Nirvana

"The Presidents of the United States of America" The Presidents of America

This CD shows the mellower side of a group that the world will never have the pleasure to hear again. With the suicide of frontman Kurt Cobain, Nirvana has broken off into other projects, more notably drummer Dave Grohl and his band Foo Fighters, also up for this award.

This album is comprised of popular Nirvana songs while mixing in re-makes of popular hits by artists such as David Bowie.

Doll House

continued from p. 3

expose Nora, but she does convince him to renew their romantic relationship. When Nora the has finished, the Helmers come home to find Mrs. Linde waiting. She delivers Nora the bad news without alerting Torvald. When Torvald finds the letter Krogstad had left detailing Nora's dishonesty and extorting Torvald's position at the bank, he all but throws Nora out. When all is lost, the maid Helene arrives with another letter from Krogstad, returning Nora's I.O.U. and asking for forgiveness. Torvald rejoices and expects Nora to return to her role as doting wife and mother. Nora, however, has other ideas. She, playing herself and her stage character, leaves her husband and children to find herself.

All the actors displayed strong, confident stage presence. Tiffany Rudicil's "Nora" exhausted the gamut of emotions. Rudicil showed command of both dialogue and was convincingly "frivolous". In contrast Timothy Barnes played "Torvald" with pleasantly infuriating misogyny. Barnes was excellently condescending and worked well with Rudicil. Eric Obermiller stunned the opening night audience as the villain "Nils Krogstad". I, as well as many other people, I'm sure, was physically moved when he ranted at Nora, and when he conceded to Mrs. Linde. Erin Rice as Nora's best friend "Mrs. Kristine Linde" exhibited an equally strong stage presence. Rice played the worried, manipulative widow to the hilt. Todd Smith's portrayal of "Dr. Rank" was, as the saying goes "better than a beer on a Saturday night!" Smith played his two characters, one a stooped, old man and the other a playboy, leading man type, almost too convincingly. Sara Baker as the maid "Helene" added to the brilliant ensemble with a definite stage presence and carefully crafted studio character. The rest of the cast so complimented the play it would seem odd to watch A Doll's House without a complete studio cast now. Sarah Stevenson was excellent as a stupefied costume mistress and Shannon Bryant's transsexual portrayal of the Floor Manager was completely convincing.

Little

continued from p. 2

moved to hear five new proposals. First, a roommate's rights proposal was passed. This proposal will guarantee the students certain rights when he/she moves into a residence hall. Secondly, a Room/Consolidation policy was adopted. This policy informs the student of the process of consolidation his/her room. Third, a Room Lottery system was passed in order to provide fairness in the room selection process. Next, the Alcohol Policy was tabled due to a wondering error in clause "C". I foresee no problem with the passing of the Alcohol Policy once the wording problem has been corrected. Lastly, a Statement of Purpose for Residence Life was adopted.

Next year students will have the opportunity to use a room designed for cardiovascular fitness. I wrote a proposal that would furnish this room with everything from a NordicTrack ski-simulator to Universal treadmills. The cost of this room to the students is a one-time increase in the activity fee of $12.50 per semester. As mentioned previously a Student Senate sponsored forum will be held Tuesday, March 12 at 7p.m. As always students are invited to come and see how their government works.

The Echo Opinion Poll

Results are in for last issue's Opinion Poll. For favorite actress, Julia Roberts received 20 percent, Michelle Pfeiffer 12.5 percent, and Meg Ryan six percent. When asked their favorite aspect of MC, students chose friends (30 percent), academics (15 percent), and professors (12.5 percent). Mail your opinions to box 2247.

☐ Miscellaneous 42.5%
☐ Friends 30% ☐ Academics 15%
☐ Professors 12.5%

Opinion Poll

1. Who would get your vote for the Republican Nomination?

.....

2. Who is your favorite actor?

Do you have a new CD that you would like to see displayed in "Wake Up?" Call x8729 to make arrangements for a listening time

Spring gives break to others

by Sarah West
Assistant Editor

This spring break, a group of twelve students and three staff members will be traveling to Florida, but not for an exciting week filled with sunshine, salty breezes, and sandy beaches. This spring break will be an "alternative" experience composed of sacrifice, service, cooperation, and work.

The alternative spring break, an opportunity available at hundreds of colleges and universities for students to do volunteer work in unfamiliar settings, has made its way to Maryville College through the help of Holly Bailey, Coordinator of Student Activities.

"We have a wonderful group of students," said Bailey, "who have volunteered their spring break to go and help others in another community. We're all looking forward to the trip."

Students often find themselves working anywhere from Indian reservations to shelters to flood disaster areas. MC Students will be helping people with renovations and working with inner-city children at the YWCA in Jacksonville, Florida. A church has agreed to house the group for most of the week, and, for a couple of nights, they will stay in cabins at a local park. Also, the MC students and faculty may help the church serve refugees food.

"The first thing that struck me was the adventure involved in this trip. Then I found out I would be helping people, and it wouldn't cost much," said Georgina King, one of the students going on the trip. "God has richly blessed me, and I thought it would be good if I could give of myself."

After a student expressed interest in the idea, Abigail Blankner, Assistant Director of Volunteer Services, handed the project to Bailey since she has had experience with the alternative spring break before. Bailey then chose a committee to steer the project, which is a part of the MC 2000 plan. The trip only costs $50 per student, and food and transportation are provided. In preparation, the group of twelve students and three staff members has been raising money, and the college community has been helpful. A silent auction was held in mid-February, and students, staff, faculty, and the administration donated crafts, artwork, gift certificates, items from area companies, and services for the event. The effort resulted in the raising of almost $2,400, exceeding the group's goal of $2,300.

"The MC alternative spring break team," said Bailey, "would like to thank everyone who contributed items, came by and bid, and purchased the items, because, without their help, we wouldn't have the funds for it."

Bailey also explained that it is difficult to know what exactly one will encounter on these trips, but, with the right attitude, it will be a good experience for all.

Students were chosen through an application process to insure that they all had a good reason for wanting to go. Next year, screening will happen earlier. If the trip is successful, alternative spring break could transform into an alternative January Term class. Those planning to participate this year are Staci Kerr, Sheila Pirl, Kristin Kant, Debbie Shewfelt, Karson Leitch, Alisha Waldrop, Randy Stanley, LeAndra Barriage, Melissa Warlick, King, Judy Dunnam, Kimiaki Itamura, Bailey, Blankner, and Ned Willard, the Gamble, Lloyd, and Pearsons Residence Hall Coordinator. The steering committee includes Bailey, Blankner, Willard, Kerr, Janis Burge, and April Hicks, Carnegie Residence Hall Coordinator.

For more information concerning the trip, contact Bailey at x8013.

Mountain climbing in Ecuador proves to be breathtaking for some

by Rachel Roe
Staff Writer

In January while most Maryville College students were experiencing the first Winter Storm of 1996, Bruce Guillaume along with eleven other climbers, many of whom were Maryville College students, ventured to Quito, Ecuador to climb in the Andes Mountains.

While in Quito, their itinerary included the ascent of Pinchincha, a 15,000 foot active volcano, and of Cotopoxi, a 19,500 foot peak regarded as the highest active volcano in the world.

The group did most of its climbing during the night because the intense heat of the equator's sun melts the top layer of snow, creating a slush that is extremely dangerous to climb on.

One attempt to climb Cotopoxi was postponed because of bad weather bearing snow and winds up to 50mph. On the following day, however, the group succeeded. Leaving their huts at the mountain's base around midnight, they began their ascension, which lasted nearly eight hours.

As they climbed, the group began to receive less than half the oxygen available at sea level, and many had to stop after each step and breathe. Bruce Guillaume analogized, "It's like being on the Chimney Trail in the Smoky's, with the flu and a backpack on, and somebody puts a sock in your mouth." This sensation immediately disappeared upon the descent of the summits.

Because of the intense process of acclimation, the group had to be in top physical condition. For nearly a year prior to the trip, the group trained both aerobically and with weights.

In addition, they learned the specific backpacking and alpine-glacier climbing skills and precautions necessary for safe climbing in the Andes. They also learned how to use equipment unique to ice climbing such as crampons and the ice axe.

Based on the success of this trip, Bruce Guillaume said that the return to Ecuador with another group is a definite future possibility.

Forum

continued from p. 1

remained open for the sake of the on-campus students.

A number of students felt that the college does not properly use its allotted funds. For example, on-campus students are required to purchase the twenty-one meal plan. One individual said that perhaps the college gets part of the profits of the meal plans, but another rebutted with the idea that MC is a non-profit organization and consequently no one is making money off the students. In fact, the school uses more money than tuition brings in, and the annual fund pays for everything not covered. Regardless, the idea of MC's frivolous spending was highly debated. With the cost of tuition rising annually, more commodities should be made available to the students, according to one individual. Examples given were the scarceness of Internet-access computers in the lab and the severe lack of functional street lamps around the campus.

Another suggestion proposed was the placement of water hoses outside the dorms. One student said that the only hoses he had found were at the maintenance facility and Willard House.

Additionally, one student asked why there are so few traditions at MC. Currently Spring Fling, Blister in the Sun, and the activities on Lloyd Beach provide some lasting memories, but three events a year do not produce a rich heritage in many students' minds. It was proposed that the college president play some part in the football games.

Finally, the validity of the Inter-Club Council was questioned. The ICC has apparently been continually promised but has yet to be formed.

Thompson, glad that the open forum was conducted, said, "This gave a group of concerned students a place and time to say things." He also said that more people need to take advantage of Student Senate. "We need to put the student back in to Student Senate," he said. Overall, Thompson's chief message was that students can indeed make a difference on the campus and just have to find a way to do it. He has promised another open forum in the coming months.

Agreeing, Strachan said, "Students can do something, and this is a good place to start."

Junior Yosef Addis said, "I am glad that we students came together to discuss different issues and the concerns we have. We are not going to sit back and complain anymore. We will continue to hold meetings as necessary and talk about issues that concern us."

Also, Thompson mentioned that if any students have any questions, comments or concerns about this and future open forums, they may contact him at x8736.

Internet

continued from p.1

Deborah Nichols (Library Computer Services Coordinator). The committee has experimented with each of the phases of their plan to implement the internet to work out as many "bugs" as possible.

The grant that provided the money for this process to be possible came from a program of the National Science Foundation that provides internet access to small colleges. Binder and Nichols co-authored the grant in the Fall of '94; the National Science Foundation informed them in June

International Festival to be held at Blister

by Allison Dunn
Staff Writer

Instead of hosting the annual International Club dinner, the club will be taking a larger role in Blister in the Sun this year. The I-Club will be setting up a large tent on the football field during Blister, where there will be food from all different companies, at "college-student prices," said Yosef Addis, leader of the International Club.

The International Club was set up to provide students here at MC with an "education about our cultural differences" and to promote "intercultural exchange" between the different cultures here on-campus, Addis said.

The International Club has put on an international dinner each year for the past four years. Last year, Addis sat down with the club and spoke about "moving on" from the dinner circuit because the club is ready for change that includes a larger role on campus and Blister. Addis said, "This is the year to do it [Blister festival] because we have some very hard workers who are committed to participating in the International Club."

The International Club festival will also be advertised throughout the community so that both the International Club and the college will benefit. During early March, the final menu will be decided. Since many countries will be represented, there will, according to Addis, be a "large variety" of things to eat. Since they will be under a tent, there will be the option of shade for those blistering a little to much this April.

Addis also said that anyone can contribute something to this festival by contacting either himself at box 2780 or Lucy Alexander at box 2013. For that matter, if anyone is interested in joining the International Club, Addis said, "We welcome anyone and everyone, including faculty, to become a member." The International Club is not only for international student but for everyone.

Blister in the Sun '96

SPB is now registering student groups that would like to participate in this year's Blister in the Sun. Organizations are encouraged to use this opportunity to do fund-raisers, games, etc. . . For information, contact Holly Bailey at x8013. All groups wanting to participate must have their registration form in to the Student Development Office by April 1.

Mountain Challenge seeks student staffers

by Kenyon Evans
Staff Writer

Rock climbing, canoeing, rolling kayaks . . . students are doing it all as the Mountain Challenge Program continues to provide students with opportunities for high-quality outdoor experiences. According to Cherri Torres, the Associate Director of Mountain Challenge, "Mountain Challenge is a great way to get outdoors and enjoy nature and to build your self-esteem and your personal and technical skills at the same time."

The program so far this semester has continued to provide the climbing wall, kayak roll sessions, and Saturday trips. The wall is open on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday from 6:00-8:00 p.m. in the alumni gym at a cost of $3.00 for students with all equipment provided. Kayak roll sessions are free to students every Wednesday night from 8:30-10:00 p.m. in the pool. The Saturday trips that have already taken place this semester have been hiking, ground relay, map and compass, a canoe trip, and a tower climb. There are still trips occurring every Saturday (with the exception of Spring Break) for the rest of the semester; among these trips is the rafting trip on the Nantahala River on April 20th. These trips are available at minimal cost to students. Bruce Guillaume, Director of Mountain Challenge, comments, "We live in one of the fifty best places in the country for outdoor activities and we [Mountain Challenge] are, in the area, one of the best programs around to go out and enjoy the outdoors."

In addition to going on outdoor trips, students have the opportunity to lead them by being on the Mountain Challenge Staff; applications for being on staff for the 96-97 school year are now available. Students eager to learn new technical and personal skills and have the experience of helping others to enjoy the outdoors should consider applying.

Being a staff member allows students to support the experiential education program at Maryville College; in addition, staff members are given technical training in all the activities that Mountain Challenge provides as well as extensive safety and rescue training and have the experience of being part of the Mountain Challenge

"Pucker up, Buttercup!"

Tiffnay Rudicil and Timothy Barnes get close in the recent production of "A Doll's House."

The Model UN Experience

by Ben Bendever
Staff Writer

The Model United Nations January-term class met from January 10 through 26. Instructed by Dr. Young-Bae Kim, the course fulfilled two very specific criteria:

First, twenty to twenty-five students selected and researched countries and then represented their countries in a simulated UN environment. They kept journals based on situations in the General Assembly and questions given them by Dr. Kim, and involved themselves in debates commenting over issues and politics pertaining to the represented countries.

Nine students participated in Dr. Kim's leadership program. Led by junior Jason Thompson, the leadership students supervised the UN debate in a rotation sequence of Chair Person and UN Secretary, maintaining order and organization during the UN-student debates. Near the end of the course, selected individuals from the class debates functioned as UN leaders. From this group leaders were selected for next year's Model UN.

During the final three days of the course, the leadership program and Model UN class worked together to welcome the Maryville College Model UN, a similar forum for area high school students, now in its eleventh year. This year approximately 250 students and their advisors from high schools across Tennessee attended the event. The session went well except for threatening weather, which cut the final day short. A number of students were awarded scholarship certificates for their effort.

Kim has concerns for next year's J-term course. He said, "Next year's curriculum changes require freshmen to attend a J-term orientation experiential course."

Past MC students have been primarily freshmen, but the number allowed to attend the Model UN J-term may be reduced. It appears that the only salvation may be a decision to lower the number of J-term courses for next year, which will in turn force other students to consider attending this class.

MC Concert Choir going on tour

by Michelle Shuler
Staff Writer

For Spring Break this year some will go home, some will go to the beach, or work extra hours to earn money. There are any number of options. For the 37 concert choir members, Spring Break is already planned and has been for some time. The Maryville College Concert Choir will be going on tour.

Choir Tour will kick off on March 15 in Loudon, TN. The choir will be leaving MC and traveling to Loudon Presbyterian Church for the first performance of the tour. The choir will stay in Loudon overnight and from there will go to Columbia, TN, for a Saturday evening performance and another performance on Sunday morning. The choir will then leave the state of Tennessee for a Sunday evening performance in Madison, AL. Monday Morning the choir will get back on the bus and travel to Atlanta, GA, to perform on Monday and then to Savannah, GA, for another evening performance on Tuesday. By Wednesday evening the group will be in Charleston, SC, where they will perform and then have Thursday off in the city. Friday evening the group will have traveled to Columbia, SC, and then they will sing in Charlotte, NC, on Saturday evening and then will go to another church in Charlotte for the Sunday morning worship service. This will be the final tour performance for the Concert Choir, who will arrive home Sunday evening. Later that week the choir will perform their homecoming concert.

A variety of music will be performed during the tour and at the Homecoming concert. Sacred music appears in the program, including the spiritual, "My God is a Rock" arranged by Alice Parker and Robert Shaw. The feature soloist for this piece will be Aaro Stone, as well as a solo by Jennifer Stadtmiller. Another piece that will be performed will be William L. Dawson's arrangement of "There is a Balm in Gilead" with soloist Mary Frasier. Other contemporary pieces will be performed as well as many a capella songs. Student conductors will be Beth Brakebill, Brandee Forester, Dara DiGiacomo, and Jennifer Stadtmiller. Students accompanying the choir on the piano will be Jerry Sullivan, Jon Peters, Theresa Harris, Jennifer Brashears, and Jennifer Stadtmiller.

Fayerweather gets facelift . . .

Many changes have been taking place at Fayerweather Hall, which houses the Student Development Department, the Echo/Chilhowean offices, the Bookstore, the Post Office, Career Services, and Isaac's Snack Bar. Painting, replastering, and the replacing of old furniture are just a few of the improvements already visible on campus. In the next few years, MC should expect much more of the same as we work towards the MC 2000 goals.

Happy St. Patrick's Day from the Echo staff!

DRB Reports:

- 1/28 Four students in Lloyd Hall were charged with alcohol offense. Charges were dropped for three of the students, while one received first offense.
- 2/2 In Pearsons Hall, four students were found in violation of the alcohol policy and received first offense.
- 2/7 A student charged with vandalism in Gamble Hall is on six months probation and must pay restitution.
- 2/19 In Copeland Hall, a student broke a policy concerning the community bath facilities, and the case is pending.

- 2/23 A case is pending involving three students in Carnegie charged with alcohol offense.
- 2/23 A policy involving the roofs and ledges of Carnegie Hall was broken by a student, but the case is pending.
- 2/23 In Copeland Hall, a pending case includes a student charged with harassment.
- 2/27 A visitation policy offense is the charge for three student in Copeland Hall, but the case is pending.

Bogatov's Travels: Latvian Student Experiencing MC

by Rachel Roe
Staff Writer

Imagine waking up one morning and spontaneously deciding to take a short bus ride to spend the afternoon in Germany, or for that matter, to anyone of several European countries. Although to many Americans this scenario sounds unrealistic, to Igor Bogatov, a native of Riga, Latvia, it was a way of life.

Growing up in Latvia, Igor witnessed the collapse of the Soviet Union directly. Although he was young at the time, Igor recalls independence week as "a huge party" with bonfires in the streets, people parading, singing, and passing out alcohol to everyone.

Because of its newly-gained independence, Latvia's universities are still in a transitory period. For this reason, among others, Igor opted to study at a university in the United States. Consulting his American guardian, who he became associated with while studying English in the summer at The University of Latvia, Igor obtained information about American schools. Looking through the information, he decided to attend Maryville College and is currently a sophomore here.

Modifications of passport services in Latvia because of the collapse of the Soviet Union have prevented Igor from returning home since his arrival in the US. However, being away from his family does not present a problem for Igor since he is used to traveling away from home.

While growing up in Eastern Europe, Igor had the opportunity to explore many of the surrounding countries. Doing so he observed that the people are exceedingly friendly and polite, a quality he finds absent in most Americans. He relates, "People there will do anything for you. Strangers will give you a place to stay without asking anything." In more than one instance, his friends and he would be hanging out in a bar, and a native of the country would approach them and offer one of his rooms to them for the night.

One of the other cultural differences Igor notes is that racism and prejudice is much more prevalent in the United States than in Europe.

He explains that in Europe, "They don't care if you are black, white, or purple." Whereas, in the United States, Americans have somehow given themselves the authority to renounce those people whose sexual orientation, ethnic origin, or beliefs differ from their own.

In addition, Igor also observes evidence of isolation in the way Americans view the outer world. He feels utter disgust for those citizens who know next to nothing about what is occurring in the world, yet act as if they are omniscient. He describes, "[Many Americans] still live somewhere in their mother's womb, with no desire to learn anything." In contrast, growing up in Europe, Igor felt knowledgeable about events in his country as well as those around the world.

Bringing his interests with him to the United States, Igor continues to travel. He has already been to Canada twice and is planning a trip to Mexico this summer and is participating in an exchange program to Puerto Rico next year.

In his free time, Igor enjoys hiking, rock climbing, camping, and other outdoor activities in the Smoky Mountains. Experiencing the beauty of nature here reminds him of home. One difference, however, Igor notes is that in Europe, "where there is beauty, a castle will be in the rocks next to it." Also, an avid fan of techno music, Igor oftentimes goes out to the Underground and to Lord Lindsey's for a taste of home.

As an international business major with a Spanish minor, Igor plans to pursue a master's degree in international finance and economics. After obtaining his degree, he would then like to work for a multinational corporation that would enable him to travel around the world.

Until then, Igor plans to continue to acquire experience not only speaking several foreign languages but living in different countries, thus for himself bridging the cultural gap that exists.

MC student, sophomore Igor Bogatov has spent a lot of his life traveling, and now has made Maryville home as he is majoring in International Business and is minoring in Spanish.

Attention

Applications will be accepted for editor positions on Impressions, the Highland Echo, and the Chilhowean. The applications will be available the last week of March in Anderson Hall, room 205. Deadline for applications will be 5:00 p.m. on April 1. Interviews will be held the following week. For more information, call x8207.

The Highland Echo Classifieds

PART-TIME:

Blount Mansion needs a part-time seasonal museum educator. $5.00/hr. Must have two years college; fields of history/education. Weekends required. Job 141.

Data Research and Applications has positions for assembling PC's. $5.50-$9.50/hr. Monday-Friday between hours of 8am and 5pm. Job 133.

Alliance Engines needs an expeditor. $5.00-5.50/hr. Prefer 9-11am or earlier but can be somewhat flexible. Job 148.

Penney's Styling Salon - need receptionist to make appointments and do retail sales. $4.50 plus 10% commission on sales. Flex days and hours between 2:30-7:00 pm; 27 hours per week; 9-5 Saturday. If you work 25 hours/week you will receive vacation and holiday pay and all personal hair care service free. Job 154.

Cornerstone of Recovery needs part-time techs for adult programs. 5-8pm. $5.50-$6.00/hr. Job 144.

Come by Counseling and Career Services for many more part-time listings.

FULL-TIME:

edsouth needs educational resources specialist. Exceptional people and organizational skills. Work with student and school database, assist with scholarship searches, computer related work. Min. 2.8 GPA, any major. Entry level position $18,000 with outstanding growth potential.

Racetrack has management positions in retail in Atlanta and entire southeast (Knoxville, etc.) $20-25,000. Start asap. Resume required.

Cornerstone of Recovery has full-time positions for adult program in group and art therapy. Lecture on stress management, coping, etc. Resume required. $6.00/hr.

Norwest Financial, a 7 billion dollar financial services company is recruiting on a continuous basis. Locations are available in the local area as well as in 47 states, Canada, Central America, the Caribbean, Guam, and Puerto Rico. Career Services has more information.

Many other local, regional and national listings are kept on file in the Counseling and Career Services Office.

SUMMER:

Smoky Mountain Tubing - has positions in sales of arts and crafts and positions for tubing assistants. $5.50 and up d.o.e. Start mid-May. 40-hr. week max. Job 155.

STUDY/RESEARCH

BIOLOGY RESEARCH SEMESTER:

Sponsored by the Department of Energy, the Science and Engineering Research Semester offers hands-on research at national labs for those who've completed their sophomore year in computer science, engineering, environmental and life sciences, math, or physical sciences. STUDENTS ARE ALSO ELIGIBLE IMMEDIATELY FOLLOWING GRADUATION FROM A FOUR-YEAR INSTITUTION IF THEY ARE NOT ENROLLED IN GRADUATE SCHOOL. Must have 2.30 GPA. Come to Career Services for more information. Deadline is March 15 for fall semester and October 20 for spring.

One shy of Sweet Sixteen Lady Scots fall short at Marymount

by Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

The Lady Scots bid for a sixth straight trip to the NCAA "Sweet Sixteen" was turned back as they fell to the Saints of Marymount University on March 2 in Washington D.C.

The Lady Scots finished with a record of 19-6.

Seniors Jamie Parrott, Whitney Williamson, and Jama Cameron finished with a career record of 89-19. They had made three consecutive trips to the round of 16 in the NCAA tournament.

In the game against Marymount the Lady Scots fell behind early and were down 12-5 only three minutes into the game.

After a rebound and basket by Cameron and a running one hander in the lane by sophomore Christine Rajkowski, the Lady Scots trailed by only three with 11:14 to go in the half and the score 23-20.

From there it was all Marymount for the rest of the half. They outscored the Lady Scots 31-11 before half. The score was 51-34 at the break.

In the second half the Lady Scots were unable to get any closer than 11. The last time coming on a trey by sophomore Meghan Casey with 10:10 to go and the score 66-55.

The finals score was 81-69.

The Lady Scots were lead by junior Jennifer Buck with 21 points, 13 rebounds, and five assists. Williamson had 12 points (including four treys), four rebounds, and four assists, in her last game. Cameron added 10 rebounds and six points, while Parrott, although fouling out early into the second half, finished with 10 points and nine boards.

Although the team dropped this game, the fact that they were even there was impressive.

The Lady Scots defeated Roanoke College on Feb. 28 as "March Madness" reached Maryville a day early. The Lady Scots led only three times the entire game, and each time only by a points. So in a season that may have belonged to the three seniors above, this night belonged to Jennifer Buck. She poured in 29 points, grabbed 11 boards, and dished out four assists, including the game winner.

The Lady Scots trailed at half 41-39, and after briefly taking the lead with 12:14 to go in the game, on two Buck free-throws to make the score 55-54, the Lady Scots found themselves down nine with only 6:49 remaining in the game.

What followed was a two minute drill that was flawless.

"In the last two minutes our team really responded. It is the only two minutes that I am really proud of," said Head Coach Kelli Casteel-Cook of the game.

The Lady Scots ended the game with a 14-5 run, capped when Buck found Parrott near the basket with .7 seconds remaining in the game.

Parrott ended the game with 21 points and 11 rebounds.

The Lady Scots had defeated Roanoke earlier in the year and Coach Cook had this to say about Roanoke's inspired effort.

"During tournament time mediocre teams become great and good teams become average. We did not deserve this one. I am just thankful that they were as coachable as they were in the last two minutes," said Coach Cook.

The Lady Scots also finished the regular season with a close call against rival Emory University. It was the last regular season for the three seniors and they used every minute of it to defeat Emory.

The Lady Scots finally took the lead for good with only 3:33 left to go in the game on a basket by Parrott.

For the game the Lady Scots were lead by Parrott with 21 points and five boards, Buck with 10 points, eight rebounds, and four assists, Cameron with 12 rebounds, and Williamson had 10 points and five assists.

Although the Lady Scots shot only 32 percent from the floor and were only four for 22 from behind the arch, they were 27 for 35 from the line.

photo by David Downes

Junior guard Jennifer Buck connects from the line for one of her game high 29 points against Roanoke in the first round of the NCAA tourney.

Correction

In the Echo's last issue, a story was written about the Lady Scots basketball team. Within the article, freshman basketball player Beth Loveday was referred to incorrectly after the first reference to her name. We apologize for the mistake.

Scots finish with strong second half

by Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

An 11-3 second half finish for the Fighting Scots basketball team was not enough to get them into post-season play. The Scots ended their season with a win over Knoxville College on Feb. 25 by the score of 84-76.

The Scots finished with a record of 17-8 for the season.

The game against Knoxville College marked the end to seniors Scott McDaniel, Bryan Mills, Sammy Williams, Thad Aslup, and Jeremy Burgess careers.

Those seniors hold a career record of 75-28, including two trips to the NCAA tournament.

Burgess finished his MC career with 1,127 points and over 275 assists. Mills finished with 474 points and over 300 rebounds. In only two years Williams amassed over 440 points and over 250 rebounds. McDaniel finished with over 250 points and 250 assists.

In the final game of the season, it was the underclassmen that stole the show, however. Junior Dee Bell went for 22 points, freshman Spencer Beatty came up big-time with four treys, and Jason Poag added 13 with four treys of his own. Mills lead the seniors with 16 points and nine rebounds.

The Scots made a late charge for a bid to the NCAA tournament and posted late season blowouts over N. Greenville, Savannah, Emory & Henry. The Scots also edged Centre College on the road on Feb. 21 and then Knoxville College.

The most exiting of these games however, may have been a loss, as the Scots fell to Defiance College on Feb. 23.

The Scots continued to trail late into the second half until the Scots went on an 11-4 run which was capped by two treys by McDaniel and Poag with 1:37 and 1:00 to go in the game. This cut the score to 69-70. The Scots would get no closer, however, as after a McDaniel rebound the Scots were unable to capitalize. The final score was 71-69.

On Feb. 22 the Scots hosted North Greenville, and for a time it seemed as if the Scots were scoring by 3's and their opponents by 2's. The Scots found the mark on 17 treys to tie the school mark. On the strength of these treys the Scots were up 53-30 at the half.

In the second half the it was more of the same. At one point Jason Poag and Burgess found the mark on four in a row, two from each to extend the lead to 80-54 with 5:50 to go in the game. The final score was 91-64.

In the game everyone played and scored. The record was tied when Aslup pulled up on the break and drained the final trey. This coming with 1:07 left to go in the game.

In all, Burgess had five treys and 21 points, Poag with four treys, Williams had three, as well as Beatty who was big-time with three of his won treys.

Scots return strong nucleus

by Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

The Fighting Scots baseball team has begun their season and expectations are high.

The Scots finished with a record of 28-10 last season and returned a large portion of that team. Lost to graduation was outfielder John Roszell and pitcher Scott Watson.

"Our goal is to win 25 games and to take the next step. We need to make an early statement," said Head Coach Eric Etchison.

The next step for the Scots would include a trip to the NCAA tournament. Etchison mentioned that with the schedule the team has put together, the team needs to win 25 games to earn that bid.

The Scots began their season in Savannah in a tournament that had them scheduled to play five games. The Scots dropped four of the five. The Scots then traveled to Carson-Newman on March 5.

Some of the key players returning from last years squad to help the team meet their goals will be infielder junior Chuckie Yates, senior pitcher David Forster, junior catcher Ryan Rogers, and senior pitcher Doug Parris. All four of these players were named as players to watch in the South Region.

Yates last year not only led the team on defense, teaming with second baseman Stephen Coleman to turn 43 double plays, good for sixth in the nation, but also led the team with 46 stolen bases.

In a line-up filled with returning players Etchison said that it would not take long for them to find their rhythm. Last year the Scots posted a .343 batting average, which was 18th best in the nation.

A key for this season will be how the Scots fair against the "bubble team" on their schedule. These are the teams that are ranked 3, 4, and 5 in the South Region. Big games for the Scots will also come against Methodist College on March 21, who is now the number one ranked team in the South and number four in the nation.

The Scots will also later travel to Ohio to take on Marietta College on May 3, and 4, who is the number 3 ranked team in the nation.

In order to strengthen the schedule, the team added some teams that have not appeared on the schedule in the past 10 years. Two of these teams include Bridgewater College, from Virginia, on March 17 and Mary Washington on March 18. Both games will be on the road.

Some other important early games will come against East Tennessee State University and Carson Newman on March 28, and May 1. The Scots will travel to ETSU, while plying Carson Newman at home.

One thing that Coach Etchison was pleased most about was his pitching staff.

"We have no weak links and the number of pitchers we have is great. In the past our pitchers could go two or three innings. Now they go four or five innings. This is a result of their great work in the off season," said Etchison.

A good sign for the Scots is the way that they performed in their annual fall season. They went unbeaten, and won every game by 10 runs. The key to their success was that they were able to get on base and drive in runs. This will also be important for the upcoming season.

The Scots set many marks as a team and as individuals last year. The ranked among the national leaders in many different categories. With the new score board and lights added to the baseball diamond, it should be another exiting year for the Scots.

Some special dates to put on your calendar will be March 12 when the Scots take on the University of the South. The game begins at 3:30pm and the first 100 MC fans will receive free hats. Then again on April 11, when the Scots face Oglethorpe at 3pm, the first 100 MC students will again receive hats. Please come and cheer on the Scots and grab your free hat in the process.

Young Lady Scots looking to build

by Joe Malheiro
Sports Writer

The Lady Scots softball team is off to a 1-3 start. The team earned their first win of the season in an opening tournament in Savannah against SCAD on Feb. 23-25.

Although the team only has 11 players, coach Schram says, "despite our numbers being low, we have a great deal of talent, the best we've had in some time."

The team hopes to improve on last year's 4-11 mark.

Coach Schram is looking for big things from pitcher Misty Walker.

Schram says, "Misty has come in stronger than I've ever seen her. We hope that she can provide the spark we're looking for."

Schram is also looking for big things from freshman Trisha Bean and Lesley Stinnett, who are both pitchers looking to find their way into the rotation.

"I hope that Trisha and Lesley will play like they are capable of playing, they are both playing strong right now," said Schram.

Currently the team is led by Jennifer Pavlis in RBI's, and Julie Posey in stolen bases.

Coach Schram said, "This is a young team, we have no seniors. We have one junior, five sophomores, and five freshman. But this could be one of our best seasons in recent years."

The team is relatively healthy, although Schram mentioned that Maria DeGuzman is sidelined right now with a thumb injury and that she is hoping for a quick return.

Coach Schram is hoping that the fans will come out and support the team.

"We play quite a few games on the road early in the season, but will be playing a bunch of home games towards the end of the season. All of which are double headers, said Schram.

Offseason football talk...

Changes needed now for playoff system

by Joe Malheiro
Sports Writer

It has been a few months since the college football season ended. With that in mind, I felt it is time that we talk about it again so that we football fans can keep our sanity.

My platform for this column is a college football playoff system for Division I-A. To many people this is a huge issue in college football today. To others it does not mean anything.

For those of you who are still reading, here is why I felt that a playoff system is the way to go. Currently, college football in the Division I-A is the only level of football that doesn't have a playoff format. Not only do all other levels of college and professional football have a playoff system, even high school and pee-wee football leagues have a playoff system. Now, do not get me wrong, I do not support this system so that everybody can get a chance to win. After all, not all teams are created equal, if that were the case the Super Bowl would be a round-robin tournament that would last all year long.

However, I do support this idea because there is always more than one team each year that could beat the national champion, but does not get a chance. Taking this past season as an example, prior to the bowl games, Nebraska, Florida, Ohio State, and Tennessee all had what was considered a legitimate shot at the national championship.

Granted, Nebraska and Florida were in a better position because of their unbeaten records, still it is not completely fair to have two excellent football teams such as UT and OSU eliminated just because they had each lost one game. After all, there are 108 Division I-A football teams and out of those came only two undefeated teams at the end of the regular season. This is testimony to how difficult a task it is to be undefeated.

In the case of last season's scenario had Nebraska, Florida, OSU, and UT, been put into a four team playoff system, Nebraska would have played UT for the National Championship due to the fact that both teams won their respective bowl games.

My proposal for a playoff system is a bit different than one that would invite four teams, here is what I propose: At the end of the regular season, take the top eight teams in the Associated Press final poll and bracket them into an eight team playoff for the National Championship, single elimination, winner take all. Now, for those of you wondering about the other 17 teams in the poll as well as the various existing bowl games don't worry were going to keep those. I also feel that the remaining teams left in the poll as well as those that are unranked, but still have winning records should be eligible to be invited to a bowl game which would be handled in the manner that our current bowl system is constructed.

This plan would allow the schools in the eight team playoff to make money for their school by ticket sales and television revenue for the playoff. It would also allow those schools that did not qualify for the tournament to make their money by ticket sales and television revenue from whatever bowl game they compete in. More importantly however, the fans who really want their team to have a shot at a National Championship will have an increased chance of seeing that happen if a playoff format is implemented.

Announcements

MC Alternative Spring Break

The Team will be leaving Saturday, March 16. It would be a BIG help to the group if faculty, staff, and students would donate any of the following items: breakfast bars, bagels, Pop Tarts, box drinks (juice), snack foods, and can drinks. Please drop items off in the Student Development Office by noon on Friday, March 15. Thank you!

French Club

Every Friday the French Club hosts a French Table in Pearsons Alcove from 11:30-12:30. Everyone is welcome to join in French dialogue in a relaxed atmosphere.

The French Club will be taking a trip to Le Chef Bistro in Knoxville on March 27 for dessert. Everyone is welcome. For more info, call x 8423.

Anyone is welcome to join the French Club, which meets the first Tuesday of every month in Anderson Hall room 308 at 11:00.

Contributing Artists

These cartoonists were not mentioned with their contributions which were exhibited in the last issue:

Mike Lewis, Kristi Renninger, Gordon Wright, Jeff Huckaby, Callie McPherson, Misty Walker, Gevin Simpson, Kevin Rogers, Wes Farragut, Igor Bogatov & Ronnie Johnson, Matt Webb, and Allison Pryor.

This issue was guest edited by David Downs . . . Assistant Editor
Chris Stephens . . . Sports Editor
And
Sarah West . . . Assistant Editor

Two students dressed up and showed their musical talent. They were just two of the many students who took part in Fun Flicks on Feb. 29.

Career Corner...

On Campus Interviews

The King's Academy, a private Christian school in Seymour, TN, (25 minutes from MC) will interview on campus April 10 for K-5 and secondary education licensure. Positions are for next fall. Resume should be submitted to Career Services immediately.

Duval County Schools, Jacksonville, FL will be on campus to interview education majors March 28. Come by Career Services to sign up for a time. Resume required.

The Prudential Insurance and Financial Services Company will be on campus March 20 to interview for local sales reposition. Duties involve sales and service of annuities, mutual funds, property and casualty insurance, and life insurance. Come by Career Services for more information and to sign up for an interview time.

Career Services Offers You. . . . .

- 1). hundreds of current job postings for full-time, part-time, summer, and internships
- 2). free resume writing services
- 3). guidance in declaring a major
- 4). help with interviewing techniques
- 5). career and grad school counseling
- 6). a resource library containing grad school catalogs, information on study abroad, summer study opportunities, entry-level salary information, job search aids and career opportunities.

Personal Counseling

Maryville College now has a full-time counselor to address your questions and concerns of a personal nature. Appointments are coordinated through the Counseling and Career Services and may be scheduled by calling extension 8220, 8035 or by visiting the office, 207 Fayerweather Hall.

Inside

Movie review
p. 3

MC Senate election information
p. 5

New professors
p. 7

Basketball coverage
pp. 10 & 11

6.8% tuition hike planned for next year

Alex Little, Maryville College student senate president, has announced a 6.80 percent tuition rate increase for next year—the smallest rate of increase for fees in recent years.

The increase will include two additions to the student activity fee: a 50 dollar per-year fee to establish an on-campus student health service this fall, and a one-time-only 25 dollar fee for establishing an aerobic fitness center. Both fees have been approved by the student senate.

This year's increase is lower than last year's 6.86 percent increase.

Little stated that the hike is due both to annual inflation and to expected improvements related to the MC 2000 plan. He wrote in a letter to students, "Simply put, building an even stronger Maryville College costs money."

According to Little, the administration plans to use the money for residence hall improvements, deferred maintenance, and additional financial aid.

Senate Committee announces policy changes

by Patrick Leslie
Advertising Manager
and
Sarah West
Assistant Editor

The student senate residence life committee held a forum to discuss proposed changes in room selection policies, the alcohol policy, housing structure, health care, and a cardiovascular center in the Lloyd Hall basement. The residence life committee consists of five hall senators and two student representatives.

In an effort to make the room selection process more fair and to eliminate the long lines, which have been a major complaint, the committee has re-worked the process. The selection of a lottery number is now based on class standing. From there students select a room according to the number which they have drawn. Concessions have been made for students who can not be at the number drawing or room selection. Students who squat their rooms are not allowed to play the lottery.

Pending the final version of the new alcohol policy, students who are 21 years of age living in Lloyd, Pearsons, and Carnegie will be able to consume alcohol. The only stipulation is that both students and guests in a dorm room must be 21 years of age. The consumption of alcohol is not permitted in the presence of minors.

Dr. William Seymour, vice president of student development, said the new policy gives "more flexibility for students while maintaining the integrity of the MC concept of alcohol and how it should be used and not used."

About 20 to 25 rooms on campus occupied by those 21 and older may have alcohol, and Residence Assistants (RA's) will know which rooms are and are not rooms in which alcohol may be consumed. Students who break the policy will be subject to disciplinary sanctions under the current policy.

The revisions to the housing policy include the redistribution of male and female rooms in Copeland, opening Pearsons to any upper classmen, and a reduction in the number of private rooms available.

There has also been a change in the time and way in which students who have no roommates can choose one. They have six weeks, during which a meeting will be held so that these students can meet with one another in the hopes that they can find a suitable match. If a student has failed to select a roommate by this time, one will be assigned to him or her.

In addition to these changes, students will have a nurse and a doctor available to them next year. This system is not designed to replace any existing medical plan, but is intended to be a supplement. Students will be able to see the doctor for minor illnesses. The doctor will be able to prescribe prescription medication and to provide basic medical attention. A nurse will keep more regular hours.

Other changes precipitated by the committee include the addition of a cardiovascular work-out

see Policies p. 6

Sex, life, and Madam President

by Patrick Leslie
Advertising Manager

Knowing full well that I will be asked to turn in my badge of masculinity and surrender my weapon at the office, I must agree with Sarah West's "Swiss Chocolate" meditations. I am against sexism in any form. In addition to they way women feel when they are categorized, men are also sorted and labeled.

Now do not get me wrong. I am not whining and saying that men are victims, too. Everyone is a victim in one way or another. It does not matter if you are female, male, black, white, Asian etc.

Does it really matter that a presidential candidate is a woman? How about a black woman? I say go for it! They could not do a worse job than the present group of candidates. Here I believe the point which Sarah was trying to make that it does not matter whether or not you are male or female, but instead who can get the job done in the most professional manner and in a universally beneficial way.

Who doesn't want respect? Pedestals often turn into cages. Once an individual or group has passed judgment on a person, it is almost impossible for that individual to change that image in the eyes of onlookers. It does not matter if the top of the pedestal is reserved for beauty, tal-than flattering. An individual wants to be recognized for his or her merits, not for sexuality to or relationship with someone else.

Things such as grades and the ability to work, in my humble opinion, have nothing to do with sex or race. Anyone who wants to excel either academically or in the business world can with hard work and dedication.

I often work with women and have found in most cases that they work more efficiently than some men. It boils down to individuals. Some individuals are better at certain things than others, whether they are male or female. Part of the problem is that people are unwilling to admit it when someone who they believe is inferior to them is better at a task.

I do believe that the issue of sexism is only one part of the problem. The big picture here is discrimination in general. People need to become more aware of the way their actions appear. They also need to evaluate the motives of their actions. I am not saying to act blunt and rude if you decide that you don't like a person for either personality, sex, or race. Try and look at things in an objective manner and treat everyone with respect. Maybe afterwards you might even think that a woman would make a good president.

"Part of the problem is that people are unwilling to admit when someone who they believe is inferior to them is better at a task."

Senate passes alcohol policy, plans for upcoming elections

by Michelle Shuler
Staff Writer

During the March 28 meeting, the student senate discussed committee activities, and two proposals were passed.

The elections committee is currently preparing for the senate elections which will take place this month. The elections for student senate president will be held before the third week of April, and class officers will be selected during the fourth week of April, according to Russell Perry, head of the election committee. Any class officer must be a full-time student with at least a 2.0 GPA. In addition, candidates for student senate president must have previous senate experience.

This year, according to Perry, the senate will be trying to put more emphasis on commuter involvement in elections. There will also be a change in next year's elections in that next year a Center for English Language Learning (CELL) student will be elected to student senate.

The library committee announced some changes in current policy. Videotapes are now in circulation for 48 hours. The library is also now selling blank computer disks. Several new CD ROM titles have also been ordered for the MC library.

The Inter-Club Council continues to work on putting together club constitutions for student organizations.

Dr. William Seymour, vice president for student development, submitted a proposal to the student senate asking that $250 be allocated for the purchase of T-shirts to give to participants in the upcoming March of Dimes Walk-a-thon. The proposal passed 16-1.

The revision of the campus alcohol policy, which had already been passed by the MC executive committee, was passed unanimously by the Senate. The revision involves Section C of the current policy. Under the terms of the revision, alcohol would be allowed in Carnegie, Lloyd, and Pearson halls only in rooms where both occupants are of legal drinking age. These students would not be allowed to drink with underage students present and would be subject to punishment for drinking in the presence of any underage student. Drinking will continue to be restricted in public areas of residence halls. Freshman Class President Sarah Knisley said about the revision, "I think that the new alcohol policy is an excellent way to bring the covenant to the forefront of campus life by trusting the students and their maturity." The revised policy should go into effect next year.

The Highland Echo

Amanda Martin
Editor

Sarah West
Assistant Editor

Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

Reporters

Sarah Christians, Dara DiGiacomo, Allison Dunn, Kenvon Evans, Lori Leffel, Becky Lill, Joe Malheiro, Michelle Shuler, Matt Waters.

Columnists

Alex Little, Bo McMichael, Jonathan Peters, Claire Stancampiano

Photography Editors
Yosef Addis, Kristin Kant

Computer Layout
Susan Rayborn, Traci Tidwell

Advertising Manager/Designer

Patrick Leslie

Advisor
Jeff Gary

Cartoonists
Chris West, Scott West
Carl Gombert

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR...

The Echo welcomes your comments, letters and guest columns. All written material to be published in the Echo must be typed and accompanied by your name, post office box number, and phone number. Send material to The Highland Echo, Box 2511. The Echo can be reached by calling the Student Publications Office at campus extension 8176. The opinions expressed in the Echo do not necessarily reflect the views of Maryville College.

Senior thesis-itis and my elderly car

by Jonathan Peters
Columnist

Ah, column time again. I'm sure everyone is sick of hearing about all the seniors' woes about theses and comps, so I'll try to spare you. I'm sure people have noticed the signs—the dark circles under seniors' eyes, the bloodshot computer-screen-blank stares, the complete lack of connection with the outside world as a whole. "What?!? Lamar dropped out?!?...gosh, I guess I've been in the computer lab too long!"

Graduating from Maryville College is one of those important goals that has sort of crept into my life, yet I must remind myself in times like these of an important sanity saving maxim—one which all seniors may want to consider looking in the mirror and repeating to themselves on a daily basis. When I am tempted to take up all my test tubes and all my music scores and crumple them up into one collective pile of mess and cast them into a dumpster where they seem to want to go anyway, I remind myself that "I am not my senior thesis." My thesis and I are separate entities.

But back to lighter subjects. I've been having an interesting time with my car of late (perhaps my "late car.") Auto mechanics is not something I can claim great proficiency in, but sometimes I find it relaxing and interesting. Cars are like people in a lot of ways.

Mine seems to be taking on the elderly grandmother type personality—slightly senile, slow, complaining of ailments often, yet too beloved to be put in a home. Nursing homes are extraordinarily depressing places, so I couldn't think of putting "The Beast" in a junk yard—which is basically the car equivalent. I guess I'm too attached to perform euthanasia on my car. After all, it's an antique!

I was riding with a friend in his car once and noticed that the transmission was making horrible noises, and would flatly refuse to go uphill without physical coercion. I was concerned for the welfare of a fellow entity in the universe (and my friend too), and asked him what he was going to do about that poor transmission. I was trying to convince him his car needed an appendectomy or some such procedure, or at least a physical from a qualified doctor. He said, "No, I'll just drive it for what it's worth and get a new one when it dies." I was appalled.

Over the last three years my car and I have developed an interesting line of communication. It actually tries to tell me when something is wrong. For instance, when the transmission is too hot, it smells faintly but distinctly like a hot transmission. (It was awfully confusing to drive through Cleveland, Ohio, where everything smelled like my car was about to blow up.) The car is like a good friend who is communicative about things like this. If your friend tells you he has a sprained ankle, do you give him a crutch? Or would you ask him to go jogging with you and say, "Oh well, I'll find someone else to be friends with when he can't keep up anymore?"

Perhaps there is more serious meaning to our tendency not to listen for funny sounding clunks and clanks in our vehicles. It is easy to be lulled into clouded idealism where the thought of auto maintenance seems both unpleasant and unnecessary. My friend, who could have saved his car by inquiring about how happy it was about its transmission fluid level, is an ideal example. I guess keeping tuned in to all sorts of clinks and clanks can prevent serious and unexpected breakdowns further down the highway.

The Echo Opinion Poll

Results are in for the last issue's opinion poll. Of the fifty-eight students surveyed, Tom Hanks received most votes for favorite actor. The second most popular choice was "undecided." Harrison Ford and Mel Gibson ranked at numbers three and four, respectively. For President, students favored Bill Clinton (38%), who was closely followed by Bob Dole (33%). Mail your opinions to box 2247.

Favorite Actor

1. Tom Hanks
2. Undecided
3. Harrison Ford
4. Mel Gibson

Opinion Poll

1. What is your opinion on the new room selection policy?

2. Which major political figure has the greatest need of a makeover/trip to the Jenny Jones Show?

At the Movies with Bo &amp; Chris

It's already summertime in the movie theatre!

by Bo McMichael
Columnist

Mother nature might not know it's spring yet, but the inside of the theater is sweltering with hot new movies. The calendar might read the beginning of Spring, but don't tell the movie industry that! They think it is time for summer. So let's get down and dirty with some great films that are guaranteed to make you laugh, cry, sweat, and think.

In the beginning God made comedy, and Robin Williams was its name. This man can make any situation seem funny. The new film by Mike Nichols, "The Birdcage" is a remake of 1978 French "La Cage aux Folles". Albert (Nathan Lane) plays a middle aged drag queen who headlines at a club run by his longtime lover Armand, (Williams). The story gets complicated when his son comes home and breaks the bad news that he is getting married to a GIRL. The catch is that her parents are played by Gene Hackman, a stuffed-shirt conservative running for office, and Diane Wiest, his perfect wife. The fun begins when the in-laws come over for dinner, and something is not quite what it seems.

•Bo: "The first hour is, how can I say, very different. As for the concluding hour, I cannot remember ever laughing so hard. Williams is at his finest, and the stage actor turned film actress, Nathan Lane, is incredibly funny. Their are only two things you need to bring to this movie: an open mind and your funny bone."

Michelle Pfeiffer is tackling a riskier subject than teaching in her newest film. She takes on a the news world as a television reporter. Robert Redford is her protegee, and before they know it, they are in love and must decide between their careers and their family.

•Chris: "Hey, can you believe it?! I made it to see a movie, and what a great one it was. Take the one you love, like I did, (needless to say it wasn't the big guy), and score major points. The movie is filled from start to finish with moments that will make your heart stop and your eyes water. Maybe the best thing about the movie is the ending, but I won't spoil it for you. If you want comedy, go and see whatever Bo was talking about earlier, but if you want drama and romance, get "Up Close and Personal" with two of Hollywood's best actors and actresses.

"Can I take your order, please?" "Yes, I would like one action-thriller with a large airplane and a couple of hijackers on the side." "Would you like a special task force to go along with your meal?" "Only if Kurt Russell is available." "Well, you are in luck! We only have one left and it is an "Executive Decision." An Islamic terrorist hijacks a 747 and stashes enough nerve gas to wipe out the entire Eastern Seaboard of the United States. Did anyone call for Wyatt Earp and Doc Holiday to save the day? It seems that Kurt Russell made it, but Steven Seagal is no Doc Holiday.

•Bo: "Assume the position on the edge of your seat and stay there until the movie is over. This testosterone filled flick is what every action junky wants!"

We were accompanied by four other critics from Maryville College for this next flick: James Carpenter, Treysen Tinney, Aaron Damrill, and Bryan Turner. The new lawyer thriller, "Primal Fear" is set in Chicago, and it involves the Catholic Church and a murder. The defense attorney, Richard Gere, makes a habit of defending the scum of the earth, or at least the scum of Chicago. The only problem is that this time his client could be innocent.

•James: "A Roy Roger's 'happy-go-lucky' film it is not; a 'must see' it is."

•Treysen: "Stop what you are doing and add some fear in your life"

•Aaron: "Intriguing."

•Bryan: "Never would have guessed it!"

•Chris: "Knew it all along, NOT! I think the audience will be in for a treat, because, for once, Gere does

and Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

not come out on top. Well, sort of. Check out this new thriller that will keep you guessing until the very end.

•Bo: "The best thing about going to a movie is sharing the theater with a group of friends. Most of the time I knock heads with my little buddy; however, I was in movie critic heaven with four other responses. And by the way, Jimmy, you still do not get a tip! You cannot go wrong with this movie, and if you figure it out before the end, you have a job waiting for you with the F.B.I."

One more issue, until the Summer, don't forget.....

Parents: from bizzare to paranoid, we love 'em

by Claire Stancampiano
Columnist

"Hey Claire, they have the new 'Nine Inch Nails' CD here," explained my younger brother Moss on one of our excursions to Wal-Mart.

"Who?" my mother asked, "Ninety -Eight Snails?"

Upon her inquiry, Moss and I realized that rather than explain "Nine Inch Nails" to our mother, it would be simpler to just agree with her. "Yeah mom, Ninety -Eight Snails," we conceded. He and I then proceeded to laugh uncontrollably for 30 minutes.

We love them. They gave us life. They can often be mildly entertaining. They sometimes provide us with baked goods. They are our parents.

The following study is based on data collected throughout my 21 short years on this planet. In it, I will establish organized patterns of parental behavior in order for us to come to a better understanding of our parents. You may identify your parents with one or more of the following descriptions.

Let us begin with Pseudo-Normal parents. You know the kind who act perfectly sane when your friends are around, but later say things to you like, "Did you know those old episodes of Three's Company were designed to start a revolution back then?" Your friends say "Your parents are so cool!" But you know the truth: they are out of their minds.

Next we have those parents afflicted with chronic Bitteritis. They hate pretty much everything and can't understand why stuff "costs so damn much." They don't like

Super Nintendo because all they had to play with was some mud, and they had to share it with their brothers and sisters. If these two take a long car trip, don't even think about getting out of the vehicle for any reason unless maybe you are bleeding profusely.

Some parents suffer from the "One-Big-Happy-Family" fantasy syndrome. Warning: this type can be highly delusional, and if you do not succumb to their bizarre beliefs about the family's blissful state, they'll quickly whip out their Guilt Harpoons. One shot from the Guilt Harpoon usually leaves you at a family event taking place in the hot sun involving Jello-based suspended fruit shrapnel desserts made by an old lady who keeps calling you by the wrong name. Another shot, and you are forced to write Thank-You notes to people you don't know for stuff you didn't want.

There also exist those parents whose brilliance outweighs their capacity to be aware of any happenings in the free world. In their refrigerators, you will find only condiments and some science specimens being monitored for changes. My father is a musical genius, and he believes that this entitles him to ignore any labels that say "Dry Clean Only." One time, he conventionally washed and dried my beige ankle-length wool winter coat. He then proceeded to explain that it would stretch back out and return to its normal color after I wore it a few times. My mother, given enough duct tape, some plastic straws, and an extension cord, could build a personal computer, but she only found out the O.J. Simpson verdict a few weeks ago.

Often we see parents whose only tactic when it comes to raising children is intimidation. This form of guidance results in two types of offspring: "Type A" children alphabetize their CD collection, pick out their clothing for school the night before in order to have ample ironing time, and enjoy all Milton Bradley Games. "Type B" kids chain smoke "Clove" cigarettes, frequent places called "Guns and Needles," and enjoy a rousing game of "Let's See How Much Stuff We Can Steal From Gas Stations and Not Get Caught."

Finally, there are those parents who remain in a constant state of fear because they watch entirely too many TV news programs. They have smoke, radon, and carbon monoxide detectors in every room. They pressure wash the entire

Continued on p. 5

Claire's column

kitchen and each other after handling raw meat of any kind. They give each other looks when people are speaking a foreign language in the Supermarket. They carry six forms of picture ID with them and always have exact change at toll booths for fear of being of being mistakenly arrested and thrown into a Mexican prison because they saw that happen to this lady on TV.

I don't want to change our parents. I hope this description of these sets of behaviors helps you classify and better understand your own parents' actions. Most of the time, I love their eccentricities; however, most of them are rapidly being sucked into throes of weirdness, and we, frighteningly enough, whether we admit it or not, are becoming more and more like them.

continued from p.4

Completely off the subject, let me fess up to something right now. I hail from Schenectady, N.Y. Recent news reports say that Schenectady was a place of residence for the infamous Unabomber. Now that I know this, I think they should allow him to go free immediately. One week in Schenectady, a town affectionately referred to by many as the armpit of America, is enough to make anybody want to continuously blow things up.

March of Dimes Walk America

Maryville College is putting a team together of staff, faculty, and students to walk and to raise funds in the March of Dimes WalkAmerica Sunday, April 28, beginning at 2:00 p.m. The proceeds will go to further research and programs to prevent birth defects and infant mortality. If you would like to participate, call Holly Bailey at x8013. Everyone who walks gets a T-shirt.

photo by Kristin Kant

Getting a facelift? . . .

The renovation of Bartlett Hall is one of the many options for a new student center in the upcoming years

Election schedule

Monday, April 15

•Senate President Elections (Halls: 6-8 p.m.; Commuters: 9 a.m.-1 p.m. in Fayerweather)

Wednesday, April 17

•Debate-Class Senators (if time allows)

Monday, April 22

•Elections for Commuters in Fayerweather 9 a.m.-1 p.m.

Tuesday, April 23

•Hall Elections from 6 p.m.-8 p.m. for Class Officers.

Tuesday, April 23

•Ballot count will be completed that evening.

If you have any questions or comments, contact Matt Webb (984-5136) or Russell Perry (977-5097).

Here's what your student senate presidential candidates had to say . . .

Eric Obermiller, Junior History and Religion major from Cookeville, TN.

"I would like to be the President of the Senate because I would like to see some of the things that we did this year progress further. Senate did a lot of great things for the students, and I would like to continue acting for the interests of the students. I feel that I am very qualified for the job, and I can say without reservation that I will put my all into making the Senate and the students' voices heard."

Aaron Stone, Junior Music major from Athens, TN.

"With my fourth and final year coming up at Maryville, and having been a member of the Student Senate for the past three years, I feel that I owe it to the college and to my fellow students to run for senate president. Every since I arrived on campus in 1993, I have diligently worked with faculty, staff, and students to make Maryville College a better place. Working for the needs of others and being an advocate for those needs is the real reason I have chosen to run. I have found through my time at Maryville, that you must work for what you want, and the only way to do that is by voicing how you feel. I want to help that voice work for what it needs and keep our student voice heard loud and clear."

Jason Thompson, Junior Political Science major from Fayetteville, GA.

"I want the student body to know that I have the experience to be Student Senate President. Many of the duties that I performed with Model UN, such as operating a large budget and managing a staff of students, will be duties that are concurrent with the office of the Student Senate President. My staff and I will make ourselves available to the student body so that senate will revolve around their needs. I want to put the 'student' back in Student Senate."

If you don't vote, don't whine!

MC looking for food services bids

by Sarah West
Assistant Editor

Through forums, surveys, and meetings, students have expressed concern over how the money they spend on a meal plan is used. According to Dr. William Seymour, vice president of student development, students paid $1160 for a 21-meal plan per semester this year. The amount of $5.03 was spent per student per day, but this amount fluctuates depending on the number of students on the meal plan. A budget is developed each year to allocate the money from meal plans, and Marriott receives about half of that amount depending on how many students actually eat there a month. The rest goes into an operational budget to cover other expenses that may be related to food services, such as improvements, replacement of equipment, etc.

Seymour said, "Our prices are consistent with what other colleges' [meal plans] are costing."

Marriott Food Services Director Marge Bradley explained that Marriott has many costs, such as employees' salaries and benefits, dishes, food, paper supplies, decorations, specials, etc. Bradley said that Marriott has tried to give students variety through adding a wok bar twice a week, a steak/chicken night, and several specialty bars.

"We just want to keep the students happy," Bradley said.

As for ideas for the future, Bradley wants different menus, more evening entertainment, more outdoor meals, and a new look for the cafeteria.

Because of students concerns, Maryville College is accepting bids for the food service and will select one by May 1, and the change, if there is one, will occur July 1. The opportunity for change allows the administration to review possibilities other than Marriott to ensure that students are receiving the most for their money.

An alternate bid for Isaac's snack bar will be provided to give students an alternative to the cafeteria. Students could possibly use their meal cards to purchase a meal in lieu of going to the dining room. An arrangement with a fast food restaurant and the food service may not be impossible for our small campus since some companies are including mini-operations with fast food restaurants, but the restaurants could not be independent.

Applications currently being accepted for Impressions editors

Dr. Charlotte Beck is now accepting applications for the editorial positions for the MC literary magazine Impressions. Interested students should contact Dr. Beck at x8240, or stop by her office on the second floor of Anderson Hall. The deadline is Wednesday, April 17.

Policies

continued from p. 1

facility in Lloyd basement. It will be staffed by student workers and will provide music and television. Fitness walkers and possibly rowing machines will be available for students to stay in shape.

One of the major concerns of many students is the cost of these changes. There will be an increase in the activity fee for next year and a smaller long term activity fee increase.

One aspect of the forum was the lack of attendance. There was a total of seventeen students other than the committee present.

"Student initiative is the key to making change," said Seymour.

Upcoming events in April

- April 18—Sophomore/Junior recital by Aaron Stone and Funmilayo Eké, 8 p.m., Fine Arts Center Music Hall.
- April 19—Senior Wine and Cheese, 5-8 p.m., Proffitt Dining Room.
- April 19—MC Community Band Concert, 8 p.m., Wilson Chapel.
- April 20—Academic Awards Banquet, 7 p.m., Pearsons Dining Hall.
- April 1-20—Sally Harrington, Senior Exhibit, Fine Arts Center.

Scott West's "Weird Perspectives"

Hearing the door shut behind him, Bob realized that he had grossly underestimated his enemy.

Bowling for Scholars by Carl Gombert

30,000 YEARS AGO TODAY

Schrum to join Chemistry Department this fall

by Kenyon Evans
Staff Writer

The Maryville College chemistry department faculty is nearly doubling in size next year. The two-man department has just hired a new addition: Mrs. Kimberly Schrum, very soon to be Dr. Kimberly Schrum. Schrum will be receiving her doctorate from Purdue University this spring and joining the MC faculty next year.

Small liberal arts colleges are familiar to Schrum, and she looks forward to returning to a small liberal arts environment. She went to a college very similar to Maryville: Lawrence University in Appleton, Wisconsin. Schrum wrote in her Statement of Teaching Philosophy, "One of the true rewards of being a teacher is seeing students excel and even surpass the levels of scientific proficiency which the teacher has attained. The kind of interaction which facilitates this kind of learning can only take place when teachers and students have close contact with one another."

"Having attended a small liberal arts college which prided itself on teaching excellence, I have benefited from these types of interactions and have been provided with some excellent experiences and role models."

Schrum studied chemistry as an undergraduate and focused on analytical chemistry in her graduate studies. Most of her research has been done on Raman Spectroscopy, a technique that uses the scattering of light to analyze chemicals. Besides her chemistry classes, she will be teaching a Science 150 class in the fall and commented, "[Through this class] I'd like to reinforce how integral science is to society and how important it is to have a basic understanding of science in our modern society."

The two current chemistry professors, Dr. Terry Bunde and Dr. Robert Naylor, specialize in organic and physical chemistry, respectively; Schrum's field of expertise will be a welcome complement to their specialties. Naylor, head of the natural science division, commented, "The number of majors in chemistry has increased, and it's going to be nice for two aging scientists to have someone new to do some things that we haven't had time to do."

One of the areas in which Schrum has been active is promoting the status of women in science; she has done this specifically through programs such as the "Women in the School of Science Mentor/Mentee Program." Naylor pointed out that she will make an excellent role model for women aspiring to pursue the sciences. Naylor said, "I think people need to see what women are doing and are capable of in science."

Schrum plans to improve on the American Chemical Society Student Affiliates chapter here and also looks forward to becoming involved with the sign language program, the Mountain Challenge program, and the international community.

She looks forward to coming to the mountains and thoroughly enjoys hiking and canoeing. She also enjoys reading and "drinking coffee and talking to people." Student interaction is important to Schrum, and part of her reason for accepting the position was the nature of Maryville College students.

Soud to join English faculty this fall

by Allison Dunn
Staff Writer

Stephen E. Soud has been selected from a pool of 110 applicants to be Maryville College's new English professor.

Soud (rhymes with proud) was chosen because he met many of the department's criteria, among them his credentials. Soud is currently working for his doctorate in British literature at the University of Florida. Dr. Susan Schneibel, chair of Humanities, said that the department has "been assured of his (Soud's) graduation." The first chapter of his dissertation, entitled "Coin, Credit, and Value: Monetary Theory and British Literature, 1695 - 1742," has already been purchased by the Dublin Swift Company, even though the dissertation is not yet completed. Soud has visited MC, and, according to Schneibel, the reactions of the students who attended his lecture and ate lunch with him were very positive. Many of the students who spent time with Soud commented that they were "amazed at his energy" and surprised at his enthusiasm for sports and popular music. Schneibel also said that the English faculty were also impressed with him.

Soud is married to a high school Spanish teacher and has two children: a five-year-old son and a twelve-year-old daughter.

Schneibel said she expects Soud to "bring disciplinary depth into seventeenth and eighteenth century literature, breath into the English curriculum, cultural studies (specifically in historical political economy), and to be a major player

Way Out West

by Chris West

Way Out West

by Chris West

"Run away you said, have lots of fun you said, see the world you said..."

Wyatt resigns as Residence Life Director

by Sarah Christians
Staff Writer

Stephanie Wyatt

Come next fall, Stephanie Wyatt, director of Residence Life for three years, will no longer be a staff member at Maryville College. Her husband has just completed his degree and accepted a job at Honda RND in Columbus, Ohio, and Wyatt will be moving there this summer.

"She has had a great impact on Maryville College and will be greatly missed," said Nadia Edoh, a senior.

There are many small colleges that Wyatt has been looking at in Ohio, but she is still unsure where she will be working. Wyatt said that she will really miss everyone and has enjoyed working at MC the past three years.

Dr. William Seymour, vice president of student development, is accepting applications, so that MC will have a head start on other schools in finding a new director of residence life. Both students and staff have been reviewing the applications for the position. Interviews are being held, and both staff and students are participating in them.

Residence Life staff members Sarah Schow and Ned Willard will also leave the MC family in the upcoming months.

photo by Kristin Kant

This is Lloyd Beach?

Easter Sunrise services were held Sunday at MC on Lloyd Beach

DRB and J-Board report

- 2/1 For failure to comply, a student received 20 hours of community service.
- 2/19 One student in Copeland Hall received a warning for a community bath facilities offense.
- 2/23 In Carnegie Hall, three students were charged with an alcohol offense and found guilty, but the case is being appealed to J-Board.
- 2/23 A student in Carnegie Hall received a $25 fine and warning for a roofs/ledges offense.
- 2/23 A student was charged with harassment in Copeland Hall, but the charge was dropped.
- 2/27 In Copeland Hall, a student broke visitation policy and received first offense.
- 3/2 In Davis Hall, two students received first offense for visitation violation.
- 3/3 One student and one non-MC student violated visitation policy at Davis Hall, and the student received second offense and two months probation.
- 3/7 One student and one non-MC student broke visitation in Davis, and the student received third offense, probation for remainder of year, and ten hours community service.
- 3/9 A case involving four students charged with alcohol in Copeland Hall is pending. A non-MC student was also present.

- 3/10 Two students in Davis broke visitation, and the case is pending.
- 3/11 A student received a warning for vandalism in Carnegie.
- 3/12 Quiet hours were broken by two students in Copeland, and the case is pending.
- 3/14 In Davis, Two students broke visitation, and the case is pending.
- 3/14 In Fayerweather parking lot, a student was charged with reckless driving, and the case is pending.

- 3/15 Five students and one non-MC student were charged with alcohol violation in Carnegie, and the case is pending.
- 3/15 A case including a student charged with alcohol in Gamble is pending.

• 3/15 A case involving a Copeland resident charged with alcohol is pending.

• 3/15 On Lloyd Beach, two students were charged with reckless driving and vandalism, and the case is pending.

• 4/1 A case of a student charged with failure to comply is pending.

The Highland Echo Classifieds

INTERNSHIPS:

Graduate internship in business with Proffitt's Department store for Oct.-Dec., 1996. Work 40-hr wk, $6 hr. Apply now. Send resume and cover letter to Ronie Everett, Proffitt's; P. O. Box 9388; Alcoa, TN 37701.

Oak Ridge Associated Universities offers summer positions for jrs. and srs. in the following (but not limited to) mjrs: bus./mang't, acctgng, comp. sci., econ. Come by Career Services for more info.

Resort Recreation & Tourism Mang't summer internships in S. Carolina, Cal, Fla. Fully furnished housing, housing deposits, local phone, all utilities, cable TV and $150/mo. Fall and Christmas break 1995 are available. Career Services has more info.

Pestech, Maryville, has bus./mang't internships available for summer. Hours are 9-5, 5-6 days a wk. $7.50/hr. Duties involve pest control tech. and cust. service for residential and commercial. Apply in Career Services.

SUMMER:

Smoky Mtn. Arts & Crafts and Smoky Mtn. Tubing in Townsend has full-time jobs. $5.50-up; 40-hr. wks. Applications in Career Services. Apply now.

Camp Webb in Knoxville needs workers for day camp. Positions as counselors; arts & crafts; life guard, ropes course, music and nature. Salary between $175-$250 week. Off the wk. of July 4th. Otherwise, 40-hour wks, June 8-July 12. Apply by April 15. Call 693-0011.

Forestry Aide I with the State of TN Dept. of Ag. Come to Career Services for application. Involves local gypsy moth trapping. $942/month plus $0.24/mile. No weekends or holiday work.

Jobs available in Gatlinburg-Pigeon Forge-Sevierville Area. Come to Career Services for more info.

Career Services has Opryland applications.

Info is available for positions with Six Flags Over Ga. (housing available). Intntl. Jobbers-Need warehouse workers. $6.50/hr. plus $.10 for evening hrs. + incentive pay. Start anytime between 3-7pm and work for 6-9 hrs - flexible around school schedule. Start now or when classes end. Must be able to lift 50-100 lbs. Apply now. See Career Services. Job 181.

Royal Oaks Country Club seeks part-time/full-time, spring/summer help for snack shop, banquets, cook, beverage cart. Start flexible part-time hrs. May 1. More hrs. in summer possible. See Career Services. Job 182.

Blister in the Sun slated for Saturday

by Matt Waters
Staff Writer

For the fourth consecutive year, the Student Programming Board is sponsoring the spring festival "Blister in the Sun."

According to Student Activities Coordinator Holly Bailey, 15 campus clubs and organizations will participate in the event that takes place on April 13. Planned festivities range from face-painting, a cake walk, and a dunking booth to a pie throw, bobbing for apples, and a car wash.

Additionally, three musical groups will perform. These include "Sour," a Maryville College student band; "Radioactive Flowers;" and "The Roger Day Band," two ensembles from Nashville.

Traditionally, there is a giant game to play at Blister. In the past, students have donned immense, padded suits for sumo wrestling and have also worn velcro for the "Velcro Olympics." This year, the main activity will be human foosball, a life-sized version of the popular game played with real people.

Also, a caricature artist will be featured during the course of the event. A fee of one dollar will be charged per picture.

Taking place from noon until 6 p.m., Blister is free to all Maryville College students. There is a two dollar entrance charge for the general public.

Blister '96 t-shirts will be available soon: featuring this year's logo, a giant red chili pepper, the shirts will be sold on April 11 and 12 during lunch hours in the lobby of Fayerweather Hall and on the day of the event.

Currently, Blister is scheduled to occur on the football field. In the occurrence of rain, the activities, including the bands, will be moved

Is it really spring outside

photo by Kristin Kant

This little tree outside of Fayerweather Hall is blooming in spite of freezing temperatures.

Bowling for Scholars by Carl Gombert

inside the Cooper Athletic Center.

"Blister lets students see what clubs are on campus," said junior SPB co-chair Allison F'yor. "It lets us have a good time at the start of spring free of alcohol."

Davis Hall holds theme week

by Rachel Roe
Staff Writer

In an attempt to create awareness and to emphasize knowledge and concern for the environment, Davis Hall recently held its theme week, entitled "You Live in the World You Make." Paige Cooper, assistant residence hall coordinator in Davis, explained, "We wanted to address the issue of both internal and external environmental care."

The facilitators of the theme week emphasized the theory that a person must achieve inner peace before his or her efforts to care for the earth's natural environment will be successful. Based on these ideas, the hall hosted a series of lectures during the week following spring break.

The first of these lectures was held in the Davis lobby on Monday. Hosted by David Powell, English professor, the discussion centered around the issue of recycling. Powell emphasized the impact that one person's contribution can make. He also raised the idea of not only re-using products, but refusing unnecessary items: for example, turning down a plastic bag when purchasing only small items.

On the following day, Cherri Torres, associate director of Mountain Challenge, spoke about exploring the inner environment through meditation. In her lecture she emphasized the idea of simplifying life, a theme that is also applicable to caring for the external environment. After giving a brief overview of the art of meditation, the group present actually engaged in the process.

The week culminated with a session on wilderness survival led by Eric Overton. During his discussion, Overton relayed information ranging from tips about day hikes to advice about skills for wilderness survival.

Cooper said, "We started off saying what we could do to help the environment and concluded with the idea of how the environment could help us survive."

August 1995: Sam-I-am is arrested for distributing tainted meat.

Scots baseball on winning streak

by Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

The Fighting Scots baseball team has not let some early season losses distract from the goal at hand. The Scots have now won seven in a row and have improved their record to 13-11 overall.

Head Coach Eric Etchison said that his numbers this year are the strength of the team.

"It is a real team effort. When in years past we were playing 10 or 11 men, now we are platooning 14-16 guys," said Etchison.

Some players that he pointed out were pitchers Doug Parris and Eric Pyle. Parris had posted a 3-3 record with an impressive 1.59 ERA. What is even more impressive for Parris is that he has finished all six of the games that he has started. Parris also leads the team with 27 strikeouts.

Pyle, a transfer from Virginia Intermount, is also having a solid year with a 4-1 record and a 2.52 ERA. Pyle also has three complete games to his credit.

Another pitcher that Etchison mentioned was Joe Wilson. Wilson is 2-1 on the year and has picked up 2 saves.

On the offensive side for the Scots, they are once again being lead by their center fielder, this year it is Brian McGhee. McGhee has a team high 36 hits, 10 doubles, four home runs and 29 RBI's. His .434 batting average also leads the team.

Junior Chuckie Yates is having another good year stealing bases as he is 27 for 30 for the year.

"We have had some players really step for up this year. Three players that went from not being starters to filling in and doing a really good job for us are sophomore Doug Perry, freshman Tripp York, and sophomore Bryan Penland," said Etchison.

Another player that he mentioned as having a good year was freshman Landon Coleman, who is batting .423, good for second on the team.

Coach Etchison said that the key to the teams winning has been the improved play by the defense. Although he stated that his team is still not playing errorless ball, the intensity on defense has picked up.

The Scots now have five home dates remaining. The first of these is on April 13 against SCAD

And he's off!

Sophomore Scott Hall rounds first and heads for home in a recent Scots game.

photo by Kristin Kant

which will be a doubleheader starting at 1pm.

The Scots will then face Emory on April 14 in another twin-bill beginning at 12pm. This will also be Mug Day for the Scots fans in attendance.

The Scot will then host Knoxville College for two games on April 18 starting at 3:30; then on April 21 Emory & Henry will come to town for two starting at 3:30pm; followed by Milligan College on April 26 for one game starting at 6:30pm. The Scots will then play their last home game on May 1 against Carson-Newman for one game at 6:30pm.

Despite the early losses the coaching staff and team are still hoping on a 25 or more win season according to Etchison.

Equestrian Team headed for Regionals

by Becky Lill
Staff Writer

The Maryville College Equestrian Team has three riders who have qualified for regional competition at Morehead State University on April 6. Tiffany Rudicil, Elaine Gibbs, and Christen McCammon have all earned enough points through competition to qualify to compete at regionals and possibly zones and national.

McCammon, the team's coach, has been riding for 14 years and will advance straight to zones. Rudicil and Gibbs have both been riding for one and a half years.

The girls have competed with various other schools over the course of the year. At these competitions, there is a different judge each day to insure fairness. The horses and tack are provided by the host school and are chosen by random selection before the class competition begins. The competitors mount their horses and perform in their class with no warm-up.

After the entire performances, the riders are each given a score and a ranking. Each ranking is worth a certain number of points which are accumulated over the year. If the points total 36 or more in any one class for an individual, that rider qualifies for regionals. The top three riders at regionals go to zones, and the top two riders there go on to nationals in Los Angeles.

The team, as a whole, has done very well this year. And they put a strong finish on a fine season with their last two competitions.

At The University of the South in Sewanee, Tennessee, Rennay Stephens placed second, Keli Lyon placed fourth and sixth, Emily Huffman placed fifth, Tiffany Rudicil placed first and third, and Elaine Gibbs placed second and fifth in their respective classes.

At Midway College in Midway, Kentucky, Stephens placed sixth, Huffman placed fourth and fifth, Rudicil placed fourth, Gibbs placed first, and McCammon placed first and second in their respective classes.

McCammon also received the honor of being named high point rider for the season.

The overall goal of MC's Equestrian Team is to promote sportsmanship and team spirit, to foster the riding ability of each member, and to favorably represent MC in the Intercollegiate Horse Show Association.

Lady Scots softball team looks for strong finish

by Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

Despite a season surrounded by injury and bad weather, the Lady Scots softball team has posted an impressive 6-6 record.

The Lady Scots began the season with 17 players, but due to a rash of injuries, are now 11 strong.

"Our team has really had to assume a lot of responsibility at unfamiliar positions. Because of the injuries many players have had to learn new positions and there has been no room for error," said head coach Kandis Schram.

Coach Schram mentioned that it was hard to talk about any of her players without talking about all of them. Some of the players that she did single out were freshman Brandy Shamoon as one of the teams leaders on offense.

Misty Walker is pitching well for the team, as well, and Kim Moss and Amanda Carson are doing well to learn their new positions.

"It has been nice to find out who is really willing to help. The year has been nice and frustrating at the same time. I know that we do have a good foundation and it is encouraging," said Schram.

After playing in the Ferrum tournament, where the Lady Scots faced Christopher Newport, Averitt, and Hilbert, the team will host a tournament of their own.

The games will begin on April 12 and will be played at Pool Climbers beginning at 1pm. Teams that will be playing are SCAD, and Ferrum. These fields are located just down from Walgreens on Alcoa Highway in Maryville.

The games will continue the following morning, on April 13, here on the campus, starting at 10 am.

The Lady Scots will then finish their season on April 18 against Cumberland College. This game will begin at 3pm.

SEC more than football

by Joe Malheiro
Sports Writer

Well everybody, now that the football talk is out of the way, it's time to get current, so let's talk hoops. Both the men's and women's NCAA tournaments are now over, and what is left in their wake is a considerable dominance of the Southeastern Conference in both men's and women's basketball.

For starters, I congratulate the University of Tennessee Lady Volunteers and their head coach Pat Summitt, who defeated the University of Georgia Lady Bulldogs 83-65 in Sunday's national championship game. The win not only brought the 1996 National Championship trophy back to Knoxville, but it is also brought the fourth National Championship for the Lady Vols, a feat unequaled by any other women's basketball team in the country.

However, a close look will show us that the Lady Vols, although the clear cut dominator, are not the only dominant woman's basketball team in the SEC. In this year's field of 64 teams, the 12 member SEC put seven teams in the tournament, with no team seeded lower than seventh. Of those seven teams, five of them made it to the Sweet Sixteen, four of them made it to the Elite Eight, two into the Final Four, and, finally, two in the National Championship game. If that does not spell dominance to you, then let's take a look at the men's side.

I would like to begin this section by congratulating the University of Kentucky men's basketball team for winning the 1996 national championship over the Syracuse University Orangemen, 76-67. This victory not only gave Kentucky the crown, but it also gave them their sixth championship in all. Now I'll be the first one to tell you that I hate the Wildcats, but, come on, they are just plain unstoppable, which further supports my theory that the SEC dominates all other conferences in both men's and women's basketball!

Now, unlike the women, the men only put four of 12 SEC schools into the tournament. To some this signaled that the SEC was weak. However, all of the four teams invited, including Arkansas as a 12 seed, made the Sweet Sixteen.

From that point, Kentucky and Mississippi State advanced to the Final Four. Not bad for a conference that had only four teams in the tournament to begin with.

For anyone who thinks that the SEC is strictly a football conference, all that is necessary is to look at the tournament brackets: it's all right there in black and white.

by Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

It was not Maryville College, so it was hard to get too interested, but it turned out O.K.—the NCAA Tournament. There was the usual amount of upsets and buzzer beaters and lessons learned, good and bad, and so much more.

I guess the best lesson was taught by Syracuse center John Wallace. Now, granted, this is not a lesson that needs to be preached here. I do not think, no matter the quality, that too many of MC athletes are going to leave early for a professional athletic career. Wallace said that he would not trade the experience of college basketball for any amount of money. I hope that other college athletes hear this message and stick around long enough to graduate. Stephen Marbury, you are at the top of this list.

"SHOT ! ! ! !"

So you like the upsets and the buzzer beaters? Well, I think the best one of both of these came in the same game. The opening round game that matched Princeton and defending champion UCLA together was ripe for the upset; so when one smart guy passed it to another overachiever from Princeton, the victory was sealed, and UCLA was going back to the beach.

I guess it was nice to watch teams like Texas Tech, Mississippi State, and UMass make runs in the tournament. No offense to all of the fans, but I was getting tired of North Carolina and Duke and Michigan. Teams like Wake Forest and Georgia Tech, who had great regular seasons, were fun to watch as well.

Sometimes it is nice to just enjoy things like good sportsmanship and great competition that always seem to follow college athletics, especially after seeing so much greed and other things going on in the next level. I see things like Jerry Stackhouse of the Philadelphia 76ers throwing punch after punch towards a player that did nothing. Then I see Kentucky guard Tony Delk accidentally get tangled up with Otis Hill and immediately go down on the floor with him to see if he is all right.

I hope that people will continue to see, like I do, the purity of the college game. And it is not just every March when everybody is filling out poles and praying to a higher being for their team to win. It is not all about basketball either. Baseball and swimming and volleyball and soccer all have so much to offer their fans.

My high school recently had a school levy fail, which means that there will be no school sports or activities next year. I hate to think of all of the student athletes who may not get a chance to participate not only in high school, but also possibly in college sports. I have learned a lot in my three plus years in the classrooms here, but the importance of the lessons I have learned on the field and through my teammates goes without saying. I know that everybody gets really caught up in the NCAA tournament because it is a rather impressive spectacle, but I also hope that fans do not lose perspective on the real issues.

When a player catches a ball on the wing, squares up, like say a Spencer Beaty, and then leaves his feat as the defender jumps and yells "SHOT!"—there is nothing like it. But, I have to say that the really important thing here is not if the ball goes in or not, but the fact that they are there. They are there learning lessons while receiving an education.

That has got to be the most important thing.

I enjoy watching college sports about as much as anyone I know. I like some teams more than others, but in the end I have come to understand that they are all winners. As cliché as that is, it is the truth. When John Wallace figured that out, he stayed. Jerry Stackhouse did not figure this out, and he left. I only have a semester left and I feel like I would stay as long as they would let me.

Hey Jimmy, —SHOT!

12

Blister in the Sun

Saturday, April 13

12:00 - 6:00 p.m.
on the football field
(if it rains, Cooper Athletic Center)
Free for MC Students!
General public: $2.00

Music by:

Sour
Radio Active Flowers
and
Roger Lay

Featuring:

International Club
Food from around the world

Alpha Sigma Lambda
Baked goods and drinks

Sigma Lambda Kappa
T-shirts, lunch items, drinks

College Republicans
Car Wash

Student Programming Board
T-shirts, Human Foosball
Caricature Artist ($1.00/portrait)

Alpha Psi Omega
Facepainting, sword fights with padded swords

Student Literacy Corps
T-shirts, Lollipops, Food

Fellowship of Christian Athletes
Professor Pie Toss

French Club
French Food

THE HIGHLAND ECHO
OF BLISTER DUNKING BOOTH
THE DUNKING DAYS OF SUMMER
OPENS 12:00 CLOSE 6:00

DR. SEYMOUR JOE GARY PAIGE COOPER
DR. COWAN DR. MILLER DR. HOWARD
APRIL HICKS DR. KASPER
DR. BERRY DAVID POWELL NEED WILLARD
DR. DOUCETTE DR. RANGER TIM BRYANT

Carnegie Hall
Games, Lemonade

Copeland Hall
Waterballoon fight
Jell-O wrestling

Lloyd Hall
Dart game

Davis Hall
The Penny Olympics
wacky Olympic games
which cost a penny,

Freshman Class
Mocktails

Pearson's Hall
Cake Walk

Dismas House
T-shirts

The Highland Echo
Dunking Booth

"Blister in the Sun" T-shirts will be $8.00. They will be sold April 11 and 12 from 11:30 until 2:00 in Fayerweather Lobby and all day April 13 at the event.

The Highland Echo

May 9, 1996

MARYVILLE COLLEGE

VOL. LXXXI, NO. 8

Thompson elected 1996-97 Senate President

High voter turnout marks election

by Sarah West
Assistant Editor

In an election marked by a high voter turnout, junior Jason Thompson was elected Student Senate President on April 15. Thompson won 42.9 percent of the votes submitted by 349 students. The rest of the vote was divided between juniors Eric Obermiller with 38.9 percent and Aaron Stone with 16.3 percent. Write-in candidates composed 1.7 percent of the vote.

The student senate presidential debate, held on April 11 in the Center for Campus Ministry, centered on certain issues considered pressing by the election committee, represented by Matt Webb and Russell Perry; the candidates; and the forty-five students in the audience. School spirit, communication between students and senate, and new policies were subjects tossed about by the candidates, who each had some degree of overlap in their discussion, yet also had distinct approaches to the problems.

"I want to put the student back in student senate," was one of Thompson's campaign slogans.

To achieve this goal, Thompson proposed that senate meetings be held in the CCM, a more comfortable, inviting setting, in his opinion, to encourage students to attend and participate. The meetings are currently being held in Thaw Hall in a tiered classroom, which sometimes is insufficient for its seating capacity.

He also suggested that open forums be held on a regular basis for students to express their views to their representatives.

Thompson expressed the desire to research and implement former MC traditions to stimulate school spirit, which many students believe to be lacking.

Also, Thompson would like to see a continuation of some of the policy progress made this year.

Thompson defeated Obermiller in spite of signs which appeared before the election containing current Student Senate President Alex Little's endorsement of Obermiller.

Exercising their right

MC Students turned out in high numbers to vote for their student government representatives.

Glitches appear in elections for next year's officers

The general election of class officers and senators was held on April 22, but the election committee was forced to hold another election on April 29 as the result of an oversight on the sophomore commuter ballot and of ties for senior secretary/treasurer and for junior senator. Controversy still surrounds the April 29 election, in which Copeland Hall was without an attendant for the ballots, resulting in no votes from Copeland residents.

Next year's senior class officers include: President Kerrie O'Keefe, Vice President Adam Ray, Secretary/Treasurer Grace King, and Senators Jon Davis and Mark Hatfield.

For the junior class, Staci Kerr was elected president; Lori Leffel, vice president; Whitney Nations, secretary/treasurer; and Jarred Younger and Emily Brock, senators.

The sophomore class officers are President Ryan Stewart; Vice President Jennifer Windrow; Secretary/Treasurer Erin Palmer; and Senators Joel Campbell and Joy Bailey.

According to Matt Webb, election committee member, the April 29th run-off vote of 60-70 students was decisive enough to override the necessity for a third election, since, according to Webb, the limited number of sophomores in Copeland would more than likely not have effected the 60-70 outcome.

Webb added that, if the election committee decided to hold the run-off election again to see that Copeland residents are able to vote, this third election would be unpopular with students because they are tired of elections.

Inside

Message to students from our staff p. 3

Letters to the Editor p. 6

Sports p. 12

Cable TV comes to MC p.14

"I have been impressed with the quality of the Highland Echo in the nearly three years that I have been reading it. The Echo is an absolutely essential part of our communication system on the Maryville College campus, and it serves its role well."

--Dr. Gerald Gibson, president of Maryville College

MC professors: a tough act to follow

by Amanda Martin
Editor

The fact that I will graduate in a few days has given me occasion to look back on my three years at Maryville College, and I have drawn the conclusion that, per capita, the MC community contains more special people than any other college community in the world. I could write volumes about some of my classmates who have become the best friends I have ever had. Most of them will graduate with me; but among the people I will miss the most who I must leave are some very special faculty members. I have wonderful memories of their devotion to teaching and the care they have shown for me and for others over the years.

Until this year, I had never really talked to Dr. Schneibel. Last semester, my father had a heart attack and was diagnosed with leukemia while he was in the hospital. Dr. Schneibel was very concerned about me, and she was very understanding when I told her I needed an academic extension.

She also offered much needed encouragement when my doubts about applying to graduate school set in. Also, I never would have made it through my year as editor of The Echo without her support.

Dr. Beck also encouraged me in my graduate school decision process, and in just about everything else I tried to accomplish at MC. I will never forget her comment to me during a conversation we had about overly-critical people. She said, "They should all be locked in a room in one of Dante's inner circles in 'The Inferno' and forced to criticize each other for all eternity!" Dr. Beck is a great person to talk to when you feel overwhelmed—she really helps you put it all into perspective!

Dr. Bonham is another great person to talk with when the stress gets to be too much; music majors constantly go to Dr. Bonham for support. During one of my more hectic time periods, he reminded me that "people aren't machines." Instead of "Dr. Robert Bonham, Professor of Music," I think we should dub him, "Dr. Robert Bonham, Therapist to the Music Majors."

Mr. Powell is another professor whose capacity for understanding is gargantuan. I cannot count the times I have talked to him about all sorts of things after classes. The miracle is that he is always interested. I also cannot imagine him ever being too busy to devote his time to his students, no matter how trivial some of our questions and problems may sometimes be. When you need a good laugh, Dave Powell is the person to seek.

Speaking of devoting time, I remember all of the extra time and effort Dr. Overstreet spent working with me on my senior thesis. Because I am a double major, my thesis had to include two disciplines: music and English. I wrote on one of Shakespeare plays and on the opera based on the play. In the Fall semester before I began my thesis, he told me he did not know much about opera since music is not his field. This was not a problem since Dr. Taddie would be advising the music part of my thesis. But when we had our first meeting in the following January, Dr. Overstreet had gone to the UT library over Christmas break and had researched and checked out several books on the opera just for his own information. The fact that my advisor went so out of his way to learn more about a part of my thesis subject really inspired me to work hard. I know he believed in me and that he thought that my academic growth was a worthwhile project.

Finally, there is my second set of parents, Dan and Ann Taddie. It would be impossible to list even a fraction of my wonderful experiences as their student. Not only is

Mrs. Taddie an awesome voice teacher, but she is also a dear friend. We have talked about everything from men to mucus, and our conversations are always comforting.

Until the past few days I had not realized how much ribbing and practical joking Dr. Taddie has had to endure from me. If I was not announcing his nickname "Sparky" to audiences during choir tour, I was proclaiming in front of his parents that I am "his long lost love-child." (Of course, he can dish-out the joking pretty well himself!) There is no way I would have chosen a career path or found a good graduate school without him.

So many more professors who I have not mentioned have touched my life in a positive way since I have been at MC. I regret that I was unable to take classes from many professors about whom I hear wonderful comments from students. The teachers I will encounter this Fall at graduate school have a tough act to follow! I thank all of my professors for the nurturing and wisdom they have granted to me over the years. I will never forget the positive impact they have had on my life.

Senate plans budget for next year

by Alex Little
Student Senate
President

Student Senate recently convened on April 25, and a lot of business was discussed. As usual we opened the meeting with a report by our treasurer, Nadia Edoh. Several committee chairs advised student senate on the progress of their committees. Matt Webb, chair of the traffic committee, informed senate on the state of parking in the Lloyd parking lot. The administration is planning to expand Lloyd's lot in order to add in excess of ten additional parking spaces.

I would like to extend my thanks to Russell Perry for doing an excellent job with the elections committee. Complete election results for next year's senate positions will be posted around campus soon.

In senate, we took budget proposals from various organizations. At the end of each year organizations petition senate for their next year's budgets. Student senate has a continual budget which includes all publications, the Student Programming Board, intramurals, and senate itself. More than likely these organizations will receive some type of funding.

This year the Model United Nations program petitioned, as well as the Equestrian Club. The leaders of the Equestrian Club came before senate and addressed some serious problems that could potentially hinder their club's success. I would like to remind all students that student senate is the place to come to air your legitimate grievances. Furthermore, I applaud the Equestrian Club's leaders for airing their grievances. As students we need to be sympathetic to the concerns of fellow students. If we want to promote student interests we have to support our clubs and organizations. If one club is having problems, all clubs are having problems. We must support each other because your organization may find itself in the unenviable position of another troubled club.

Senate met once again on April 30 in order to allocate funds to the organizations that request funding. After heated debate, student senate decided to allocate $26,000 to the Student Programming Board. The Impressions, a publication that prints the literary works of students, petitioned $1,000 and received $600. The Highland Echo received $10,000 from senate in order to operate the paper for next year. The Chilhowean received $20,000 in see Senate p. 5

The Highland Echo

Amanda Martin
Editor

Sarah West
Assistant Editor

Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

Reporters

Sarah Christians, Dara DiGiacomo, Allison Dunn, Kenyon Evans, Lori Leffel, Becky Lill, Joe Malheiro, Rachel Roe, Michelle Shuler, Matt Waters.

Columnists

Alex Little, Bo McMichael, Jonathan Peters, Claire Stancampiano

Photography Editors

Yosef Addis, Kristin Kant

Computer Layout

Susan Rayborn, Traci Tidwell

Advertising Manager/Designer

Patrick Leslie

Advisor
Jeff Gary

Cartoonists

Chris West, Scott West
Carl Gombert

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR . . .

The Echo welcomes your comments, letters and guest columns. All written material to be published in the Echo must be typed and accompanied by your name, post office box number, and phone number. Send material to The Highland Echo, Box 2511. The Echo can be reached by calling the Student Publications Office at campus extension 8176. The opinions expressed in the Echo do not necessarily reflect the views of Maryville College.

A message from the staff of the Echo . . .

On April 30 and May 2, the Student Senate allocated its budget for the upcoming academic year. In the final version of the budget, all student publications: Impressions, the campus literary magazine; The Chilhowean, the yearbook; and The Highland Echo, received significant budget cuts. The senate made the cuts in spite of the groups' requests for more funds to cover increased printing costs, staff needs, and other operational improvements.

Many senators took advantage of the opportunities they were given at these meetings to angrily blast the Echo and its staff with criticism. "I do not see this group as a vital part of this college," said one senator.

"The Echo does not help the student body," said another.

"They must prove themselves before they get more money," said a third.

In addition to these somewhat vague charges/conclusions, the senate also complained about "too much opinion" in the paper, and about "waste," which they claim is the result of producing enough issues for all Maryville College students.

We take serious exception to these charges and accusations.

The animosity which these senators expressed cannot be mistaken for legitimate, unbiased concern, for never at any time did they: 1. attempt to discuss the complaints they hurled at this meeting with the editor of this publication; 2. offer suggestions as to how we can improve the writing in the Echo; or 3. make any official complaints about or inquiries into the operations of the Echo to the newspaper's advisor, to the Chair of the Humanities Division, or to the Academic Vice President. We believe that the senate's lack of willingness to deal with these so called "problems" clearly indicates the lack of validity contained in their claims against the paper. We also believe that this lack of willingness, coupled with the intense, unsubstantiated, journalistically-unfounded attacks on the paper in senate meetings, demonstrates the malice of certain members of the senate who are still angry over the criticism their behavior received in the Feb. 14 issue of the Echo.

One of the most frequent concerns members of the senate expressed was that they believe that a large amount of money is being wasted on the newspapers they see in the recycling bins in the post office. Senators made two basic, incorrect assumptions in drawing the conclusion that, because they see newspapers in the bins, the Echo must be wasting hundreds of dollars.

Their first mistake is based on ignorance of the costs of publishing a newspaper. The fact is that the vast majority of the cost of printing a newspaper is not a result of the number of copies produced; it is the result of the steps printers must take to make negatives from layout sheets, which are the images which the presses use to reproduce the layout sheets onto the newsprint. This costly process, which accounts for over 80 percent of the cost of producing one issue, is not only unavoidable, it will not go down if we produce fewer issues. It is interesting that not a single senator posed the concerns about "wasted" papers to the Echo representatives at the April 25 meeting, but this concern was foremost in their criticism of the paper. Furthermore, even if the cost of producing enough papers for the entire student body was a significant amount of our printing bill, we would not exclude any students from reading the paper they have already paid for with their activities fees. We believe that to do so would be elitist and completely against the purpose of a student newspaper.

Another incorrect assumption senators made is that the papers they see in the recycling bins are unread. We are not naive enough to believe that every MC student reads our paper cover to cover, but they should not ignore the fact that many students read their papers and then bring them to the bins.

Senators also repeatedly blasted the Echo for printing "too much opinion" in its pages. We take serious exception to this criticism. Many credible voices agree. As Dr. Wallace Lewis, professor of history, said, "In a campus newspaper, opinion is relatively central. It [the paper] covers its own beats and allows its folk to speak. [Opinion] is its niche." One of the most important functions of a student newspaper is to provide a forum for students to express their opinions, and a wide variety of students have expressed themselves in our paper this year. This criticism is very disturbing in light of the parties who express it—your student "representatives." Something is very wrong when those whom you elected to represent your views do not wish to read them. We do not believe that your senators are so completely in sync with your views that they do not need to read them in the Echo. How often do they knock on your door to ask for your opinions about the issues they vote on? Their view is especially disturbing in light of the way in which they conduct their meetings. Senate meetings are designed so that students who wish to present proposals are allowed only eight minutes to speak. We confess that we did not use all eight minutes allotted to us in our authorship speech, because we naively assumed that senators would actually ask questions related to their concerns. The Echo received only four questions, none of which related to their two major complaints, "too much opinion," and "wasted" copies of the paper. Instead, the senate decided to express its views after the Echo delegation attended the April 25 meeting specifically for the purpose of answering questions.

According to Student Senate President Alex Little, "Senate will support those organizations that it feels have helped the campus community and cut the budgets of those who do a poor job." Who then censors the senate when it "do[es] a poor job," when its members clearly do not understand the procedures they are supposed to be using, when members constantly step out of procedure, and when committees are formed unconstitutionally? (This year's constitutional committee itself was unconstitutional due to its illegal composition!) If segments of the senate wish to behave in a dictatorial, tyrannical way, as opposed to asking questions and voting based on knowledge of the facts and on the opinions of the students they represent, then they should turn some of their self-righteous judgment on themselves and fix their own problems.

As you will see in the quotes throughout this issue, the judgment which the senate passed upon the Echo is based neither on the opinions of many students nor on the opinions of the more educated faculty and staff of MC. Furthermore, the opinions of these senators are not the opinions of the Echo staff. We are proud of the advances we made this year. We added job listings, an opinion poll, a series on new faculty members, editorials from various staff members, cartoons from students and faculty, three sixteen-page issues, and the largest staff in years.

Because of this budget cut, students will see fewer issues of The Highland Echo next year. Also, writing communications majors will suffer academically. The Echo not only serves the function of a student newspaper, but it is also one of the most important components of English 216, which is required for the major. Also, the archaic publications computer lab, for which the senate refused to appropriate funds, serves as the writing lab for other English classes, such as English 217 and 317. Not only will English majors suffer, but students from various majors from various divisions who are taking English 216 will be forced to work with inadequate resources because of the budget cut. Because our computers are in such dire need of repairs and upgrades, all of the student publications and the scores of students expected to participate in publications for academic credit for next year will suffer.

In spite of the negative repercussions of this 20 percent budget cut, we will not, under any circumstances, exclude the views of MC students in our newspaper. We will not submit to the student senate by repressing student opinion and news items, and we will continue to include items containing vital information about the conduct of the MC student senate. If we have to print the Echo on discarded "Roloids" wrappers using crayons, we will. We will not allow a few individuals within the senate to dictate the contents of the paper. We believe in freedom of the press.

"Like any other student newspaper, the purpose of The Echo is to provide objective and accurate news coverage of events and issues of importance to the campus community. Further, The Echo serves as a clearing house, of sorts, for opinion on campus. In providing a platform for the voices of students, faculty and administrators alike, The Echo plays a vital role in not only identifying the issues, but in clarifying and defining those issues for the different campus constituencies. I think The Echo has achieved a balance in its reporting of news and opinion, and I applaud the efforts of a group of highly dedicated students, who take their responsibility to be accurate and objective seriously."

--Dr. Susan Schneibel,
Division Chair, Humanities

Reflections on college life without country line dancing

by Claire Stancampiano
Columnist

For my last column, I considered nauseating you with a "Beverly Hills 90210"-esque senior will, or sycophantically thanking everyone for the outstanding education I've received. O.K., now I'm nauseated. I'd rather use this space to tell you some things about Maryville College you probably haven't thought much about.

The problem with Maryville College is that it is a tiny community, unique unto itself, trying to act like a multi-million dollar university. In case you haven't noticed, we don't have a bowling alley or a Pizza Hut in the student center. We don't have a bank-breaking sports program, or a radio station, or even an ATM.

So what? We have fountain soda and a crock pot full of barbeque in Isaac's. We can walk into any classroom and know someone from whom we may borrow a pen. We can read the desk tops and get an accurate student evaluation of a class. We know which professors are still on campus each evening because we know which cars they drive.

There are days when I would rather stab a leaky ball point pen directly into my eye than get out of bed and go to class. On these days, I don't go. When I do go, I am calmed by the smell of Anderson Hall. It smells like old wood, new carpet, and zephyrs of perfume; like coffee and someone's low-fat lunch defrosting in the microwave.

I like campus late at night when everything is still, quiet, and cold, because I know that in the morning it will be the same place as always and people will be rushing to class with wet hair and trying to run over each other in the parking lot. I like the view from the fourth floor of Carnegie on that first warm night of spring semester as the street lights in town slowly come on against the orangish sky. I like hearing the echoes across campus of people practicing instruments in the Fine Arts Center. I like that we all share a common bond in the hatred of Marriott food. I like the fact that the same buildings you see everyday look like a remote village in upstate Vermont after our first snow shower. I like waiting every autumn to see what color the huge tree in front of Anderson will turn. I like being in a place that recognizes the fact that chemistry and poetry are equally valuable.

But, hey, I forgot that the students at the University of Tennessee have Krystal burgers and country-western bars within walking distance, so they're probably better off.

Maryville College is like a 177-year-old secret club stuck in the middle of some mysterious woods and guarded by the mountains. Sometimes you get sick of the other club members' faces, and sometimes you want to plan a mutiny, but instead you eat a chicken patty, talk to some friends, go to the post office, take a whiff of the fresh cut grass, and get on with your life. Four years of this go by, and you graduate knowing you've had this strange, surreal experience called college; only now you've learned to use your brain, so you're somewhat disillusioned with the world.

But it's O.K., because everyone knew your name instead of your student ID number the whole time you were there.

"You shall take all things and filter them from your self," wrote

Walt Whitman. Four years and $20,000 worth of loans later, I've learned to do this. I've also learned that there are more wonderful things in this world than bad; the good stuff is just harder to notice.

"In my opinion, the quality of the Echo has improved significantly in the last two years: it's no longer full of breezy-toned editorials that lack specific support and express unreasonable or imbalanced criticisms. It would be stronger if it took over some of the functions of the Scottie, announcing more upcoming events. For that, though, it would need to appear more frequently."

—Dr. Samuel Overstreet
Associate Professor of English

.....
"My favorite aspect of the newspaper is Claire's column."

—Georgina King,
sophomore

A poem on the instrument of God

by Jonathan Peters
Columnist

Last summer I had a job doing research in a fluorine lab down at Clemson University in South Carolina. One day while I was there I got a letter from my mother which contained a poem she had saved. I'm not really a great poetry critic, but I agree with Emily Dickenson when she stated that a work of poetry is great if it "sends chills down your spine." This one passed the test. I hope you enjoy it.

Servant and Master am I; servant of those dead and master of those living.

Through me spirits immortal speak the message that makes the world laugh, wonder and worship.

I tell the story of love, the story of hate, the story that saves and the story that damns.

I am the incense upon which prayers float to heaven.

I am the smoke which palls over the field of battle where men lie with me on their lips.

I am close to the altar of marriage, and when the grave opens I stand near by.

I call the wanderer home. I rescue the soul from the depths. I open the lips of lovers and through me the dead whisper to the living.

I serve one as well as all; and the king I make my slave as easily as I subject his slave.

I speak through the birds of the air, the insects of the field, the crush of the waters on rock-ribbed shores, the sighing wind in the trees. I am even heard by the soul that knows me in the clatter of wheels on a city street.

I know no brother, yet all men are my brothers. I am the father of the best that is in them and they are the fathers of the best that is in me. I am of them and they are of me.

For I am the instrument of God...

I AM MUSIC.

—Author Unknown

Scott West's Weird Perspectives

As the tension escalated,
Pat knew he would have to choose sides.

by Bo McMichael
Columnist

Ten minutes to show time! Ladies and gentlemen, take your seats, please. We are happy to announce that the Summer Blockbusters of 1996 will begin shortly; however, the cast still needs one more dress rehearsal before the curtain goes up. During dress rehearsal, there are times when things go perfectly and life could not be better. Other times rehearsal could be like walking on pins and needles. Hollywood always conducts dress rehearsals for summer movies during April. During this time they try to get all the bugs out of their system. For the most part, the good outweighs the bad.

"Mulholland Falls" is set in a post World War II era "atomic age." Four California detectives (Nick Nolte,

Summer Blockbusters now headed to a theatre near you

Michael Madison, Chris Penn, & Chazz Palminteri) investigate a homicide on the outskirts of town. The killing leads to a cover-up, and then all hell breaks loose. This star studded cast includes Melanie Griffith, Jennifer Connely, John Malkovich, and Daniel Baldwin.

Bo: "Remember when you visited the fair grounds and got on a scary ride after waiting two hours in line, and when you got off the roller-coaster you had this empty feeling inside like you wasted two hours of your life? Many who venture into the Falls of Mulholland will feel this same way. The bad thing about this movie is that it has too many roosters in the hen house!"

Chris: "The best part of this movie was trying to figure out where we have seen all of the actors and actresses before. Needless to say, the all-star cast went bust. I have seen worse, but the hardest part about sitting through this movie is knowing how many other good movies there are out there right now. The plot seems to change course half way through and what seems to be the point of the movie ends up having little purpose. If you think about going to see this one, think again. It is far from a family movie, and not even close to a date movie. Go see one of the others that the big guy talks about below."

We haven't seen other dress rehearsals such as "The Substitute," "Celtic Pride," "The Truth About Cats and Dogs," and "Sunset Park," so take your chances with these new films.

The first new film is the long and awaited "Twister," opening May 10, Bill Paxton and Helen Hunt star in this windy thriller brought to us by the director of "Speed." I wonder if we will find a bus flying through the air.

"Mission Impossible" opens May 22. Tom Cruise and a fine group of actors recreate the 1960's T.V. spy thriller. The latest reports is that it will be incredible; a must see!

"Dragon Heart," which opens May 31, is a medieval fable which brings Dennis Quaid and a dragon together to fight the foes of evil.

The dragon's voice is Sean Connery.

"The Phantom" (June 17) brings the comic book to life starring Billy Zane "the prettiest man I ever saw" ("Tombstone"). Jim Carrey is back and he is inside your TV with "The Cable Guy" (June 14). "Eraser" (June 21) is Arnold's time to shine. Schwarzenegger is back to doing what he does best. Bruce Willis becomes the "Last Man Standing" (June 26) in this urban thriller of vigilante justice.

"Independence Day" is coming a day early this year (July 3) when the world is faced with the threat of destruction by aliens from outer-space. Will Smith, Bill Paxton, and Jeff Goldblum try to save the world. "The Rock" (July 12) could be the surprise hit of the summer. Nicholas Cage, Sean Connery, Ed Harris, and Michael Biehn battle it out in San Francisco in this film.

The rest of the cast list goes as follows: "China Reaction," (August), with Keanu Reeves; "The Ghost and the Darkness," (July), with Val Kilmer; "A Time to Kill," (August),

by Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

with Sandra Bullock; "The Relic," July; "The Crow: City of Angels," (August); "The Fan," (June), with Robert de Niro; "Ransom," (August), with Mel Gibson; "Escape from L.A.," (August), with Kurt Russell.

Well, ladies and gentleman, this concludes our second year as critics. We hope you see some movies this summer, because everybody needs a break. Have a great and safe summer.

Bo: "Little buddy, see you next August! Have fun, and be safe!"

Chris: "Bo is in his element with all of this science fiction stuff coming out this summer. I hope that all you can find something better to do than to sit in the theater all day every day, like the big guy. But go see a few and we'll compare notes next year. Take care, big guy."

Senate . . . continued from p. 2

order to produce the annual yearbook. Senate debated for a considerable period of time and in lieu of time Nick Schell made a motion to convene on Thursday, May 2.

When student senate met on Thursday, it debated three remaining clubs, the Equestrian Team, Alternative Spring Break, and the Peer Mentor Program. The mood in senate was somewhat tense due to the fact that the vast majority of funds that senate has to allocate had already been allocated. Senator Thad Alsop decided to make a motion to reconsider the Chilhowean. After debate from persons in favor of the previous figure already allotted to the Chilhowean and from those individuals who wanted to see the Chilhowean's budget cut, senate reached a compromise. Student senate decided to cut the Chilhowean's budget to $17,000. Senators in favor of the cut cited the poor quality of the yearbook as one of the reasons why the Chilhowean's budget was cut.

After the Chilhowean was reconsidered Senator Marissa Miller decided to make a motion to reconsider the Highland Echo. After heated debate, the Echo's budget was cut to $8,000. Once again, those senators who voted to cut the Echo's budget cited the poor quality of the newspaper as one of the reasons why the Echo's budget was cut.

Alternative Spring Break received their full request of $1,000, and the Peer Mentors received their full request of $2530. Lastly, it is my pleasure to say that the Equestrian Club received their full request of $4,130. The hard work those ladies put in this year was exceptional. I am excited that senate came to the aid of an organization that had

. . . those senators who voted to cut the Echo's budget cited the poor quality of the newspaper as one of the reasons why the Echo's budget was cut.

met difficulty with campus administrators. The mood of senate during budget allocations was exciting. It set a tone for those traditional organizations that receive funding through senate. Senate will support those organizations that it feels have helped campus community and cut the budgets of those who do a poor job. Thursday, May 9 will the last meeting of student senate for the year, and I invite all those who wish to attend to attend.

"I think a strong objective newspaper is the hallmark of a first-rate liberal arts institution. When we are looked at by others . . . the kind of newspaper we present says a lot about us. It [Highland Echo] is not for just students, but it is also representative of the intellectual vitality and quality of this institution. It's a considerably broader newspaper than it has been in the past. There is more in-depth, investigative reporting and a better balance in what is presented. The editorial staff has done a good job of maintaining a balance of topics and is more mindful of its role as a historical record of what goes on on campus. Current issues, trends, and what students are thinking about right now, in a hundred years, are what people will look back on."

—Dr. Robert Naylor
Chair,
Division of Natural Sciences

Editor's Note: Two Dean's scholarships were awarded at this year's Academic Awards Banquet to returning students, rather than one, as the letter states.

Letter to the Editor:

I feel the need to write regarding a certain scholastic matter. Recently, I received a rejection letter for an MC scholarship. My intention here is not to call foul or to express any bitterness over my case, but instead to call attention to what I feel is a serious problem here on campus.

It seems that our administration pays a lot of lip service to improving retention when it has clearly demonstrated that it is truly concerned with recruitment. There is something inherently wrong with offering numerous Presidential and Dean's scholarships to incoming freshmen (who are arguably coming in with high G.P.A.s from much less strenuous academic environments), and making all qualified and talented returning or transfer students compete for only one Presidential and one Dean's scholarship per year.

I understand that these scholarships have more to do with leadership and campus/community involvement than grades alone, which is another bone of contention. Those of us who must work extensively in order to attend MC are essentially scratched off the scholarship list in favor of other students who are well-off and have plenty of time on their hands. These lucky ones can pour themselves into every imaginable club, organization, and cause, thanks to an already existing scholarship (see freshman scenario) or mommy and daddy's cash. Ironically, these are the very students who don't need the financial help in the first place. This is very frustrating.

Many of my fellow upperclassmen and I are very tired of our academic efforts going unnoticed and unrewarded for these and other reasons. I would urge our administration and scholarship committees to pay attention to the essence of retention, and our scholarship system, I feel, is one very vital component.

-Anonymous

To the Editor:

I would like to thank all of the upcoming sophomores that voted for me in the election for class president. Your vote as well as your confidence in my ability means a great deal to me, and I will do my very best not only to meet but to exceed the expectations you have for me in the upcoming academic year.

The Student Senate plays a vital role in the success of Maryville

College, and your involvement is very important. Please be sure to let your officers and especially your senators know your opinions and ideas concerning our community.

Sincerely,
Ryan Stewart
President Elect
Class of '99
Campus Box 2103

"More than just providing me with information, the Echo reflects the spirit of Maryville College of which I am blessed to be a part."

—Amethyst Schott, sophomore

To the editor:

I've recently heard complaints from some disgruntled students who were turned down for the Presidential and Dean's scholarships for returning/transfer students. It seems that they think the school should offer more scholarships for returning students instead of offering so much money to incoming freshmen. It seems that these particular students feel that high school seniors, on the verge of graduating and moving on to higher education institutions, are not worthy of such scholarships. As a freshman Presidential scholar, I am extremely insulted. I, as well as the other freshmen scholars, am fully qualified to receive such an honor. As one who participated in and led numerous activities in high school and maintained a high grade point average, I consider myself a well-rounded person, which is exactly what the panel of faculty and staff who chose the recipients of these scholarships wanted. Yes, I have been fulfilling all of these expectations here at Maryville College, and will continue to do this. I would love to be able to work while at school, but a double major and countless extra-curricular activities make this virtually impossible. Therefore, I somehow manage a number of jobs over the summer in order to have enough money for the school year. My parents can't afford to pay for everything I want, and if I didn't have this scholarship, then I would be stuck at some community college back home. I worked hard to earn this scholarship, and it shows by the various things that I have already accomplished here. I consider myself lucky but also, and most importantly, deserving.

—Sara A. Baker,
Freshman

"I enjoy reading the Highland Echo because it gives a good perspective about what other students think about life on Maryville College campus."

—Jessica Garrett, sophomore

The Women's Circle

will sponsor a "Relaxation Hour," on Friday, May 10, from 12 noon through 1 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Lounge. Everyone is invited to participate. Wear comfortable clothes!

The Echo Opinion Poll

59% of the 50 students surveyed said that they thought the lottery system was very unfair. They felt that definite improvements needed to be made for next year.

25% of the 50 students surveyed said that they thought the lottery system was a good idea.

9% of the 50 students surveyed said that they thought the lottery system was ok, but they felt that students should not be able to squat their rooms because some rooms never come open.

7% of the 50 students surveyed had no opinion on the room selection policy.

Which major political figure has the greatest need of a makeover/trip to the Jenny Jones show?

by Jason Thompson
Student Senate
President- Elect

First, I thank the student body for one of the greatest voter turnouts in the Maryville College Student Senate elections. I am very excited about that, because it proves that students do care about the events that take place here. The key to an effective student senate is the voice of the students.

Many people feel that their voices are not as loud as they should be and that when they do speak, no one listens. I ran on a platform addressing that particular need. I need the students' help so that we can put the student back in student senate.

There are three ways in which we will augment the student role in our senate decisions. Next year the student body will see a massive

Thompson lists goals for next year's senate

advertisement listing their student representatives; senate meetings moved to the Center for Campus Ministries; and monthly open forums for students to share their questions, comments, complaints, and concerns.

I think that students should know who to go to when they have general concerns or questions about policies that the student senate deals with; however, many students do not even know who their senators are. My goal is to increase the number of people who know who their senators and class representatives are through massive advertisement. Hopefully, we can put up a sign in every building behind lock and key that will stay undamaged all year.

Another concern of mine is the location of the student senate meetings. Currently, the meetings are held in a small room in Thaw Hall. I understand that the meetings were moved there because of the layout of the room. When I directed the MC Model United Nations, I also loved to use the tiered rooms because of their formal structure. However, it is not very inviting for those students who wish to see their elected representatives in action. Having the student senate meetings in the CCM would provide a more open and inviting atmosphere in the center of campus. This is a student senate, and we should make every possible accommodation to invite students.

Another way to strengthen the student voice is to hold an open forum every month to hear student opinion on various topics. The forum will also give the student body a chance to meet and share ideas with its elected representatives. The Student Senate will be able to share its plans with the students and get feedback, instead of dictating to the students what will or will not happen.

I am very excited about the work that we, as a united student body, can accomplish next year. I envision big things for Maryville College. I am also thinking about the idea of forming a "Spirit and Tradition Committee" to dig up some of the rituals that used to make Maryville College students proud. As a student senate, we also need to make absolutely sure that we continue tackling difficult issues rather than debating what color the parking permits should be.

Next year will be a big year for Maryville College, and I am proud of the staff I will be bringing to the Student Senate with me next year. They are dedicated and hard-working. We will make ourselves available to the students in any way that we can. Together, we can make a difference in the student senate, and we can put the student back in student senate.

Thompson, cabinet hold forum

by Sarah West
Assistant Editor

Student Senate President-elect Jason Thompson delivered on his promise of a second open forum on April 24. About 40 students gathered in the Center for Campus Ministry to voice their opinions and complaints.

"This is wonderful to be able to sit here and say anything I want and listen to others and them bring up ideas I haven't thought about," said Kara Buechele, a sophomore.

Sponsored by Thompson and his proposed cabinet, Adam Ray, Sherrie Brents, Andrew Johnson, and Sarah Knisely, the event stimulated discussion on current policies and concerns of the student body.

Thompson, opening the meeting, explained, "The purpose of these forums is so that we can work together and get things accomplished."

Ray, who authored the new alcohol policy, addressed misunderstandings of the policy. According to Ray, rooms where alcohol is allowed will be known upfront by the resident staff. If one roommate is younger than 21 and the other is not, then neither may have alcohol, even when the younger is out of the room. If the younger moves out of the room, then the roommate of legal age may go through the process of requesting that the room be recognized as a legal alcohol area.

Two roommates of legal drinking age may have three persons each in their room when a bottle of alcohol is open, totaling a maximum of eight persons in the room. One roommate cannot have more than three persons in the room where the bottle of alcohol is open when the other roommate is out. Ray said that this provision is meant to refute the notion and/or development of a party atmosphere at Maryville College. Another issue debated was the room selection policy. Squatting rights, as well as the organization and consistency of this year's process, were a source of contention for some students. An argument for 24-hour visitation for the first floor of Davis Hall ensued by upper-class women who are unhappy with the current policy.

The off-campus housing policy was also debated. Dr. William Seymour, vice president of student development, explained that on-campus housing facilities would stretch over capacity soon, making the option of changing the policy more likely. "We don't know if we are going to have space next year," said Seymour. When asked about a proposal for 21-year old seniors to be allowed to live off campus, Seymour answered, "I think there's flexibility there [the housing issue]."

"If students put it on the table, it will go through the processes," Seymour added. Currently, students must be at least 23 years old to be allowed to live off campus away from home.

Parking at Lloyd Hall was a concern of its residents, who cited space, safety, and consistency of ticketing. According to Matt Webb, chair of the traffic committee, parking ideas will be worked on this summer. Webb also added that lighting between Gamble and Davis Halls is another issue.

Next year, Thompson said he will strive to hold an open forum at least once a month in order to close the gap discussed in the senate presidential debate between students and the senate.

"This is your student senate. This is your open forum," said Thompson.

"The paper looks great!! I can't believe how far they've come this year."

--Jeff Huffman, Class of '94'
Former Editor, The Highland Echo

.....

"By nature, rumor and gossip abound at a small school; whether students realize it or not, they have only their school newspaper to set the records straight."

--Karen Beatty Class of '94'
Former Editor, The Highland Echo

"Traditionally, I would hate to see it [the newspaper] go. I was a student here, and, as a faculty member, I have found the Echo to be a good media to pull the campus together. It's a connecting link for the campus community."

--Dr. Jerry Waters
Chair, Division of Behavioral Sciences

Students inducted into academic honor societies

by Matt Waters
Staff Writer

Thirty-nine freshmen and fifteen seniors were inducted into two honor societies, Alpha Lambda Delta and Alpha Gamma Sigma, in an April 16 recognition ceremony.

At the start of the event, Peggy Maher, the faculty advisor for Alpha Lambda Delta, introduced the current officers to the audience of approximately fifty professors and parents. The officers in turn detailed the objectives and mission of the freshman honor society.

After being recognized, each inductee signed his name in the roll book and joined in a circle around the inside of the Center for Campus Ministry. Subsequently, students lit their candles, and Dr. Dean Boldon, Academic Vice President, gave the new members a challenge to maintain high grade point averages and to always excel academically.

The new members of Alpha Lambda Delta are Joy Bailey, Sara Baker, Geoffrey Benelisha, Leland Blackwood, Danielle Bonovich, Kendra Brownlow, Shannon Bryant, Nicholas Cherney, Michelle Chua, Allison Cornish, Ryan Coutlee, Heather Devillbiss, Jason Goede, Amy Flanders, Brian Hastings, Jason Hitson, Holly Jenkins, Carl Ketcham, Karl Kirby, Adam McCall, Callie McPherson, Marissa Miller, Ryan Miller, Greg Muldrew, Christine Newton, Brian O'Connor, Sherry Oden, Erin Palmer, Robert Parillo, Carol Redfern, Pennie Schraer, Bryan Self, Lucretia Sleeper, Lori Stinnett, Alisha Waldroop, Matt Waters, Karoline Westerling, Gabriel Whittenburg, and Lindy Wilks.

Officers for this class include President Marissa Miller, Vice President Ryan Coutlee, Secretary Christine Newton, Treasurer Sherry Oden, Historian Holly Jenkins, and Editor Matt Waters.

Following the freshmen's ceremony, fifteen seniors participated in a ceremony inducting them into Alpha Gamma Sigma, a senior honor scholarship society.

Dr. Clarice Doucette, faculty secretary for the society, gave background information about the organization. Dr. Jerry Pietenpol, the group's faculty president, then oversaw the induction of the new mem-

Alpha Gamma Sigma, 1996

Members of the academic honor society Alpha Gamma Sigma pose with Chapter President Dr. Jerry Pietenpol and Secretary/Treasurer Dr. Clarice Doucette.

photo by Kristin Kant

bers by having them sign their names in the roll book.

The new members of Alpha Gamma Sigma are Sandra Anderson, Richard Bendever, Julia Cain,

Nadia Edoh, Treva Lewis, Amanda Martin, Christen McCammon, Megan Miller, Kristi Renninger, Deborah Segar, Dwane Settlemyre, Jennifer Stadtmiller, Craig

Symons, Kristine Tallent, and Barbara Webb.

Also, a scholarship sponsored by the society was awarded to Jennifer Woodhouse.

Foreign Languages Dept. seeks teaching assistants

by Sarah Christians
Staff Writer

The Humanities Division of Maryville College is searching for a few good foreign language teaching assistants. The teaching assistant program in the foreign language department is searching for applicants to teach the language practice sessions in the first year language program. Several new T.A.s are needed for upcoming Spanish classes, and there is a possibility that one or two will be needed for French or German.

The coordinators of the teacher assistant program ask that applicants be conscientious in their work and that they love the language. Dr. Elizabeth Perez-Reilly, Associate Professor of Foreign Language, and Dr. Clarice Doucette, Assistant Professor of Foreign Language and Coordinator of the Language Practice Session, said the student teaching assistant is "a wonderful opportunity...on campus." Both Perez-Reilly and Doucette would prefer that the applicants are either majors or minors in their language, if not native speakers, and who are "conversant enough to help others learn." For students pursuing degrees in teacher licensure for a foreign language, Perez-Reilly said that the program is "an invaluable experience."

The Foreign Language department uses student teaching assistants in the first year program because many students may be better able to relate to their peers when learning to speak a new language. Doucette sees peer level teaching as "a way to increase student involvement in the learning process."

The language practice classes are small, ideally with about twelve students in each class. There is quite a bit of interaction between the students and the teaching assistants, since the T.A.s are essential to the students' progression in the language.

Students who wish to apply for the position should be reliable, conscientious, have a minimum of second-year skills in their language, and be enthusiastic about their job. Students are paid to teach two hours a week, for two hours a week of preparation, and for a one hour in-service type meeting held once a week. Students do not need to qualify for work study. Interested students should contact Perez-Reilly or Doucette.

Students who wish to apply for the positions should have a minimum of second-year skills in their language.

"I think it's very important. It helps the sense of community at the college, and it helps students, faculty, and staff know what's happening; whereas, we might not know."

Dr. Sherri Matascik
Assistant Professor of Music

Alpha Psi Omega presents student directed version of Gurney's "The Dining Room"

by Becky Lill
Staff Writer

The Maryville College Theatre presented the Alpha Psi Omega production of "The Dining Room" by A. R. Gurney at the MC Playhouse on May 2, 3, and 4 at 8:00 p.m.

"The Dining Room" is written in 18 short vignettes and was divided into three groups of six, as this year's production had three directors and one assistant, all MC students.

The three directors were junior Kathryn McDonald, junior Tiffany Rudicil, and sophomore Todd Smith. They are all members of Dr. Jill Stapleton-Bergeron's Directing 311 class. They have been very active in both the technical and performance aspects of the MC Theatre. The assistant director was Becky Lill, a sophomore Theatre minor, who has also been involved in MC Theatre.

The play is set in the dining room of the typical well-to-do household. Within the dining room, the audience viewed the history of its occupants and the role the dining room played in their lives.

The action was comprised of a mosaic of interrelated scenes which taken together created a portrait of a vanishing species: the upper-middle class white Anglo-Saxon Protestant.

The actors portrayed a wide variety of characters, and each vignette introduced a new set of people and events. The audience saw a marital spat because a wife insisted on typing on the dining room table; a father lecturing his son on politics over breakfast; a divorcee having the table appraised for damages; a daughter, her marriage in shambles, pleading with her father to allow her to return home; and a fancy dinner party for all the dining room's occupants throughout time.

The ensemble cast included C.J. Allen, Sara Baker, Geoff Benelisha, Amy-Lisa Brewer, Shannon Bryant, Meghan Casey, Brandon Cook, Jeremy Cook, Paige Cooper, Eric Daugherty, Becky Lill, Lodge McCammon, Bo McMichael, Greg W. Muldrew, Eric Obermiller, Brian Kevin O'Connor, Erin Rice, Lesley Roberson, and Sarah Stevenson.

When asked how they felt about the show in general, Smith and McDonald agreed that, although this is one of the most inexperienced casts to ever produce a show at MC, "They were very successful." Rudicil said, "The cast did a wonderful job of making people love the dining room as if it were their own."

Bowling for Scholars by Carl Gombert

Wash
and Werewolves

Peer Mentors gain experience, look to the future

by Kenyon Evans
Staff Writer

Two years ago, the Maryville College Community attempted to address the needs of incoming freshmen through the formation of the Peer Mentor Committee. The committee is now gearing up for another year of its mission to improve freshman retention. The staff next year will consist of eighteen peer mentors with Beckie Heckler and John McDonald co-chairing the committee.

The committee was established primarily through the efforts of Aaron Stone, who chaired it for the first year. Beckie Heckler, the current chairperson of the committee, said, "The first year was really a successful year, and we learned a lot about what to do, what not to do, and how successful the program was going to be."

The committee uses upperclassman and freshman interaction to help freshmen make the adjustment to their new surroundings. Through this interaction, the peer mentors have helped to improve freshman retention.

"The program has really grown a lot this year. It really grew a lot as far as training, as far as participation in the classroom. The whole position [peer mentor] has become a position that is recognized as an important one on campus," said Heckler.

The peer mentors started off the year with a training session that consisted of an overnight trip and tips provided by professors from their specialties. After their training, the group was responsible for the Big Brothers/Big Sisters kick-off party. The mentors followed through the first semester with classroom participation in freshman inquiry classes.

The primary goal of the Peer Mentor Committee is to increase Maryville College's retention rate.

The committee plans to continue its expansion next year. Significantly more freshmen will attend MC and will take inquiry classes, and the peer mentors are gearing up for the growth. They have petitioned the Student Senate for money for the first time, and they plan to have more organized social events for peer mentor-student interaction outside of the classroom. Mentors also plan to spend more time in classrooms.

Heckler hopes that peer mentors can achieve a fifty-fifty split of classroom time with orientation leaders. She said, "They [peer mentors] are demanding and asking for more time in the classroom to give their side of what's going on this campus and orient the students to the realistic view that the peer mentors have experienced themselves."

The primary goal of the committee is to raise retention; their mechanism of achieving this end is to help freshman find a place at MC. Heckler commented, "Our goal is to help them find that part of the campus that they fit into whether it be music, theater, sports, or academics . . . it's really hard to find that place. If you don't have people leading you there, it's a blind walk."

The committee members themselves also benefit from the experience of being involved in the peer mentor program. Debbie Shewfelt, a peer mentor in past years, commented, "I enjoyed being a peer mentor because it taught me a lot about myself and how much I've grown in the past four years. It gave me insight."

Eric Obermiller, another former peer mentor, commented, "The best thing about it is that I helped freshmen become acquainted with Maryville College. I feel like I made a difference for the school and for the students."

Seniors look toward graduation, give advice to MC students

by Matt Waters
Staff Writer

Approximately 200 seniors will receive their diplomas in the graduation ceremony that is scheduled for May 19.

Many of these students have spent their last four years with this day in mind, continually striving to do their best and also find satisfying majors.

Kristi Renninger, a graduating mathematics major from Maryville, has already made plans for after graduation. She intends to attend graduate school to obtain her master's degree in mathematics; however, she is undecided about her career plans.

She also gave some thoughts to the underclassmen, "My advice is to show up to classes consistently and to establish good relationships with professors and other people on campus. Commuters especially should join clubs and organizations in order to get more involved with the people and activities on campus."

"Given the chance to do it over," Renninger said, "I would live on campus. That way, I could be more involved."

Renninger also credited individuals close to her for her success. "I thank my parents and professors," she said. "They encouraged me and pushed me toward my goals."

Eddie Harmon, of Maryville, is graduating with a bachelor's degree in political science. After completing college, he plans to take University.

He advised the incoming students to be serious in all their studies and courses. "I struggled a little bit my first year because I wasn't taking college seriously," he said. "High school was very easy to me, and I came to college with that same attitude."

If Harmon could do anything over, he would have done two things differently. "First, I would have studied more," he said. "Second, I would have lived the first years off campus but the last year on campus."

Wendy Ellis, a chemistry major from Johnson City, Tennessee, has made plans for her post-college life. She is getting married the day before graduation. She hopes to secure a job doing laboratory work for a company in East Tennessee and live here with her husband.

She too encourages involvement in campus activities. "When you first come here, it seems so overwhelming," she said. "But you get to know others quickly by participating in events on campus."

Her advice for incoming students is to "live on campus for at least one year to get involved in the community."

Ellis praised the college's chemistry department. "Dr. Naylor and Dr. Bunde are always open for questions," she said. "They know who their students are and are willing to discuss problems and questions with them. They take the time to assist their students."

... live on campus for at least one year to get involved in the community.

-- Wendy Ellis

a year off to regain his bearings and have a rest from school. Following this break, he intends to attend a law school, possibly Georgetown

Way Out West

by Chris West

You were right, Fred . . .
These studios do make good hunt'n.

Way Out West

by Chris West

Mary had the funny feeling that she was being watched.

"It's [The Highland Echo] one of the most organized ways of communication on campus, and it gives student writers, photographers, and designers, the opportunity to express themselves and to share their creativity with the rest of this campus."

—Bishop Moore,
junior

Alternative Spring Breakers Teach Children in Florida

by Matt Waters
Staff Writer

Fifteen students and faculty members gave up their traditional, leisurely spring breaks to help people in need with Maryville College's "Alternative Spring Break" program.

The group went to Jacksonville, Florida, to clean and repair the A. L. Lewis Center for Family Care during spring break. While there, the team of twelve students and three Maryville College staff members spent their mornings cleaning and doing maintenance work, raking leaves, and tidying the grounds of the center. Their afternoons were occupied by the children who stayed at the day care. Besides playing with the children, the group also taught them how to play tennis and "Red Rover."

In addition to making much-needed repairs to the family center, the students and faculty also volunteered at an inner-city school in art and music classrooms.

The volunteers spent two nights in cabins on a nearby campground. The First Presbyterian Church in Jacksonville allowed them to stay in the church and use its facilities for the remaining nights.

While in Florida, several MC graduates opened their homes and their refrigerators to the workers. These former students and a number of churches provided food.

One participating student said, "This was an eye opener to see the real world."

Another student said, "I've really learned just how lucky I am. I've never experienced this before."

Students and faculty members who participated in the alternative spring break were: Debbie Shewfelt, Sheila Pirl, Kristin Kant, Kimiaki Itamura, Karson Leitch, Staci Kerr, Judy Dunnam, LeAndra Barriage, Alisha Waldroop, Randy Stanley, Georgina King, Melissa Warlick, Abigail Blankner, Holly Bailey, and Ned Willard.

Springtime at last!

Darin McGowan enjoys a game of tennis on the campus courts. Spring finally arrived at MC this month, after an unusually long winter.

photo by Kristin Kant

The Highland Echo Classifieds

INTERNSHIPS:

Maryville College Admissions Office has full-time intern positions for one or two new grads from August 1, 1996 through May 31, 1997. Pay is $1,000/month. Extensive travel required. A wonderful experience for the right person. Must be very enthusiastic about Maryville College. Submit resume to Donna Davis.

Total Temporaries has a summer internship in marketing/sales. $6.00/hour. Must be energetic and professional. Involves phoning, sales, and calling on various companies. Great opportunity for anyone with human resources interest. See Jan in Career Services.

Earthside School of Folk Art - has summer positions for (1) publicity assistant and (2) children's craft teacher/sales associate. Will train for job 2 in crafts such as weaving, pottery, and silk screening. Excellent opportunity. Minimum wage. Approx. 20-hrs./week. Full job description in Career Services.

AMERICORPS MEMBERS

WANTED FOR NATIONAL SERVICE RESOURCE ASSISTANT PROGRAM. fall 1996; winter/spring 1996-97; or summer/fall 1997.

Endangered species monitoring, hydrology studies, ecological surveys, fisheries management, habitat restoration, public outreach—and many more opportunities. Locations are Florida, Arizona, California, New Mexico, Nevada, Oklahoma, and Texas. Positions are from 900-1,700 hours with living allowance of between $4,185 and $7,945 - Education Award of between $2,363 and $4,725 for future or existing loans. Free medical insurance. Come to Career Services for more information.

FULL-TIME:

Norwest Financial Services has two salaried positions in their training program in Knoxville, TN. Interested in May graduates, any major. Come by Career Services for more information.

Tentmakers Youth Ministry has 3 year-round salaried positions in the field of youth leadership beginning this summer. Salary, insurance, auto expenses, housing allowance provided. Located in upper Midwest. Come to Career Services for more information.

The Prudential is seeking resumes for applicants interested in their 3-year training program in total financial services. Guaranteed starting income; established list of clients; full benefits; develop own schedule and working hours; expand own office space and staff. Come to Career Services for more information.

SUMMER JOBS: Perpetual Motion is looking for life guards, cheerleading instructors, and gymnastics tumbling instructor for preschoolers.

Alamo Rent A Car needs service agents and check-in personnel. Up to 30-hours/week. Start $5.00/hr. Tuition reimbursement for business or related major. Inquire about Job 192.

Smoky Mtn. Tubing and Smoky Mtn. Arts and Crafts, Townsend. $5.50-up for 40-hr. weeks. Applications in Career Services.

Full-time summer nanny position. Housing provided if needed. $5.50/hr. Two children ages 2 and 4 yrs. old. See Jan in Career Service. Inquire about Job 188.

Wal-Mart Super Store is hiring, 3rd shift.

Hideaway Cottages in Townsend is advertising for a gardener for spring, summer and fall. Job 206.

Many other listings for summer and part-time in Career Services. Come by the office to inquire.

OTHER FULL-TIME POSSIBILITIES:

Danka Industries - Sales. $1,300/month + commission. Nashville, TN
Coca-Cola Company, Knoxville - sales.

First Tennessee Bank - teller, installment loan rep.

MARCA (Panasonic), a refrigeration company in Vonore offers a number of positions for grads.

Pfizer Pharmaceutical Inc., Mt. Joliet, TN. Sales position $33,000 + commission and company car.

Sverdrup Technology - Computer Programmer. $26-$40,000. Tullahoma, TN.

The New England - Sales Rep. Nashville, TN.

CAREER SERVICES AN-

NOUNCEMENTS:

Limited on-campus summer housing is now being offered to students (must be registered for fall classes). Rooms are $276/month and are located in Davis and Carnegie. Rooms are available from 5/22-8/9. Contract required. Prorated rent due for May when you move in ($10/day). Come to career services to inquire.

Grads, we have several job listings for the Southeast region, as well as national opportunities. Come to Career Services.

Those who are currently receiving job announcements in your Box must re-register next year so that we may serve you more effectively in your job search.

Some jobs and announcements are now being posted on the career services electronic notice board. This service can be accessed through the computer lab e-mail. Partial listings will continue to be posted in Fayerweather Lobby.

Lady Scots looking ahead

by Joe Malheiro
Sports Writer

The Lady Scots softball team showed great improvement in 1996 and looks to improve even more next season.

This year's team had a final record of 8-11, an improvement of four wins from just a year ago.

Head Coach Kandi Schram said, "Circumstances prevented us from playing as well as we could have. We had several injuries and the weather was uncooperative." Schram added, "I'm very pleased with the way the girls responded to adversity. They took the bull by the horns."

Schram also feels that things are on the up-swing for next year. Schram said, "Our plan is to bring in 8-10 new recruits to help boost the program."

Schram later added, "At the beginning of the season we played better, but, toward the end, individual play hit a new level."

Season highlights included a huge win over Cumberland College at home. Another key moment was freshman Brandi Shamoon's out-of-the park home run. This made her the first Lady Scot ever to accomplish that feat.

Coach Schram said, "We're looking forward to a productive fall and a dry spring next year. I hope that all will support our team next year; it looks to be the best ever."

"I think the Echo's features, stories, and cartoons are great."

--Daniel Smith, freshman

by Chris Stephens
Sports Editor

"All the world's a stage
And all the men and women merely players:

They have their exits and their entrances;

And one man in his time plays many parts."

-William Shakespeare,
"As You Like It"

I am writing today about a friend who was a player; a man who has made many entrances and now, his final exit; a man who has also, in my life at least, played many parts.

Saying good-bye and thanks, again

A few months ago, he had his last practice as a player, a moment that touched me like few moments ever have. He then played his last game, and I found myself not wanting it to be over. This, as it turned out, was an all-too-familiar feeling for me.

Being friends and being teammates started a long time before we ever came to Maryville. It seems like just yesterday we were playing high school football together. It was then that he left such an impression on me. He taught me so much about being an athlete and also about being a person.

In two years of high school with him, I learned so much respect for him that I will look up to him for the rest of my life. I got up in the morning more than once for the sole reason of making him proud. Monday through Friday I worked hard so that I might help him succeed. Then, on Friday nights, he was able to put 70 other teammates, the crowd, and everyone else in the palm of his hand. He could get me so intense and so focused that the emotion would be enough to carry me for hours. On a team that had 36 seniors, he stood above everyone. He was more than a captain; he was our leader.

When he had finished his last game in high school, somehow things did not work out. His final game ended so wrong. From that night on, I decided to finish his legacy by dedicating my senior year to him. An entire year later, with a few seconds left in my senior year, I finished it. It was over now, and the ending was right. That night I thought I said good-bye to my friend for the last time.

Now, three years later, I find myself having to say good-bye for the second time. I never thought I would be his teammate again. I thank God everyday for having let us see it through until the end. He is leaving me again. He carried me through my freshman year here. He is the only reason I made it through my first year of football. For that, and for everything else, I want to let him know how grateful I am.

Jeremy Landis has danced his last dance. There are no more Friday nights or Saturday afternoons. I cannot remember playing football without him. His career here ended right. There is no unfinished business. Jeremy taught me how to love football, so I will let that carry me for one more season.

I have never met anyone who could get me so focused. Jeremy wrote a note and left it in the weight room for me one day after high school. He told me simply to make him proud. He knew what that meant to me. That was five years ago.

I hope someday I will make him as proud as he has made me. He is not perfect, but, in those few nights and few afternoons, it was hard to find any flaws.

Thank you, Jeremy. I feel fortunate now to be able to say good-bye to you — again.

I think that everyone needs someone like Jeremy. For me, it was important to have someone to look up to. A positive influence is a powerful thing. I have people now who help me, and I appreciate them as well. Jeremy was first. I do not know how my life would have turned out if he had not asked so much of me. I would like to think that I would be here, going to school, playing football. I would like to think that.

Jeremy has better friends than me. I too think that I may have better friends than Jeremy. The relationship between us is a lot more than just being friends. Friends for the most part are easy to find. What is difficult is to find people to stand with you no matter the circumstances. That is what we have given each other. No matter the outcome or situation, we have stood by each other.

"Looking back on the memory of the dance we shared beneath the stars above. For a moment all the world was right. How could I have known you'd ever say good-bye. And now, I'm glad I didn't know the way it all would end. The way it all would go. Our lives are better left to chance. I could have missed the pain, but I'd had to miss the dance."

-Garth Brooks, "The Dance"

Strike three comin' up . . .

photo by Kristin Kant

The Scots baseball team finished their final week of action with an impressive split with the third ranked team in the nation, Marietta College. The team finished with yet another 20 win season, going 21-19 for the year. The team looks to continue building for next year as they will again rerun a strong nucleus. Eric Pyle is pictured on the mound.

This is what Student Publications will look like if the Student Senate continues to cut funding.

Cable comes to MC

by Amanda Martin
Editor

This fall all residence halls on the Maryville College campus will very likely have cable TV available to students.

According to Dr. William Seymour, vice president for student development, the college is in the late stages of contract negotiations with Intermedia, a local cable company.

Seymour, along with Andy McCall, director of maintenance, and Brenda Binder, director of telephone services, are planning for Intermedia to provide basic cable service for Lloyd, Pearsons, Davis, Copeland, and Gamble Halls. The cable will be optional, meaning students may choose whether or not to have cable access in their rooms.

"I strongly anticipate we will have this ready for the Fall 1996 semester," Seymour said.

Intermedia will wire the buildings at no cost to the college.

Carnegie Hall, which is already wired with cable television, will still have mandatory cable in every room. Carnegie residents will still pay 35 dollars per semester per roommate for cable. Residents in the other five halls will pay the same amount if they choose to order cable. Students will pay their cable fees to the school when they pay their bills in the beginning of the Fall and Spring semesters; therefore, students will not have to keep up with monthly bills.

Seymour said that the question regarding the availability of pay channels has not yet been answered.

In a survey of 200 students, 92 percent were in favor of cable in all residence halls, and 87.5 percent said they would purchase cable if it becomes available, said Seymour.

The college will "correspond to students to get a commitment, probably in July," he said. A commitment from both roommates will be required in order to purchase cable.

photo by Kristin Kant

A real slimeball!

Ned Willard, Gamble, Lloyd, and Pearsons Halls coordinator, takes a dip in the Highland Echo's dunking booth after participating in the Fellowship of Christian Athletes' pie toss.

Next year's Echo, Chilhowean editors selected by student publications committee

The Publications Committee recently announced the editors for next years Echo and Chilhowean.

Sarah West will be the editor-in-chief of The Echo next year. Patrick Leslie and Matt Waters will serve as assistant editors.

David Downs will be the new Chilhowean editor. Alice Wong and Sarah Christians have been named as the assistant editors.

Attention Seniors

Upcoming Events Schedule

- Graduation Rehearsal, Sunday, May 12, at 7 p.m. in Wilson Chapel
- Senior Rite of Passage Day, Thursday, May 16, from 1 to 3 p.m. in the Business Office. All seniors graduation in May or during summer 1996 are required to participate.
- Alumni Barbeque, Friday, May 17, beginning at noon at the House in the Woods.

Baccalaureate and Commencement, Sunday, May 19

- Senior Breakfast at Willard House, 8 to 9 a.m. -- pick up tickets from Lynn Hachenberg at Willard House
- Baccalaureate in Wilson Chapel, 9:30 a.m., assemble at 9 a.m.
- Commencement Ceremonies, Front lawn of Thaw Hall, 2:30 p.m. (In Boydson Baird Gym in the Cooper Athletic Center if weather is bad -- decision to move inside will be announced at Baccalaureate.)
- Reception will immediately follow commencement.

Bowling for Scholars by Carl Gombert

Now on the New York Swines "bestsellers" list

Correction

In our last issue, we mistakenly wrote that the article on Stephanie Wyatt's resignation was written by Sarah Christians. Lori Leffel actually wrote the article. We apologize to Lori for this error.

Behind The Scenes

Camill '96

"Student representation" and freedom of the press --- like oil & water!

"It's too bad it [the newspaper] doesn't come out more often. It's a nice forum for getting information out."

--Dr. Lynnette Sievert
Assistant professor of Biology

DRB and J-Board report

- 3/9 Four students and one person who is not a Maryville College student were charged with alcohol policy violations in Copeland Hall. Three of the charges were dismissed, and one student was given a first offense.
- 3/10 In Davis, two students received first offense for breaking the visitation policy.
- 3/11 In Carnegie, one student charged with vandalism received a warning.
- 3/12 Two students in Copeland Hall received a warning for breaking quiet hours.
- 3/14 Two students in Davis received first offense for breaking visitation.
- 3/14 In Fayerweather parking lot, a student was charged with reckless driving which resulted in a $25 fine.

- 3/15 Five students and a non-MC student were charged with breaking the alcohol policy in Carnegie. One received first offense, the cases of two were dismissed, and the other two received a warning and a $35 fine.
- 3/15 In Gamble, one student received first offense for violation of the alcohol policy.
- 3/15 In Copeland, a student was charged with violating the alcohol policy, but the case was dismissed. The student was asked to remove "excessive alcoholic beverage containers."
- 3/15 On Lloyd Beach, two students were charged with reckless driving and vandalism, and the case was turned over to security.
- 4/1 A case involving a student charged with failure to comply has been dismissed.

- 4/4 Five students in Pearsons were charged with alcohol offenses, but the case is pending.
- 4/5 Five students in Pearsons were charged with alcohol offenses, and received a $35 fine.
- 4/9 In Gamble, a student charged with an alcohol violation received a second offense.
- 4/12 A case involving a student found with alcohol resulted in a first offense sentence.
- 4/17 In Carnegie, a student was charged with violating the alcohol policy, and the case is pending.
- 4/18 Nine MC students and two non-MC students were charged with alcohol, visitation, and quiet hours policy violations in Copeland Hall, and the case is pending.

Quality Outdoor Gear & Clothing
in the heart of Maryville

Company Representatives

Gregory
Sierra Designs
Mountain Smith
One Sport    Lowe Alpine
Scarpa

Also see these product lines

Simple
BIRKENSTOCK.
The original comfort shoe.™

Teva.
THE SPORT SANDAL.

GRAMICCI

410 S. Washington St.
Maryville, TN 37804
ph: 423-681-4141
fax: 423-681-3140
Hours: Mon-Thu 9 - 7
Fri 9 - 8      Sat 9 - 5
Closed Sun

Grand Celebration Opening &

Prize Drawings May 25 Grand Prize Drawing *

ASOLO

MOUNTAIN HARD WEAR

Lowe alpine

MOUNTAINSMITH

SIERRA DESIGNS

Events 10 - 12:

Early Bird Specials

Book Signing
by Johnny Malloy

Back Country Olympics

Back Country Medical Clinic

How to Pack Your Backpack Clinic

Water Treatment
Clinic

Backpacker Pantry
Cooking Demo

Redeem this coupon for a free gift Saturday,
May 25th only,
9-11 a.m. only

Early Bird Special

10% off all regular and specially priced
items in the store (excluding ECCO shoes)

* Register Now

1996 - 1997

MC: Into the 21st Century and Beyond

Class of 2000 Biggest Ever

by Sherrie Brents
Reporter

Members of the Maryville College community gathered together on September 12 in front of Pearsons Hall to celebrate the record-breaking growth of the college. The festivities began with freshman Robbie Allen playing the bagpipe, already demonstrating the talent and potential of the Class of 2000.

Dr. Gerald Gibson, president of MC, started the program by asking Martha Hess, registrar, to announce the official 1996 enrollment. The total of 927 stu-passing the mark of 905 students from 1949. To further illustrate MC's growth, Gibson presented a chart that measured the enrollment increase from 1993 to 1996. In those three years, the enrollment has risen from 750 to 927 students.

Dr. Gerald Gibson, president of MC, leads the way.

Gibson also had sketches of the planned residence village, Beason Hall. According to Gibson, the ground-breaking on MC's newest sign of progress will be in late October. The new hall is scheduled to be used next fall, in order to help house the rising number of students.

The MC 2000 Plan, which was also mentioned at the celebration, targets the growth of MC. It includes improvements to the grounds and facilities.

Not only did Gibson attribute the increase in enrollment to recruitment, he also pointed out the importance of retention and stressed that students have to view MC "as a good place to be." A combination of higher enrollment and retention has led to more opportunities for the students, both present and future.

Ellen Brahms, who attended MC in 1949, also spoke at the celebration. Brahms described the atmosphere at MC during the former record breaking year. From the stricter rules to the different buildings, MC has undergone many changes. continued on p. 9

Inside

New Faculty
Exercise Room
New Isaac's
Clinic
Aladdin's Lamp
Alcohol Policy
Review
Football Victory Letter From the Editor

Highlights

News
Senate
Sports
Classified/Jobs
DRB Report
Art & Literature
Features
Advice Column
At the Movies
Op/Ed

by Matt Waters
Copy Editor

Whoever picked up the lamp hopefully got his two wishes, but the college has benefited the most from the work of this genie.

Since Marriott Food Services was replaced by Aladdin, the college has seen major changes in both Isaac's and the cafeteria itself.

First, students tired of eating their meals in Pearsons cafeteria now have a trendy alternative in the form of the newly renovated Isaac's Grill.

The appearance of the former snack shop has been drastically changed with the addition of a new bar, complete with stools; new cooking equipment; and the removal of the free-standing shelving units.

The new grill offers short-order meals including hamburgers,

Aladdin Grants MC 'Two' Wishes

Photo by Keli Jennett

MC students enjoy new grill.

personal-size pizzas, and a variety of sandwiches.

According to Food Service Director Allen Cassidy, "It was actually the decision of Maryville College and its students to put in a grill. We are helping to provide what the students are wanting."

And the students apparently did want a new dining option, because business is booming, he said. "Really, business is super in Isaac's," Cassidy said. "It has continued to escalate and is very popular among students."

Margaret Thompson, who oversees the grill, agreed with him. "We have been pretty busy," she said. "This is more business than we expected, and we're doing really well."

However, because of the number of students coming into Isaac's, one relatively minor issue has arisen. "One problem that has come up is traffic," he said.

Students who purchased a 21-meal plan each received a gift from Aladdin for use in Isaac's. "Students with the meal plan plus received $60 in bonus points mostly good for hot food in the grill," Cassidy said. "After the original $60 is up, students can use a gold card plan. They can continued on p. 10

New VP Full of Spirit

by Sarah West
Editor

Mr. Ron Appuhn, the new vice president for financial affairs and treasurer, has come to Maryville College full of enthusiasm and determination to help MC meet its goals.

"I'm really excited about being here," said Appuhn. "I'm a positive, upbeat kind of person, and I like to be around people and in a situation where I can be positive and upbeat."

Previously, Appuhn was the vice president for business and chief financial officer for Westminster College in Fulton, Missouri, for two years. He also spent thirteen years at two community colleges in Illinois, one in the southern and the other in the northwestern parts of the state. He was a public accountant before that.

"I view myself as a 'can do' type person," said Appuhn. "I want to make sure the college can do as much as it can and its business services do their part to make sure that not only we can do everything we can do, but to make sure we provide the best service and support. That's our job. That's our major goal. We want to take what is already perceived as a good service provider for the campus community and step it up a notch."

"I hope the students look to me as a resource person and as a support person. I hope I am someone you [students] can find," said Appuhn.

Although Appuhn has many goals and ideas of his own, he plans to continue supporting those that were already being developed at MC. "We want to upgrade our financial reporting and accountability for our decision makers," said

Appuhn. "That step had started before I got here, but we're still working on it."

Appuhn received his bachelor's degree in business from the University of California at Berkeley and his master's of business administration from Southern Illinois University of Edwardsville.

Appuhn regards schools such as MC as beneficial to the students. "The good thing about a liberal arts education is the breadth and the quality of an education that young people are getting," he said.

Elaborating on the liberal arts theme, Appuhn said, "The ability to reason, the ability to talk, and the ability to challenge and to meet different people who have really different perspectives, I think, are the things that really stand out as a part of a liberal arts education."

His wife, Karen Wentz, and two sons, Chris, age 12, and Matt, age eight, reside in Illinois.

"I really like it here," said Appuhn. "When we came over for the interview, it was the first time we [Appuhn and Wentz] had ever been in this part of the state. The college and the area was a real big draw for us. We like to hike." He and his wife have been hiking in Canada a few times.

"With the mountains here thirty miles away, it's a real bonus for us," said Appuhn. He is excited about the airport being so close because he travels so much.

"I like to participate in student events," said Appuhn. At Westminster College, Appuhn dressed up as the mascot, the blue jay, at basketball games to en-

continued on p. 9

Ron Appuhn

Soud Team Joins MC

by Matt Waters
Copy Editor

Students returning to campus this semester are seeing two new, married faces in Anderson Hall.

First, Steve Soud, a graduate of the University of Florida, is a new professor in the tenure track. Although this is his first semester at Maryville College, he has had many years of teaching experience, including five years at Bolles School in Jacksonville, Florida.

Mr. Soud received his undergraduate degree, a bachelor's degree in English, from Davidson College in Charlotte, North Carolina. He attended UF for his master's in English and will submit his dissertation to complete his doctorate there within the year.

"My two primary areas of interest in teaching are 18th century British literature and 20th century fiction," he said. "I hope to be able to teach similar courses here."

MC has already made a favorable impact on Mr. Soud. "My early impressions of the college are very good," he said. "There is a close-knit faculty and a diverse student body."

Second, Cathy Soud, an adjunct professor in Spanish, is bringing with her many years of teaching experience. After receiving her bachelor's degree in Spanish from Vanderbilt University in Nashville, she fulfilled the qualifications necessary to receive a master's in teaching from Vanderbilt. This degree, with an emphasis in Spanish, designates a combination of language and education. During her 18 years of teaching, Mrs. Soud taught both at high schools and community colleges. Her most recent position was chair of foreign languages department at Bolles School.

Like for her husband, MC has a special magnetism for Mrs. Soud. "What I like about this college is the opportunity I have to get to know all my students in class," she said. "The students seem motivated, and I'm impressed with the general education curriculum. I would like to stay."

The Highland Echo

Editor

Sarah H. West

Copy Editor

Matt H. Waters

Technical Editor

Patrick E. Leslie

Associate Editor

Chris Stephens

Staff Writers

Sherrie Brents, Tonya Briggs, Shannon Bryant, Jin Young Choi, Sarah Christians, Joey Cody, Eric Daugherty, Allison Dunn, Folami Ford, Chuck Gilkey, Kim Eun Jung, Lori Leffel, Andy Long, La-Toyia Lundy, Joe Malheiro, Bo McMichael, Rissa Miller, Byung Joo Park, Dallas Rightmyer, Sun-Im Ryu, Paul Sacksteder, Michelle Shuler, Christi Stalans, Jason Thompson, Traci Tidwell, Allison Watts, Kazu Nakane

Photo Staff

Keli Jennett, Lori Leffel

Cartoonists

Carl Gombert, Chris West, Scott West, Jessica Wilks

Layout

Michelle McElroy

Please send letters to the editor, editorial essays, poetry, short stories, photograph, and art to box # 2247.

Phone

981-8176

e-mail

SWest75@aol.com

Alcohol Policy to be Reviewed

by Shannon Bryant
Reporter

Residents of Lloyd and Carnegie are enjoying an increased degree of freedom this year.

Because of the implementation of the new alcohol policy, these residence halls have joined Pearsons as locations where those 21 or over may consume alcohol. As long as both roommates and all guests in the room (a maximum of three for each roommate) are 21 or over, alcohol may be possessed or ingested. However, all alcoholic beverages must remain in a room. Public areas such as hallways, stairwells, lounges, and lobbies are to stay alcohol-free.

So, what does this mean for the Maryville College campus? In a recent phone interview, student senate vice president Adam Ray said, "Hopefully it will give 21-year-olds more of a freedom to do what they want." Ray, stating the reason behind this policy said, "We [senate and residence life committee] thought it was time for MC to make an advancement."

In addition, Ray asked students to remember that the policy will be reviewed later this year. If the policy is deemed harmful to MC and its students, the policy will be rewritten or abolished altogether. "I just hope everyone realizes what this policy is designed for," Ray said.

Ray said that he has heard no negative comments on the policy. "Everyone loves it, I think," said Ray. "At least all the people who are legal."

However, some students feel differently. For example, Lanny Blackwood, a Copeland Hall resident said, "Personally, I don't disagree with the policy; however, I do believe it disassociates Maryville College from its Presbyterian charter."

All students who would like to express thoughts concerning the alcohol policy are encouraged to call the senate office at x8049.

Wilks' World

Jessica Wilks

MC Business Gain Experience

by La-Toyia Lundy
Reporter

The opportunity to experiment in the world of business has knocked a few years early for several business management students.

Dr. Mary Sullivan, a professor of business, got the initial idea from a presentation by a faculty member of Skidmore College. She built on this idea and came up with the Executive Panel Presentation.

The Executive Panel, which began in 1991, is exclusive to Maryville College. This presentation is for seniors in Business Strategic Management 401. The students work on this presentation for a semester in lieu of their final examinations.

The class is organized into teams which work together to analyze a business-related case. They are given only general information on the subject and must research their own material. While the students work on this project, Sullivan telephones the heads of businesses all over East Tennessee, asking them to come to her class to act as a board of directors for the seniors' presentations.

Although the Executive Panel offers students many advantages, the college itself gains in a number of ways. MC benefits from a reputation for preparing its students for the work force, and the panel also promotes the college to the people who are going to be hiring these students.

The students learn to work in teams, speak persuasively, give solid presentations, and learn how to think on their feet. They take the role of business consultants and get a real feel for business situations.

Consequently, some students have even received job offers as a result of their Executive Panel Presentations. Sullivan said, "I also want them to get the confidence that comes from being given a challenge and excelling at it."

Prominent people from all over East Tennessee have come to serve on the board of directors. The list includes Thomas R. Bell, President of East Tennessee Natural Gas; Virginia Morrow, President of Professional Temporary Services, Inc.; Pat Roddy, President of Roddy Coca-Cola Bottling Company (has since been sold); Joe Ben Turner, President of Willis Corroon Corporation of Knoxville; Thomas Overton, President of White Realty and Service Corporation; Sammie Lynn Pruett, Vice President for Public Service, Continuing Education, and University Relations; R. Neal Culver, President of Culver-Dyer Securities; Donna Cobble, President, Temporary Division, Staffing Solutions; Henry F. Bertelkamp, Jr., President of Bertelkamp Automation; William E.

continued on p. 9

Phon-A-Thon '96

by Eric Daugherty
Reporter

Some things are just synonymous with the start of a new fall semester at Maryville College: The reunion of friends, cooler weather, the turning of the leaves, and mass phone solicitation for a worthy cause. It is once again time for that yearly act of donation-seeking known as the Phon-A-Thon.

This year marks the tenth anniversary of the fundraiser, which had its most successful year ever. A total of $165,000 was raised last year, and expectations are high that this year's pre-set goal of $175,000 will be met or exceeded.

The Phon-A-Thon is aimed at securing monetary pledges from MC alumni in order to benefit the college's annual fund. This fund serves as an all-purpose source from which the college draws on to help meet yearly expenses. The major difference between the annual fund and other sources of revenue for the school is that money raised for the annual fund is not saved, but rather it is earmarked as current operations money to be used at the present time. The annual fund, among other things, helps to make possible the financial aid that the college offers. According to Director of Annual Fund-ing, Anna Graham, "Tuition only covers about two-thirds of what it costs to educate a student. The Annual Fund helps to make up the rest."

One of the more unique aspects of the Phon-A-Thon is that it is predominantly student-powered. This allows for entertaining yet educating interactions between Maryville students past and present that might otherwise never occur. Eric Obermiller, a longtime phonathon volunteer, said, "When I think of Phon-A-Thon, I think of fun. Where else can continued on p. 10

Fine Arts Center Lounge Gets a New Look

by Michelle Shuler
Reporter

To many the Fine Arts Center Lounge may look like a room full of couches and chairs, but to fine arts majors it is home. This is why there was such a strong reaction when students returned from summer vacation to find that their "home" had been re-decorated over the summer.

New carpet was laid down, and the furniture was rebuilt and recovered in shades of blue and tan. The fireplace was also cleaned. The decor in the lounge had long been a joke among students who spend time there. Adam Shepherd, a music major, said, "It doesn't look like the Brady's living room anymore." These jokes, however, were not behind the change.

Photo by Keli Jennett

Senior Aaron Stone lounges in the newly-decorated FAC.

Amanda Martin, who graduated from Maryville

College last spring, was a member of the President's roundtable, a council of students who met regularly with Dr. Gibson, president of MC, and his cabinet. She had been raising this issue for some time, but in the past the funds had always been needed for necessities such as repairing the roof, according to Dr. Daniel Taddie, chair of the fine arts department. The fact that the lounge is a public place used for community forums and concert receptions and by art gallery guests also played a part in the decision to re-decorate.

Student reaction has been positive. The lounge's new colors look "calmer" than the previous orange, according to Sophomore Ryan Coutlee. Freshman J McFetridge is impressed by the fact that there always seems to be fine arts majors studying or socializing in the lounge.

It is, however, the responsibility of the students to help keep the upholstery and carpet looking new. "We ask people to be careful with the carpet and furniture," Taddie said.

These changes are not the only ones taking place. Repairs are set to be done on the window mechanisms and the circuitry, and the blinds are scheduled to be cleaned and repaired.

Lift the chorus, wake the echoes,
Make the welkin ring!
Hail the queen of all the highlands,
Loud her praises sing!
-MC's ALMA MATER

Community Forum Kicks Off Year

by Chuck Gilkey
Reporter

Dr. William Robinson, a professor of information science at the University of Tennessee, spoke at the first of many community forums on the issue of the government's role in censorship. The first community form of the 1996-1997 was held on Thursday September 12.

Robinson opened by saying that the idea of the "proper role of government varies from person to person. We're each going to have a different perspective."

Robinson gave the following opening scenario: Daniel Robinson is a nine year old boy who goes to his elementary school. In the school library is a Sports Illustrated Swimsuit Issue. Is it corrupting Daniel Robinson?

Robinson was quick to answer that his opinion of the elementary school library situation would be different from someone else's. Continuing the theme he said, "We must all get together and decide what is harmful." However, he was careful to note that if ev-

continued on p. 10

Upcoming Fine Arts Events:

Thursday, September 26, 8 pm, Faculty recital in the Music Hall.

Friday, October 4, 8 pm, Senior Recital in the Music Hall.

Thursday, October 10, 8 pm, Student recital in the Music Hall.

Art Gallery Exhibit for October:

Regional Artists present "Tennessee Landscapes."

*Sept. 26 - Mr. Robert Cogswell, Term. Arts Commission.

Issues in Public Funding of the Arts

*Oct. 3 - Dr. Stephen Smith, Smith for Congress.

Government and the Environment: A Necessary Partnership

*Oct. 31 - Dr. Charles Hamilton, University of Term. Professor of Public Health. U.S. Health Care: Finding Balance in a Pluralist System

*Nov. 7 - Ms. Bee DeSelm, Knoxville City Council.

The Proper Role of Government Through the Eyes of a Commissioner

*Nov. 21 - Attorney "Buzz" Thomas, National Council of Churches. Church and State: Conflict or Partnership

Beason Underway

by Rissa Miller
Reporter

The goal of the MC 2000 plan is for 80 percent of Maryville College students to live on campus. Slowly, this dream is becoming a realization. This year 70 percent of MC's full time students live on campus, the largest number yet. The problem, however, is housing. The answer is coming in the form of Beason Residence Village.

The site designated for the forthcoming Beason Residence Village is the present location of the school's tennis courts. The campus will be without courts for approximately three to four months while construction is underway. Three new courts will be built, however, with plans for building three more at a later date. The tennis courts will be relocated behind Crawford House onto the soccer practice field. Not only will the Village be placed on the courts, but one of the units is also being built on the buried foundations of Memorial Hall, an old Maryville dorm.

The Village will be made up of five separate structures. Each one will consist of two six-person and four four-person apartments. The six-person apartments will be located on each end of the buildings, and the four-person suites will be in the middle. The exterior of each complex will look similar Carnegie Hall.

The four-person apartments will share an entrance continued on p. 9

Student Senate 1996-97

Senate President
Jason Thompson
Senate Vice President
Adam Ray
Senate Secretary
Sherrie Brents
Senate Treasurer
Sarah Knisley
Senate Parliamentarian
Andrew Johnson
Senate Chief Justice
David Wagner
Senior President
Kerri O'Keefe
Senior Vice President
Adam Ray
Senior Secretary/Treasurer
Grace King
Senior Senator
Jon Davis
Senior Senator
Mark Hatfield
Junior President
Staci Kerr
Junior Vice President
Lori Leffel

Junior Secretary/Treasurer
Whitney Nations
Junior Senator
Jarred Younger
Junior Senator
Emily Brock
Sophomore President
Ryan Stewart
Sophomore Vice Pres.
Jennifer Windrow
Sophomore
SecTreasurer
Erin Palmer
Sophomore Senator
Joel Campbell
Sophomore Senator
Joy Bailey
Freshman President
Holly Grigsby
Freshman Vice Pres.
Brian Gossett
Freshman Sec/Treas.
Sabrina Damrow
Freshman Senator
Nathan Anderson
Freshman Senator

Smith Jean Phillip
Commuter Senator
Matt Webb
Commuter Senator
Yosef Addis
Commuter Senator
Amanda McCarter
Pearson's Senator
Eric Obermiller
Carnegie's Senator
Matt Wilks
Lloyd's Senator
Nicole Brabender
Copeland's Senator
Brian Hastings
Gamble's Senator
Brian Gossett
Davis' Senator
Sara Baker
During the Thursday, September 19, meeting, your senators voted to accept the charter of the pre-med society, which marked the first vote of the 1996-1997 school year.

Cable, Internet in Your Room

by Patrick Leslie
Technical Editor

The work of Dr. William Seymour, vice president of student development, and others such as Brenda Binder, director of telephone services, has paid off. Seymour's prediction of having cable television in all residence halls came true over the summer as InterMedia, a local cable provider, wired the residence halls giving students access to 52 cable channels at the rate of $35 per student.

In addition to this, Maryville College students also have access to the Internet in two new ways. First students now have full e-mail and Internet access from the computer lab. Second, every student, including commuters, can access the Internet via their own personal computers and MCI, whether they are in their rooms, on the road, or in their off-campus apartment.

Binder said that Intermedia "worked as quickly as possible" to get things up and running. She also said that there are no immediate plans to offer access to premium cable channels.

There have been only a few minor problems, and Binder said that Intermedia's "response is excellent."

Binder also said that some older television sets might not be able to hook up. If students who have a newer TV set has problems, she should try programming the channels before giving up. Problems should, however, be reported as soon as possible because a problem in one room might effect others.

Equally exciting is the MCI Internet package. A MC students can get 60 hours of Internet time for $14 a month. The package offers sub-

Clinic: New Alternative to ER

by Sarah Christians
Reporter

Now, when they wake up with the flu or another dread disease, or sprain an ankle rushing to class, MC students do not have to waste precious time and dollars at the emergency room or Park Med.

The MC clinic is now open and functioning in the basement of Carnegie Hall. The Clinic is open from 9 a.m. until 2:30 p.m., Monday through Friday, with thirty minutes set aside for lunch at an unspecified time. The nurse coordinator on staff is Cydna Savage, R.N., and the doctor is Russell Gibson, M.D. On Wednesday, Kim McCoy, R.N. will be the nurse on staff. The clinic was opened "To provide students the savings of not having to go off campus for health care," said Savage.

All services that can be performed on site in the clinic are free of charge to students, faculty, and staff. These services include examinations and consultations by both the nurse and physician along with referrals. A general wellness fee for these services was added to each student's activity fee. Services that cannot be provided on site, such as labwork, will carry a fee. Students should feel free to consult Savage or McCoy with any health and wellness questions.

If the nurse on staff deems it necessary for the student to be examined by a physician, he will then make an appointment with Dr. Russell Gibson, M.D., who will call on campus. Appointments with Gibson are usually scheduled late in the afternoon after the clinic has closed, around 4 p.m. These appointments are made to accommodate Gibson's private practice schedule. "There's a possibility that hours will be extended at some time," said Savage.

The Clinic is available for all students, faculty, and staff questions or concerns. Health promotion is the main goal of the clinic and its coordinator, Carolyn Morton. The clinic is equipped to treat a number of health problems such as asthma, diabetes, and seizure disorders and medical conditions. The nurse on staff will also answer any questions students may have about their health or wellness.

Fighting Scots off to slow start

by Chris Stephens
Associate Editor

With so many returning starters and key reserves back from last years 5-5 squad, a 0-2 start was not what the Fighting Scots football team had in mind. After a season opening loss at North Greenville and a home opener loss to the Davidson Wildcats, a 0-2 start is what they had.

Head Coach Phil Wilks is not ready to panic yet. "We just need to continue to play well," said Wilks. "I am not real worried about this team coming around. We have too many good players not to. We just need to eliminate the turnovers on offense and stop allowing the big plays on defense."

After losing in Greer, South Carolina to NAIA Division II North Greenville by the score of 55-7, the Scots returned home in search of their first win against Davidson College, a team they had beat the previous two years.

"Coming out of the loss [at North Greenville] you don't want to go 0-2," said Wilks. "We played pretty equal with them [Davidson]. I don't think they are a better team. They just played better on that day."

The game saw the Wildcats jump out to a 10-0 half time lead and then extended that to 17-0,

Hey Nathan! Junior quarterback Brandon Derrick lets a pass go against Davidson College. The Scots fell 24-14 in their home opener.

Photo by Dave Downs

Photo by Dave Downs

Give him six! Senior Tailback Armand Akiboh tries to break free from defenders against Davidson onepossession into the second half.

The Scots then responded with two touchdowns of their own but would get no closer than 17-14. Davidson added a late touchdown to provide the difference. The final was 24-14.

"I still think we are playing good football inbetween the turnovers and the big plays," said Wilks. "We just need to avoid the mental lapses and do the things that we can control. We need to make sure each person is doing their responsibility."

Some highlights that Wilks pointed out from the loss were the running of Senior Armand Akiboh, who was named Offensive Player of the Week, and Junior Ben Petty, who was named Defensive Player of the Game. Petty came up with 10 takes, a sack, and a fumble recovery.

Two other standouts for the Scots over their first two games have been the play of their two Pre-Season All-American's. Junior Flanker Nathan Davenport has come up with 16 catches after the first two games, while Junior Linebacker Jayson Lay came up with 18 tackles in the loss to Davidson.

The coming weeks will be "an uphill fight" for the Scots, according to Wilks.

After a September 21 matchup with Kentucky Wesleyan at home, the Scots will then complete their three game home stand with rival Sewanee this Saturday on September 28.

The Scots last played Kentucky Wesleyan, another NAIA Division II school in 1994, with the Scots winning with the score of 39-28.

The Scots were able to get on track this past weekend against the visiting Panthers.

The Scots jumped out on top to an early 7-0 lead and were able to hold on by the score of 30-25.

The Scots were up 24-7 at the break on the strenght of another great day from Davenport who scored back to back touchdowns on a reception and a punt return.

Kentucky Wesleyan staged a late rally, but were unable to put the ball in the endzone as time ran off the clock.

The Scots seemed to have the game in hand late in the game when senior Vance Kirby picked up a fumble and returned it down the field. Kirby was tracked down before he could get into the endzone, but did give the Scots the football back.

Akiboh had another solid game, rushing for 130 yards on 24 carries and two touchdowns.

Men's soccer begins season

by Paul Sacksteder
Sports Writer

After a 3-2 start, the Fighting Scots soccer team look for the next two weeks to be critical for their hopes of making the NCAA tournament.

The Scots have games coming up against Roanoke College and Eastern Mennonite, teams that are both in the top ten in the southern regional conference. They will then face number two ranked Methodist on Oct. 6.

Injuries have plagued the team over their first few games. Starters Chris Reid, Danny Evans, Jody Tootle, and Lyle Lassiter have all been in and out of the line-up for the first few games of the season.

Consequently the team lost two out of their first three games.

"In both the losses, we thought we were the better team," said Coach Pepe Fernandez. "We had plenty of good opportunities, but those two games just got away."

One of the losses placed the Scots up against Beloit, a team from Wisconsin. MC went on to win the game 5-0. Their other two victories came against Salisbury and Savannah College.

"We expected a victory against Beloit, but Salisbury is a good team and it was a good victory," Fernandez said.

The Scots have a very strong senior led by Chris Reid class returning this year.

Reid put his name in the MC record books this season by taking the all-time points record (goals and assists combined) with 121 points. "It's a good accomplishment," said Reid, "but I'd rather get into the national championship. If the team comes together, everything will fall in place."

Combined, the soccer players have kicked a total of 17 goals. Senior Jody Tootle leads the team with eight goals, and Reid has five for the season. Sophomore Nick Cherney has scored three.

"Goaltending is also a strong point for us this season," said Fernandez. "We've always have had a tradition of good goalkeeping, and Randy Bradley and Devin Koester are no exception." Although Bradley and Koester split time as goalie Fernandez considers Bradley the starter.

The next home games for the Scots are against Lynchburg College on Sept. 28 and then against Methodist on Oct. 6.

Olympic Trainers

by Paul Sacksteder
Sports Writer

Maryville College had its own delegation at this summer's Centennial Olympic Games in Atlanta. Missy Suder and Sharon Wood, MC's athletic trainers, attended the Olympiad as trainers this summer.

When the announcement first came that the Olympics would be held in Atlanta this summer, Wood was immediately interested in going, but she had no idea how to go about it. In 1994 she attended a national convention for trainers, and it was there where she picked up applications for working at the Olympics. In August of 1995, Wood and Suder attended the preliminary equestrian competition. Attending this event opened a door, for them to get positions in Atlanta.

"It was basically a two year process," said Wood. "You really had to know somebody. There was a lot of politics involved."

They attended some sessions which prepared them for what was to come in Atlanta. Wood was assigned to the team handball practice venue, and Suder was assigned to the kayaking practice and competition venue.

Wood enjoyed working with the handball teams although it was not a sport she had ever actually seen played before. "I was impressed with the athleticism of the athletes. Many of the athletes used to compete in other sports and used handball as a way to extend their athletic career," said Wood.

By attending the Olympics, Wood and Suder were able to meet trainers from all over the world. The language barrier made some things about the job difficult. Also some countries had special restrictions prohibiting trainers from specific countries from actually touching their athletes. Wood had a situation in which one of the French handball team members passed out during the middle of a workout. There a no-touch restriction on her, but Wood was forced to violate this because it was a possible life threatening situation.

"The rules were mind-boggling. There were tons of forms they required us to fill out," Wood said.

Suder had a very interesting time at the kayaking events. "It really didn't seem like the Olympics," she said. "The athletes didn't seem to be overly nervous. They just acted like it was another competition. The only time you really knew it was the Olympics was at the presentation of the medals."

Suder said one of the more interesting situations during a competition when a Bosnian crashed his kayak. He did not have a replacement boat so Scott Shipley, one of the medal contenders for the event, generously allowed the Bosnian to use one of his kayaks.

"It was really neat being there and experiencing it all," said Suder.

This summer Wood will go to the U.S. training facilities in Colorado to go through some more training. This extra training will perhaps allow Wood to travel with the U.S. team again. "I wouldn't mind going to Australia in 2000," Wood said.

Lady Scots host Tourney

by Joe Malheiro
Sports Writer

The 1996 Lady Scots Volleyball team is off to a solid start, posting a 2-3 record through their first five matches.

Lady Scots Coach Kandis Schram is excited about her team's potential but voiced concern about their current style of play. "Right now our team is too analytical. As soon as they finish thinking about the game, it's over," she said.

The team won their match on October 17 against Union, a game in which Junior Mandi Dollenmayer made a huge impact. "Mandi played very well against Union," said Schram, "and the team played together, which allowed her to focus on her position."

Schram is also excited about the size of this year's team, which features 17 players. This year's varsity captains are Senior Ginger Nations and Junior Brandi Wilson. Junior Amy Snider and Senior Joey Cody will also play a large role in the success of the Lady Scots during the 1996 season. Because of the large numbers on this year's squad, Schram has arranged several JV games, including a match against Johnson Bible College at home on September 26.

An MC Invitational is planned for this coming weekend, and will feature teams are MC, Randolph Macon, Averett, Mississippi College, and Westminster.

Changing with the times and surroundings

by Chris Stephens
Associate Editor

I guess the transformations is complete. Four years ago I came here from "The North." I now finally understand that if you want to write a column and have people read it you have to write, at least this week, about the University of Tennessee and Florida football game. I have seen a lot in my short life, but I have never seen people bleed orange like they do here.

My understanding of the importance of the game may have not been realized until I was at football practice and I over heard a player plotting how to make our own game go a little faster so he could get back to watch the Vols game. I guess with the weight the game will carry Saturday it is understandable how minds will wonder away from the task at hand. Now that Saturday has come to pass, I am just glad the Scots were able to focus on their own football game long enough to pull one out.

My prediction for the game will not be in here, mostly because I could care less, but also because I want people to finish reading. And of course because by the time this paper comes out the game will be over and they will either still be partying on Cumberland Avenue or asking for someone's resignation.

I can only now say that I hope a few people remembered to come out to the Scots game against Kentucky Wesleyan that very same day. And now that the game is over I can say they did they did, and even put up with the rain so thank you.

While I am still speaking about this great state, let me mention the poor old Vanderbilt Commodores. They have got to be one of the best 0-3 football teams around. The night they outplayed the boys from South Bend was very enjoyable, even for me, and the fake punt against Alabama was a classi.

As many of you readers will notice I have moved on from the Movie Review, since I have decided to try and get out of here a semester early, but will still be trying to keep up with all of the sports on campus for one more semester.

I bring this up for a very important point. I am just one person and want you to let me know if there is anything I can put on these pages for you. If you made it down to Atlanta this summer and have a great story to tell let me know. If you are a member of the Equestrian team, or anything, I would love to hear from you. And for those of you who were wondering, there is still a girls soccer team here on campus and they will be featured in the next issue I promise.

Also look for a feature on the four Maryville baseball players that took their talents over seas as well as the continued construction going on in the Cooper Athletic Center.

As my last semester here I am looking forward to another great year of athletics here at MC.

Now that my 500 words or less are up, I just want to wish everybody good luck this fall on and off the field and again remind you that these sports pages are for me to fill about you, so give me a call with any story ideas, concerns, or complaints at x8313.

Uncle Sam Wants
YOU to Read the Echo !!

GUESS WHAT ADDRESS HAS A TRUCK LOAD OF JOB OPPORTUNITIES?

<http://www.ups.com>

When it comes to great job opportunities, UPS delivers! To make your job search easier, UPS lists employment opportunities online. Visit our site on CareerBuilder® today and you could have a terrific job tomorrow. Just imagine, with the click of a mouse, you could find a job that provides you with a flexible schedule and outstanding pay!

If you'd like to learn more about UPS employment opportunities, visit our website at: <http://www.ups.com> or call 1-888-WORK-UPS

An EOE, M/F/D/V

MC Growth continued from p. 1

Mrs. Brahms is pleased with its progress. From the time when she attended MC to the present day, it remains the same "unique place, unique atmosphere" that has come to be a part of her. When asked if the growth might take away from that atmosphere, Brahms firmly answered, "No, I still witness a caring faculty and staff."

Jason Thompson, student senate president, directed his remarks to the freshmen class. Thompson told the freshmen that they were bringing a variety of experience and diversity to the campus. He stressed that their addition to Maryville is a positive change. Thompson also reminded the freshmen that MC would need their help in order to achieve the level of enthusiasm and participation that is needed. In the end, the student senate President personally thanked the Class of 2000, "Thank you for your time, all you have done and all you will do."

Faculty and upper-classmen are very aware of the changes at MC. Senior Allison Pryor has taken notice of the freshmen class and the effects it has on the campus. Pryor is excited about watching MC grow and said, "It is very exciting to see new faces and facilities."

Jaclyn Lang, a junior, said, "It is great to see so many freshmen coming in. They are going to have the experience that will last them a lifetime, and they get to do it at a great school."

Maryville started with an enrollment of five students. More than a century and a half later MC is continuing to grow and become a permanent part of its students.

Dr. Dean Bolden, vice president of academic affairs, said that as long as MC "grows slowly and carefully," it will avoid any "growing pains" and benefit from the new resources and outlooks that an expanding community will provide.

Appuhn continued from p. 2

courage school spirit. "I am a little bit of a ham sometimes," said Appuhn. "A mascot can be a lot of fun."

Appuhn, a fan of women's and men's basketball, used to scrimmage the teams at the other colleges, in which he has been employed. He hopes that MC faculty and staff will have an intramural team.

and be with people, but he spends much of his time working and traveling to see his sons.

Also, he has worked with student governments before and would be interested in helping MC's student senate.

According to Appuhn, "I will be as active with the students and the staff as they will let me be."

Hutchens continued from p. 14

thing to do. It means recruiting. I don't think I've been terribly successful so far. Maryville College is not famous in other countries, so students there don't understand that Maryville College is a good school. I emphasize the good teaching here, the safety, friendliness, the natural beauty, and the college's reputation. It has a good reputation, although it's not famous.

Q. How would you improve your career?

A. Most of the things I want to improve are in myself. I like my job very much. I like MC.

Beason Village continued from p. 5

way in the front of each unit. The suites will be one level on either the ground level or the second floor. They will have two double rooms, a kitchen, a bathroom, a dining area, and a living room. The living room will be furnished with a love seat, an easy chair, and an end table. The dining area will have a dinette and four chairs. The present plan has designed the rooms for the use of lofts, similar to the structure of the rooms in Carnegie.

The six-person apartments will be two-story. Each one will have its own entrance rather than the shared entry area of the four-person suites. It will have six single rooms, a kitchen, two bathrooms, a dining area, and a living room. It will be set up with two bedrooms, the living room, kitchen, dining area, and one bathroom on the first floor; the remaining four bedrooms and bathroom will be located on the second floor. These apartments will have the same furnishings as the four-person suites.

The plan has these buildings wired into the college's computer network in hopes of eventually tying the rooms into the system. These halls will be heated by gas rather than by the school's steam plant. The laundry facilities will be found in the basement of one of the first three units. Two of the four-person apartments will have wheel chair accessibility. All of the rooms will have Braille for the blind and special alarms for the deaf.

Although the plans include these features, making them a reality will depend upon which contractor is hired. Presently, the goal is to hire the general contractor by the first week of October. The date set to begin opening of bids is the middle of October. Once the bids return, a contractor will be hired and the

cont. from p. 3

President of First National Bank of Knoxville; Bo Townsend, Executive Director of Ijams Nature Center; Dr. Harold Black; James S. Smith, Jr., Professor of Financial Institutions and Head of Department of Finance at the University of Tennessee; Lew Weems, President of First Tennessee Bank; Alex "Bo" Shafer, President of Shafer Insurance Agency; Ken Youngblood, President of Maryville Region First Tennessee Bank; Charles Tombras, President and CEO of The Tombras Group; Jennifer Brown, City Manager of Rockford, TN; James S. Smith, Jr., Chairman of the Board, First American Bank; and Harwell Proffitt, former CEO of Proffitt's.

The Highland Echo . . .
your student newspaper.

Community Forum continued from p.4

harmful." However, he was careful to note that if everything on the Internet or in bookstores and libraries has to be safe for children like Daniel Robinson, then what about 49 year old Bill Robinson.

Using the government's recent Internet law, Robinson said that the government had overstepped its bounds violating the first amendment. In the past the government has gone as far as to censor material through the United States Postal Service. He said, "The proper role of government is to make society more stable and where are able to flourish . . . [however] government builds on moral opinion. It does not create it. Not everything that is morally right should be a legal duty."

He used an anonymous friend who is a Tennessee legislator to prove his point. In a conversation with him, his friend admitted that he voted for the recent censorship law knowing that it was unconstitutional because he had to be re-elected. It was what the people wanted. He went on to confess that it would not fall on his shoulders, but on a federal judge's shoulders who would throw the law out.

The MC sponsored community forum is a series of lectures held on Thursdays at 11:00 a.m. The topic for the fall of 1996 is the proper role of government.

Internet continued from p.5

ever, be reported as soon as possible because a problem in one room might effect others.

Equally exciting is the MCI Internet package. A MC students can get 60 hours of Internet time for $14 a month. The package offers substantial savings over other services and can be kept after graduation. There are also other advantages to using the MCI system on your personal computer is such as he ability to receive voice mail while on-line.

There are a few things to keep in mind when using the service through your room. You have to dial nine, not eight, to dial out to get on-line.

With this service, students, both on and off campus, have the ability to send e-mail to the on-campus e-mail system.

To help reduce the strain to the system Binder has installed additional equipment to help keep the lines free. Phone traffic on campus has been high with the peak hours being mid-afternoon through early morning. On some nights there have been as many as 37,000 calls per six hour period.

This has made it difficult for anyone from the outside to reach someone on campus. Students who opt to use the MCI Internet service will be helping to alleviate the problem because they will be dialing out on a separate line, thus freeing up lines for incoming calls.

To sign up with MCI call 1-888-761-8547. This is one of the new 800 numbers and is toll free, and a one time sign on fee of $10 will be added to your first months bill. There will be a 95 cent charge for every hour over 60 that you use. For Internet technical support students should contact MCI, or call Brenda if you are having problems getting hold of them. Students should report all cable problems to Brenda.

"To be social means to be forgiving."

-Dr. Harry Howard, division chair of social sciences

Aladdin continued from p.1

deposit any amount of money up to $100, and we'll add 5% to it; or they can deposit over $100, and we'll add 10%. This declining-balance account can be used to purchase anything."

However, students may not want to automatically

Phone-A-Thon continued from p. 3

talk to nice Maryville College alumni, people who hang up on you, and people who yell first and then hang up on you? I love the Phon-A-Thon."

This year the fundraising drive will begin on October 21 and will continue through November 14. Times for the Phon-A-Thon will be weeknights from 6:30-9:00 p.m. The one exception to the schedule will be the night that organizers have termed "midnight bypass the cafeteria. Since Aladdin took over, there is a greater variety of food offered in Pearsons, including pizza that is served daily. "We adjust the food to satisfy the students," Cassidy said. "We've tinkered with the pizza crust and sauce, as well as other madness," which will occur from 10 pm until midnight for the purpose of contacting alumni on the west coast. In addition, on November 11 and 12, local MC alumni will be working along with the student volunteers.

For more information on how to become involved with the MC Phon-A-Thon, contact Beckie Heckler at x8309 or Michelle Harris at x8202.

things."

New features are also in the works for the cafeteria. Among these changes are signs to hang over the food bars, which are coming soon.

Homecoming continued from p.13

ticipation.

The week's finale is scheduled for Saturday. Activities will begin at 12:30 p.m. with the Homecoming Parade, which will begin at Carnegie Hall and end at Honaker Field. Float judging will take place before the parade. This year, the parade will include the Homecoming Court, staff, faculty, students, and alumni. The football game, Scots versus the Centre College Colonels, will begin at 1:30 p.m. on Honaker Field. The half-time presentation will include members of the Scots football team that won the Tangerine Bowl, now the Citrus Bowl. The Homecoming Dance begins at 9

Student reaction to Aladdin has been overwhelmingly positive. "I love it," said Junior Amethyst Schott. "The new bar is great."

"The cafeteria is fine, and I really enjoy it," said Freshman Michael Danzey. "Isaac's is a nice place to hang out, and it's like a luxury to the cafeteria."

Student Travel Experts

EXCLUSIVE AIRFARES FOR STUDENTS
SPECIAL AIRFARES FOR FACULTY & STAFF
STUDENT & BUDGET TOURS
INTERNATIONAL STUDENT ID CARDS
TRAVEL GEAR & GUIDEBOOKS
WORK ABROAD PROGRAMS
HOSTEL CARDS
EXPERT TRAVEL ADVICE

Council Travel

1641 CUMBERLAND AVENUE • KNOXVILLE, TN 37916

523-9900

<http://www.ciee.org/travel.htm>

EURAILPASSES ISSUED ON-THE-SPOT!

Students, staff, and faculty, please share with the rest of the Maryville College community your visual art and/or creative writing. The art and literary page is one of the new additions to your newspaper. (Impressions, the MC literary magazine, is separate from the Echo's art and literary page, but you are encouraged to contribute to both.) Please mail your submissions to box 2247.

On Fishing and Love

Sometimes love is like fishing though it's really hard to see, but trust me now, as I lay out this strange analogy.

Let's say you've fished all morning and you haven't had a bite
You could sleep the afternoon away and catch a good one late that night.

Or perhaps upon your first cast,
you hook a trophy prize,
but he breaks your line and gets away before you realize.

Or let's say you're near the limit, you've enough to fill a sack;
If you hook a really good one,
you could turn another back.

So you see, love is like fishing,
'cause each and every day,
the prize that you've been looking for may be one more cast away.

Becky Lill
Junior

Friends Not Seen

Face to Face, it has yet to be even still, there's something here between you and me.
Relationships over the airways, a window to the soul, and though we haven't met, we seem to chase similar goals.

Your inner beauty, that's all that I know but that's all that it takes to give my day a necessary flow.
I cannot speak for what you feel, but I can certainly say whatever the feelings they must be real.

Who knows what this unique union will bring,

Whatever it may be,
chances are it will be a beautiful thing.
I sit sometimes, I'm thinking of you, and as I sit, I wonder, do you do the same thing too.

I'm so glad that I've met you,
just a little twist of fate,

I must say however, I have the feeling we've started something great.

Face to Face, it has yet to be even still, there's something here between you and me.

Joe Malheiro
Junior

Impressions

•meetings: 3 to 3:30 p.m. on Mondays in the faculty lounge in the second floor of Fayerweather;

•The deadline for submissions is December 5, but they may be sent at any time to box 2612;

•Staff: Sarah Stevenson - editor
Jeanna Beck - assistant editor
Traci Tidwell - fiction editor
Sara Baker - poetry editor
Kathryn McDonald - ass't editor
Rachel Roe - business manager
Paul Weaver - graphics & layout

Eve's Second Coming

With your serpentine smile and candlelight illusions
You led me into your inner room
(I'd like to be able to say I was ignorant and tempted.)
But I knew what I was doing even before I ate the fruit.

Oh sure, it was fun for awhile.
But when the sheets were untangled and the core thrown away,
I'd had enough, thank you very much.

Since there's nothing I can really do to you,
I think I'll go find someone who doesn't know he's naked
And teach him a lesson.

Sarah Stevenson
Senior

I live forever,
I remind people of what you are and were.
I can make you a fool or I can make you dignified.

It makes no difference to me, it is purely your choice.

I can make people question your very nature if you use me wrong.

I am not your actions for it can make people doubt those too.

I am your words.
I live forever.

-Kim Schuenemann
senior 9/19/96

THE ELIE WIESEL PRIZE IN ETHICS 1997 ESSAY CONTEST

SUGGESTED THEMES

- ◆ DISCUSS ETHICS BASED ON A PERSONAL EXPERIENCE
- ◆ WHY ARE WE HERE? HOW ARE WE TO MEET OUR ETHICAL OBLIGATIONS?
- ◆ REFLECT ON AN ETHICAL ASPECT OF A LITERARY TEXT

ELIGIBILITY: FULL-TIME JUNIOR AND SENIOR UNDERGRADUATES

DEADLINE: JANUARY 17, 1997

No more than three (3) essays from the same college, university or campus will be considered in any one contest year. Essays must be submitted by a college or university on behalf of its students.

FIRST PRIZE: $5,000 SECOND PRIZE: $2,500

THIRD PRIZE: $1,500

TWO HONORABLE MENTIONS: $500 EACH

For entry forms and further information, please send a self-addressed, stamped envelope by December 20, 1996 to:

The Elie Wiesel Foundation for Humanity
1177 Avenue of the Americas, 36th Floor
New York, NY 10036

Disciplinary Review Board Report

- 8/29 One student was charged with alcohol policy violations in Carnegie Hall, and the case is pending.
- 8/31 Five students were charged with alcohol policy violations in Carnegie. Four students received a first offense sentence, and one student received a judicial board hearing.
- 9/1 One MC student and one person who is not a MC student were both charged with violating the visitation policy in Gamble. The offenders received a warning.
- 9/3 Two students were charged with violating the visitation policy in Gamble. The offenders received a warning.
- 9/14 Two MC students and two non - MC students were charged with violating the alcohol policy and disorderly conduct in Lloyd. The case is pending.
- 9/14 One student was charged with violating the alcohol policy in Gamble. The case is pending.

CAREER SERVICES PART-TIME JOB
ANNOUNCEMENTS
COME BY CAREER SERVICES TO APPLY.
PLEASE REFERENCE THE JOB NUMBER YOU ARE INQUIRING ABOUT.

JOB 80 - Cashier/Deli. $5.00-up d.o.e. Convenience store-WALKING DISTANCE. 20 hrs. week. Very flex. Evenings/some weekend mornings. Start ASAP. Must be dependable.

JOB 81 - Marketing. Salary d.o.e. WALKING DISTANCE. Industrial Equipment Technologies. Make telephone calls, set up appointments. Business major helpful. Flex schedule 10-20 hrs/week.

JOB 78 - Car Rental Agent. $5.00/hr. Four days a week. Some weekends. Hours are 2p.m.-10p.m. with some flexibility. Located at the airport. Must have driver's license and social security card.

JOB 77 - Retail Management, 3rd key position. Above min. wage -d.o.e. Foothills Mall location. Schedule varies and is flexible. Involves customer service, open and close store; stock; do night deposits.

JOB 76 - Catalog Sales/Gift Wrap. Min. Wage. Foothills Mall Location. Includes taking payments and answering phone. Schedule varies, mostly evenings and weekends. Flex. Start Oct. 1.

JOB 75 - Cashier. $5.50/

hr. Evenings and weekends 20/ hr. week. Flex. Local convenience store.

JOB 74 - Federal Express Casual Handler. $6.98/hr. plus tuition reimbursement. Mon.-Fri. 6a.m.-8a.m. and/or 7p.m.-9p.m. Some Saturdays; 10-13 hrs./week. Load and unload trucks at Knoxville location or airplanes at McGhee Tyson Airport. 20-30 openings. Three hour application session will be held on campus Tuesday evening, Oct. 8. Come to Career Services to sign up or call 8220.

JOB 73 - Child Care. $5.00/hr. As needed, mostly evenings on weekdays and some weekends. Twice a month for 4-5 hrs. Sit with boy age 5 and girl age 9. Fix snack; supervise bedtime.

JOB 72 - Yard Worker. $7.00/hr. Move azaleas, etc. Across from Maryville High School stadium on Broadway.

JOB 71 - Child Care. $4-$5/hr. Occasional daytime (vice/month). Sit with three kids ages 4-1/2, 2 and 5 weeks.

JOB 70 - Yard Worker. $5-$6/hr. Need dependable person to do some yard work on flex schedule. Located in Royal Oaks.

JOB 69 - Patient Accounts. $5.43/hr. 20 hrs./week. 9a.m.-2p.m. Look up information on microfilm, print, copy, do research, sort/distribute microfilm.

JOB 68 - Health System positions. Transporter; patient support associate; office assistant; mail clerk; pharmacy tech; patient sitter; file clerk; computer oper.; med. transcriptionist

JOB 67 - Bank Jobs - Teller trainee, encoder, and operations clerk positions with First American Bank, Knoxville. Schedules vary.

JOB 66 - Greeter. Assist with service of guests in full service restaurant.

JOB 65 - Local School Custodian. $5.40/hr. Monday-Friday 5:30-10:30 p.m. or 6p.m.-11p.m. (fairly flexible). 20 hrs./week. Two positions available. General custodial cleaning. Need to have good moral character.

JOB 64 - Relief Night Auditor. $5.00/hr. Two nights/week 11p.m.-7a.m. and weekends. Start immediately. Need good math skills.

JOB 63 - Package Handler - $6.00-$6.50, tuition assistance; raise after 90 days; opportunity for advancement; no weekends. Shifts available are 6p.m.-10p.m. Mon.-Fri. and 3a.m.-7a.m. Mon.-Fri. Must be able to handle manual labor responsibilities.

JOB 62 - Night Manager. Compensation consists of full room and board. Responsibilities include being at the house during late evening; maintaining open with residents and staff; perform specific duties in nightly checklist; promote communal living and be positive role model for ex-offenders.

JOB 60 - Bank Teller. $6.50/hr. Good math skills.

JOB 58 - Bank positions. $5.00-$5.60. Proof operator; corrections clerk; cash letter clerk; extractor clerk. Shifts and duties vary. All require 10-key skills.

JOB 57 - Child Care. $5.00 at least depending on if willing to do extra. Keep 8-month old girl. Mon, Wed, Fri afternoon, evenings. Some weekends. Louisville area.

JOB 56 - Vehicle Attendant. - $6.50/hr. Afternoons - flexible. Some Saturdays.

Move cars on lot, clean up. MUST BE 21 and have good driving record.

JOB 55 - Fitness Center Staff. $5.00/hr. start. Work afternoons; some weekends - up to 20 hrs. Walking distance. Involves servicing members, cleaning. Fitness knowledge preferred.

JOB 54 - PBX Operator - Knoxville Utilities Board. $5.50/hr. 8 hrs on Sat. and Sun. Rotate shifts, 7a.m.-3p.m.; 3-11p.m. and 11p.m.-7a.m. Take customer calls. Prefer phone experience. 2-3 openings.

JOB 17 - Kennel Worker/Technician. $4.75/hr. 20-40 hrs/week. Work with animals at local vet clinic; assist during treatment, feed, clean. Great opportunity for pre-vet or biology student.

JOB 16 - Asst. Veterinary Receptionist. $4.75/hr. Mon.-Fri. 4-6p.m. Clerical and receptionist duties.

JOB - 1 Freight Handler/Fork lift operator. $8.00-up d.o.e. Varied hours available. Opportunity for advancement. Located in Knoxville.

Rich Traditions Reaffirmed at Convocation

by Sarah Christians
Reporter

Almost 80 years ago, an issue of this same publication left the presses and was delivered into the hands of Maryville College students. MC was 101 years old and already steeped in tradition. We at MC now, the classes of '97, '98, '99, and 2000, are probably very different from the class of 1918.

In that issue of the Highland Echo, the editors listed the names of the students who had gone to fight in World War I. Headlines referred to an editorial on the "Negro problem", and the back page listed "amusements" involving episodes of "The Keystone Kops." That is a far cry from the articles on a new alcohol policy, a new residence complex, and fund raising via Phon-A-Thon. We do, however, have one thing in common with those students—Convocation.

For the 177th year, as in previous years, the faculty and staff entered in full academic regalia behind the piper and Dr. Robert Ramger, professor of biology, who was the mace bearer. Dr. Susan Schneibel, chair of the division of humanities, gave the welcome. In her speech, Schneibel noted that many of the class of 2000 probably felt "overwhelmed, [and] bewildered...about changes." That same class of 2000 is the largest freshman class ever to attend MC, breaking the record set in post-war 1949. In his speech, which was enhanced by a slide show, Dr. Gerald Gibson, MC president, spoke of members of the class of 1929. Gibson said that today's students are "not just passing through, but making history."

All MC students know that the word convocation means "a calling together," but, in this case, Fall Convocation called together the past and the future. Not only is the formal beginning of the academic year a time of study and achievement, but it is also the beginning of a new stage of life for many people. Convocation is a time "to celebrate and reconfirm the values on which the academy stands," said Schneibel. She challenged the new class of

Photo by Dave Downs

2000 to think, learn, and grow. Schneibel implored the assembled students to "try to meet those challenges with courage."

"You have heard the bagpiper," said Gibson. Those pipes that always start fall convocation are just as much a part of the Maryville College experience as is Mountain Challenge or Literature 270. Considering Maryville College's long history, convocation not only creates a focal point for reference, but it allows students to watch history being made. "What is a convocation and what does it have to do with me?" said Schneibel. Convocation this year initiated the largest freshman class in the history of the college. It was the first event instilling the life-long love of learning that is paramount in shaping a life. As the nostalgically charged convocation illustrated, MC is so much more than just an institution founded on respect for the liberal arts that attempts to instill aesthetic taste and sound judgment in its students. MC is a community and a home that shapes lives. Gibson's remarks clearly illustrated the profound affect of MC on many lives, most from a 1929 issue of the Chilhowean. Among the photos were Algie Sutton, an alumnus for whom the Sutton Science Center is named. "We are connected to the old names in yearbooks," said

Gibson.

While at MC, students learn not only facts, but a love of learning that lasts a lifetime. Convocation is an important time for beginning that love of learning and first looking with a sense of wonder at the world, since the world right then is bagpipes and colors and robes.

The Fall Convocation of 1996 was different than each convocation before, yet distinctly following in an old and wise tradition. Concluding his speech, Gibson said, "[We] have all heard the echoes of the origins of Maryville College.

May God bless you as you make history in this new year." It is up to this year's student body to make its own mark. As a poster read, "It doesn't matter who has gone before, or who will be there after. It is knowing you have been there, and that is enough." This year, the MC community will be distinct from all others before and after it. Convocation was only the beginning of a promising year.

Homecoming Week: Time to Celebrate MC

by Allison Watts
Reporter

The super-charged week that is known as Homecoming 1996 is coming up soon. With a theme of "Return to Sender," various activities have been planned for the entire week. The events run Monday, October 14, through Saturday, October 19.

Starting off the week is airball, which is a collection of various games played with a large inflated ball. Games will be played on the lawn behind the Center for Campus Ministry (CCM). In case of inclement weather, games will be played in Cooper Athletic Center.

On Tuesday, an on-campus scavenger hunt is planned.

The scheduled activity for Wednesday is a concert performance by Del Suggs. It will be conducted on the steps of Parsons Hall from 6-7:30 p.m.

Planned for Thursday is Anything Goes, which will be held in conjunction with Founder's Day. Games will begin soon after 6 p.m. Everyone is invited to participate.

For Friday, the scheduled event is Coffee House. It will take place in the lobby of Lloyd Hall and will begin at 9 p.m. Students wishing to perform in it may begin signing up in early October. All talent levels and all wishing to have fun are encouraged to sign up, because Coffee House is dependent on student participation.

The week's finale is scheduled for Saturday. Activities will begin at 12:30 p.m. with the Homecoming Parade, which will begin at Carnegie Hall and end at Honaker Field. Float judging will take place before the parade. This year, the parade will include the Homecoming Court, staff, faculty, students, and alumni. The football game, Scots versus the Centre College Colonels, will begin at 1:30 p.m. on Honaker continued on p. 10

A Candid Look Inside the International House

by Kazu Nakane and Kim Eun Jung
Reporters

On this campus at the Maryville College, the International House(I-house) must be a Mystery Zone for you. Then, why don't we explore the I-house? Let me be a guide for you.

Whenever you visit the I-house, you will meet many international students. They come from many countries, which are graphed below.

Many students can learn various cultures and you can too! It will be a good experience for you and for us too.

Furthermore, there are many teachers and staff members in the Center for English Language Learning (CELL) program. Among 25 people, some of them teach and some of them help us, such as Director Kelly Franklin, Assistant Director Robert Hutchens, Susan McFall, who is in charge of curriculum, Office Manager Marj Overstreet, Housing Coordinator Chris Lance, and so on. Every teacher is fascinating and they work hard, so we get along with them very well.

We attend classes five hours a day, from Monday to Friday. In the content class, we can choose any two classes we are interested in. For instance, movie, pronunciation, TOEFL(Test Of English as the Foreign Language) Preparation, rock climbing, business English, music, painting, etc.

We have a small class which has five to 10 students. Therefore, we can practice English much better with teacher and classmates.

We often have activities. For example, going shopping to Pigeon Forge and West Town Mall, hiking in the Smoky Mountains, going to the pool park, and attending many events, such as Country Fair and Booms Day. Our favorite trip is the rafting trip. Through these programs, we make many friends, and we strengthen our friendships.

The CELL program was made to prepare students to enter Maryville College mainly, and in fact, many people come here to prepare for it and go to MC or another college. However, many people came here just to study English, too. Some of them study it for their business, and others study for their experience in overseas.

The main purpose of the CELL program is to help students who want to enter MC prepare for it. Also, this program has advanced classes, and students in the academic classes can go to MC, either part time or full time, if they pass the Michigan Test.

Well, that is all for today's exploration. We hope you are more familiar with our program, and we encourage you to come to the I-house or Annex, which is located behind the library, and talk to us anytime. Some of us might be nervous about that, but we will be absolutely happy to talk with you.

Phon-A-Thon Time!

* raise money for MC's Annual Fund, which pays for expenses not covered by tuition

* receive pay for your efforts

* October 21 through November 14, 6:30-9 week nights

* for more information, call Beckie Heckler at x8309 or Michelle Harris at x8202

Show pride in your school by supporting the Annual Phon-A-Thon fund drive.

Q & A With Robert Hutchens, Assistant Director of CELL

by Sun-Im Ryu and Byoung-Joo Park
Reporters

Sun-Im Ryu and Byoung-Joo Park, two Center for English Language Learning (CELL) students, interviewed Robert Hutchens, Assistant Director of the Center for English Language Learning and Assistant International Student Adviser, on Monday, September 16.

Q. What do you do to bring students from other countries to here?

A. First of all, I participate in university fairs, in which representatives from many different schools travel together and meet in a major or capital city. The students who are interested in studying in the USA come to see all the different representatives. In foreign countries, I visit schools, high schools, colleges, and language schools. When I visit other countries, I also visit education centers like binational centers. For example, in Indonesia, there is AMINEF, which is the American and Indonesian Educational Foundation. Almost every country has these kinds of centers, which are educational advising centers. Students come there to get information about American schools. I try to make sure that I have information there like our school catalog, brochures, and things like that.

Q. What countries have you visited?

A. I have visited Indonesia, Malaysia, Hong Kong, Thailand, and Korea, and Mr. Franklin [director of CELL and director of international services] has often visited South America and will be going to the Middle East. Other teachers have visited South America.

Robert Hutchens

Q. How do you introduce Maryville College?

A. If we are talking about the language program, I talk about certain important points. I talk about the facts that we have been very highly rated, that the teachers have master's degrees, and that our language program has grown very quickly. If I talk about the college, I talk about the fact that the college has been ranked as one of the top ten liberal arts colleges in the South for the past two years. I talk about the cost of the language program, but I don't talk about the cost of Maryville College. I talk about the natural beauty of this area and how old the college is. The college, which is 177 years old, is one of the oldest in the USA.

Q. Do you use the Internet to attract students?

A. I do not, but Mr. Franklin does. There is a home page for MC.

Q. How do you like your job?

A. I love it, and I love to go to other countries.

Q. Why did you choose your job?

A. Well, actually, when I chose my job, it was not for recruiting. Recruiting is something that developed later. I chose my job as a teacher at the CELL because I like meeting people from other countries, and I like studying languages myself. I like students, especially, as well as teaching and visiting. If I had to choose, I would choose teaching, but I don't want to give up either.

Q. Do you have problems bringing in students?

A. It's not an easy

continued on p. 9

by Bo McMichael
Columnist

On "Independence Day," "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," "Jack," and "The Cable Guy" "Escaped from L.A." to "The Island of Dr. Moreau." "The Arrival" at "Phat Beach" was met by "The Phantom" with his "Dragonheart." It was "A Time to Kill" for "Heaven's Prisoners." This "Phenomenon" led to a "Chain Reaction" between "The Nutty Professor" and "King Pin." Meanwhile, "Flipper"'s "Courage Under Fire" at "The Rock" during a "Twister" led to a "Striptease" by "Lone Star," with the "Eraser" causing "The Craft" "Multiplicity" throughout the "Mission: Impossible."

I have been using the statement, "you are living in the past," for many years; however, let's go back to the past and reflect on the summer movies. This summer, the movies were not devoted to the actors and actresses of the film industry. The new "top dog" on the screen was the special affects. The movie audience proved that they would rather see tornadoes and aliens than Demi Moore in the nude. The funny thing is that Demi was probably using her special affects. America's phenomenon was not John Travolta, and Forrest "Hanks" Gump was not available to make a summer return. It was then left up to the junkies of Hollywood, who chiefly get their thrills blowing up things and killing people. "Independence Day" grossed nearly $325 million by Labor Day. I myself loved this movie; however, many people said that it was a take-off on every science fiction movie they have ever seen. It probably grossed $300 million because of the take-off of "Aliens," "Close Encounters of the Third Kind," "Return of the Jedi," and other interesting movies of the sort. People enjoy reliving the past, and what is better than the world joining hands and shouting, "We will not go quietly into the night!"

Well, that conclude living in the past, and for quick glance into the future next summer will not be known as the special effects summer; however, it will go down in history as the summer of the sequels - "Batman and Robin," "Jurassic Park: The Lost World," "Speed 2," "Alien: Resurrection," and many more. Although I should not get ahead of myself, there are many movies to come in which excitement, romance, and adventure will fill the screen.

I would like to take time now to say good-bye to a great friend. Chris "Fish" Stephens has decided to graduate early on me, and this fall he has thesis, football, sports editing, and a life, so he will not team up with me in reviewing movies. However, there might be a possibility he will make a guest appearance before he leaves MC - you never know with Chris.

This leaves me going solo, with the possibility of finding another partner in crime. In the meantime I will begin to search for a special guest to knock heads with me. So, let's begin year number Four at MC with a bang.

"The Crow," which debuted five years ago, was marked by Brandon Lee's death. This accident led to the success of this film and the mystery of the Crow. Now, it is in a new time and a new place, and another superforce has been given the power of the crow in "The Crow: City of Angels." Vincent Perez plays the new crow, and, just like in the first one, he is out to avenge the death of his little boy.

The film had great potential, and, yes, there is going to be a but - a big but! The bad guys were bad, and when I say bad I mean bad. In comparisons to the first Crow, the bad guys were the ones that carried the broke wings of Brandon Lee's death; however, in the sequel, the bad guys had a hard time carrying themselves through the film. This Crow sequel should have been served at the dinner table as a leftover.

What do you get when you mix two comedians into an action film? "Bulletproof," which features Damon Wayans and Adam Sandler starring in just another of those countless buddy flicks. Sandler is too funny to do anything but comedy, and Wayans can not make up his mind what he wants to do. My thoughts are that "Bulletproof" got hit in the chest and never recovered from the impact. The hotel scene will bring tears to your eyes, and the rest will have you wondering where your money is.

The last movie should be on the top of your list. "Tin Cup," which stars Kevin Costner, Rene Russo, and Cheech Marin, is directed by Kevin Reynolds, the man who brought us "Bull Durham." It is a story about a washed-up golf pro who is brought to life by the new girl in town. The only catch is that her boyfriend is his arch-rival.

I can not say enough about this movie. It is a date movie like you have never seen before. You might be saying to yourself that you are not a golf watcher nor a golf player, but the only thing I can say is that neither am I, and I loved it.

This concludes the movie review part of the program, although there are plenty of movies yet to be reviewed and waiting for you to see. Take a break from studying to go see "Bogus," "Spitfiregrill," "The Last Man Standing," "Feeling Minnesota," or "She's the One," and I will see you At the Movies!

Student Programming Board presents

Fall Movie Series
Hunchback of Notre Dame

October 7 at 8:30 p.m.
Music Hall in Fine Arts Center (FAC)

$1 Admission
Free Popcorn

(Bring your own softdrink)

Letter to MC Community

Dear college community,
The staff of the Highland Echo welcomes all and wishes everyone a great year. Our staff would like to help make this year, which has already achieved significance because enrollment is at its highest level, a memorable one. In order to serve you better, we have added some new features to your newspaper.

One addition is a literary/arts page. Students, staff, and faculty are encouraged to submit their creative writing and/or picture art to be published and shared with the rest of the campus.

Another new item is "Good Answer," the advice column written by Polly Graff, our uncertified counselors. Students are encouraged to send their college-related questions to box 2247.

Because of the overwhelming interest on staff in columns, there will be a rotating column. Each issue will have a fresh perspective.

Crossword puzzles and quotes are two new items yet to come that we hope everyone will enjoy.

If you, the reader, like or dislike some aspect of the paper, please let us know. We truly welcome your ideas, letters, and comments, and you should send them to box 2247. What you think is very important because this is your newspaper. This is your media . . . your echo.

Sincerely,
The Highland Echo

Korean Perspective of Maryville College

by Jin Young Choi
Reporter

My name is Choi, Jin Young, and I came from Korea. My major is English education at Han-Nam University in Korea, and I am a junior. I want to be an English teacher. I came to Maryville College, which was recommended by my professor, to learn the English more deeply and fluently.

I have been studying in the Center for English Language Learning (CELL) for three months. I think that MC is the best place to learn English for international students like me. In spite of the fact that the number of students is not so many, every student is very kind and friendly, so it is easy to make American friends. Also, MC makes me comfortable and relaxed, because it is full of many big trees and has green lawn on the whole campus. I always feel fresh air, and I feel safe. The long history of MC is said by the giant trees, so I can guess easily that the school was established more than 100 years ago. The school's campus is wonderful and beautiful. I think the MC students enjoy their natural and fresh campus life, and, at the same time, they study hard on campus. These things make me satisfied with MC, and I love this school.

Senate to Bring New Era of Spirit

by Jason Thompson
Student Senate
President

Here we are at the beginning of the first semester, and the student senate can be seen making an impact on our campus. My goal for this year is to "put the student back in student senate." The gap between the student and the student senate will close during this academic year through open forums, a new location for senate meetings, and massive advertising. Just to touch briefly on these ideas the senate will hold an open forum on the first Wednesday of every month at 8 p.m. in the Center for Campus Ministry (CCM). This is a chance for the student body to tell their elected representatives how they feel about certain campus issues. Next, the student senate meetings will be held in the CCM instead of in a classroom in Thaw Hall. This new location will allow more students, faculty, and staff to watch as the student representatives debate on certain campus topics. Look for signs as to when and what time the next senate meeting will be held. Massive advertising of student senate members is another way to reach our goal of making this senate a true student senate.

However, I would like to take this opportunity today to share with you a concern of mine on the Maryville College campus. Where has the school spirit gone? Recently I walked around this campus on the weekend to see all the empty parking spaces where all the students drove home for the weekend and I asked myself, "Why are these students not staying at Maryville College?" I think I found my answer at the first Maryville College football game. I looked around the stands and saw more faculty and staff members than students. If there were more spirit at Maryville, the athletic and fine arts events would be packed. As it stands, a handful of students cheer for the football team. What has happened to the other 850 students?

This is an issue that is very dear to me, so the student senate has taken an initiative to increase the spirit and traditions at Maryville College. I am very excited to say that the first-ever Spirit March was held before our first football game. Over fifty students, staff, and faculty members walked into the stadium behind our official school mascot, "Lady." The high turnout was extremely pleasing to me, but I want it to get bigger and better every week. Before every home game, please join us in front of Anderson Hall at 1 p.m. We have a lot of fun walking together while showing our school spirit. The Spirit and Tradition Committee, led by Ryan Stewart, is doing a wonderful job of publicizing and organizing this event. Student sections have been roped off in the stadium for everyone to sit. So I challenge you to make a difference on this campus and join us. The spirit marches on!

Kemp Rally Builds 'Excitement' on MC Campus

by Sarah H. West
Editor

According to many of the Maryville College community, Wednesday, Oct. 16 was an 'exciting' day. Jack Kemp, U.S. vice presidential candidate, visited the campus on his second stop of his "Touchdown Express" bringing national exposure and placing MC in the midst of the election battleground.

Kemp's rally began at noon on the front lawn of Pearsons Hall, which was decorated with balloons and signs. Many dignitaries accompanied Kemp and his wife, Joann, including former U.S. Senator Howard Baker, former Governor Lamar Alexander, Governor Don Sundquist, U.S. Congressman and Mrs. John Duncan, U.S. Congressman James Quillen, State Representative Bill Claibough, State Senator Karl Koella, and State Representative H.E. Bittle. Others on stage were MC President Dr. Gerald Gibson, University of Tennessee Board of Trustee member Susan Williams, singer Lee Greenwood, senior class President Kerri O'Keeffe, and student senate President Jason Thompson.

During his address, Kemp, who is a former U.S. Congressman, asked, "Who can you trust to lead this country into the twenty-first century?" Then, he answered, "One is running to be somebody; Bob Dole is running to do something." Kemp spoke about the Dole-Kemp tax cut saying that taxes would be cut "across the board" and thereby the economy would grow.

Regarding the tax cut, economics professor Dr. Sherrie Kasper said, "Based on historic evidence of previous tax cuts in the economy, I don't think that the 15 percent tax cut will all go into investment. I do not think there is a direct connection between cutting taxes and increasing the investment in the productive capacity of our economy."

Kasper also said, "I am really excited that Kemp is here today. I am really excited that we are in a battleground state because I think

Dr. Susan Ambler, professor of sociology, asked her students to use the event to gain experience in field research by interviewing various people with a set list of questions.

While some professors were supportive of the event (though not necessarily the candidate), others were aggravated that their was such low attendance in their classes. One professor announced that he would deduct four points from the Kemp speaks to a captive MC audience.

photo by Patrick E. Leslie

that no matter what your political persuasion is, this is a wonderful opportunity for us

MC students at the Kemp rally.

photo by Patrick E. Leslie

to get involved in the process." Kasper canceled class so that students could attend.

final grade of any student without an excused absence. Many professors did not attend the event.

Before the event, Dr. William Seymour, vice president of student development, said, "I'm real excited. I think it's good exposure for the college. It's exciting for all of the students and staff, and this is an important day in the campaign with the debates going on tonight and so it puts Maryville College right in the middle of the activity." Seymour brought a Kemp football card in hopes of getting it signed.

Students played a major role before and during the event helping to organize its various aspects or participating in some other way. Two students were directly involved on the stage. Thompson and O'Keeffe presented Kemp with an MC football jersey and cap.

The night before the event, approximately twenty students, including the College Republicans, helped the Kemp advance team make signs for the next day's festivities.

Before the entourage arrived, MC cheerleaders and football players, as well as the William Blount high school band, helped entertain the crowd.

Sophomore Adam Shepherd said, "I think it's [the event] very exciting. I think it is good to have a positive leader here, one who has integrity and honesty, which are two things that the Clinton administration lacks."

Some students expressed concern for the environment and were unhappy about the balloon release. Although many students were in support of Kemp, a group of Clinton-Gore supporters gathered to

continued on p. 16

Inside

New Faculty.....	2
Fitness Center.....	4
Theme Weeks.....	3
Soccer Victory.....	6
Musical Slated.....	10
Recital Heat.....	10
MC Cemetery.....	8
Open Forum.....	2
Dismas House.....	12
Lecture Series.....	1
Ghost Stories.....	11

Highlights

News.....	2-5
Senate.....	3
Sports.....	6-7
Classified/Jobs....	13
DRB Report.....	13
Art & Lit.....	9
Features.....	11-13
Advice Column....	15
Op/Ed.....	14-16

Smoking Debated in Open Forum

by Sherrie Brents
Reporter

Nearly forty students attended the second student senate open forum, held on Oct. 2. Smoking in Isaac's, food services, and Gamble's pool table were among the topics mentioned at the meeting.

Discussion centered around the possibility of banning smoking in Isaac's. Rachel Bates, a commuter, argued that Isaac's is the only place on campus for faculty, staff, and commuters to smoke inside. Other students pointed out that commuters do not have the option of smoking in their rooms. One suggestion was to open the door that leads directly to the grill. This would allow students to avoid the smoking side of Isaac's when they go to purchase food or drinks. As a result of this suggestion being made, the door was made accessible by Thursday morning. No students spoke in support of the ban at the open forum.

The topic of smoking in Isaac's brought about another issue. Hank Chambers, a commuting student, expressed concern that commuters are not being informed about events and changes that Food Services is also a concern of the students. Bishop Moore said that although the variety is better, the quality and cleanliness has declined. Several students have attempted to talk to management. However, as Sarah Knisley an increase in cost.

Gamble Hall is ready for a pool table, according to hall senator Brian Gossett and hall council president Chad Flatt, who attended the forum on behalf of Gamble residents. The residents argued that they should not be punished for the actions of a former student. Gossett said that Gamble residents have to go to Davis Hall or Isaac's to play pool.

When Gamble gets a new table, people in Isaac's and Davis residents will no longer have to wait to play pool on their table. Dr. Bill Seymour, vice president of student development, assured students that Gamble will get a new pool table.

In concluding the forum, the senate president, Jason Thompson, told students to call the senate office at x8049 or drop by the office at any time Monday through Friday from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. if they have any questions, comments, or suggestions.

Gamble Hall now sports a new billiards table. photo by Patrick E. Leslie take place on campus. In response to this, several other students stated that they get their information from their mail boxes and from signs hanging around campus, both of which are accessible to commuters. Commuter senators Matt Webb, Amanda McCarter, and Yosef Addis are ahead of things and have already held a meeting with commuters.

said, management is "not responsive." In defense of Aladdin, Nathan Anderson, a member of the senate food services committee said that changes are still being made, the food is still being adjusted, and alternative foods are still being looked into. In response to questions about alternative meal plans, Anderson said that more choices would mean

Smith Campaign Focuses on Environmental Issues

by Chuck Gilkey
Reporter

Dr. Stephen Smith, who is running for the United States Congress against incumbent John Duncan, spoke to a crowd of students and faculty on Thursday, Oct. 3, during the third of six scheduled community forums examining the issue of "Government and the Environment: A Necessary Partnership?"

Smith said to the audience, "It [the federal government] has the largest role to play. [There are] areas that truly belong to no one, yet they belong to us all. It is those commons that the government has the responsibility to protect. None of us own it, none of us control it, yet we are all affected by it."

In assuming its role, Smith said that the government must be willing to interface with international governments. He also said it should lead the way in research and used as examples the Tennessee Valley Authority, the Oak Ridge National Laboratory, and the University of Tennessee.

He also said the government had a role to play in environmental policy because "the environment in my opinion is a national security issue. And, because it is a national security issue, it requires the role of the federal government."

Reminding the audience that the environment is a local security issue with the Great Smoky Mountains National Park nearby, Smith asked the students for their help. He said, "It's not a spectator sport. It affects each one of us. If you want to make the world a better

continued on p. 5

The Highland Echo

Editor

Sarah H. West

Copy Editor

Matt H. Waters

Layout Editor

Patrick E. Leslie

Associate Editor

Chris Stephens

Staff Writers

Sherrie Brents, Tonya Briggs, Shannon Bryant, Jin Young Choi, Sarah Christians, Joey Cody, Eric Daugherty, Allison Dunn, Folami Ford, Chuck Gilkey, Kim Eun Jung, Lori Leffel, Andy Long, La-Toyia Lundy, Joe Malheiro, Bo McMichael, Rissa Miller, Kazu Nakane, Byung Joo Park, Dallas Rightmyer, Sun-Im Ryu, Kim Schuenemann, Michelle Shuler, Christi Stalans, Jason Thompson, Traci Tidwell, & Allison Watts

Photo Staff

Keli Jennett, Lori Leffel

Cartoonists

Carl Gombert, Chris West, Scott West, Jessica Wilkins

Please send letters to the editor, poetry, short stories, photographs, and art to box #2247.

Phone

981-8176

E-Mail

SWest75@aol.com

The staff of The Echo would also like to thank Jenna Oxford for her assistance with photography and developing for this issue.

Hall Theme Weeks Bring Spirit

by Shannon Bryant
Reporter

What better way is there to spend an otherwise boring, homework-filled evening than to play nine-ball pool, listen to great music, tell ghost stories, or prepare for the future? These activities are available on-campus in the form of residence hall theme weeks.

As tradition mandates, each hall is required to inundate the campus with a variety of events each semester. Copeland and Davis Halls have already completed their theme weeks, but Pearsons, Lloyd, Carnegie, and Gamble theme weeks have yet to occur.

Copeland's theme week provided insight into "The Games We Play." Events included a variety of popular games and activities such as a nine-ball billiards tournament, a bingo night, a trivia face-off, and a computer game called "You Don't Know Jack." This relaxed atmosphere gave residents and visitors a chance to reduce stress from their hectic weeks.

"A Celebration of the Arts" was the theme held at Davis Hall. This "Celebration" is an encore performance of last year's extremely popular theme week. Davis staff offered many activities such as an open poetry reading night, an instrumental coffee house, an improvisational theater night, and an evening devoted to the visual arts. Residents from many halls participated in this mentally enriching experience.

Looking to the horizon, the remaining theme weeks appear to be just as exciting and fun-filled as those of Copeland and Davis. For example, Pearsons is planning a Halloween theme weeks that will include ghost story telling and a costume party. Also, Carnegie, anticipating the needs of the departing senior class, will host a theme week devoted to life after Maryville College. Speakers, workshops, and displays will be provided in connection with this theme.

photo by Patrick E. Leslie

MC students and staff prepare banners for the Kemp rally.

MC students celebrating smoking victory.
photo by Kell Jennett

Howard Baker speaks at the Kemp rally.

photo by Patrick E. Leslie

Senate Hears New Proposals

by Sherrie Brents
Reporter

Proposals for the senior class and smoking in Isaac's were presented and voted on at the third student senate meeting of the year. Members of the judicial board were also selected at the Oct. 3 meeting.

A proposal to ban smoking in Isaac's was sponsored by Copeland Hall senator, Brian Hastings. The proposal recommended that Isaac's join the rest of the buildings on campus by becoming smoke free. Debate centered around the fact that Isaac's is the only area, other than private dorm rooms and outside, where smoking is permitted. Several senators pointed out that many of the people who use Isaac's are staff, faculty, and commuters who smoke. Many of the representatives, including commuter senators Yosef Addis and Matt Webb, reminded the other senate members that Isaac's is the only option for smokers. Despite comments regarding the health and discomfort of nonsmokers, the proposal was rejected by a vote of 2 to 15.

Kerri O'Keefe, senior class president, introduced a proposal requesting $1,000 be allocated to fund events scheduled for the senior class. The proposal calls for $400 to fund a senior class fall picnic, $400 for the Wine and Cheese celebration, $100 for the Senior CIV slide show, and $100 for printing expenses. O'Keefe reminded the senators that the class of 1996 was given funds for their Wine and Cheese celebration. When asked if they had considered fund raising, she said the senior gift would be bought with money from fund raising efforts. With no other speakers the proposal went into voting and passed with no opposition.

The judicial board was also selected at the meeting. The members are: Audrey McFadden, Alan Archbold, Brandon Chance, Kevin Hedrick, Adam Ray, Smith Jean Phillip, Andrew Johnson, Sammy Crawford, Mark Wheaton, Clay Stalcup, Ashley Martin, Joe Overton, Sarah West, Casey Anderson, David Moss, and Trey Tinney. Despite the extended application period, the J-Board is still short seven members. However, there are enough members to hear a case if the need arises.

The next senate meeting will be on Oct. 31, at 12:30 p.m. in the Center for Campus Ministries (CCM). Everyone is invited to attend the meetings.

Fitness Center Gives Incentive to Exercise

by Tonya Briggs
Reporter

Not motivated enough to run around campus or lift weights in the Cooper Athletic Center? Then try the new fitness center next to the post office on the bottom floor of Fayerweather Hall. The fitness center opened its doors on Sept. 9. It contains two stair masters, three treadmills, and two exercise bikes. You can set your own pace from coasting on level ground on the bike to climbing up 64 floors on the stair master.

The fitness center began as an idea from the student senate last year. An important person in turning the idea of the fitness center into a reality was former student senate president, Alex Little, who secured roughly $20,000 to pay for the center by adding twenty-of the fitness center. He said that it provides a physical health service here on campus so stucess. He said, "Many students have already taken advantage of the fitness center with the day hours nings and some hours on the weekends as soon as the student senate approves a measure. A staff must also be hired for liability and insurance purposes.

MC students also think that the fitness center is a beneficial addition to the campus. Senior Keli Stewart said, "It gives us a place to work out without having to compete for the machines with the football and basketball teams as in the weight room."

Michelle Lawson agreed, saying, "The fitness center allows the non-athletic people a chance to stay in shape."

They both said that the fitness center is better than the athletic center because it has more consistent hours.

MC students enjoy the new fitness center.

photo by Kell Jennett

five dollars to each student's activity fee.

Dr. William Seymour, vice president of student development, is in charge

dents do not have to leave campus to use a fitness center. Seymour thinks that the fitness room is already a suc-

and the sign on the door as the only advertisement."

The center's hours will be extended to eve-

Library Series in Focus on Appalachian Region

by Matt H. Waters
Copy Editor

Both native East Tennesseans and everyone else now have an opportunity to learn more about the rich tapestry of the Appalachian region.

The Appalachian Lecture Series, now in its ninth year, highlights the heritage and culture of the residents of the Smoky Mountains in the 20th century.

"The series is a way that we can celebrate and inform ourselves about this beautiful region that we live in," said Maryville College Library Director Chris Nugent. "It allows us to focus on Appalachia and study the literary traditions and folklore that have been passed down through the years."

This year brought three informative speakers. Dr. Chad Berry, an assistant professor of history at MC, lectured last month on the movement of Southerners in search of work during the middle of the 1900s. Denise Giardina, a noted author and lecturer from Charleston, West Virginia, spoke last week on the vivid history of Appalachia. On Nov. 14, Jennifer Brooks, a doctoral candidate in history at the University of Tennessee, will present a lecture concerning the reception of soldiers following World War II.

Proffitt Dining Room. In fact, turnout for Giardina's lecture topped 120 audience members and resulted in a packed PDR. The cost for the series to add books and videotapes related to Appalachia to the library's stacks. "The series is also helping the library build a collection of material on this area," said Nugent. "That is beneficial because teachers can have a wide range of material concerning this region."

The series was begun in 1987 by Joan Worley, who wanted to honor now-retired MC professor Irma Cate. The interest from the MC body and the surrounding community was great enough to make the series an annual event.

The series also serves as a path for students, faculty, staff, and the surrounding community to come together to explore the traditions of the Smoky Mountains. According to Nugent, "This is a way for us all to learn about the richness and variety of East Tennessee."

Dr. Berry and Denise Giardina enjoy dinner at the Appalachian Lecture Series.

photo by Patrick E. Leslie

Attendance has been high at each of the presentations, which are held in the $35, but MC students are admitted free-of-charge. The proceeds from the event are used

MC Welcomes Ballew, New Residence Life Director

by Rissa Miller
Reporter

The new residence life director, Michelle Ballew, has come to Maryville College hoping to make improvements throughout the department. She wants to "make it [residence life] a more positive office where students feel like they can come if they have a problem." As a believer that residence life is an important aspect of college life and a learning experience outside of the classroom, she wants to develop a strong staff that can work for the needs of all on-campus students.

Ballew has a great deal of experience with students in small, liberal arts colleges. She was assistant director of residence life, area coordinator, minority student liaison, and director of alcohol education at Keuka College in western, upstate New York. She was also the assistant area coordinator at Western Texas State University and residence hall association officer at the University of Northern Texas.

Ballew received a bachelor of science degree in counseling and a master of arts in interdisciplinary studies from the University of Northern Texas.

One reason that Ballew came to MC is because the college is closer to her par-

Knoxville was another deciding factor because being near a big city will enable her to take more classes on the graduate level.

Ballew is very involved with students outside of residence life. She teaches one of the freshman seminar classes, supports various athletic teams, and attends hall meetings. One way that she is directly connected to students is that she deals with them and their problems "right there instead of making them go through different channels." She is very impressed with the students she has worked with so far.

Smith in Race for Senate Seat

continued from p. 2

place, then all you have to do is get involved."

Smith said, "The government is in a sense a people coming together to look out for the best interest, and those of you who choose not to participate shouldn't be complaining about it, because you have every opportunity to get involved."

He said that the government does have a large role to play in protecting the issues that are important to its constituents. Smith, advocating protecting the East Tennessee interest, said, "Research is a critical role in environmental protection. We should know here in East Tennessee, because we have the capability through the University of Tennessee, through the colleges in the region, through the Oak Ridge complex, and the Tennessee Valley Authority. We have the capability to do a tremendous amount of research for environmental protection."

Smith proposed the idea of a possible research triangle between the three. He said, "There is no reason why we in East Tennessee can't be benefiting, and there are good jobs that would come from that, not only for our region but our nation."

Smith, warning that the environment would eventually draw the attention of everyone, said, "Even Rush Limbaugh is going to be concerned about the environment... if everyone in China decides to drive a car."

Smith also said that the federal government should help developing Third World countries pass the hurdles that have posed obstacles to clearing with environmental protection policies. He called on East Tennessee to lead the way in helping with this situation by living up to the name, "Volunteers."

He also warned the crowd about voting for the republican presidential candidate, Bob Dole. Smith said, "Educate yourselves about what Bob Dole has said about a $32 billion tax cut and the impact it is going to have on the Department of Energy, particularly the Oak Ridge National Lab, and how that's going to impact our region. Don't take my word for it; go and study the facts. It will damage this country's ability to provide leadership and research. And, more importantly, it is going to damage yours, mine, my children's, and your children's and grandchildren's future to have the infrastructure to tackle the tough challenges to save energy and the environment in the future. It's wrong and shouldn't happen."

The federal government, according to Smith, has to handle the interstate disputes over the environment. He cited the clean-up of the Pigeon River and multi-state jurisdiction like the Great Smoky Mountains National Park.

Smith said, "The air pollution from the Great Smoky Mountains National Park cloaks the visibility there. The visibility of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park should average 93 miles everyday. The average visibility is now 22 miles, and in the summer it averages 12 miles. The Great Smoky Mountains National Park is being devastated right now." He said that upper level forests are not healthy and that streams are so acidic that they cannot support a trout population.

Smith ended by saying that the federal government must lead the way, but he added that the citizens must be willing to get involved and follow through on their concerns by looking out for the environment.

ents, who live in Dallas, Texas, than her previous job location in New York. She also liked the similarities between MC and Keuka College. Also, the location of

Kemp speaks at MC.

photo by Patrick E. Leslie

MC cheerleaders lead the Scots at the Kemp rally.

photo by Patrick E. Leslie

Scots Outlast Nation's Number Two Team; Soccer Team Looking for More Game Action

by Chris Stephens
Associate Editor

I have said it a million times, and today I am going to say it once more. Here at Maryville, there is no need to go searching for column topics. You go to a few games, and before long you are going to see a great one.

I have to admit that the soccer game I saw on October 6 was my first. I was going to list some excuses, but mostly they play during football practice, as I have nothing against soccer. Poag! I will also say that I understood little to nothing. It was my first, but I know it was memorable for more than just that reason.

Methodist College ended the Scots' season a year ago in the first round of the NCAA tournament. This year, the Monarchs are ranked number two in the nation. Well, they were, because, after their visit and subsequent loss to the Scots, they were humbled to say the least.

I would like to say that the story of the game was senior Chris Reid and his three goals, the first two coming with only seconds remaining in the game to tie and the third in overtime to win the game. But, what I really noticed was the Scots' refusal to back down.

I am not sure what is considered physical for a soccer game. I mean, I have seen some physical basketball games and a few physical football games, but this would have to fit into the physical category. You want evidence? How about senior Lawren Lassiter torn sleeve on his jersey? As junior Ben Petty would say, "Ref, I sure didn't start the game like this!" Or, the fact that I lost track of these yellow card things on, say, number 21.

Every time a ball went into the air, our guys were the underdog, and they didn't win every ball, but they won just enough.

After taking a 1-0 lead on a Reid goal, it seemed like the ball was in the Monarchs' control for the rest of the half. And, when the visitors took a 2-1 lead, it would have been easy for the Scots to give in, if just an inch. They never did.

I think a lot had to do with the fact that the Scots have tasted success after last year's trip to the NCAA tournament, and they want to go back. Before the game their record of 5-3 put this game atop the list of must-win games. And, they did just that.

Senior Jody Tootle continued to press the action during the entire second half, as did Paul David Davey. Actually, Tootle seemed to have found the mark to give the Scots the win late in the game, but his blast hit the bar on the goal and bounced away. Such a frustrating sport! I just wanted someone to pick it up and run it in. The entire team just kept pecking away until a seemingly harmless corner kick found its way to Reid, who used his head, literally, and tied the score at 2-2.

Methodist was playing a man down (which I didn't understand, they had plenty of players on the bench) and by this point may have been happy to play for a tie. And, it looked like that was just what they were going to get until Reid completed his first career hat-trick (I guess that is what it is called when someone scores three goals) and gave the Scots their "must win."

I also want to commend the students at Maryville. I am sure each person there could have found other things to do on a chilly morning, but a lot of you came and all of you stayed. That is impressive. It is Maryville for you. Not once did anyone say, "Let's get on outta here!"

The Scots still have a long road back to the tournament, but they took a big step on this day. Their next home game will be October 19, Homecoming weekend, against NAIA Division II Temple at 11 a.m. Another early start I hope all of you make.

The Scots now stand at 7-3 following a 2-1 win over Guilford College on October 13. Goals were scored by Reid and Davey.

While I am going on and on about one half of the soccer program here at Maryville, it would be a good time to look at the Lady Scots, who now stand with a record of 5-5.

The Lady Scots were not so fortunate on their trip to Greensboro, North Carolina. They dropped the contest to Guilford College 2-1. The Lady Scots lone goal came via senior captain Heather Belair.

The Lady Scots face off with Covenant College Wednesday, Oct. 16, at 4:30 p.m.

The Lady Scots' last two regular season home games will be Oct. 25 and 26 against Tusculum at 2p.m. and St. Mary's at 12p.m.

They will then finish their season with the MC Invitational on Nov. 1 and 2 against Cumberland University and Sewanee. The Cumberland game will begin at 4 p.m., and the Sewanee game time will be announced at a later date.

The equestrian team practices for an upcoming event.

photo by Kell Jennett

Great Scots! .500 for '96 Homecoming Game

by Chris Stephens
Information gathered
by David Dupont

The Maryville College Fighting Scots football team seems to be headed in the right direction as they head into their 1996 Homecoming clash with Centre College this Saturday at 1:30 pm.

The Scots have won their last two homecomings over Methodist College in 1994 and Sue Bennett College in 1995.

After dropping their first two games this season, the Scots responded by going on a three-game winning streak that was just snapped this past weekend by Wittenburg University by the score of 60-7 in Springfield, Ohio.

Before this game, the Scots had been finding ways to win, although two of the three games were very much in doubt until the final minutes.

After a goal-line stand to beat Kentucky Wesleyan on Sept. 21, it took a missed field goal on the final play to give the Scots a win over Sewanee with a final score of 14-13.

Things seemed to come together the following week in Memphis against Rhodes College as the Scots rolled 21-10 behind 214 rushing yards and two scores by senior Armand Akiboh.

Head Coach Phil Wilks had good things to say about the offense of the Scots.

"There have been some unexpected surprises," he said. "Akiboh and Matt Wilks have both exceeded expectations."

Through the first five games, Akiboh had rushed for 495 yards and five touchdowns, while Wilks stood as the team's second leading receiver with seven catches.

Even with these two having good seasons, Wilks said junior Nathan Davenport remained the "go-to man" with 35 catches for over 500 yards and five touchdowns.

Much of the credit also belongs to the big men up front, according to Wilks.

"Seniors Bo McMichael, Harold Lynn, Jim Carpenter, Joe Kretschmeyer, and junior Daniel Beckman are also doing a great job for us," he said.

The Scots offense has been hit hard by injuries this season. Starting junior full-back Mike Stocker will miss the remainder of the season with a knee injury and starting quarterback junior Brandon Derrick missed the Sewanee game with a banged-up knee.

Despite the injury, Wilks had only good things to say about his signal caller and players filling in for the injured players.

"Derrick is getting better every week," he said.

"Joey Wood did a great job filling in for Brandon against Sewanee," said Wilks. "Also senior Mike Parris has done a good job as he has had to step in for Stocker and has been tremendous."

Over the three game win streak, the key for the Scots may have been their defense, as many players have keyed wins. Two of these players are senior Mike Hodges and junior Ben Petty.

"Hodges and Petty have come up with some big plays in crucial situations," said Wilks.

Petty so far this season has 35 tackles, five of them for losses, and scored a touchdown on a fumble recovery against Sewanee. Hodges has been equally impressive with 37 tackles and six sacks.

In the secondary, Wilks pointed to senior Jon Davis and junior David Dupont.

"Davis and Dupont have made big improvements and really stepped up their game," said Wilks.

Holding this defense together all year has been the presence of Pre-Season All-American junior Jay Lay. Through the first five games, he has recorded 67 tackles to lead the team.

Now standing with a 3-3 record, the Scots will have to pull a few upsets in the coming weeks to improve on last year's 5-5 season. Two of the Scots' four remaining opponents, Clinch Valley on Oct. 26 and Emory & Henry on Nov. 16 are nationally ranked. Emory & Henry is one of the top teams in the South Region, and Clinch Valley is ranked No. 4 in the nation in Division II NAIA.

The Scots will first have to get by a tough Centre team this weekend and then, after going to Clinch Valley, play their last home game against Methodist College on Nov. 2.

Volleyball Team on Track

by Joe Malheiro
Staff Reporter

The Lady Scots soccer players have posted an 8-12 record going into an Oct. 15 match-up at home against Union College earlier this week.

Junior Amy Snider said, "We have great talent on our team, and we are really starting to come together as a team." Snider, pointing out the leaders of the team, said, "Whitney Black, Joey Cody, and Ginger Nations are playing really well."

With Nations being the senior captain, she is being looked to for leadership on the court from both her teammates and Coach Kandis Schram.

"For the remainder of the season, the play of Black, Cody, and Nations will be the key to the success of the Lady Scots," Snider said. "We need their help to play as a team."

The Lady Scots traveled to Sewanee for the University of the South Tournament last weekend and went 0-3.

The Lady Scots started off strong against Sewanee, but fell short three games to one. The scores were 11-15, 12-15, 15-10, and 10-15. Each game was close, but the Tigers outlasted the Lady Scots.

They then lost to Emory University and Centre College to close out their tournament.

The Lady Scots will be off Homecoming Weekend but will return to action the following weekend in the MC Invitational.

Teams making the trip to MC will be Rhodes, SCAD, Averett, Greensboro, Sewanee, and Southwestern.

The Lady Scots will then play their final home game against Knoxville College on Oct. 29 at 6 p.m.

The Lady Scots will finish their season by traveling to Ferrum, Virginia, for the Ferrum Invitational on Nov. 1 and 2. They will face Oglethorpe University, Ferrum College, Lynchburg College, and Randolph Macon College.

photo by Kell Jennett

Volleyball players aim for the ball.

Cemetery Shrouds Mystery and History

by Sarah Christians
Reporter

The field you are standing in would be green and lush with lawn if it were not midnight. The air that you are breathing would be warm and sweet in the daytime. Now, it is chilly and tastes antique. You would surely hear the sounds of laughter, some yelling, and a few random cars. Now, all you can hear is your own heart thundering in your ears and your breath coming in shallow, tight, little gasps. A full moon casts an eerie pall across the field, making the grass look incandescent blue. The cedar trees sway, casting shadows of inhuman creatures and prophesying your fate. You know that only 50 paces back is the warmth and comfort of Copeland Hall, and you could still see a few bright windows if you turned around and looked hard. To your left, you know the figure looming tall in the sky is only the Alpine Tower. Nevertheless, none of these symbols of home and comfort mean anything. Surely, ahead of you is a fence you know is made out of chain link (you know, in the same part of your brain that knows your name), but now you could swear on your Norton Anthology that it is wrought iron. It is covered with creeping vines and the wayward, black petals of long dead roses. You are right there, at the gate of the Maryville College Cemetery. Rising high in the center is a white marble monument to the Rev. Dr. Isaac Anderson, the founder of your alma mater. In the dark you walk toward headstones, each of them telling you about a person who once walked and talked exactly where you will tomorrow; who once stood inside Anderson

Hall late at night and felt that familiar and overwhelming sense of get out of there right now!

The MC Cemetery is shrouded in mystery only because its sole purpose reveals a darker side of MC's colorful history. Both founders and five past presidents, some with their families, are interred there. Of the 29 current graves, three are those of former students, George S. Cooper, Franklin Magill, and another unidentified one. Few places on campus are so alive in history as the college cemetery. Students walk in and out of buildings named for some of those interred everyday.

The MC Cemetery was constructed in the late nineteenth century, upon the death of the first recorder of the board of directors after the Civil War, Rev. Ralph Erskine Tedford. Tedford's father-in-law, Professor Thomas J. Lamar, the second founder, had only imagined a place where those who had dedicated their lives and hearts to MC could have their eternal rest still in the shadow of Anderson Hall. By 1900, 10 faculty members and some of their families had been buried, as well as three students. In 1933, an endowment to MC specifically for the cemetery made it possible to move the remains of the Anderson family, and erect a monument to them. Also moved was Dr. John Joseph Robinson, the second president, from Atlanta.

MC students will undoubtedly recognize the names on other headstones. Dr. Samuel Tyndale Wilson, the fifth president and his wife are buried there, as well as Fred Lowry Proffitt, the sixth treasurer. And there also, with a touchingly poetic tombstone dated May 28, 1960 until

Grigsby, Gossett, and Damrow Set to Lead Class of 2000

by Tonya Briggs
Reporter

According to its class officers, the class of 2000 is an enthusiastic class that is ready to take on the challenges and responsibilities of the next century. It is led by three excited and willing officers - President Holly Grigsby, Vice President Brian Gossett, and Secretary/Treasurer Sabrina Damrow.

Grigsby, freshman class president, is from Knoxville, Tenn. She is on the soccer team, is a member of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes (FCA), and attends Thursday night Bible study here on campus. She also plays guitar and goes to Calvary Baptist Church in Knoxville. She is undecided on her major.

Grigsby had two things in mind when she ran for class president. First, she wanted to become involved in the Maryville College student government. Second, she wanted to serve the freshmen class in anyway she could to help make it the best it can be. She thinks anyone can make a difference in building up the class of 2000. Grigsby said, "My goal for the freshmen class is for us to come together as a class, to get crazy about being the class of 2000, and to have fun!"

Vice president Gossett is from Etowah, Tennessee. He is on the football team, a member of FCA, and a hall council officer for Gamble Hall. He is undecided about his major. Gossett said, "I ran for class office to serve my fellow classmates and help, not only myself, but others to get involved and to be a part of Maryville College activities." His goals for the freshman class include planning a freshmen class event, hosting a campus wide event, taking part in sports and other activities, following the MC Covenant, having a great time, and having the best class ever at MC.

Damrow, from Louisville, Tenn., is the freshman class secretary/treasurer. She is a child development and behavior major, who wants to obtain a teacher's license. She is a member of the volleyball team and Circle K, and her hobbies are swimming and basketball. Her goal for the class of 2000 is "to make positive changes for the next three years and to get everyone involved in college activities." She wanted to be a class officer to help voice the opinions of the freshmen. She thinks that their concerns and ideas are vital to a successful first year at MC.

All three officers believe they are prepared to lead the class of 2000 to the next millennium. They all have goals and ideas for the freshman class. If left up to them, this year is going to be a thrilling and exciting adventure for the freshmen at MC.

June 2, 1970, Chili, Margaret Ware's beloved pet, is laid to rest.

The epitaphs too, weave the story of MC. The Rev. Alex Bartlett's reads "Faithful unto death." He is interred next to his wife, under a common marker, and next to his daughter, Mrs. Edith Mariam Elmore, whose monument reads "She hath done what she could." Fred Proffitt's monument is distinctive of his personality: "Not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord." Rev. Tedford's reads "Servant of God, Well Done." Similarly, the memorial to the Anderson family:

Servant of God, Well Done Rest from thy loved employ the battle fought the victory won
Rest in the Savior's joy.
Student George Cooper's, who died on May 10, 1889, shortly after he graduated, says simply, "Asleep in Jesus."

The MC Cemetery is much more inviting in the daylight, if you can call a cemetery inviting. The oak trees filter sunlight into an intricate lace pattern and birds sing throughout the college woods. Yet, there is still a sense of deep and unyielding history. MC was built on the faith and hope of the Rev. Dr. Isaac Anderson in 1819. If only he were alive to see the wonder his dream has become.

Listen very closely. Is that Mozart's Requiem or the Dies Irae movement of the Carmina Burana? Now look closely. Is that just a pretty stream of sunlight? Are you sure it was not the spirit of XXX Salome Bartlett? Some MC students may never visit the college cemetery. Rest assured, however, that the founders, sponsors, and distinguished of MC watched over them.

Students, staff, and faculty, please share with the rest of the Mayville College community your visual art and/or creative writing. The art and literary page is one of the new additions to your newspaper. (Impressions, the MC literary magazine, is separate from the Echo's art and literary page, but you are encouraged to contribute to both.) Please mail your submissions to box 2247.

Is there something wrong with me?
I try to be sweet and kind
But there is some thing that prevents it
And sometimes I lose control

I can't help it . . .

really, I can't
At points in my life
A savage beast

leashes out
With all its might
It tries to protect me

In reality, however, it is not protecting
It is hurting
All those screams . . .

All those cries . . .
The beast feels no sympathy for them

For they have received what they truly deserved.

After all is done
The beast goes back into my soul
But it is always ready
Just staring out of my soul
And into theirs.

M.C.W.

Double Sonnet

Dirty hands and dirty feet that touch upon the dusty shelves
They weave among the dirty sweets
like little sweet-toothed klepto elves

Playing tag through rows of snacks
you run and laugh and never stop with unseen scars upon your back in a greasy shop of fuel and pop

Daddy's tan and Mommy's burn with bright blue eyes you cannot see You've yet to hear, you've yet to learn of mean old men you're yet to be tush

as baby touches
my brown skin
She tells them both to quit and shush
a smack for what she calls a sin

His halo tilts and tarnishes
his gentle nature hardens
No longer flower garnishes for sweet angelic gardens

I crave to steal them to my breast to smooth the cowlicks at their crowns to give them wisdom, give them rest and take the young ones from this town

But the car like a turbo hearse grows away, and I leave my selfish hands where they lay.

Sun-bleached lashes, long and straight Bred on grits
and greens and hate

Now momma pops him on the

Joey Cody,
Senior

Chrysanthemums herald autumn.

file photo

Remember
Community Shares
in the 1996
Giving Campaign

Ingredients of a Recital

by Michelle Shuler
Reporter

Students prepare for weeks, months, and in some cases even years for public performances. Many of these performances take place right here at Maryville College and are known as student recitals.

There are generally two types of student recitals, both of which require months of heavy preparation. Many music majors will give full and half recitals in their junior and senior years of school. This type of recital is a requirement for some music majors including those majoring in music performance. Two such recitals will be taking place in November. On Nov. 7, pianists Bishop Moore and Aya Miyoshi will be performing a dual recital. Then, on Nov. 23, music major Jennifer Brashears will be performing her senior recital, which will also be a piano recital.

The other type of recital that takes place is a broad sort which includes performances from several students and a variety of instruments, voices, and styles of music. "Our music department is so versatile," said senior Bishop Moore. "We've got classical. We've got jazz. We've got original compositions."

One important preparation for this type is to spend increased time practicing the piece or pieces to be performed. Another preparation that music majors Robin Skipper, Jerry Sullivan II, and Carrie Wright find beneficial is to practice in the music hall where the recitals take place, because the music has a different sound when performed in the music hall than when performed in a studio.

These sort of recitals are more student-run productions and, though formal in nature, are not as "stiff" as would be expected according to some of the students who attend. As Sullivan, a sophomore music major, said, "It's not just walk out and bow anymore." A student recital will take place on Nov. 21 at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Music Hall.

Upcoming Fine Arts Events:

THEATRE:

•The Threepenny Opera will be performed at 8 p.m. on Thursday, Oct. 24, through Saturday, Oct. 26.

MUSIC:

•A Maryville/Alcoa Community Concert Orchestra concert will be held at 8 p.m. on Monday, Oct. 28, in Wilson Chapel.

•A Senior Duo Piano Recital featuring Bishop Moore and Aya Miyoshi is scheduled for 8 p.m. on Thursday, Nov. 7, in the Fine Arts Music Hall.

•A Faculty Recital will be performed by Ann K. Taddie and Robert Bonham on Friday, Nov. 15, at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Music Hall.

•A Student Recital will be held at 8 p.m. on Thursday, Nov. 21, in the Fine Arts Music Hall.

•A Community Concert Band is scheduled for 8 p.m. on Friday, Nov. 22, in the Wilson Chapel.

•A Senior Piano Recital will be performed at 8 p.m. on Saturday, Nov. 23, in the Fine Arts Music Hall.

ART:

•November Gallery Exhibit is Bob Wilder. His exhibit, entitled, "Portraiture in Leadership," will be on display in the FAC throughout the month.

LONDON
$295

Paris	$319
Frankfurt	$319
Madrid	$319
Munich	$319
Rome	$359
Geneva	$349

Fares are each way from Knoxville based on a round-trip purchase. Fares do not include internal travel or taxes. Taxes range from $35 to $45, depending on destination or departure. Charges paid directly to Council Travel.

Council Travel
1641 CUMBERLAND AVENUE • KNOXVILLE, TN 37916
523-9900
<http://www.civc.org/travel.htm>
EURAILPASSES ISSUED ON-THE-SPOT!

Threepenny Opera Set to Open on Oct. 27

by Kim Schuenemann
Reporter

The Threepenny Opera, a musical by Bertolt Brecht, will open Oct. 27 at 8 p.m. and will run through Oct. 29. Doors will open at 7:30 p.m. This musical opens the 101st season of the Maryville College Theatre.

Brecht adapted the musical from a 1728 ballad entitled, "The Beggar's Ballad." He wrote the song lyrics and play while a friend, Kurt Weill, wrote the music. Marc Blitzstein translated it from German to English. Brecht wrote The Threepenny Opera in order to satirize the evils of capitalism. His main characters are from the very visible society of beggars, reprobates and the lower class.

The main character is Macheath also known as Mack the Knife a notorious criminal (played by Aaron Stone). Macheath's bride to be is Polly Peachum (played by Sarah Baker). Polly's father (played by Todd Smith) hopes for Macheath's arrest and insures this by getting the local prostitute, Jenny Diver (played by Paige Cooper) to betray Mack the Knife. While in prison Macheath gets Lucy, the police chief's daughter (played by Shannon Bryant) to fall in love with him and thus help in escape.

The rest of the cast consists of Barbara Kistler as Mrs. Peachum, Russell Groff as the police chief, Tiffany Rudicill as the streetsinger, and Kathryn McDonald, Heather Devilbiss, James McFetridge, Nathan Zumwalt, Jennifer McCord, Lee Ann Leeper, Amy Brewer, Jenni Taylor as the beggars. Stage managing The Threepenny Opera are Rebecca Lill and Robin Roten. Many others contribute to the technical support for the musical and must remain silently applauded.

In keeping with the theme of the play, patrons are asked to bring a non-perishable food item. Community Food Center will be taking the donations in the lobby of the Wilson Chapel/Theatre Complex.

Ticket prices are $7.50 for adults and $5 for area students with a current student identification card, senior citizens, MC faculty and staff. The play is free for MC students with a current ID.

Stories with International Flavor to Spook You

by Kazu Nakane
Reporter

The following are two ghost stories, one from Venezuela, and the other from Japan. Thank you Raul Maltinez for contributing the one from Venezuela and Mirai Eda for telling the Japanese ghost story.

The Highway

In Venezuela, the highways connecting two states are usually dark. One day, a man was driving on the highway from his home. When midnight came, he saw a tiny light shining from far away. He wanted to go there and see what it was. When he got to the place where the light was, there was an accident. He saw a car was upset and the driver, a very, very old woman, was already dead, and there was no help.

"Oh-oh, that's too bad."

Suddenly, he noticed that she wore a beautiful gold ring with a big diamond.

"Well, she's dead anyway. If I get this ring, it's not a big deal."

The poor man decided to take the ring, but the ring was so tight that he couldn't pull it off of her hand. Then he took out his knife to cut off her finger. Finally, he had her ring.

When he arrived in town, he sold the ring and got the money, but he forgot about the accident.

On his way back to his home from the town, his car's engine stalled. He started the engine over and over again, but it didn't work. Suddenly, he saw a light shining far away. He didn't know what to do. No cars had been driving by. He decided to go to the light on foot and ask for help.

When he arrived at the light, it was a house.

"Thank God!"

He knocked on the door, and a very old woman peeked at him from a little gap and said, "Oh, dear. What's happened in the midnight?"

He said to the woman, "The engine in my car stalled. Nobody has come across the road, and, you know, I am very hungry. And . . . I . . . I should find somewhere to stay for the night. Could I use your phone?"

"I'm sorry. I'm afraid I don't have a phone. But you may come in and stay one night, and you can go somewhere for help in the morning."

"Good! I appreciate it so much. That's very kind of you."

He came into the house.

"You're hungry, aren't you? Hold on a minute."

She went to warm something for him. A little while later, she served a dish on the table.

"There you go."

At that moment, he was frozen and riveted. Her hand was missing one finger—the same finger that he had cut off of the woman in the wreck. He began trembling. "Is she the same woman as that woman in the accident?" he wondered. "No, she's dead. But what happened to her? Hmm . . . it is rude to ask her, but I wanna know so I can stop shaking." Finally, he asked.

"Uh, excuse me,

continued on p. 12

by Byung Joo Park
and Sun-Im Ryu
Reporters

One hot summer day, students of youth hostel, one of the clubs in Korea University, planned to travel to Gi-Li Mountain for three days. They were supposed to meet at the express bus terminal at 10 a.m. on Friday, August 13. Among them, were Ki-Young and Min-Sun, freshmen at Korea University, who had been close friends since middle school. They were excited because this was their first trip. On the morning of Friday, August 13, Ki-Young was waiting for her group. However, Min-Sun did not show even though all of the other members had come. So, they started for their destination without Ki-Young, who wanted to wait for Min-Sun. However, he did not come there until 1 p.m., after she left by herself. She had missed the bus two times, while she was waiting on this very rainy day. Friday, she followed them to Gi-Li mountain by herself. She arrived at a Gi-Li mountain villa that was the appointment place with the other members at 8 p.m. At that time, they were watching television news. The news said that one express bus crashed near Gi-Li mountain and that most of the people on the bus were dead. Min-Sun found Ki-Young on the list of victims. She was very shocked at that news. She could not believe it, so she wanted to call his house. However, she could not because the telephone line in that mountain villa was out of order, and it would take over 30 minutes to get another mountain villa. Moreover, it was already dark, and it was raining too much. Even though it was very dangerous to get there, she wanted to go there. Finally, she came outside in spite of the fact that her seniors did not want her to go outside. On the way to get there, she ran into Min-Sun, her best friend.

"Ki-Young, did you hear our seniors were dead by an accident?" Min-Sun asked. "...Wait...Wait...What am I saying? I have been with them so far. I heard you were dead by an accident from TV news."

They went back to that mountain villa to make sure what had happened to them. When they went to the villa, nobody was there, and the plug of the TV was pulled out.

Study Abroad Provides Opportunity

By Kelly Franklin
CELL Director

Would you like to spend part of your time as an MC student in a very different location? Want to improve your resume by mentioning your international connections or foreign languages spoken fluently? Would you like a job that could help you save bucks while allowing you to see the mysterious and exotic Orient? Do you have hopes to just travel overseas on your own, unrelated to the College world? If "yes" or even "maybe" is your answer, please read on.

Maryville College has programs and connections that can enable you to see the world while learning or to see the world while earning. The College has several international exchange programs with other schools around the world, and information about many other exchange programs (that meet college approval) in virtually any area of the world you might care to see. Programs run through MC exist in Japan, Korea, Puerto Rico, England, and France. In most cases, you would need to pay no more than what you currently are paying at MC, although of course some travel costs may be your personal responsibility. It's NOT as expensive as you may think—and in many cases, overseas exchange programs can lead you into entirely new directions in your career hunt. Heck, forget careers—just think of the fun and excitement available around the world! To find out about MC programs, contact Dr. Clarice Doucette (phone 8242), who can put you in contact with the professor in charge of any specific program run by MC. If you want to get general information about the various possibilities for study or work abroad programs not directly related to MC, contact Dr. Doucette, or Kelly Franklin Director of International Services (8183).

Perhaps earning instead of learning overseas is a more attractive or viable option for you. Consider finding an overseas job—perhaps even for the summer months. Many opportunities are available; look on the walls outside Isaac's for some such possibilities. If you are graduating soon and looking for good work experience, decent salary and excellent adventure, consider working as a teaching assistant in Japanese public schools in the "Japan Exchange and Teaching (JET)" program. Several MC graduates have been hired by

continued on p. 16

Dismas Offers Myriad Opportunities to MC

by Allison Dunn
Reporter

"Dismas House is a place for freedom and much more," reads the latest Dismas brochure. And, it is all that and so much more. Dismas is a house where several former offenders live, learn how to become employable, and re-learn how to live in society after their release from jail.

This summer, three students from Maryville College lent their time and energy to this place that is set on helping others. Kelly Meacham, 22, a senior at MC, worked as a full-time night manager this summer living in a room just off the office at the house. He found out about the Dismas organization through a good friend, former Echocolumnist Jon Peters, and MC Chaplain Stephen Nickle.

Emily Brock, 20, a junior at MC, was a part-time night manager and chose to use this experience to get nine credit hours in an internship. She found out about Dismas from being a peer mentor last year.

The duties of a night manager include being available at all times for the residents, for head counts at night, and a few other responsibilities. Also, being night manager has a few duties that occur somewhat unofficially around the house. Both Brock and Meacham say that Dismas is largely a "close-knit community" and that a main part of their jobs is what comes naturally - becoming friends with their housemates. Living at the house has changed the way that Meacham "looks at things as an individual and a individual in society," and Brock believes that Dismas House is an "all-around good experience" and would recommend anyone to do anything associated with Dismas.

Brock, a peer mentor for this year, has been working with her orientation class on doing some landscaping in order to help the appearance and hospitality of the house. The Sunday after Homecoming, Brock and her orientation class will be having a work day beginning around 1:00. Anyone interested in helping should contact her at x8323.

In mid-summer, the Blount County house came under new direction when, on July 15, the current House Director, Kristen Chapman, was promoted to East Tennessee Regional Director of Dismas Incorporated, and Susan Godseaux was hired to replace Chapman. Chapman now has an office on the second floor of the Center of Campus Ministry on the MC campus. Godseaux is the owner of Pandora's Book store in Knoxville and has worked with non-profit organizations for most of her life. She found out about Dismas through a chance meeting with Chapman. Godseaux pursued this job because she feels that it "fit me best" because she has experience helping people through that kind of situation is involving her "own background and experience."

Dismas House has changed the way that many of its volunteers and employees look at things. Brock said, "I learned a lot about the criminal justice system and what is wrong with it from listening to the various stories of the residents."

Brock and Meacham are still working at the house, but Brock is no longer living there. She will be night manager one night a week beginning next month and is currently doing the grocery shopping for the house and cooking dinner once a week for the residents. Also, Meacham will be leaving the night manager position soon and would like to train the person who takes his place. Anyone interested in positions or volunteer opportunities at Dismas can call 984-8751 to learn more information.

'My Dream is Coming True!'

ma'am. It's rude to ask about this . . . but can I ask about your hand? Well . . . what, what happened to you? Perhaps you were in an accident or something? Could you tell me why you are missing your finger?"

Then, she suddenly pointed at the man and shouted, "That's YOOOOOOOO!!!"

Unwilling Dream

One night, a girl had a bad dream. In that dream, the girl stayed out until it was so dark she couldn't come home alone.

"I gotta call Mom," the girl kept thinking.

But her mother didn't answer the phone when she called. So, she decided to ride on a train. When the girl walking was leaving the station, she saw a big white van driving alongside of her trying to get her attention. As continued from p. 11 she approached, the door of the car opened very slowly. And then, suddenly, a man wearing white clothes came out quietly, and the girl was stabbed by this man.

"Aaaaagh! Oh, it was a dream. I'm so glad it was a dream."

A few days later, she had to stay out late because of her club activity. It soon got dark.

"I gotta call my Mom."

However, her mother didn't answer the phone.

"Oh, well. I wonder where she is."

She decided to ride on the train to the station near her home. On her way to the station, she suddenly realized,

"Hey, this is exactly the same situation as was in my dream. Oh, boy! What am I gonna do?"

Her heart was beating so fast that she could hear its sound.

"My dream is coming true!"

When she came out from the station, she found a van parked alongside the sidewalk.

"Oh, my god! I'm going to be killed!"

She rushed into a phone booth and called her mother. Again, she didn't answer.

"Come on, come on," she screamed into the phone.

She tried to call her sister.

"Oh, good. Hey, sis. Can you pick me up at the station, please? No! Please, please help me! Hey, it's the same situation as in my dream, and I'm going to be murdered!"

Suddenly, a man wearing white clothes came into the phone booth quietly and said, "Hey, don't do differently against the dream!"

TOP 5 Ways to Save Money While Traveling

1. Ship yourself in a crate marked "Livestock." Remember to poke holes in the crate.
2. Board a train dressed as Elvis and sneer and say "The King rides for free."
3. Ask if you can walk through the Channel Tunnel.
4. Board the plane dressed as an airline pilot, nod to the flight attendants, and hide in the rest room until the plane lands.
5. Bring a balloon to the airline ticket counter, kneel, breathe in the helium, and ask for the kiddie fare.

But if you're serious about saving money, while you're traveling abroad, just get an ISIC--the International Student Identity Card. Discounts for students on international airfares, hotels and motels, car rentals, international phone calls, financial services, and more.

The International Student Identity Card

International House
Maryville College
982-8183

DRB & J-Board Reports

9/14 Two MC students and two non-MC students were charged with disorderly conduct in Lloyd Hall. The four were assigned to counseling sessions to control anger.

9/14 One student was charged with a first offense violation of the alcohol policy in Gamble Hall.

9/17 One student was charged with disorderly conduct in the Fine Arts Center. The student was assigned to counseling sessions.

9/25 Two students were charged with violation of the alcohol policy in Gamble Hall. One received a first offense charge, and one's charges were dismissed.

9/30 Two students were charged with violation of the alcohol policy in Gamble Hall. One received a first offense charge, and one's charges were dismissed.

10/6 One student was charged with disorderly conduct and violation of quiet hours in Copeland Hall. The student received a warning.

10/7 Two students were charged with violating the visitation policy in Davis Hall. The case is pending.

10/7 Two students were charged with violation of quiet hours in Lloyd Hall. The case is pending.

10/10 One student was charged with verbal harassment in Copeland Hall. The case is pending.

Look Into Peace Corps, Parks Jobs

A Peace Corps Recruiter will be on campus on Oct. 28 to interview seniors for full-time positions. The Peace Corps serves over 90 countries. Benefits include a monthly allowance for housing, food, clothing, and incidentals; free medical and dental care; transportation to and from your overseas sit; and 24 vacations days a year. Many student loans are deferrable during Peace Corps service, and you may be able to cancel a portion of Perkins Loans you hold. Post-service benefits include a $5,400 readjustment allowance after successful completion of three months of training and two years of service. Your status as a returned Volunteer gives you preference for federal government jobs. Over 50 colleges and universities offer scholarships and assistantships for returned Volunteers. Come by Career Services immediately if interested.

SENIORS! Don't forget the Senior Luncheon to be held on October 29 in the Proffitt Dining Room. RSVP through the Career Services Office by Oct. 22. Lunch will be catered and seating will be limited to those with reservations.

A summer job seminar will be held on campus on Oct. 29 from 1:00-2:30 p.m. to explore employment at Yellowstone National Park. Author Clint Wilkes will meet with students to offer advice on summer jobs and careers with the park. He has a Bachelors Degree in Political Science and Masters in Negotiation from Harvard Law School. He was recently awarded a Certificate in Mediation from the National Mediation Academy in Dallas and has served as advisor to a Member of Congress and a Texas State Senator. If you would like to be part of this informal and fun meeting, come by or call Career Services at x8220 immediately.

Career Services is now posting many part-time and full-time jobs, internships, and general announcements on the Career Services Notice Board. The board can be accessed through the Sutton Science computer lab.

Bank Clerks, Driver, Assistant Teacher Among Jobs to be Filled

Bank Positions. (1) Proof Operator. Need 10-key skills. Min. $5.00 + incentive pay.

(2) Corrections Clerk. Min. $6.00 + 10%. Basic knowledge of balancing principles, proof operations, teller operations. 10-key skills.

(3) Cash Letter Clerk. Min. $6.00 + 10%. Lift up to 40 lbs. Knowledge of debits and credits; 10-key skills. TN drivers license and good driving record.

(4) Extractor Clerk. Good math skills and 10-key skills. $5.60/hr. min.

(5) Sorter Operator. Lift 45 lbs. Minor machine maintenance. Stand six hrs. Good math skills. $6.00 + 10% min.

Work schedule and full job description of positions are available in Career Services.

Pizza Delivery; Dell Workers. $7-$8 plus tips and mileage for delivery; $5.00-up d.o.e. for dell. Evening schedule and Sat. and Sun. Six openings. FREE MEALS.

Night Manager. Off-campus living permitted at Dismas House. Compensation is free room and academic credit. Dismas is a family-style community of college students and former prisoners.

More information available in Career Services. Any one may apply.

Cooks; Waitresses. $5.00-up d.o.e. for cook and $2.50 + tips for waitress. Evening schedule. Several openings.

1 Music Instructor and 1 Dance Instructor. $5.25/hr. Four hours a day, two days/week for music and 2 hours a day one day/week for dance. Jobs will continue through May. Days and hours flexible.

Dishwasher, Waitress, Bus people, Hostess. $6.00/hr. Flex shifts 6 a.m.-2 p.m.;

4 p.m.-12; 3-11 p.m. for 2-3 months. Several openings.

Food Service Workers. $7.71/hr. Needed to work one weekend per month (8 hrs. each Saturday and Sunday) at McGhee Tyson Air Base. Must be able to commit to long term. A health card is required and can be attained at the local health department for a nominal fee (usually not over $5.00).

Pre-School Asst. Teacher. $6.00/hr. and up depending on class standing. Monday-Friday between hours of noon and 5:30 p.m. Will try to work around school schedule. Start Oct. 11. Must enjoy working with young children. WALKING DISTANCE. 1-2 positions.

Waitresses, Hostess, Dishwasher, Bus People. $6.00/hr. except for waitress ($2.50 + tips). Work days and evenings. Start in three weeks and work seven days/week for three weeks; after that 5 days/week. Located in Townsend.

Attendant/Driver. $8.00/hr. Attend one or two classes at Pellissippi with paraplegic male. Take notes. Attend to personal needs. Drive van with lift to pick student up at home and return. Hours would be anytime between 1 and 7 p.m. on any day(s) Mon.-Fri. if time share, or do all. Must be at least 19 years old.

Crisis Intervention Walker. $50 per walk; $150 for all day Saturday and Sunday. Afternoons, evenings as needed; Mon., Wed., Fri., flexible. Involves therapeutic walking or weekend adventure programs with 13-year-old male in Maryville area.

We also have data entry, child care, telemarketing, motel clerk, retail sales, and many other listings available. Come to Career Services for details.

Reel in These Flicks for Your Fall Viewing Pleasure

by Bo McMichael
Columnist

There's no need for a fancy introduction, so let's get right down to business and talk about some flix.

What do you get when you put Bruce Willis in the desert against 50 guys? Die Hard 4? No, you get a rendition of gangsters playing in the sandbox in "The Last Man Standing." The cast includes Christopher Walken and a great deal of ammunition. It seems that a lone gunman is heading to Mexico and runs into a town full of bad blood. Willis decides to make some money killing off both sides for a certain amount of profit; although, this is, Bruce Willis, and nothing goes as planned (flashback to "Pulp Fiction"). The highlight of the film was sadly not the film itself. The movie was full of holes and more holes. Willis often was the only one speaking for fifteen minutes at a time, and he is no Hamlet. The gun fights were quit amusing for the most part; however, "The Last Man Standing" will be the first one sent to the video store.

Now let me tell you about the highlight side of the movie. It could be found in the audience. I was invaded by reptiles from the swamps of Florida that night. The Gators were in town to take on the Vols and decided to take some R & R at the Foothills Cinema. I was able to engage in short conversation with a die-hard Gator fan. As the movie went on, he felt the action scenes were incredible and gave the movie high regards. My only comment is that he is majoring in under water basket weaving, and he probably does not get out of the pool much.

Next for your viewing pleasure is "Extreme Measures" starring the lovable Hugh Grant and an eerie Gene Hackman. This best-selling novel adapted to the big screen is a medical drama that nightmares are made out of. It seems that someone is using the homeless men of Chicago for guinea pigs, and our hero, Hugh Grant, stumbles face first into the middle of things.

Two things to remember when you go see a medical movie: not everyone acts like they are regulars on ER or Chicago Hope, and bring your attention span. Hugh Grant is no George Clooney or Anthony Edwards; however, he did not do a half-bad job when he removed himself from the operating table. As for your attention span, the movie creeps along with detailed information and eventually climaxes into a very tense ending. I for some reason enjoyed the movie, mainly because it allowed me to clear my thoughts for two hours a consider a different equation in the world.

I also was accompanied by another guest on this week. However, I do believe the snoring halfway through the movie set the mood for this particular young lady, and she gave it a thumbs-down.

The snoring spelled the verdict for this movie critic.

I do believe that the world's rank of authority goes God, Jesus, Tom Hanks, and the rest of the world. I was able to take part in a sneak preview of Tom Hanks new movie, which he wrote and directed. "That Thing You Do" is a story about a group of guys and one summer of fame. Now, if any other human being on the face of the earth starred in this film, it would be ho-hum; however, the man that brought you "Bachelor Party," "Going Bananas," and "Joe versus the Volcano" is in this fantasy tale. This movie has "hit" written all over it.

I will concede that I am a Tom Hanks fan. Nevertheless, I did not think I would enjoy this movie. I am happy to say that I am wrong, and, if you give any movie a chance, this should be the one.

Unknown to the eyes of the critic: "The Glimmerman" - Steven Seagal and Keenan Ivory Wayans try the buddy flix formula. "The Might Ducks 3" - I, myself, would rather see a "Young Guns 3" out of Emilio Estevez.

On the horizon and looking into the future: "The Long Kiss Goodnight," "The Chamber," "The Ghost and The Darkness," and "Romeo and Juliet." One last note to take with you into the day: if someone sits in front of you in the theater, remember do unto others as others do unto you.

Alumni Board and Golden Scotties Reflect on Past

by Carol Corbett
Special to the Echo

Did you even know there was an Alumni Board? I didn't until I first became a member in 1991. Members generally serve a three year term, and I am lucky enough after a couple of years' hiatus to have been elected for a second three-year period. We get to come back to campus each spring and fall, keep abreast of the news at Maryville College, and sometimes make suggestions or give our input on proposed programs and procedures. Alumni Board members care very much about MC and its students.

Faculty and staff frequently attend our sessions to bring us up-to-date on areas of particular interest. Last month we were delighted to learn about the new curriculum that freshmen will be beginning this scholastic term. We were also visited by three student representatives, and it is always a pleasure to talk with the folks who live, work, and study on campus. Their insights are the most important factors in our deliberations.

We are going to make an effort to communicate with the current student population with occasional messages through the Echo. I volunteered to submit the first of-months following the event, I am still enthusiastic about the occasion of my 45th class reunion last May. I especially enjoyed the remarks the 1946 Class President, my sister, Louise Corbett Fulgham made as her class was being welcomed as Golden Scotties - those who graduated 50 years ago. Her comments were particularly interesting to all of us in the dining hall, I believe, because the Class of 1946 had a unique MC experience. World War II had a huge impact on MC and the students there, as it did on our whole society. We listened to Louise talk about the small number of students on campus, and those mostly female;

I heard her tell of the sadness of hearing strains of "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow" in the dining hall night after night, which meant that another young man would be leaving for his wartime duty; found out that United States Air Force Cadets were billeted in Carnegie Hall and could be heard marching in the early morning hours; learned about about ration books to be turned in to the head of the dining hall; and the annual tuition and other costs (under $300 per semester). All these things evoked a different view of life at MC than most of us had experienced.

In some later comments to you, I am hoping to bring together memories from various alumni and board members of the traditions they remember the most from their years at MC. Some of these will be quaint, some will seem ridiculous, and some you may even wish were around today. But it may give you a small glimpse of why MC remains a wonderful memory and an important part of our lives.

The Alumni Board members are going to start receiving regular copies of the Echo, and we all look forward with considerable interest to learning what you are thinking and doing on campus in 1996 and 1997.

Good Answer by Counselor Polly Graff

Dear Good Answer,
Help! I'm a freshman from Atlanta and this small town nightlife is totally cramping my style. What to do? (By the way, I don't have a car.)

Signed,
Bored in Blount

Dear Bored,
So, you're just now realizing that Maryville is not the cultural nirvana that those glossy brochures made it out to be. Assuming your list of leisure activities does not include witnessing the bonding ritual of blue-flamming at Gamble Hall, I do have a few suggestions. First of all, I will admit that it is a bit of a challenging to find worthwhile activities without the aid of a car, but it can be done.

One place within walking distance is Jazzberry General, a groovy little

Dear Polly-Two of my suite-mates got drunk and got these great tattoos last week. Now they're pressuring me to go with them when they get another. Am I ready for a tattoo? Signed, Clueless in Camegie.

Dear Clueless,

So, you only have one nipple pierced, your Celtic pinkie toe ring just isn't cutting it, your magenta mohawk is showing roots, and you're feeling like a major dweeb. What's the next step to perpetual hipness? Why, permanent ink, of course! You can become a human billboard by getting "Ross Perot is a Sexual GOD" tattooed across your back like you always wanted.

I don't know...are you ready? You're the only one who can say for certain, but I sure wouldn't let a couple of drunk roommates pressure me into a pretty big decision boutique/gallery/curiosity shop located on Court Street. (Bonus: last time I checked, they were giving a discount to Maryville students.) If you're looking for a break from the cafeteria, take a walk up to West Broadway and warm up at the cozy Soup Kitchen. Here you will find soup to rival your grandma's, as well as nummy sandwiches and a salad bar. Also within walking distance is the Greenbelt Park. Great for walking, jogging, and writing bad poetry. Keep in mind that people-watching in Maryville is great character reference research for you future English majors.

Before jumping ship, though, be sure to check out social and leisure activities right here on campus. The Office of Student Development can give you info on upcoming events, like that. (I hope their puffy pink Homecoming dress sleeves cover their macho marks.) Maybe you should ask your MOM. While it's true that not everyone who tattoos a sexy (or not so sexy) part of their body is antisocial, violent, damaged goods, or rebelling against mommy or daddy, it is true that, at least in the U.S., there's still quite a social stigma regarding tattoos. It may not be fair, because some tattoos are actually very tasteful and attractive, but I'm quite sure no Fortune 500 company will give you serious consideration with that Cornholio panorama on your forehead. So you see, this is not the type of decision you should make with Rolling Rock in hand. If you plan on working in a fairly professional environment, be prepared to catch some guff, especially if you choose a highly visible body part. (You club activities, and intramural sports. Get involved, you zany socialite! If possible, hook up with a fellow student who has family in the area. This can be a godsend during the holidays and a good getaway form campus anytime. Usually, (and if you're not acting antisocial) you can find someone who shares similar interests, and who happens to have a car. (Warning: Do not become a leech. Your travel privileges will soon be revoked!) I don't care if you're into Itchy and Scratchy full body tattoos or dolly embroidery, you can find a bosom buddy somewhere among our 900-odd students. Other activities too numerous to list in this column lie in and around Knoxville and the Smokies.

If none of this appeals to you, never underestimate the potent rush of a cherry Slush Puppie, easily located at one of our gijillion quickie marts in the country. And never, ever rule out cow-tipping in Vonore as a means of stress-relief. Oh, and by the way, Tuesday night is Count-The-Confederate Flag Night at Krystal. Wear yourself out, Bubb!

Please keep in mind, however, that attending a small-town liberal arts college located in a very dry county can be a blessing in disguise. Harness that Atlanta energy, and focus it on your studies. That is what you are paying for, isn't it? Of course, you could transfer to UT, party hearty, and get your degree in just under seven years! You decide.

yes, permanent testament to your joinerism. You may not like that huge phallic symbol on your right calf half as much when you're a grandma. AND, you can't give blood for at least one year after getting a tattoo. (Dam, I guess Plasma Alliance won't be supplying you with your Taco Bell money this year...)

Well, if you've decided after all of this to go through with it anyway, here are a few pointers. Make sure you choose a certified tattoo artist. Unless your best friend is Van Gogh with a nursing degree, those homemade from scratch kind tend to look really nasty, and you may increase your risk of infection. Also, keep in mind that the pain of the needle is relative to the sensitivity of the particular body part. For instance, if your tuckus is severely calloused from armchair quarterbacking it all week long, this might be a good place to

I want to introduce myself. My name is Polly Graff, and I'm an alumna of Maryville College, raised under the neon lights of Pigeon Forge, and vastly educated in the ways of mortal life, love and talk shows. I have also been blessed with incredible common sense and hold an honorary degree from the Abigail Van Buren Institute of Lifestyle Balance. In closing, I would like to invite you to write me at P.O. Box 2247 with any questions or concerns. All letters welcome (no heavy breathers, please) and all will be read, but I regret there is only room for two questions per issue. Take care, and I won't steer you wrong.

Polly, O.G.
PEACE, Tupac

put "The University of Alabama Blows." In addition, make sure there is enough flesh there to accommodate the size of your design. (Little Debbie-addicted buns should be a good place for his perennial favorite.)

Keep in mind also that tattoos are becoming more mainstream. You'll have to go to greater lengths to impress your suite-mates. Maybe you could get a nice tongue stud. Yeah, that's it! Well, as long as it doesn't clash with your titanium eyebrow bar, that is. On second thought, perhaps you should go to the monster bash as Pinhead instead.

I hope I have helped in your decision. Sorry, but I've gotta run. I have an appointment at my friendly neighborhood parlor. Gotta find a way to transform my "I love Marcia Brady" into a Grateful Dead acid bear....HAPPY HALLOWEEN!

LOVE, POLLY

Kemp Bus Visits MC

— continued from p. 1 —

demonstrate their non-support for the candidate. Others, who were more curious about the political event than anything else, gathered to find out what was happening.

During Kemp's speech, the audience answered with an audible "No!" when he asked the question, "Does anyone think that Bob Dole would allow this country to go into the twenty-first century and leave anybody behind?"

Kemp assured the audience that Oak Ridge would not be hurt if presidential candidate Bob Dole and he were elected to the White House. In response to such an allegation, he said, "We will never try to frighten the people of Tennessee into voting for us; we are going to appeal to your highest aspirations, not your worst fears as Clinton and Gore are doing."

Regarding MC, Kemp said, "This college . . . was the first in Tennessee to give a woman the opportunity to graduate with a degree, and that was 1875. Today, this country has come so far."

"It is also the only college that I know of that teaches sign language," added Kemp.

Throughout his address, Kemp quoted Abraham Lincoln, the sixteenth president of the U.S. and the founder of the Republican party and made some references to Biblical scripture. After Kemp quoted the final stanza of "My Country 'Tis of Thee," singer Lee Greenwood led the crowd in "God Bless the U.S.A."

Study Abroad

— continued from p. 11 —

the JET program in recent years. Successful candidates are placed in Japanese school systems (usually but not always rural areas) as guest or assistant instructors. In addition to fairly good salaries, travel expenses to and from Japan are paid for those who fulfill their one year contract (and even better and more lucrative positions are available to those who wish to stay in Japan longer than the one year period). Contact the offices of Career Services or the International House for more information; Kelly Franklin at the International House can give you many details about the type of work you would be doing and the lifestyle there. Other summer work-abroad opportunities in such countries as Belgium, France, Switzerland, and Germany are available through the International Cooperative Education Program (ICE). See Dr. Doucette for details.

Lastly, for anyone planning overseas travel—both teachers and students—consider purchasing an International Student (or Teacher) Identity Card. These cards provide great discounts on air travel tickets (through Council Travel, now located in Knoxville) as well as on many attractions and resorts overseas. For under $20 you can save substantially on any travel abroad. The cards are available at the International House. Council Travel may be reached at 523-9900.

Whether it's studying or working, many wonderful opportunities exist for students to go abroad. Broaden your horizons, strengthen your resume and have a great experience at the same time—become a world traveler!

Make Your Voices Heard

by Patrick E. Leslie
Layout Editor

As usual, I have found myself perusing the mail list of stories and various other things which need to be placed in the paper, and again, as usual, I have noticed that there is something missing.

Input. There are no letters to the editor or editorial material being submitted by Maryville College students. I know that, to many people, the answer is "So what?" or "I don't have enough time," or "Who cares?"

There is more to this publication, and any other publication, than just news.

At one of the top liberal arts colleges in the South, I would think that more students would be interested in trying to voice their opinions or ideas more.

After all, writing is still one of the key forms of communication in our society.

Moreover, at a place like MC, it is our life blood.

Without communication, we become uninformed and ignorant to the world around us.

Sure, you may be big enough to sit in some room and watch the world go by while talking big, but are you brave enough to drag your conformist non-conformist alternative self away from cable television and spend the 20 minutes it takes to write out something? Will you allow yourself to become complacent like the rest of the world? Or are you afraid that you may be called a loser for not having ideas that conform to everyone else's?

I know you are out there. I see you everyday and hear you whispering in quite corners about what you think. I know you can do it.

Old age and complacency come quickly for those who are not willing to speak their minds and get involved in the world and community in which they live. I could publish books on what I have heard so far this year, but only you can write it.

I challenge you. Stand up and have a voice. Be a true non-conformist, and speak your mind. Share it with the world. If something makes you mad, tell them. If it scares you, share the fear. If you have an idea, set it out in the field to grow.

Support your local Scottie!

photo by Patrick E. Leslie

Clinton Wins Presidency; GOP Senate

by Sarah H. West
Editor and
Matt H. Waters
Copy Editor

Sixteen hundred Pennsylvania Avenue will continue to be the address of incumbent President Bill Clinton. Tennessee proved to be a major battleground this election with candidates visiting the state 23 times during the campaign, including the night before the election.

Clinton had received the necessary 270 electoral votes by the time the Echo went to press. Republican challenger Bob special from The Daily Times

President Clinton, wife Hillary, Vice President Gore, and wife Tipper arrive in Nashville on one of many campaign visits to TN.

One Dole spokesman said in Dole's concession speech that Dole had "fulfilled his political mission," signifying the culmination of Dole's political career, which spanned over three and a half decades.

job," said Sherr.

In Tennessee, incumbent Senator Fred Thompson easily held on to his seat over challenger Houston Gordon by a large margin of approximately 30

"Everything that worked for Bill Clinton worked against Bob Dole."
- Lynn Sherr of ABC News

Lynn Sherr of ABC News commented, "Everything that worked for Bill Clinton worked against Bob Dole," referring to the economy, the Supreme Court upheld policy of gays in the military, and military missions around the world.

"Clearly, he [Dole] was not the man that people wanted for the percentage points, which translates into approximately 260,000 votes.

U.S. Congressman John Duncan of Tennessee's second district also won by a significant amount—approximately 27,000 votes—defeating challenger Dr. Stephen Smith. At 9:45 p.m., Duncan announced in his victory speech that the election was about giving the young people a future.

State Senator Carl Koella, Jr., opposed by Mae Owenby, won by a narrow 199 votes.

Some of the major issues in the presidential election included the economy, health care reform, welfare reform, and education. The economy was a major issue for Clinton voters, who were 54 percent women. Fifty-three percent of Clinton voters admitted that they did not trust Clinton, according to an ABC News poll.

Locally, residents of the city of Maryville voted to accept a liquor referendum allowing alcohol to be sold by the drink in restaurants.

Inside

- Raises on Hold.....3
- Literacy Week.....3
- Homecoming.....4
- Community Forum..5
- Football Fall.....6
- Ladies' Soccer.....7
- Men's Soccer.....7
- MACCO Opens.....9
- New Transcript.....11
- Christmas Child.....12
- New Officers.....13
- Scots for Christmas.14

Highlights

- News.....1-5
- Senate.....13
- Sports.....6-7
- Job Listings.....11
- DRB Report.....11
- Arts & Literature..10
- Features.....12-14
- Advice Column....15
- Op/Ed.....15-16

Dole had received a total of 96.

Clinton barely carried the state of Tennessee with 48 percent of the vote, while Dole had 47 percent, and Reform Party candidate Ross Perot five percent with 28 percent reporting of the vote. The much-courted state's votes are significant because they to some degree measure Vice President Al Gore's popularity and project his chances of winning the state in the election of 2000, should he receive the democratic nomination.

The Senate was projected to remain in republican control, while the partisan control of the House of Representatives was still uncertain at press time. Certain, however, was the fact that whoever controlled the House would have it by a narrow margin.

photo by Yusef Addis Republican nominee Bob Dole spends the night before the election at Knoxville's Cotton-Eyed Joe's.

Election Party Attracts Bipartisan Crowd

by Sarah Christians
Reporter

Maryville College students had the opportunity to enjoy fun, food, and four screens of elections coverage last night. Yosef Addis and the College Republicans organized a party for anyone on campus interested in politics or parties.

The party provided a venue for students of all political persuasions to watch the election returns and discuss issues. There was a large bipartisan turn-out with students debating every angle of each crucial elections issue. No single opinion stood out. Rather, MC students seemed more concerned with watching the political process.

Addis, president of the CRs, said, "We're very excited to have this many people at the party." Addis said that the party was one of the CR's main goals this semester. He also profusely thanked Brian Todd and Lizbeth Opiola for their support from the student senate.

The senate provided the money for the drinks and snacks the party-goers consumed. Addis made it clear that the party would not have been possible without their help.

Among community members that made an appearance was Hubert Patty, a presidential candidate in the primaries this year. Patty seemed pleased to see so many students with an interest in the political process. Although Patty was pleased at student interest, he said that he was "disappointed in the [whole] process." Patty noted that he thought the nation's pervading "I don't care" attitude was one of the reasons that elections were so troublesome. Patty remarked that it seems the nation has lost confidence in the government.

Also attending the party was Dr. Harry Howard, chair of the social science division. "No question that Clinton's going to win," was Howard's first remark. Howard took a moment to discuss the different outcome predictions, noting that it was quite possible that the Republicans would again control the legislature while a democrat was president.

"I think the election results this time make it pretty clear that the American voter is dissatisfied with the current two parties, and what remains to be seen is what kind of shift in political party positions we will see in the future," said Howard. Howard appeared to have enjoyed himself at the party. As students reacted to the counts of the Blount County liquor referendum, Howard remarked, "It's just really crazy."

Concerning the liquor referendum, students
Cont. on p. 9

BSA Forum Reflects on Million Man March

by Allison Dunn
Reporter

An observance of the Million Man March was held in the Center for Campus Ministry on Thursday, Oct. 17, 35 years and one day after the original was conducted in Washington, D. C., by Martin Luther King, Jr.

Larry Ervin, the head of Maryville College's Black Student Association, helped to coordinate a gathering for students, faculty, and members of the community to discuss how the Million Man March has affected the black community today.

Among the seven members of the community who were in attendance were Frank Smith, a representative from the Martin Luther King Center in Alcoa and treasurer of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Bill Watts, a fundraiser for the NAACP; Dexter Stewart, an Alcoa City Commissioner; Rev. Ben Lewis; and MC history professor Dr. Chad Berry. The observance was an open forum that was mediated by Drew Johnson, an MC student and BSA president.

All members of the discussion panel had been previously provided with a list of topics prepared by William Caldwell, BSA vice president. The topics discussed included why black people are voting almost strictly for Democratic candidates, what the original march did for blacks today, affirmative action, and the stereotypes that society has placed on blacks today.

Johnson refreshed the panel's memory of the questions originally presented, and the debate commenced. On the subject of the original March, the overall feeling of the panel was that African-Americans had something to prove to America--that they could gather together peacefully. The March also fulfilled "the need for the feeling of connectedness among African Americans," according to Lewis. Everyone who was involved in the March was a part of a "great opportunity of being together" with people of almost every race, said Berry.

The effects of the March are still considered positive, according to several of the debaters. Stewart pointed out that black-on-black crime is down eight percent all across the country, and Watts has found that, after the March, the number of black-owned businesses is up, as well as the number of blacks that are registered voters.

A large portion of those African-Americans who are registered have been voting for Democratic candidates since the 1930s, said Berry.

Among the programs that the Democratic Party has put into action benefitting African-Americans is "midnight basketball," which the Republicans have consistently complained about, said Smith. This kind of social program has given money to poor communities and allowed them to get back on their feet socially, they said.

The Democratic Party has tried to help, but, according to Lewis, in the long run, "they [the Democrats] take us [African-Americans] for granted, and the Republicans just don't give a damn." Watts agreed but offered advice to black voters by saying that they should "look through all the political garbage at the real issues."

On the issue of stereotypes, there is a "black image in the white mind that needs to be changed," said Berry.

The Highland Echo

Editor

Sarah H. West

Copy Editor

Matt H. Waters

Layout Editor

Patrick E. Leslie

Associate Editor

Chris Stephens

Staff Writers

Sherrie Brents, Tonya Briggs, Shannon Bryant, Sarah Christians, Joey Cody, Eric Daugherty, Allison Dunn, David Dupont, Chuck Gilkey, Kim Eun Jung, Lori Leffel, Andy Long, La-Toyia Lundy, Joe Malheiro, Bo McMichael, Rissa Miller, Kazu Nakane, Sun-Im Ryu, Kim Schuenemann, Michelle Shuler, Christi Stalans, Traci Tidwell, & Allison Watts

Photo Staff

Keli Jennett, Lori Leffel

Cartoonists

Carl Gombert,
Jessica Wilkins

Faculty Advisor

Jeff Gary

Please send letters to the editor, poetry, short stories, photographs, and art to box #2247.

Phone

981-8176

E-Mail

SWest75@aol.com

Corrections

Stephen Smith is running for a House seat, not a Senate seat.

Rissa Miller also played one of the beggars' roles in Three Penny Opera

MC Participates in National Literacy Week

by Sherrie Brents
Reporter

The Maryville College Student Literacy Corps took part in the National Literacy Action Week from Oct. 28 to Nov. 1.

Events sponsored by the Corps included a bake sale and an open house at the MC Families site. The Corps also participated in the National Read-Out and posted literacy awareness posters around campus.

The first manifestation of NLAW came in the form of posters. On Friday, Oct. 25, signs were posted with a message written in symbols instead of letters. This was meant to give the students an idea of what it would be like to be illiterate. On Monday, Oct. 28, additional signs were added next to the first ones with the same message written in English.

The bake sale, held in Fayerweather Hall on Tuesday, Oct. 29, was a fund-raiser for the Corps. Members brought homemade baked goods and accepted donations for the treats instead of pricing them.

Thursday, Halloween, brought the National Read-Out. MC students, faculty, and staff read out loud in Fayerweather's lobby from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. The Corps selected Halloween material to correspond with the holiday. The Read-Out attracted the attention of people walking by. According to Corps member Jessica Garrett, "It directed attention to the Literacy Corps and its purpose."

photo by Kelli Jennett
During the Read-Out, Senior Jennifer Woodhouse selected passages from Ghosts Along the Cumberland.

The MC Families open house was held on Friday, Nov. 1 from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. The open house provided the Maryville community with the opportunity to get a first hand look at the program, which offers GED education to families with children under the age of eight.

Not only does the program focus on helping parents study for their GED, but it also provides the children with educational surroundings to establish a basis for academic achievement later in life. MC Families also provides parenting classes as well as time for the families to interact during the course of the day.

In addition to MC Families, Corps members participate in several other literacy programs both on and off campus. Opportunities range from tutoring MC students to tutoring in the GED program at the Blount County jail. Some Corps members volunteer at Everett High School, home of the Blount County adult literacy program, or work with students from local schools.

The Corps' mission is to assist area residents in their pursuit of a better life through literacy and education. It has established several ties with the Maryville community, promotes literacy awareness in Blount County, and attempts to empower people with education and knowledge.

Corps member Lizbeth Opiola said, "In a county where one out of three residents does not have a high school diploma, I think we offer and provide a valuable service."

Faculty, Staff Raises Delayed Until January

by Sherrie Brents
Reporter

Dr. Gerald Gibson, president of Maryville College, spoke to the faculty and staff of MC about a sobering issue at a meeting on Oct. 22. Gibson told the faculty and staff that there would be no salary increases this November. Treasurer Ron Appuhn and faculty chair Dr. Susan Schneibel spoke after Gibson and elaborated on the subject.

Contrary to popular belief, increased enrollment has not brought a windfall of money to MC. Increased enrollment means increased financial aid, as well as higher maintenance costs. Thus, MC faculty and staff find themselves dealing with the news that they will not receive their salary increases any earlier than Jan. 1, 1997. Several problems with budgets from previous years have made this problem a reality.

Appuhn explained some of the problems to the audience. He said the preliminary budgets from previous years have not reflected actual costs. Thus, there have been overexpenditures in those years.

Previously, the basis for preliminary budgets has been the budget from the year before. Therefore, the preliminary budget for fiscal year 1997 was based on the budget for FY 1996. Because the budget from 1996 did not accurately reflect the higher costs, the preliminary budget for 1997 could not accurately provide for the needs of this school year. As a result, the funds that were anticipated for such areas as MC 2000 initiatives and salary increases were not available.

Appuhn discussed the strategies that will be taken for the FY 1998 to improve present budget problems. The first prong of his plan would be the use of more specific line items. Appuhn also suggested a re-evaluation of all present revenue sources. He would also like to see the college's expenditures relate to its established objectives. Another aspect of Appuhn's plan is to further involve the planning and budget advisory committee in the budget process. This would include multi-year projection of revenues and enrollment. He also intends to complete a preliminary budget in April, with the final budget completed by fall. Appuhn further suggested the use of more budget constraints.

Schneibel followed Appuhn's remarks with an address directed to the faculty and staff. She assured the faculty and staff that the president and cabinet were committed to putting the salary increases as the top priority in the budget process. Schneibel also reiterated Gibson's remarks and recognized the hard work and commitment of the faculty and staff.

Homecoming Delivers Spirited Week for MC Community

by Sarah Christians
Reporter

Maryville College ended a fun and exciting Homecoming Week on Oct. 19. Students, faculty, staff, and alumni enjoyed all of the homecoming week festivities that culminated in a thrill-packed football game. The theme, "Return to Sender," provided many opportunities for fun, creativity, and competition, as well as a chance to honor a few of MC's more illustrious alumni.

The overall winner in the residence hall competition, which was calculated per number of points in each event all week, was Carnegie Hall. Pearsons Hall finished a close second, and Davis Hall came in third. Carnegie placed first in the most important banner and float competitions. Carnegie also placed third in the scavenger hunt. Pearsons won the scavenger hunt and human airball games and placed third in Anything Goes, the banner competition, and the float competition. Davis placed third in human airball and second in the float competition. Gamble Hall placed twice, coming in second in both human airball and Anything Goes. Lloyd Hall and the commuters each placed in only one event. Lloyd took second in the scavenger hunt, and commuters won the popular Anything Goes competition.

And the Queen is Crowned! Kerry O'Keeffe was crowned 1996-97 Queen during halftime of the MC vs. Centre game.

The 1996-97 Homecoming Queen was crowned during halftime of the game against Centre College. Of the five senior women nominated for the title, Kerry O'Keeffe, who has consistently represented her class during homecoming weeks, was crowned. The other seniors nominated for the honor were Allison Pryor, Jennifer Woodhouse, Monica Blackburn, and Tiffany Rudicil. The court was comprised of Meghan Casey, class of 1998; Sarah Knisley, class of 1999; and Callie Calhoun, class of 2000.

As a change of pace from the usual halftime activities, this year MC honored its own 1946 football team, who played in the first ever Tangerine Bowl (now the Citrus Bowl). The 1946 team went to the Orlando playoffs with an undefeated, untied record and four first time All-American players. Each member of the team who attended the ceremony received a plaque in honor of his achievement. The nostalgia-charged ceremony also acknowledged the attending families of deceased players. This ceremony in honor of former MC greats concluded halftime, as well as a terrific homecoming week.

'Dan' Enjoys MC Experience

by Allison Dunn
Reporter

Dan Deffenbaugh, a visiting instructor of philosophy and religion who was hired for a year-long term, prefers to be called by his first name because he is "not that much older" than his students.

He has not yet received his Ph.D. from Vanderbilt University, because this is his fourth year working on his dissertation on philosophical theology and his fourth year teaching on the college level. He considers it something like a "perpetual work-study program."

Thirty-six year old Deffenbaugh said he remembers what it is like to be in college, even though he graduated 15 years ago. Originally from Columbus, Ohio, Deffenbaugh believes that a good student "will always challenge his or her professors." He has reminded his Humanities 390 students of this by getting them to repeat the phrase, "Dan, you're full of crap." He also believes that professors are not here just to teach the students information but also to teach critical thinking which will carry them through life.

Dan Deffenbaugh

Maryville College has been a good experience, according to Deffenbaugh, who has also taught at the University of Tennessee at Knoxville. He especially enjoys the camaraderie he feels with other MC professors. Deffenbaugh has been "very impressed" with how well his MC students have been able to take textual material and apply it to "practical situations." He is still forming opinions about MC as a whole but said that he would say "yes" in "less than a heartbeat" if he were to be asked to return in the fall of 1997.

Deffenbaugh is teaching Humanities 390, Philosophy 201, and Religion 130 this semester.

Dancing the night away . . .

Kathryn McDonald and Todd Smith dance during Homecoming.

Health Care Reform Discussed in 3rd Forum

by Chuck Gilkey
Reporter

University of Tennessee Professor of Public Health Dr. Charles Hamilton spoke to a group of students and professors at the community forum held on Thursday, Oct. 31.

Hamilton began by stating these facts: more than 40 million Americans do not have access to health care. While America leads the world in the quality of health care, the U.S. is 19th in quality health care for the general population. Then Hamilton posed the topic, "U.S. Health Care: Finding Balance in a Pluralist System."

Hamilton asked the audience, "Where is that fine line in public decision-making?" He responded, "Looking to 2000, health care will still be blurred. It is changing rapidly."

Hamilton then quoted some statistics. He said the United Kingdom leads the industrialized world in the amount of access that the general public has to quality health care. He adds the U.S. finds its place among the bottom of that same list behind Canada, Japan, the Netherlands, and Germany.

Hamilton reminded those listening that in the 1992 presidential election that President Clinton promised health care reform but was unable to deliver it. He suggested that the reason was that the popular view that capitalism favors the private market and is believed to create competitiveness resulting in cheaper prices and greater availability for the general population.

Hamilton said, "Government will not get involved until the private sector cannot handle the demand of the general public."

Hamilton stated the goals of the U.S. for health care by the year 2000 as being to "increase the span of healthy life, reduce disparities in health status, and make health care available to a greater percentage of the general public."

Giving problems with the current health care system, Hamilton criticized the government for spending too much money to provide seniors with in-home and nursing home care. He sounded his theory that the government should be spending more money on preventative care. Hamilton said, "The U.S. health care system spectrum is specialized by high quality medical treatment to limited and no access to acute and primary care." He backed that up with the 30 million Americans who have inadequate insurance.

Referring to millions of American workers, Hamilton said, "If our employment changes and we are without employment, we have the danger of sliding to the right where care is limited."

Hamilton also encouraged government to step in and help solve society's problems. Hamilton said, "Health problems derive not only from diseases of the body but from diseases of society." Some of the problems he listed were poverty, violence, substance abuse, and alcohol abuse.

Hamilton said, "As a system we have the most expensive medical system in the world. In 1995 for each man, woman, and child in the U.S., we spend $3,485, and that is more than any other country."

Hamilton said that, as baby boomers start to turn 50, "the system must find ways to slow down chronic disease and their spending of dollars."

One dollar out of every seven in the budget is spent on health care, according to Hamilton. "Federal expenditures for 1995 are almost 19 percent," he said. "State and local government are almost 12.5 percent."

Hamilton concluded by saying the government's responsibility is to "increase health safety and security, capacity building, funding programs for selected populations, promoting health, and reforming the system."

New MC Professor Enjoys Teaching Game of Science

by Allison Watts
Reporter

As a first year professor of science, Dr. Kim Schrum really enjoys her job and especially the students here at Maryville College. Schrum not only enjoys teaching, but also she likes the aspect of learning from and with her students.

Schrum appreciates the size of MC because she herself went to a small liberal arts college in Indiana. She did her graduate work at Purdue University in Indiana and has a degree in analytical chemistry.

This semester, Schrum is teaching natural science 150 and chemistry 117, which is for non-science majors. Schrum said she enjoyed working with her chemistry 117 students because she could get a different perspective from non-science majors. When asked why she went into a career of teaching science, Schrum replied that she had always thought of science as a game, and she liked solving problems.

Schrum, who is originally from Indiana, really is pleased with the area. She and her husband especially like the beautiful fall scenery.

Schrum is the faculty advisor for the student chapter of the American Chemistry Society. She is one of the youngest Ph.D.'s ever hired by MC.

The Fighting Scots Brace for Emory & Henry

by Chris Stephens

Associate Editor
Information

by David Dupont

The Scots went 13 years between wins over Emory & Henry. They will now go for their third win in four years over the Wasps on Nov. 16. The Scots will not only be trying to beat the Wasps, but they will also be trying to end a four game losing streak.

Three years ago the Scots ended their drought against Emory & Henry with a 29-28 thriller. Then, last season, the Scots again upset the favored Wasps with a 6-3 victory in the mud. Since winning three in a row at the end of September and the beginning of October, the Scots football team has been unable to get back into the win column.

The Scots have now lost four straight, and their streak of non-losing seasons will end on Nov. 16, win or lose, against Emory and Henry.

The Scots (3-6) have been in every game but have been unable to come away with the win.

On Oct. 19, the Scots rallied from 17 points down to tie the score at 21-21 against Centre College, only to lose 24-21 in overtime and drop their first homecoming game in three years.

For the game, senior Armand Akiboh rushed for 103 yards and junior Brandon Derrick passed for 219, including scores to junior Brian Clowdis and senior Greg Plattenburg.

The following week the Scots traveled to Wise, Vir., to face Clinch Valley College. Clinch Valley (8-0), ranked No. 6 in NAIA Division II, has had the Scots outdone in recent years, winning the past three games.

It looked as if the Scots were in trouble as Clinch Valley took the opening kick-off and scored two plays later. The Scots showed up ready to go, however, and led 20-17 late in the fourth quarter when a tipped pass landed in the arms of the home team and was returned for a touchdown. Clinch Valley added a late score to make the final score 31-20.

Joey Wood, filling in for an injured Derrick, scored one touchdown on a one-yard run and threw for another score to All-American junior Nathan Davenport. Freshman place kicker Josh Lintz also added two field goals and two extra points to round out the scoring for the Scots.

The losing streak seemed to be over last

photo by Dave Downs

Armand Akiboh runs away from the defenders of Centre.

week as the Scots returned home to face Methodist College. The Scots raced out to a 21-3 halftime lead behind two scores from Akiboh. Akiboh rushed for 186 yards in the first half along with his two scores. Wood hit Davenport for another score.

Methodist responded with 21 unanswered points and were able to come away with a 31-24 win over the Scots.

Akiboh finished the day with 253 yards rushing to put him over 1,000 for the season. This is an all-time record for the Scots, breaking the previous mark set by Thomas Stephens, a 1992 graduate.

Both Coach Jim Pavao, the defensive coordinator, and Coach Carter Caldwell, the offensive coordinator, were disappointed about the game.

"These games have been frustrating and a little discouraging for everyone," Pavao said. "Because the past three games have been lost in the fourth quarter.

"We have just failed to come up with the plays needed to win those games. A couple of breakdowns have cost us the game. We had a chance to beat Clinch Valley, who is a great team, but they were able to take advantage of our mistakes."

Caldwell added, "We just didn't get the job done. The effort and opportunity was there, but the result was unfortunate."

Seventeen Scots seniors played in their last game at Honaker Field, finishing with a four year home record of 9-11.

photo by Dave Downs

Scots Sam King(7), Kenny Cobble(42), Jarod Kocak(55), and Ben Petty(1) bury a defender in the Scots' 24-21 loss to Centre.

Belair Ends Her MC Soccer Career With Win

by Kenny Cobble
Reporter

The Lady Scots finished their season on a winning note, sending senior captain Heather Belair out victorious. A teary-eyed Belair led the team to victory against the University of the South in their second game of the Maryville College Invitational Tournament.

The Lady Scots knocked off the Tigers by a score of 5-3.

The game saw junior Chris Rajkowski and sophomore Jennifer Windrow score two goals each, while Belair booted a goal into the back of the net to finish her college career. About her final appearance for the Lady Scots, Belair stated, "The girls made it awesome! It was a great day for me."

The Lady Scots dropped their first game of the MC Invitational to Cumberland by a score of 4-2. Rajkowski and Windrow each had scores.

The Lady Scots won three of their last five to finish the season at 8-9-1.

Against Tusculum on Oct. 25, the Lady Scots ran off with a 6-0 win. Rajkowski and Windrow once again had outstanding performances with a hat trick each.

After losing a close one to St. Mary's on Oct. 26 by a score of 1-0, the team bounced back to beat Tennessee Wesleyan 2-1 on Oct. 29. After taking the assist from Heather Belair, Jennifer Woodrow scored the first goal, and Chris Rajkowski closed out the day with the second score.

The ladies now turn their focus to the 1997 season, which will see them returning 10 starters and looking toward the post-season. The defense will be anchored by powerhouse juniors Amy Poag and Amanda Carson, while the offense will return a healthy crew that includes Rajkowski and Windrow.

When asked about next season, soccer head Coach Pepe Fernandez said, "We're very excited about next year. Almost every one of the girls are back. We just need to recruit hard and get some backups in the off-season."

photo by Dave Downs

Senior Mark Green chases the ball.

Scots Face Oglethorpe to End Regular Season

by Chris Stephens
Associate Editor

Despite a loss Sunday in the championship of the MC Invitational, the Scots are closing in on a second consecutive tournament appearance.

The Scots (12-4) had won six straight matches before a 1-0 loss to Centre on Nov. 3.

Two of these wins were against ranked teams. Methodist was the top ranked team in the nation, and Emory, who the Scots shut out 3-0 at home on Oct. 30, were ranked number one in the South Region and fifth in the nation.

The Scots jumped all over Emory, scoring just :38 into the match. Senior Mark Green put the Scots up 1-0.

photo by Dave Downs

Junior Jason Smith attempts to steal the ball.

The Scots would later add goals by seniors Donnie Evans and Chris Reid, as Randy Bradley came up with the shutout.

Earlier in the month the Scots defeated Lynchburg on October 25. Senior co-captain Jody Tootle scored two goals as did Reid. Freshman Justin Wright came up with a goal of his own to provide the 5-2 final.

After the win over Methodist that began the winning streak, the Scots rolled of wins over Guilford on Oct 13, Temple on Oct. 19, then after the Lynchburg game, the Scots won 8-3 over Milligan on Oct. 28 on the road in Milligan, TN.

Following the win over Emory on Oct. 30, the Scots won the first game of the MC Invitational over Sewanee.

The Scots escaped with a 1-0 goal as Grant Kelley provided the difference. The Scots did lose both Paul-David Davey and Matt Ledbetter to red cards that made them unavailable for the game against Centre this past weekend.

The Scots should be back at full strength for the remainder of the season and for the tournament should the Scots gain a birth to tournament play.

The Scots final regular season game will be Nov. 9 at home against Oglethorpe at 4 pm.

Inscho Impressed with MC's 'Interactive' Atmosphere

by Eric Daugherty
Reporter

Upon stepping into professor Barbara Inscho's second floor office in Sutton Science Center, one cannot help but smile. Perhaps it is the Schroeder-esque busts of Descartes and Euclid that produce this effect, or maybe it is the various mathematical cartoons that adorn the walls. Whatever the exact reason may be, it is unmistakably clear that THIS is the office of someone who truly enjoys her work.

Inscho, a native East Tennessean, is the newest member of the Maryville College math department. Having completed her undergraduate work at Tennessee Wesleyan University and the University of the South in Sewanee, Inscho is a product of a liberal arts education. With regards to what mathematics can add (no pun intended) to a liberal arts education, Inscho believes that the study of mathematics helps to instill the much needed skill of analytical thinking.

From her experience at MC so far, Inscho has been impressed by the harmony in which the students and the faculty seem to co-exist, describing the teaching atmosphere as very "interactive." According to inscho, her fondness for mathematics was not something that came naturally. "I always thought of myself as more of a word person," she said. Inscho, originally interested in English as a field of study, began to consider teaching math while she was in college. In fact, Inscho can sympathize with students who are plagued by mathematical anxiety. She believes that this understanding helps her teach students who are less-than-enthusiastic about math.

Dr. Barbara Inscho

Even with a job she enjoys in an atmosphere that she likes, there is one thing that still troubles Inscho. During a recent showing of the game show "Jeopardy," the mathematician Euclid was credited with being the father of geometry, a title that Inscho claims does not really fit him. "All Euclid's own work was in algebra, yet he is called the father of geometry. I never really understood that," said Inscho.

Senior Schedule of Events

- Sunday, Nov. 10, 4 p.m. - 7 p.m., Senior Class Picnic, House in the Woods
- Monday, Nov. 11, 9 p.m., Senior Class Meeting, Topic: Graduation in Carnegie Parlor
- Feb., One Hundred Days Celebration and Senior Seminar
- April 18, Wine and Cheese
- May, Senior CIV
- Friday, May 16, Senior Barbecue
- Sunday, May 18, Baccalaureate
- Monday, May 19, Graduation

Cummings Encourages Service at Maryville College

by Shannon Bryant
Reporter

and the outside world.

Students entering the Center for Campus Ministry (CCM) have heard a new voice emerging from behind the venetian blinds of the volunteer services office, a voice which speaks of cheerful sacrifice and giving of oneself to benefit those less fortunate.

This is the voice of Jenny Cummings, the new Bonner Coordinator and associate director of volunteer services. Working with the Rev. Stephen Nickle, Maryville College chaplain, Cummings serves as a community liaison for various volunteer groups on campus, as well as helps with Bonner Scholar placements. She provides a vital connection between MC

Cummings, a native of Knoxville, is a 1995 graduate of MC with a degree in English literature. During her time as a student, she was a Bonner scholar. When asked what she enjoys most about her job, Cummings declared, "I like being back! It's sort of like coming home again." She also enjoys working with the Bonners because she has had the Bonner experience herself. Cummings believes the "family atmosphere" is an integral part of MC.

Cummings' message to students is "Volunteer!" She stresses the fact that there are many opportunities for all interests and talents and always people in need.

Jenny Cummings

MACCO Opens Season

by Michelle Shuler
Reporter

On Oct. 28, the Maryville-Alcoa College-Community Orchestra (MACCO) gave its first performance of the 1996-97 season. Guest artists for the evening's show were Raymond McLain with Family and Friends.

The music-filled concert opened with the overture to Glinka's "Russian and Ludmilla" followed by Grundman's "Second American Folk Rhapsody" and the Rhodes' "Bluegrass Festival Suite" before the intermission.

The second half of the concert opened with selections by McLain including "Troublesome Creek" and "On the Road." The concert ended with Gould's rendition of "American Salute."

Raymond McLain with Family and Friends is a group of bluegrass musicians. Raymond McLain, a talented instrumentalist, plays the banjo and the fiddle. Michael McLain also plays the banjo in addition to the guitar. Ruth McLain Smith plays bass, and Al White performs on the guitar and the mandolin. Alice McLain White is a vocalist. The group is completed by Mike Stevens on the harmonica.

Bill Robinson is conductor of MACCO, and has held the position since the 1991-92 season. Robinson is also orchestra director for Maryville City Schools and Music Director at Mt. Lebanon Baptist Church.

The next performance of MACCO will take place on Monday, December 2, and will feature a 100-voice choir from area high schools. Robinson and Lee Kull will be violin soloists.

Admission to MACCO concerts is free to MC students with student ID cards.

Upcoming Fine Arts Events

November 15. Faculty Recital. Ann K. Taddie. Mezzo-Soprano and Dr. Robert Bonham. Piano. 8 p.m. Fine Arts Music Hall

November 21. Student Recital. 8 p.m. Fine Arts Music Hall

November 22. Senior Recital. Jennifer Brashears. Piano. 8 p.m. Fine Arts Music Hall

November Gallery Exhibit. Bob Wilder. "Portraiture in Leadership"

Party cont. from p. 2

cheered at a report of a majority of yes votes. After the students' loud cheers and applause, Howard said, "We're getting down to the really important stuff now."

For most of the party, it was evident that Clinton was going to win. A few students reacted badly to the reelection. Combining local issues with national ones, the morning." Adam Shepherd said,

"With the way things are going tonight, I may need that liquor by the drink in the morning."
-Adam Shepherd

Even though the CRs anticipated Congressman John Duncan making an appearance at the party, it was no less fun without him. Students found an open and exciting atmosphere in which to voice their opinions and listen to the opinions of others, all while watching the difference their votes made.

Sing it, Saral Sara Baker, portraying Polly Peachum, serenades the audience in The Beggar's Opera.

Students, staff, and faculty, please share with the rest of the Mayville College community your visual art and/or creative writing.

Please mail your submissions to box 2247.

Wanting More

The good ol' days are over;

All my rowdy friends have settled down.

I'm the only one left to chase the girls,

Hit the clubs and cause rumors.

Now, I find myself not only lonely, but alone.

My friends found love, why can't I?

I understand that not everyone is made for commitment.

Am I one of those?

Is there no one out there for me?

If so, I'll accept that.

But, I know I can love; I want to love.

I've broken hearts, and for this I am sorry.

I guess what goes around comes around,

And now it's come around.

I'll take my medicine, and be alone.

I don't want the womanizing anymore;

I don't want the late nights at the club;

I don't even want to be the source of bad rumors.

I don't even want the good ol' days back.

What I do want is to call someone back the morning after.

I want someone that will call at 3 a.m. to Say she misses me.

I don't want an empty bed; I want to hold a girl,

And I want to mean it.

I don't want the good ol' days; I want more.

-Anonymous

Anderson Hall in autumn.

photo by Kell Jennett

by: Jessica Wilkins

MasterCard Acts

Talent show for musicians and comedians

*November 19 *8 p.m.

* FAC Music Hall

*Applications due Friday, Nov. 8, in the Student Development Office

*For more information, call Staci Kerr at x8333 or John McDonald at x8318.

Necessity of Dreams

My grandmother wove a delicate pillowcase with soft nimble fingers nails trimmed to the quick.

Bulging blue veins carried blood that now I pump through nighttime visions in a skull given to me by instinct and desire.

Gray grave woman arthritic restless sleep useless legs stuffed under the covers.

When I grow weary and am compelled to sleep to enter where I have never gone before

Do I dream her dreams?

I imagine a path to her through a garden of roses sewn on the edge of a cotton lawn.

As children we sorted the colored threads for her a rainbow on her lap red to violet left to right.

Blind in old age, she wove by touch sky blue morning glories, red roses purple pansies with yellow faces.

Love stitched. Dream frames.

I sleep in her dark bright garden.

-Mr. Dave Powell
English Professor

Job Opportunities

State Farm will interview seniors on campus Friday, Dec. 6, for underwriter-claim representatives. Salary is $28K. Locations are in Tenn. and Ky. Inquire in Career Services.

Tru Green Chemlawn of Maryville will be recruiting on campus Nov. 15 or the following week for marketing/sales positions. Start $17K plus commission. Possible to make $26K second year. Work Mon.-Fri. 5-9pm on follow-up leads, then call on homeowners next day with delivery of information packet (set own day hours). Any degree. Inquire in Career Services.

Commercial Credit (financial institution) seeks management trainees for Maryville/Knoxville area. Training is 1 to 1-1/2 years with $19K-$20K salary. Placement in own office afterwards with salary increase based on size of office. Resume required. Inquire in Career Services.

CNA Insurance Company in Nashville needs individuals (life specialist trainees) to help process their business - NOT sales. Business background helpful. Prefer 3.0 GPA. Salary range is $22K to $24K. Overtime compensated at time and one half for over 40 hours. Resume required.

Weekend Videotape Editor. Coordinate and edit for 6 and 11 pm newscasts with input from producers. Edit stories and teasers for 6 and 11 pm newscasts as necessary and coordinate ENG playback during newscasts. Deadline is November 12. Resume required. JOB 134.

Gymnastics/Tumbling Instructor for Beginners. Earn up to $12/hr. depending on class size. Need to have had some exposure to gymnastics. Afternoons and evenings 4-5 days/week. JOB 113

Piano Teacher. $8/hr. once a week. Flex schedule. Instruct 11 yr. old in piano (has had 4-1/2 yrs. lessons). JOB 133

Day Care. Assist with infants and toddlers. Any day(s) Mon.-Fri. anytime between 9am-2pm or between 2-6pm. JOB 132

Banquet Wait Staff. $6.25/hr. Help for holidays. Start mid Nov. Flex schedule. Fill beverage glasses, clear tables, set up tables. 5-6 positions. JOB 131

Marketing. $7/hr. Start Nov. 15 through and/or after Christmas. Hand out information for BellSouth at Foothills Mall evenings and weekends. JOB 130

Child Care. $5/hr to pick up from Fort Craig school, take home, and sit with two children ages 7 and 9. Approximately 3pm-6pm Mon.-Fri.. Can time share. JOB 129

Office Assistant. Mail order music store. Negotiable salary. 15-20 hours/week. Answer phone, entering data. Must have good phone skills and be honest. JOB 128

Child Care giver. Flex schedule 2-3 nights/wk. 4:30 pm-midnight. Stay with children (self sufficient) ages 11, 9, and 7. Need ASAP. JOB 127

U.S. Postal Service. $7/hr. Christmas workers needed Dec. 2-31. 2pm-5pm and 8:30 pm-11:30 pm. JOB 126

Home Depot Cashier, Sales. at least $6/hr. 4-8 openings. Weekends, evenings, and/or holidays. Applications available in Career Services. JOB 125

Bio Med. $7.80/hr. Lab assistant needed at UT Medical Center. 20 hrs./week. Need two yrs. chemistry, 1 yr. biology, 3.0 GPA. JOB 122

Co-Curricular Transcript Available

Student Development is offering a new program, the co-curricular transcript. A co-curricular transcript is an official college document that shows your involvement in on-campus activities while at Maryville College. It will look very similar to your academic transcript. These transcripts can be sent with a graduate school application or as part of a job application. The college will also use this information to record your involvement while at MC, and it will become a part of your permanent record.

The transcript will include: memberships in organizations and offices held, athletic involvement, scholarships and awards received, and community service completed.

To get the program started, we need each returning student to provide us with a list of activities she has been involved with in the past. This list will be verified by the advisor associated with each activity. In the future, this information will be automatically entered on your transcript.

For more information about this program or to turn in past involvement, call Career Services at x8220 or stop by the office on the second floor of Fayerweather Hall.

DRB and J-Board Reports

10/7 Two students in Davis received warnings for visitation hours violation.

10/7 Two students in Lloyd received warnings for quiet hours violation.

10/10 One student in Copeland was sentenced to four counseling sessions for harassment.

10/10 Eighteen students in Lloyd were charged with alcohol policy violation and disorderly conduct. One student received first offense. All the students cited received warnings and notices on their files, and they could be suspending if they are involved in this type of incident in the future.

10/10 One student in Lloyd received a J-Board hearing for alcohol policy violation, disorderly conduct, and harassment.

10/10 One student in Lloyd received a J-Board hearing for alcohol policy violation, disorderly conduct, and failure to comply.

10/10 Two students in Lloyd received a J-Board hearing for violations concerning alcohol policy, disorderly conduct, and dishonesty.

10/10 One student in Carnegie received a warning for having alcohol in a public place.

10/18 One student in Carnegie received a warning for having alcohol in a public place.

10/19 One student in Gamble was charged with alcohol policy violation. The case is pending.

10/20 One student in Pearsons was charged with drug abuse. The case is pending.

10/24 One student in Gamble was charged with disorderly conduct. The case is pending.

Holiday Spirit Crosses U.S. Borders for One Freshman

by Andy Long
Reporter

One student at Maryville College has the giving spirit of the holiday season and uses it for the good of those often forgotten. Jessica Adams, a freshman, has organized a local Operation Christmas Child program for MC and Blount County that focuses on deprived children in war-torn countries.

Adams is asking for used shoe boxes to be filled with items such as toys, personal hygiene products, and articles of clothing to be sent to boys or girls up to the age of 14.

"It's easy for us to get caught up in the annual holiday stuff. We pull out our Christmas list and say 'Okay, here it is,'" Adams said. "But if we think about it, the kids in Bosnia don't have much of a Christmas list. Any gift means a lot to them."

These shoe boxes will be sent to Bosnia, Romania, Rwanda, Jordan and other war-torn countries. The ultimate destination for these shoe boxes is not a specific country but specific children, who have been orphaned, stricken with disease, impoverished, or severely disabled.

The movement has been catching on nationwide and was developed under the auspices of Franklin Graham, the son of evangelist Billy Graham, and his organization, Samaritan's Purse. In 1994, 100,000 boxes were distributed, and last year the number of boxes distributed rose to 800,000, according to Operation Christmas Child literature.

"We see candy canes and just give them away without any thought. But to the kids in Bosnia, they think 'Wow. This is food,'" said Adams.

Those interested in participating can also include a note and a small donation (around $5) to cover costs incurred in shipping the boxes overseas. The boxes will be collected from Nov. 11-16 at First Baptist Church of Maryville, which is located near the court house on Lamar Alexander Parkway, but students can also drop off filled boxes in the Center for Campus Ministry. On Nov. 17, volunteers will begin packing the shoe boxes into large crates. On this day, students can bring their boxes and wrap them there. Volunteers are welcome to help pack crates, and lunch will be provided.

"I just got the ball rolling," Adams said. "God is doing the rest."

Having been involved at her church near

Dayton, Ohio, Adams decided to get organized here instead of attempting to participate long-distance.

She hopes to involve as many groups and persons as possible. For more information, call Adams at 981-8517.

photo courtesy of Department of Communications

Jessica Adams presents her gift-filled shoe box destined for an underprivileged child in a war-torn country.

TRAVEL
U.S.A.
FROM $93

CALL FOR FARE DETAILS!
EXCLUSIVE AIRFARES FOR STUDENTS
SPECIAL AIRFARES FOR FACULTY & STAFF
STUDENT & BUDGET TOURS
INTERNATIONAL STUDENT ID CARDS
TRAVEL GEAR & GUIDEBOOKS
WORK ABROAD PROGRAMS
HOSTEL CARDS
EXPERT TRAVEL ADVICE

Council Travel
1641 CUMBERLAND AVENUE • KNOXVILLE, TN 37916
523-9900
<http://www.cice.org/travel.htm>
EURAILPASSES ISSUED ON-THE-SPOT!

OPERATION CHRISTMAS CHILD

How to Fill a Shoe Box

Find an empty shoe box. You can wrap it—lid separately—if you would like, but wrapping is not required.

Determine whether your gift will be for a boy or girl and their age category: Infant, (2-4), (5-9), or (10-14). Place the appropriate boy/girl sticker from your brochure on the TOP of your box and mark the correct age category.

Fill your shoe box with a variety of gifts from the following categories:

- Small toys: stuffed animals, dolls, balls, cars, etc. (No toy guns, knives, or other war-related items, please.)
- School supplies: pens, pencils and sharpener, crayons, coloring books, writing pads/paper, solar calculator
- Hygiene items: toothbrush, toothpaste, soap, comb/brush
- Other: T-shirt, socks, Bible story picture books, sealed hard candy and gum (no other food items, please)

Please do not include items that may easily break or leak.

You may enclose a note to the child and a photo of yourself or your family. (If you include your name and address, the child who receives your box may write you back.)

Enclose $5 or more in the envelope from your brochure and place it in your shoe box to help cover shipping and other costs related to Operation Christmas Child. (Checks are recommended rather than cash.) Place a rubber band around your shoe box and lid.

For shipping and collection information, or if you have any other questions, call 981-8517.

Senators Prepare for 2000

by Sun-Im Ryu
Reporter

The freshman senators for the class of 2000 are Nathan Anderson and Smith Jean-Philippe. Both leaders have goals in mind to help their class and Maryville College.

Anderson, from Strawberry Plains, Tenn., is majoring in environmental studies and political science. He is a Bonner scholar, and he likes to play soccer.

Anderson ran for senate "to help lead the class of 2000 into the next millennium." He said, "I want to see a lot of things done that I know need to be done." He regularly talks to students to get their views on issues.

Anderson said, "By the time my class graduates, there's a lot of changes that are going to be made here at Maryville, and I think our class is going to have a very big impact on future classes."

Anderson wants students to tell him their concerns. Students can contact him at x8616.

Jean-Philippe, the other freshman senator, is from Miami, Fla. His major is computer science and business. He likes sports, especially football, and music.

Jean-Philippe said, "My goal is to make MC a more enjoyable place with a fun, learning environment."

He said that he ran for senate "to make a difference. I want to be involved in decisions that affect the students," said Jean-Philippe. Students can contact him at x8663.

Having a desire to be involved, Anderson and Jean-Philippe would like to help their class make progress for MC.

Officers Promote Spirit and Pride

by Tonya Briggs
Reporter

The sophomore class of Maryville College is led by three officers who are ready to leave a mark in the history of MC. The president is Ryan Stewart, vice president Jennifer Windrow, and secretary/treasurer Erin Palmer.

Stewart, class president, is a biology/pre-med major from Winchester, Tenn. He is involved in the MC student senate, the pre-med society, and the Fellowship of Christian Athletes. Also, Stewart is a residential assistant in Copeland Hall. He ran for president so that he could give back to the college what it has given to him. Stewart is full of school spirit and is the chair of the spirit committee in the senate.

He said, "I have gained a lot of pride and spirit for Maryville in the short time I've been here, and I'd really like to increase the school spirit in the sophomore class."

Windrow is the sophomore class vice president. She is from Murfreesboro, Tenn. and is a biology major. She is a member of the girls' soccer team and is currently on the Lady Scots top ten list for season goals and total points. She said, "I ran for office in order to make a difference and to help my fellow students in accomplishing changes throughout the school." Her goal for the class of 1999 is to make the class one that will be remembered. The sophomore class secretary/treasurer is Palmer of Winchester, Tenn. She is a political science major, a member of the soccer team, a peer mentor, a Bradford scholar, and a member of FCA.

Palmer ran for office in order to take an active part in the improvement of MC and to represent the class of 1999. She said, "I would like to see the class of '99 leave a memorable mark on MC and positively influence its future."

All three officers are taking an active part in making the sophomore class an example of spirit and pride to the rest of the MC community.

I have gained a lot of pride and spirit for Maryville in the short time I've been here, and I'd really like to increase the school spirit in the sophomore class.
-Ryan Stewart, Sophomore President

photo by Dave Downs
MC President Gibson and the Scotty Dog tour the campus in the Homecoming Parade.

Fall comes to MCI A tree outside of Anderson Hall starts to lose its leaves as winter begins to move in. photo by Keli Jennett

DANCE ALL NIGHT AT THE I-PARTY

We will play many kinds of dance music including ASIAN, SOUTH AMERICAN, AMERICAN, ETC. YOU CAN BRING YOUR MUSIC THAT YOU WOULD LIKE TO PLAY (ONE SONG PER HEAD ONLY). FACULTY, STAFF, STUDENTS WITH VISITORS ARE WELCOMED!!

COME JOIN THE FUN!

DATE: Friday, November 22

PLACE: Proffitt Dining Room

TIME: FROM 7 p.m. TO 11 p.m.

ENTRANCE FEE: With this ticket--$3.00

No ticket--$5.00

(Only ONE PERSON PER ticket.)

RSVP NAME: _____

Address: _____ P.O. Box: _____

PHONE: _____

☐ I Would Also Like to JOIN the INTERNATIONAL Club. This is your discount entrance ticket to the I-Party.

SCOTS FOR CHRISTMAS

___ Yes, I would like to 'adopt' a child.

___ Yes, I would like to 'adopt' a family.

___ Please send me more information on Scots for Christmas.

Name of group _____

Contact person _____

Phone _____ Box _____

I am interested in 'adopting' ___ kids.

Please return to box 2216 by Nov. 10.

The Travels of Kazu: Volume I

by Kazu Nakane
Reporter

In this column, I'll show you my cross-cultural experiences in a series. For this time, it's about the bathing customs between Americans and Japanese.

For me, my life in the United States is great. I enjoy staying here and never feel homesick. I am satisfied about even food because there are more kinds of Japanese groceries at Kroger than I expected. If I really miss Japanese food that we can't get around here, I can go to Oriental food stores in Knoxville.

But I have one thing that I can't stand--the bathing facilities. We don't use baths just to wash ourselves but also to warm ourselves by soaking slowly in a deep tub full of hot water. It is pretty deep, so we can sit in it at right-angles. The actual washing and rinsing are done outside the tub, on the floor mainly made of tiles. Baths are constructed to allow the water in the tub to be heated directly, so, when the level of hot water drops, it is topped up with cold water and reheated. If not, we also can add hot water, of course. A number of people use the same bath and take turns, and the tub is emptied after the last person has finished.

Also, I was able to watch many movies and soap operas in Japan, and I envied them for their bathtubs. On the screen, a lady was soaked in a bathtub full of bubbles. While I was watching, she scooped up the bubbles with both hands and blew them off. Actually, I wanted to try that! It's cool, isn't it? But when I arrived to my room, unfortunately, I found out that I can't do that because the bathtub is so, so shallow. What a pity! I can't do it!! Do you hear me?

But I didn't give up. One day, I turned a faucet and filled the bathtub with hot water. It wasn't warm enough for me because our house is too old, probably, but I didn't mind so much. I couldn't buy a soap that makes a bunch of bubbles, but still I was excited very much.

"What a bummer..."

When I laid down in the bathtub, the surface of the hot water went around only the back half of my body. My bathtub was so narrow that I had to stoop. I felt like a wintry wind blew through my bathroom.

Every time I finish bathing and open the curtain, I have to face a wide mirror put on the wall right in front of the bathtub. I still don't understand why I have to see my whole body in the nude and start posing. Also, because the toilet and bathtub never are in the same room in Japan, the fact that I have to see a john opening its mouth waiting for me every time I get out of the bathtub makes me feel tired.

In that way, I became immune to the American bathing style. I might be missing hot springs as much as I miss Karaoke.

Scots for Christmas Needs Your Help

by Keli Jennett
Special to the Echo

The Maryville College Circle K Club is sponsoring the second Scots for Christmas, and they need your help.

For those of you who are not familiar with this activity, Circle K is getting the names and Christmas lists of needy children and families in Maryville and Alcoa from the Fraternal Order of Police and handing over these lists to organizations interested in helping make Christmas better for underprivileged children.

You can choose as many items off that list as you want and buy them for these children. These lists are not extremely long or expensive, usually around $20. The families are then invited to the MC basketball game on Dec. 7, and after the game there is a party where they receive their gifts. Santa Claus will be attending the party, and you and your group are also invited to attend and join in on the festivities.

Watching these children light up when they get their presents is well worth your efforts.

If you or a group of faculty, friends, staff, or whoever would like to "adopt" a child or family, or even if you would be interested in helping out or learning more information on Scots for Christmas, please call MC students Keli Jennett at x8703, Rena McCullough at x8708, or Brandl Wilson at x8413 for more information by November 10. Thanks!!

Bo's Review Highlights Three 'Must See' Fall Movies

by Bo McMichael
Reporter

What is in a name? Usually, when you scroll down the list of movie titles in the newspaper, you would tend to look away from the title "Sleepers." This would be a major mistake in movie-going etiquette. Barry Levinson directed this star-studded flick starring Jason Patrick, Brad Pitt, Robert DeNiro, Kevin Bacon, Dustin Hoffman, and Brad Renfro.

This epic film spans the life of four boys who in their playful years do the unforgivable and are punished.

The movie was incredible. Running two hours and 40 minutes, it becomes a long tale of revenge in which the viewers become deeply involved. Patrick was incredible, as was DeNiro. The movie at times is disturbing; however, the ending will leave you with a sense of freedom and fairness.

It is Halloween time, and titles such as "The Ghost and The Darkness" suggest a haunted house of horrors. Wrong! Consider two lions in Africa and about 80 dead bodies surrounding them, and you have "The Ghost and The Darkness." Val Kilmer and Michael Douglas star in this true-to-life film about two lions and one large meal. When Douglas shows up, the picture begins to pick up and then really takes off.

The last of this triple feature review is a farewell kiss good-bye. "The Long Kiss Good Night" stars Geena Davis and Samuel L. Jackson. This film brings Renny Harlin, the director of "Die Hard 2" and "Cliffhanger," back to the big screen. His marriage to Davis last year assured her of the role of lead actress in this new action film. "The Long Kiss Good Night" is an amnesia film with an attitude. It seems that she lost her identity eight years ago, and now people are trying to kill her—simple plot.

I have three words—Samuel L. Jackson. This man does more for this film than peanuts do for butter. His humor and wit allow a so-so action film to become a thrill ride for the fall. If you need a break, go take a long kiss good night.

"Romeo and Juliet," "Michael Collins," and "Bound" are also out in the theaters and are all definite must-sees!

Polly Graff's 'Good Answer'

Dear Polly,

I was sitting in class and I noticed there were obscenities written about me on the desk. Do you think people will believe it? Please give me advice on how to deal with the embarrassment.

Defamed on Desk

Dear Defamed,

Why students feel the need to write obscenities on the desks is unfathomable to me. I am sure that if you read on chances are you are not being insulted by people of the highest intellectual caliber. Many students doodle and some go as far as displaying tasteful pieces of original creativity on desks. Instead of wasting your creative flow on a desk, why not save all that energy and submit your work to Impression? (For those of you who are not familiar with Impressions it is our literary magazine.) Hey, not so fast, bathroom wall readers, that question was only directed towards the creative thinkers. I am almost sure the Impressions staff would not like to hear from bathroom wall copycats.

Aside from the more creative artful displays students tend to look at while in class, there are some students that obviously can not muster up a creative thought; therefore, they think they must write obscenities about students, bodily functions, or draw pictures of pot. It really does not take much creativity or talent to come up with the saying, "For a good time, call--." The students that take the time to write such statements should take creative writing with Mr. Dave Powell. What kind of mental giant writes "2 good + 2 be = 4 gotten" on a college desk? I hope the author was reminiscing about middle school yearbook signing days.

I say give it a few days and your misfortune will be covered up by a poem, a comment about marijuana, old middle school sayings, or replaced by yet another brainless saying that someone found on old bathroom walls. You could ink it out yourself, but please do not attempt to etch it out. Writing on the desk is not a great thing to do; however, it is preferred over etched in work. On another note—someone read "For a good time, call--" and decided to file that statement away in his brain for future use. Someone needs to find out who originated that phrase and split plagiarism fines with them.

Any way, I certainly hope that the students of MC do not pay much attention to the obscenities written on the desks. If you are the type of person that believes "desk talk" is "true talk," keep in mind the next set of obscenities could be directed towards you. Would you want people to believe it? In closing, obscene desk doodles and writing are very disturbing; however, there is no way to prevent them. All we can do is ignore the ignorance and admire the art. Let's all hope that someday the brainless get a clue, even if it is just one -- close the door and lock up all those old middle school sayings.

Children who come from Alcoholic or Other Dysfunctional families often . . .

- Guess at what normal behavior is
- Have difficulty following a project through from beginning to end
- Lie when it would be just as easy to tell the truth
- Judge themselves without mercy
- Have difficulty having fun
- Take themselves too seriously
- Have difficulty with intimate relationships
- Overreact to changes over which they have no control
- Constantly seek approval and affirmation
- Usually feel that they are different from other people
- Are super responsible or super irresponsible
- Are extremely loyal even in the face of evidence that the loyalty is undeserved
- Are impulsive—they tend to lock themselves into a course of action without giving serious consideration to alternative behaviors or possible consequences; this impulsivity leads to confusion, self-loathing, and loss of control over their environment

(Source: Dr. Janet Woititz, Adult Children of Alcoholics)

If any of this applies to you, or you would like to learn more, please come to the CCM on Wed., Nov. 20, at 7 p.m. Linda Behel of Cornerstone, R.T.C., will be speaking on Alcoholic and Dysfunctional Families. A support group will be formed for dealing with these issues.

"Our purpose is not to seek blame for the past, but to seek solutions which may enhance one's future."

'Dirtiest Word of the 20th Century'

by Matt Waters
Copy Editor

Sometimes, life is rough. Take mine, for example. Generations of breeding have produced a finely-tuned, brown-haired, gray-eyed, light-skinned, mentally-competent young adult named Matthew H. Waters. I have a great family and lots of friends, and I am very well socially adjusted. So, what's my problem?

I have a bone to pick with almost every single one of my ancestors. For some unknown reason, all but one drifted to the United States from England or some other WASP-producing country. This is not necessarily bad in all circumstances—for instance, I can get a great tan, and sunburns are practically nonexistent. But, having a Baywatch body can get me only so far.

College is really a wonderful experience. We students are highly trained by the likes of Dave Powell to be open-minded, accepting individuals.

Appearances do not seem to matter, because I will get the same grade in an 8 a.m. class if I show up daily wearing a neatly ironed Gap original or the knee-hole-enhanced Dumpster spin-off I generally use to wax my car ("Cool oil spot, Matt - I'll have to try one!"). Basically, fashion plates are treated the same as people who look like they live in refrigerator boxes. This rule applies to skin color, too. While we are in school, black is the same as white, cerulean is the same as burnt umber, and so on. We should all enjoy this phase while it lasts, because it will sail right out the window as soon as we receive our diplomas.

When I apply for a job, the importance of my skin tone will suddenly be magnified. Even though I will be fully qualified and will have years of practical experience for a particular job, I may be passed over because people who resemble me are so common in the workplace. Although an employer would probably be pleased to have an office full of hard-working, dedicated Matthew H. Waterses, such a working environment will never be possible. Courtesy of the actions of the federal government a few decades ago, that employer may be required to have a certain percentage of his employees be of a minority race. What this regulation boils down to is that, although color-challenged I may be far more qualified than the ethnicity-enhanced other applicant, the employer might have to hire the lesser-qualified person.

I don't know why I am the way I am. Nobody ever asked me if I wanted to have this appearance. Just one look at me will reveal that I am embarrassingly . . . Caucasian. I am the poster child of the dirtiest four-letter word of the twentieth century. When I find out who saddled me with this burden, somebody's head is going to roll.

Dear Editor,

I am a sophomore here, so I have seen it before, which is why I am so upset by it. The students using the trees in front of Pearsons as their personal recreation area, throwing toilet paper through them, obviously have never been informed of the fact that they are in college now, and juvenile pranks such as this are what 15 and 16 year olds do, not those who physically have reached 18 and are now in governmental eyes an adult. In their cases I think the term "adult" should be used very loosely.

I believe in fun, but I also believe in pride for one's school. Toilet paper through the trees does not show pride but childishness. There is a place for fun and games; this place is not the trees in front of Pearsons.

Do these students have so little pride in Maryville and themselves as to think this kind of behavior is "cute" or necessary? I would think not. If they need to unwind that badly, can they not go to Lloyd beach where no one will see their foolishness, or play in the gym, or go to Isaac's? Have they so little dignity that they feel they must "show-off" to prove something? If the same thing were done to a tree in their front yard at home or a tree in front of the window they look out of every day, I think they would be just as upset as myself.

College is a learning experience, not Romper Room. If they want a romper room, then they can go home and build one. In the meantime some of us like the trees the way they are, free of toilet paper streamers. I came here for an education, not an exhibit in juvenile delinquency.

Sincerely,
Rebecca Bowman

Dear Editor,

The campaign season has come to a close, and Bill Clinton has consistently taken credit for the great successes of the 104th Congress, which was controlled by the Republicans for the first time in 40 years. But why have the heads of Clinton's political party continued to blast the record of the Republican Congress? The answer is really quite simple. President Clinton can claim a dismal record and has to take the credit for the things that Republicans have worked hard to pass. Clinton is a vulnerable candidate who has no real strong support aside from the support of the liberal establishment. If he did not take credit for things, he would face the doom of a one-term presidency.

The heads of the Democratic party could not claim any real success in their 40 years of control of the House and Senate. They must blast a Congress that has been devoted to reform. Demos have grossly misrepresented the Republican record.

No legislative body is without its faults, and this Congress is certainly no exception. Republicans should not have shut down the government. But on the other hand, did any Democratic congress in recent memory compile such a record? This congress passed real welfare reform. This bill actually made recipients who were able to work go to the workplace. Republicans took the initiative to make congress live under the laws they pass. This Congress also made a strong attempt to pass a balanced budget amendment and require a super majority to pass tax increases, except for in true emergencies such as war or economic crises.

The Republican Congress can claim many successes, but the most important one is that they have not broken their promises to the American people. I will close by saying that we should support these Republicans because they are our true friends in Washington D.C.

-R. Adam Shepherd

Opinion Poll

For whom would you vote for President?

*Special thanks to Miss Ribble's Statistics 120 class.

Caldwell washes out MC laundry problems

by Patrick E. Leslie
Layout Editor

When Maryville College students return to the dorms in January, they will notice a few changes to the laundry facilities in the residence halls.

Michelle Ballew, director of residence life, said that Caldwell, the company currently running the laundry facilities, has been awarded a 10-year contract to oversee the laundry rooms. With this new contract now in place, Caldwell will begin making some improvements to the facilities free of charge to the college.

The first major change will take place over the Christmas holiday. During that time, Caldwell will paint and retile the laundry rooms in each dorm. This will help improve the overall atmosphere of the rooms and add a much-needed new look to the facilities.

Moreover, Caldwell will be installing new dryer vents to give these machines improved ventilation so they can dry clothes more efficiently. In addition to this change, the times on the dryers will be reset from the current time of 48 minutes to 54 minutes, allowing six minutes of extra drying time.

The improvements to the dryers, however, has led to a small increase in the price charged per load of laundry dried. It will rise from the current 50 cents to 75 cents in January, so MC students should remember to bring a few extra quarters with them when they intend to do laundry. The price for washing a load of laundry will remain the same — 75 cents.

In addition to these changes, Ballew said, over the summer there will be more improvements made. Caldwell will start installing all new machines in the laundry rooms.

These new machines have a few added goodies that should help make the process of doing laundry a little easier. They will be equipped with a Smart Card system. This system uses a card similar to an Automatic Teller Machine (ATM) card which students can insert into the machines, thus allowing them to avoid the hassle of trying to find quarters late on a Saturday night and making trips up and down the stairways a little easier.

This system is set up so that students will purchase laundry credit before they arrive in the fall.

Then, if a student runs out of laundry credit, he will be able

Cont. on p. 2

photo by Patrick E. Leslie
Adam Gil and Rhett Baggett remove their laundry from a clothes dryer in Copeland Hall.

Inside

Roundtable.....	2
Worship.Revival....	3
Community Forum....	3
January Term.....	4
Hot Hoops.....	6
Team Questioned..	7
Choir Specials.....	8
FCA Activity.....	10
Interesting Thesis..	11
'Ransom'ed.....	13
Life as Kazu.....	14
Sarah's Column....	16

Highlights

News.....	1-5
Senate.....	4
Sports.....	6-7
Arts.....	8
Arts & Literature....	9
Features...10-11, 13
Job Listings.....	12
Advice Column....	13
Op/Ed.....	13, 15-16

by Matt Waters
Copy Editor

Seniors who had planned to graduate on Sunday, May 18, may have a surprise coming.

A change has been planned in the date for commencement for the classes of 1997 and 1998. In the past, baccalaureate services were traditionally conducted on the morning of graduation, which was typically a Sunday. These were then followed by commencement exercises in the afternoon.

However, this year, baccalaureate will remain on Sunday, May 18, but the commencement activities themselves have been moved to the morning of Monday, May 19.

"The cabinet had a discussion concerning this matter after last year's commencement," said Dr. William

Seymour, the vice president for student development. "The heat was a dangerous factor this past May."

With a temperature climbing to 90 degrees coupled with direct sunlight, some people in the audience became ill at last year's ceremony. "This move to Monday morning will make commencement more enjoyable for everyone," Seymour said. "It will definitely make for a more comfortable setting."

One major problem presented with conducting commencement on a Sunday is the crunch the registrar's office must undergo in order to produce grades and graduation honors. "There is an issue of getting the grades done," said Seymour. "Because of the information the registrar needs in order to complete seniors' files, the people in that office are currently working right up to the graduation itself."

Another issue that has arisen with a Sunday graduation is church and religious services that are traditionally held on Sundays. "We need to keep our relationship with our community's churches," said Seymour. "If baccalaureate conflicts with church services, that's okay. But if commencement coincides, that's a different story."

Maryville College President Dr. Gerald Gibson and his cabinet, who made the decision to change the day of graduation, did not decide to make the move without consulting several students. The cabinet, which includes Vice President and Treasurer Ron Appuhn, Vice President for College Advancement Dr. Elton Jones, Vice President for Admissions Donna Davis, Seymour, and Gibson, chose to reassign graduation ceremonies to Monday morning after testing the opinion of a number of MC students. "We talked to about a half-dozen senior student leaders and got good feedback from them," said Seymour.

Having commencement exercises on a Monday is a return to a format that was used many years ago, said Seymour.

Although the change of day may seem like a step in the right direction with a salute to the past, many seniors are opposed to having graduation on a Monday for several reasons.

Senior class president Kerry O'Keeffe pointed out that the non-local families of more seniors could feasibly attend the ceremonies, were they held on a Sunday. "I think this move to Monday will limit out-of-town families attending graduation," she said. "This decision affects a lot of people, including those who have seen these seniors

Cont. on p. 8

Roundtable meetings set for year

by Tonya Briggs
Reporter

Just as United States President Bill Clinton is concerned about the issues of the American public, so is the executive cabinet of Maryville College of its community of students. President Dr. Gerald Gibson and Vice President for Student Development Dr. William Seymour hold periodical meetings with students to find out what is happening on campus. This meeting is called the President's Roundtable.

The idea was brought from Roanoke College by Gibson. He said, "The purpose of the roundtable discussions are so that I and Dr. Seymour can talk to students and hear what is on their minds. Also, so that problems with the college can be dealt with quickly."

The first roundtable meeting was held in the spring of 1994. Since then, the number of meetings per year has increased from one a year to five. Also, the meetings are less formal than the original in 1994. Gibson said he enjoys the time he spends with the roundtable group and believes the meetings are a success.

The group of students who participate in the roundtable is a cross-section of the entire MC community. These 14 students represent all four classes, as well as commuters, residents, athletes, and minorities. The students for this year's roundtable are Brandi Stewart, Adriel McCord, Melissa Walker, Jim Kennedy, Amanda Boring, Rachel Roe, Karen Strachan, Daniel Bechman, Georgina King, Joey Cody, Harold Lynn, Doug Parris, Sarah West, and Mary Gregory.

The topics and discussions, which can range from food service to residence halls, are generally student-initiated. A slight roundtable change from last year is that there is an agenda this year instead of free form discussions. The agenda items will still come from the students, but the format will be more organized than in the past.

The first meeting for this year was held on Nov. 12 during lunch. The last one for the fall semester is planned for Dec. 3. There will be three more discussions during the spring semester.

Both Gibson and Seymour are excited about this year's roundtable discussions. They look forward to talking to the students and hearing about the happenings among the MC community.

The Highland Echo

Editor

Sarah H. West

Copy Editor

Matt H. Waters

Layout Editor

Patrick E. Leslie

Associate Editor

Chris Stephens

Staff Writers

Sherrie Brents, Tonya Briggs, Shannon Bryant, Sarah Christians, Joey Cody, Eric Daugherty, Allison Dunn, David Dupont, Chuck Gilkey, Lori Leffel, Andy Long, La-Toyia Lundy, Joe Malheiro, Bo McMichael, Rissa Miller, Kazu Nakane, Sun-Im Ryu, Kim Schuenemann, Michelle Shuler, Christi Stalans, Traci Tidwell, & Allison Watts

Photo Staff

Keli Jennett, Lori Leffel

Cartoonists

Carl Gombert,
Jessica Wilkins

Ad Representative

Justin Leslie

Faculty Advisor

Jeff Gary

Please send letters to the editor, poetry, short stories, photographs, and art to box #2247.

Phone

981-8176

E-Mail

SWest75@aol.com

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 500 words.

Correction

Brian Todd is Carnegie's Residence Hall Coordinator, not a student senator.

Warne adds new angle to MC

by Rissa Miller
Reporter

This year, Maryville College has been flooded with new faces. It has the largest freshman class ever and a menagerie of new faculty and staff. One of the new faculty members is Dr. Paul Warne, a calculus professor.

Warne received his bachelor's degree in art from Ashland University in Ashland, Ohio. He earned his master's degree in math from James Madison in Harrison, Va., and his doctorate in advanced math from the University of Virginia.

Prior to receiving his master's degree, Warne taught in a small Catholic boys' school in Middtown, Conn. He has also taught at Webb High School in Knoxville for two years. While at Webb, he heard about the mathematics position open at MC through educational newspapers. He said, "It has always been a dream of mine to work at a school like this. I come to work with a big smile on my face."

MC reminds Warne of his own alma mater. The major difference between them is that MC is slightly smaller than Ashland University. He believes that small liberal arts colleges, like MC and Ashland, greatly enhance communication skills. He said that these skills are the "foundation of modern society."

At liberal arts schools, people are "forced to communicate written, orally, [and] in front of people," Warne said. As a result, "people who go to liberal arts colleges move in the end to managerial positions," but those who have not been forced to communicate are "locked into the 'brain' positions," he said.

Liberal arts colleges, according to Warne, also offer a "safety net" to students through the faculty. At bigger schools, he said, students are left to fend for themselves.

Warne believes that MC is heading in a positive direction. "A lot of people here really care," he said. He believes that is the key ingredient — people who care about an institution and the people in the institution.

It has always been a dream of mine to work at a school like this. I come to work with a big smile on my face. -Dr. Paul Warne Warne, the most important thing in his life is his family. His pride and joy are his four daughters: Stephanie, 11; Alyssa, eight; Kirstin, five; and Kaelyn, two. He deeply believes that "the child is there for the adult, not the adult for the child," he said. His daughters are the reason he "keep[s] walking and talking and living. The child gives the adult a reason for existence," said Warne.

Cont. from p. 1

making trips up and down the stairways a little easier.

This system is set up so that students will purchase laundry credit before they arrive in the fall.

Then, if a student runs out of laundry credit, he will be able to take his card to a machine located in Fayerweather Hall that will allow them to add credit to their card. This machine will work the same as the copy card system at the University of Tennessee does, according to residence life. Students will insert their cards into the machine and then insert money into the machine, which will automatically update the card.

If everything goes according to plan, the entire laundry system here at MC should become a lot easier. Student opinion concerning this matter has been mixed. Many students' initial reactions were negative. However, once the plan was explained to them, many students believed that the end benefits outweighed the price increase.

Forum guest DeSelm speaks on government's role

by Chuck Gilkey
Reporter

Knox County Commissioner Bee DeSelm spoke to a group of students and faculty at the fourth community forum on Thursday, Nov. 7, concerning the proper role of the federal government.

DeSelm began her presentation by saying, "I am one of those republicans who thinks the proper role of the government is to get out of the way and make it possible for people to take care of themselves." DeSelm takes this philosophy to heart on every issue from the arts to education to air quality.

DeSelm believes that legislators use tax money to vote for projects back at home. Then, they campaign on what they have done.

DeSelm is a strong advocate against term limits, but she is for campaign finance reform. DeSelm said, "There is no perfect way to finance campaigns. I would like to see the television stations come forward and offer time to candidates for public office."

DeSelm believes this would free representatives to vote in the best interest of those they represent and not those that they are obligated to for contributing to their campaign.

Having served as a commissioner for 20 years, DeSelm said, "Voting every four to six years is a form of term limits. Terms should be limited by voting, and not by mandated term limits."

DeSelm also believes that the states should have more power than the federal government. She said, "It is the state, not the federal government, that is the primary government. The states form the United States."

According to DeSelm, the federal government does not constitutionally have the power to regulate education or to build or improve roads. DeSelm was also critical of other federal government programs, saying, "We really need to look at both Medicare and social security."

DeSelm also believes that having a strong federal government makes it easier for people to lobby the federal government than it would be to lobby the 50 state legislatures. Money sent to Washington is basically lost, according to DeSelm. "Dollars sent to the federal government come back with mandates," she said. "It could be handled better on the state and local level."

DeSelm said that the federal government should not adopt a constitutional amendment to put prayer back in the school. "We already have prayer in the school on an individual basis," she said. "They [children] should not have to pray to whom you or I want them to." She went on to point out that America is a diverse nation with many religions.

DeSelm, who is also strongly against the Ten Commandments being placed in Tennessee public schools, said, "Intrusion of religion into the school is not the place for it. I do not believe they [the Ten Commandments] belong in the school." Asking not to be misunderstood, she said, "I hope I live by them."

DeSelm concluded by saying, "We need to be careful how much we depend on the federal government because they are not terrific at solving local problems."

MC tradition of community worship in need of revival

by Eric Daugherty
Reporter

What event takes place on campus every Tuesday between the hours of 11:30 a.m. and noon? No, not lunch. Need another guess, you say? Well, this event has existed on campus in one form or another since the inception of the college. Still not sure? This event takes place in the Center for Campus Ministry (CCM). If by now you are not aware of what the event in question is, well . . . you're not alone.

The event is the community worship service and surprisingly, even with a tradition as old as the school itself, many students are unfamiliar with the concept of community worship at Maryville College. This is a complete change from the days when community worship, then known as chapel, was a required part of the student curriculum. In fact, talk to any MC alumnus from the early seventies or before for any length of time and you are bound to hear an opinion concerning required chapel.

Today, the community worship service essentially serves as an act of fellowship among the MC community, an opportunity for students and faculty alike to worship together in a fairly informal setting. Reverend Stephen Nickle leads what he describes as an ecumenical service. In terms of classifying the service, Nickle said, "I like to think of the service as more Stephen than Presbyterian." The service itself is 30 minutes long and consists of scripture readings, a couple of hymns, and a brief sermon by Nickle.

Recently, the level of student participation as well as the time allotted for worship have been the subject of debate among students. In his six years at MC, Nickle has noticed that there seems to be "less student leadership than in the past" with regards to community worship. However, Nickle was quick to point out that groups such as Fellowship of Christian Athletes (FCA) have been actively working towards the same goal of student involvement. Nickle believes that by coordinating with student groups like FCA, the Baptist Student Union (BSU), and Voices of Praise (VOP), among others, will help to raise awareness and bring a diversity to worship.

Senior Paul Weaver said, "There are so many self-proclaimed Christians on campus. It's a shame that none of them can make it to worship."

Community worship is held every Tuesday in the CCM from 11:30 to 12 p.m. For more information, contact Nickle at x8298.

J-Term provides a wide spectrum of courses

by Lori Leffel
Reporter

It is almost time for January term at Maryville College. As many students may know, J-term will be different for the students who have enrolled in the fall of 1996.

They will be required to take an experiential freshman seminar class and Ethics 490. After completing this, they will be able to complete their experiential unit in one of the following ways: a three credit hour January course in the sophomore or junior year, three credit hours (15 events) of Mountain Challenge (PHR 125), or a period of study abroad approved by the International Programming Committee.

For those students who enrolled prior to the fall of 1996, things are still the same as they were before. Three experiential units are required and may be earned through completion of any of the following: a course designed to be experiential and offered during January, May, or exceptionally, at other times, a semester course designed to be experiential and approved by the experiential education committee (Only one credit), or a choice of several individual experiences, which are approved by the experiential education committee.

The courses offered for January Term, 1997 include the following: Deaf Literature, Executive Etiquette for the Professional, Exploring Jazz and Blues Music in Knoxville's Old City and Other Environs, Fabled India, Fit for Life, Global Studies; The United Nations for a Better World, God at the Movies, Human Sexuality, Leadership in Action, Model United Nations Security Council, A Place Called Appalachia, Rainforest Ecology, Religious Architecture, So You Always Wished You Could Play The Piano, There's No

Business Like Show Business, and A Winter Gathering? A Personal Experience. Two other experiential courses offered are Bike Florida, 1997-A Century Tour and Virgin Islands-Summer Session 1997.

The above courses include a variety of activities. They range from playing the piano to snorkeling in the Virgin Islands. Because of the variety of different courses offered, students should have no trouble finding a course that truly suits them. Many students are looking forward to J-Term.

According to Sophomore Amy Brewer, "J-

Term appears to be very exciting this year." She is really looking forward to taking There's No Business Like Show Business. She is a theatre major, so this may benefit her.

J-Term classes are designed to 1) involve active and sustained participation by the student; 2) be an experience that the student has not had before; 3) require the student not only to do something new but to stand back from the activity, assess its significance, and draw conclusions about it; 4) provide opportunities to test these conclusions; and 5) help modify one's attitude or outlook.

Senate grants VOP funding

by Sherrie Brents
Reporter

Student Senate held its fourth meeting on Oct. 31. In addition to the committee reports and announcements, two proposals were brought before senate. The proposals concerned requests for funding for the election returns party and robes for Voices of Praise (VOP).

Pearsons Hall senator Eric Obermiller presented a proposal on behalf of VOP. Obermiller requested $4500 to purchase new choir robes for VOP. The robes they are currently using are donations and are not in good condition, according to Obermiller.

Numerous senators cited the recognition that VOP brings to Maryville College and stressed their position as ambassadors of the college as reasons for granting the funding request.

Obermiller pointed out that the funds requested would be offset by $5000 that the Alumni Board will be adding to the senate contingency fund in the spring.

Mark Hatfield, senior class senator, mentioned the gifts and impressions that are left with each host. Hatfield also pointed out that a VOP presentation to the Alumni Board was a very important factor in the additional funds given to senate.

VOP will be responsible for the purchase of garment bags to protect the robes.

After several senators spoke in favor of the proposal, it went into voting and passed with no opposition.

The Oct. 31 meeting included a proposal sponsored by Commuter Senator Yosef Addis. The proposal requested $100 to be used for an election returns party. Addis said that the money would be used to buy refreshments.

Carnegie Hall Senator Matt Wilks asked Addis what kind of turn-out was expected for the event. Addis said that past election parties have been successful and that Dr. Harry Howard had invited his classes to attend.

Commuter Senator Matt Webb asked how much the political clubs had previously asked for and received. Addis answered that $300 had been allocated for the party in the past. The request for $100 was approved without resistance.

The next senate meeting will be on Dec. 5 in the Center for Campus Ministry (CCM). All students are invited to attend.

Add a new degree of challenge to your life.

The BSN Program at Emory University

E mory University's world renowned Nell Hodgson Woodruff School of Nursing is looking for students who want to do more than just read about the challenges and excitement of health care, they want to experience them. If this sounds like you, add a new degree of challenge to your life: Earn a Bachelor of Science in Nursing with us.

Our NLN-accredited school features a creative curriculum founded in a nearly 100-year tradition of excellence. Students benefit from diverse clinical experiences at exceptional sites, each widely recognized and respected for its vision and innovative initiatives. We offer flexible, comprehensive financial aid opportunities and an array of options for graduates interested in earning an advanced degree.

For information about our curriculum, financial aid or enrollment, please contact us.

NELL HODGSON WOODRUFF SCHOOL OF NURSING

Office of Student Affairs
(800) 222-3879

Nell Hodgson Woodruff School of Nursing
Emory University, Atlanta, GA 30322

Emory supports affirmative action.

Comp experience not so bad

by Shannon Bryant
Reporter

Your palms begin to sweat as you take your seat. Suddenly, a professor you have never seen before swoops down upon you with a tome which she lays on your desk. The desk nearly topples beneath its weight. She explains that you have half an hour in which to complete this exam which contains material from every major-related course you have taken at Maryville College.

Your pen spontaneously runs dry. Your pencil lead breaks. As you glance at the first page, you remember that your major is not English, but Biological Calculus with an emphasis in Swahili. You start to scream . . . and then you wake up. You are safe in your bed.

You are still a sophomore, and senior comps remain a wonderfully innocuous two years away.

Senior comps have truly become the nightmare of many MC students. Although senior thesis is also harrowing, comps do not provide the opportunity for editing and revision. Comps reputedly place students face-to-face with their worst fear—the test from Hades.

However, how much does the average student really know about comps prior to his or her senior year? Are comps truly the legendary horrifying experience? According to Dr. Harry Howard, chair of the social sciences department, they are not.

Howard said that, although there may be variations in format among academic divisions, the main purpose of comps is to “see if the student can integrate coursework” from his or her major classes.

He also said that comp questions ideally involve information from several classes, forcing the student to unite the knowledge he or she has gained at MC.

In order to prepare for comps, Howard encourages underclassmen to begin asking, “How does this major course relate to others in my major field?” He also advises seniors preparing for comps to start looking at their notes and textbooks early and to study with others in the same major.

Howard also said that seniors feel that the comp experience is “a positive one.”

Howard said that

photo by Patrick E. Leslie

Senior Chris Stephens studies for comps.

comps are not as terrifying as their reputation asserts. “The comps are a very significant challenge, but the hype is a bit overdone,” he said.

However, Howard said that the fear is very real for the student, but a sense of “relief and accomplishment” follows completion of comps.

Savage offers tips to keep off holiday weight

by Rissa Miller
Reporter

It is time for another holiday dinner. The table is beautiful. The air is filled with a conglomeration of delicious aromas. You are starving. You are reaching for a second helping of stuffing when your mom looks questioningly at your plate and asks, “Are you sure you want to eat that?” Of course, after a remark like that, you would not dare. Instead, you put the spoon down and return to your seat, guilty and perhaps a little self-conscious.

Sound like a familiar scene? November and December are always full of food. There are parties all the time, and food is constantly within arm's length between Thanksgiving and Christmas. It is natural to eat. So, why do people become concerned with weight gain? It is almost impossible not to gain a little weight, but, if you simply cannot bear the thought of a few extra pounds, here are a few ideas on how to watch your weight over the holidays.

First, have a plan of action, whether it is for a party, a holiday dinner, or the season as a whole. Think about what you will be doing and consider what your options are. For example, if you are going to a party where you know there will be a buffet, eat a nutritious snack such as fruit or vegetables before you go in order to curb your appetite. Then, when you finally arrive, do not feel obligated to eat if you are not hungry. If you do get hungry, sample the items that look appetizing to you rather than taking large helpings of everything. Also, if you are going to be eating late at night, eat carbohydrates. Eat until you are full, then stop. Definitely NEVER binge. Not only should you consider what or how much you eat, but you should also think about what you are drinking. Drink water (including sparkling and tonic) and fruit drinks. Drinks with caffeine stimulate, rather than suppress, the appetite, and alcoholic beverages are high in calories. A plan of action for the entire season could be to simply enjoy yourself during the holiday season and return to a more “normal” pattern in January.

Second, try to relax. According to Cydna Savage, Maryville College's campus nurse, stress is often another factor behind weight gain during the holidays. Many people eat when they are under extreme amounts of stress. They are full of expectations that are frequently left unfulfilled, causing them to become stressed. The Christmas season heralds the commencement of weeks of parties, for which every woman simply must have a new wardrobe. And, when the resulting stress causes a higher food intake, which ends with weight gain, which creates more stress, there is only one way to stop the cycle: RELAX. Yes, this is easily written, not so easily done, but here are some things that might help. First, stop feeling guilty. If you set a goal for yourself not to eat more than one piece of pie and you fail to meet it, so what? Start over the next day and try your best to reach your goal. Second, do some sort of relaxing activity once a week. Notice that the word is “activity,” not necessarily “exercise.” Go to

cont. on p. 10

Hoops time returns to MC

Fighting Scots basketball looking to reload

by Joe Malheiro
Reporter

The 1996-97 Fighting Scots basketball team is beginning this year's campaign with high expectations, and head coach Randy Lambert is optimistic.

Lambert is looking to Seniors Dee Bell and Jon Vaughn to lead this year's team.

"Dee and Jon have played a lot over the last three years, and we're looking for them to step up and lead a young team," said Lambert. He also said that the team's pre-Christmas schedule will be a "good indication of how our team will fare this season."

Included in their pre-Christmas schedule is Rhodes College, a 20-game winner and NCAA tournament qualifier last year. Other key games in the early December stretch are a home game against Ferrum College on Dec. 7 and then a road game at Methodist on Dec. 14. Lambert said that Methodist and Ferrum are "traditionally tough division three programs that are a fixture at tournament time."

This year's team has some new faces in the starting line-up as a result of the graduation of three senior starters from last year's squad. "We are asking young people to step up and mature quickly so that we can be a successful team," said

Lambert.

Some of these younger players include Junior college transfer Freddy Taylor and Freshman Chris Housewright. Lambert said, "I'd like to see Freddy lead the team from the point guard position. It's his first year playing for us, but he has two years of experience at the junior college level. Chris is a 6' 5" small forward that we're going to rely on a lot in the post."

Other key substitutes at the post position are 6'

7" Freshman Jon Wright and 6' 6" freshman Matt Jones. Lambert is looking to four upperclassmen to lead the way at the wing position—Sophomore Spencer Beaty and Juniors Jason Poag, Brandon Stiles, and David McGreal.

Lambert has an optimistic outlook about his young team. He points to several keys to success for this year's team. "We are a good defensive team," he said. "Our overall speed and quickness are as good as anybody we will play against."

However, the coach is quick to point out that "we must find our offensive identity and accept our roles as a team. Good teamwork is always the key to being successful."

Although this is a young team, Lambert said he believes that his players are "in control of their own destiny." He also added that the players are "one of the hardest working teams" that he has ever had, but their dedication "will take [them] a long way."

The team roster is composed of 16 players, including Michael Danzey, Jason Poag, Spencer Beaty, David McGreal, Adriel McCord, Benny Shepherd, Brandon Stiles, Freddy Taylor, Chris Housewright, Dee Bell, Andrew Bryan, Edgar Bocarisa, Jon Wright, Rusty Walker, Matt Jones, and Jon Vaughn. Coaches are Randy Lambert, Rick Arp, and Matt O'Connor.

Lady Scots begin post-Parrott era

by Kenny Cobble
Reporter

After consecutive seasons of Sweet Sixteen appearances, the Lady Scots are set to begin the 1996-97 basketball season.

One of the major hurdles facing the Lady Scots is replacing two-time All-American Jamie Parrott, who the team lost to graduation. How tough of a replacement is this? "It can't be done," said head coach Kelli Casteel Cook.

"Jamie was the player we went to when we needed a basket, and right now we don't have that go-to player in the paint," she said.

Not only selected to be the best team in the land, Parrott brought 20-plus points to the team on a nightly basis. After losing such a productive player and team leader, a person might think this to be a rebuilding year. Not a chance. "Our goals are to be ranked in the top three in the South, win 20 games, and gain a bid to the NCAA national tournament," said Cook.

Leading the way on this endeavor is senior guard

Jennifer Buck. After averaging a double digit in scoring last year, Cook expects the

Powell,

Tenn., native to step up and add even more fuel to the offense. Assisting her will be junior Chris Rajkowski, who looks to up her 8 point average from last year, and freshman Lindy Dunlap, who has the potential to contribute double digits when she steps onto the hardwood.

The Lady Scots will look to exploit their quickness on opposing teams, which will make for a powerful transition game and a wicked press.

Another major threat for the girls this year: the three-point shoot. The team has many threats from beyond the arch this year.

Buck will figure into the three-point equation. She will also look to find juniors Meghan Casey and Melanie Shepherd, who have proven to be very potent from long range.

The Lady Scots will find out early what they are made of as they travel to Arlington, Va., for the First Virginia Bank Tipoff Classic the weekend before Thanksgiving. Every team the girls have a possibility of playing is ranked.

They start off with Salem State out of Massachusetts. This team finished 26-4 last year and is returning a point guard and a 6' 3" post player from last year's squad.

"They are big in size, but they aren't as athletic as we are," said Cook. "It will be a good challenge for us."

"This is a completely different team from last year," she said. "I look forward to seeing how we do against someone besides ourselves."

Look to find the Lady Scots at home on Nov. 29 against NAIA Division I team Freed Hardeman.

Our goals are to be ranked in the top three in the South, win 20 games, and gain a bid to the NCAA national tournament.
-Kelli Casteel Cook

MC football squads highly successful over past years

by Chris Stephens
Associate Editor

In all my years here, this is my first letter to the editor. I know it wasn't to me exactly, but, as both the person who takes care of these pages and a varsity football player, I thought it my job to respond to this letter.

First, I hope that whatever reason brought this person to Maryville for this game will allow them to see this issue of the paper.

The letter begins by questioning the number of players on the Scots football team. I am just glad this person was not here in the fall when there was really a lot of players. Many times I have heard the discussion of quality versus quantity. Last Friday 17 seniors took one last walk around the field in preparation for our last game. I can assure everyone that there were more than 17 of us four years ago. When a player signs a national letter of intent to go play scholarship football somewhere, a coach can for the most part count on that player for four or five years. Here, there is no such guarantee. Every year young men come down here because they are curious or they think it is what they are supposed to do and they last all of about two days before the buffalo man gets them.

Coaches here need to bring in as many players as they can so they can keep the numbers high. A football season is a long one and, after a few injuries and with weekly labs and class conflicts, a person would be surprised just how few players are around during the week.

As for not playing until their junior year, well, I can tell you if a player stays with the program, does the work, and comes out everyday, there is playing time to be had.

When I got here as a freshman, my morale was gone after about 25 minutes of my first two-a-day practice. I would lay in bed and figure out the quickest way home. Playing time was about the last thing I was thinking about. The bottom line is a lot of players aren't ready to play as freshmen. It takes time to learn a new system. Some players are gifted enough to see action as freshmen, and, here, unlike some places, they will play if they deserve it.

I guess it was the first MC game for this writer, and so questioning a call is understandable. I can only tell you that this program was nothing short of a joke before the coaches that are here now first arrived. These coaches have earned the respect of players and fans. I hear about what should have been done and what could have been done with people I respect a whole lot more than a person afraid to write his name on the bottom of a letter. Did you notice the new stands? Happen by the new weight room? Notice the full house? Who do you think helped bring about all of these things?

Successful? I was a four year varsity letter winner here for the Scots football team. I was on the field twice when we defeated unbeaten Emory & Henry teams. We finished just shy of .500 for our four-year career, and, considering the number of ranked teams we played, that is impressive. More importantly, we learned so much about life, and all those great lessons only football can teach us. Football isn't about anything as petty as playing time. I felt pretty successful last Saturday as the senior class took their pads off for the last time. I sure didn't sit around and complain about playing time.

If the coaches were to start cutting numbers, somebody like me might not be given a chance. Or, maybe, somebody like the person who the writer came to watch.

Looking back, I wouldn't have gone anywhere else.
- Chris Stephens

Fall seasons end...

The weekend was a tough one for the Scots. Both the men's soccer team and the Scots football team ended their seasons Saturday, Nov. 16.

The Scots soccer team made its second consecutive appearance in the

Fan questions football program

Dear Mr. Leslie:

I had the pleasure of being at Maryville College for the Homecoming Football game and picked up a copy of your newspaper in the bookstore. After attending the football game I decided to take you up on your offer and "Make My Voice Heard."

I would like to discuss the football program at Maryville. And, in doing so, question whether or not it is being taken seriously.

My first observation would be the fact that there are so many players on the team. Now, don't get me wrong; I am not advocating that any of the present players should be cut. However, it would seem to me that when potential freshmen come to Maryville to look at the school and the football program that the coaches would be honest about the number of people on the team and their chances of actually playing before their junior year. Perhaps the coaching staff should not pursue so many of these athletes. If there were fewer players on the team the odds of getting to play would be greater. I don't think the coaches realize what they are doing to the morale of these young men. They come to college full of excitement and expectations, when in reality they have been filled with false hope. I know for a fact the coaching staff never mentioned the size of the team to several of the players or their families when they visited the campus prior to enrollment. As on all teams, some people are more talented than others; however, everyone deserves the same respect and chance. If they are all out there practicing and working for the betterment of the team, then why shouldn't they all be rewarded with getting to play and not just standing on the sidelines. I can only wonder what this would do for morale.

I don't want to get personal or point fingers at anyone, but I have to question one call at Saturday's game. What would you do in the following situation? Or maybe even better, ask your readers what they would do. It's the first series that Maryville has the ball. The ball is on Maryville's 45 yard line, it's fourth down and inches to go. Should we go for the first down or punt? Perhaps you will choose not to print this letter, but I hope you do. I know I am not the only person that feels this way and perhaps if the coaches thought about it and made some changes the football program would be more SUCCESSFUL.

Sincerely,
A Concerned Fan

NCAA Tournament.

Also, for the second year in a row, they were paired up with one of the top teams in the nation. The Scots fell by the score of 3-1 to St. Mary's. The Scots did manage wins over Methodist and Emory, two of the top teams in the nation this season.

The football team also ended its season with a 32-0 loss to Emory & Henry. The Scots end their season at 3-7.

Congratulations to all of the fall teams and their senior athletes who participated in their last seasons for the Maryville College Scots and Lady Scots.

MC ensembles sing, shine

by Michelle Shuler
Reporter

The music of five ensembles, whose members hail from both Maryville College and the community, will highlight the holiday season here at MC.

The first of these is scheduled for Nov. 21. The Maryville College-Community Concert Band will be performing at 8 p.m. in Wilson Chapel. In its sixth season, the band will be performing traditional musical pieces and marches. The group is directed by Dr. Larry Smithee, an associate professor of music who himself is in his sixth season of directing the band. The concert is free to the public.

On Dec. 2, the Maryville-Alcoa College-Community Orchestra, under the direction of Bill Robinson, will perform a holiday concert with a 100-voice choir comprised of students from area high schools. This concert will take place in Wilson Chapel at 8 p.m., and admission is free with a valid MC student identification card.

On the following Thursday, the Maryville College Jazz Band will perform at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Music Hall. Jazz styles that will be featured in the concert include swing, blues and fusion. The featured vocalist will be music major Adam Shepherd. Admission to see this ensemble, which is also directed by Smithee, is free.

The final concert of this holiday season will take place on Friday, Dec. 6, at 8 p.m. in Wilson Chapel. This concert will lead off with the Maryville College-Community Chorus who will open the concert with Christmas Oratorio by Camille Saint-Saens.

Soloists are both MC students and community members, including Doris Whaley, Theresa Harris, Tracy Farnar, Trent D. Gilmore, Julia Lawson, Bob Chambers, Sharon Brothers, Katharine G. Hill, George A. Hall, and Mary Frazier. The choir will then sing a suite of traditional Christmas songs. After the intermission, the Westminster Bells, a handbell choir from New Providence Presbyterian Church, will perform two pieces. Next, the Maryville College Concert Choir will perform a variety of musical selections. Accompanists for the choir will include the Westminster Bells, flutists Jacqueline Broeker and David Cartlidge, pianist J. Ashley Martin, guitar player Yusuke Kanamori, and bassist Lodge McCammon. Soloists will be Rebecca A. Heckler and Funmilayo Ngozi Eke. Admission for this concert is free.

Cont. from p. 1

go through 16 years of school."

Senior Aaron Stone was in agreement with O'Keeffe. "The absence of close family members and friends will affect us a lot deeper than you would think," he said. "A graduation is not as important as a death, so people may not be able to get off work."

Student senate president Jason Thompson said that he had heard several seniors complain about the change. "Some seniors are kind of infuriated over this," he said. "A lot of them do not like it at all."

To some seniors, the moving of commencement from a Sunday to a Monday is simply a way for MC to keep pace with other universities that have undergone this change. However, Seymour denied this claim. "Maryville is not a 'me too' kind of school," he said.

Seymour said that moving graduation to a Monday morning is necessary because of the heat, registrar's office difficulties, and church conflicts, as well as space. He said that graduation works best where it is held currently—in front of Thaw Hall. This arrangement allows for a very large number of onlookers to be present during the final exercises. If commencement were moved into the air-conditioned gymnasium or chapel, then the size of the audience would be severely restricted. "Other schools have a variety of formats, while ours is a 'y'all come' kind of thing," Seymour said. "Given the number of people in attendance at graduation, the outside ceremony really works best with our format."

Seymour said that he understood the problems that the extended families of some seniors may be facing. "We're considering doing a major event the night before graduation," he said. "It would be something where seniors, their families, and the college's staff and faculty could get together and get to know each other."

At press time, commencement was still scheduled for Monday, May 19, 1997. Although some seniors may be opposed to the change, Seymour said, "I have confidence that this will work out."

Upcoming Fine Arts Events

November 21. Student Recital.
8 p.m. Fine Arts Music Hall

November 22. Senior Recital.
Jennifer Brashears. Piano. 8 p.m.
Fine Arts Music Hall

November Gallery Exhibit. Bob
Wilder. "Portraiture in Leadership"

United Way of Blount County

United Way of Blount County thanks you, Maryville College, for your part in helping us exceed our 1996 campaign goal of $1,120,000. Together, we can continue

Touching Lives in a Changing World

United Way

Thank you for your support!

United Way of Blount County funds 28 health and human service agencies in this area. For more information about United Way and its services, call 982-2251.

Students, staff, and faculty, please share with the rest of the Mayville College community your visual art and/or creative writing.

Please mail your submissions to box 2247.

The Last Poem I'll Ever Write For You

Look for comfort, yeah, go ahead
but don't destroy the memories of the good times past,
the love, the life, those boys
the extenuating circumstance
the hate and all the toys.
Snap down that road my
dear, my dear
but don't you dare look back.

All dreams and wishes are along its sides
they coincide, smack the streams of tears.
If you could retract and of those times moments, highs would you?
Should you look back fondly and act on two year old sighs?
Never cry, dear, shed no
tear.
Know that you did what you should kept no secrets, suffered good.
Sleep deep at night.
Breathe deep the twilight of your non-adult-hood.

Be a woman, but be true especially hones just to you
be able to wake each day
look into your own eyes and say:
"These deep blue pools have seen most all and what they have not is yet in matter small."
Don't think don't care
until it's all right
there.
So drink.

Beware!
If of soft air...
His words may be sweet
his kisses fresh,
but never doubt that a once black heart is always grey.
Though, yes, he is probably gone forever,
you loved him never,
so mourn for nothing more than weather.
He's leaving like a foggy mist your life somehow he kissed with the bliss of carefree, fraternal
(WE NEVER SAID

ETERNAL!!!) love.
No one said it wouldn't ache, that your soul was not at stake,
or to be whole you'd risk the break.
But there is no end in sight any bend is right and you don't have to fight.
It'll flow and course and breathe with the ease of daisies in a gentle breezy moonlit dance.
Roll up the bottoms of your pants and wade into your pool of dreams

where everything may be just as it seems.

Or maybe not but go ahead and crank the music up and groove around in the shallow end.
Just don't get the water
in your face.
Clear vision's so hard to replace.

You'll never see those colors again
once the day has washed them away.

So stay in the peaceful rest of bright moonlight at its best flat on your back on a trampoline with the sunshine yet to be seen questioning what it all could mean

and wanting a diet-coke.
Once the sun is up
the game is gone.
It's all gone wrong.

No song of love or hate will linger to bring back for the singer the days gone by with life and laughter.
Do you feel the memories fading faster?

by Schristians

Tangent World

Lecture time, oh my. Today we are going to discuss...Hey look at that girl over there. What were we talking about..Oh yes we were talking about...Hey did I ever tell you about the time that I went to Jasper and saw the lady with the incredibly huge...Huge that's really a hyperbole. Like the hyperbole Faulkner uses in The Sound and the Fury which was full of historical events.
Like when napoleon was defeated. My feet smell really bad. I am not saying like simply defecation in my shoes. Have you read in the paper about the sewage treatment problems our city our having. It seems that the police can't seem to get all the trash off the streets. Our drug problem.....In the 60's we didn't have a drug problem. We just smoked up for religious experience. Now about religion...Wait what are we discussing. Discussion that's how humans rose above their primate brothers. If anyone has seen a blonde boy making chimpanzee noises that was my son. Did you know that we share 99% of our DNA with primates...Mating is an active part of human sexuality. One night when I was Mating, my wife told me I shouldn't drink alone. I'm not an alcoholic but to be a Christian in the Germany during WW II was like being a democrat in the 80's, which I was. World War II was like a big picnic except everyone brought guns. But anyway I was putting your grades into my database and it was all screwed up by windows.
I hate that program its full of bad code. In the 50's cracker jack boxes had decoder rings in them.
That reminds me of a Star Trek episode. The Borg are after the....Speaking of grades I've got this friend who is throwing his medical practice away, and in my grief I threw your tests away so there will be a makeup exam on Saturday right after Home Improvement. I shouldn't use power tools, and no this scar on my head is not from attempting trephining. My doctor friend once removed a tumor from.. Oh my god where did you get that pen

Hey! ARE YOU SLEEPING IN MY CLASS. I don't know anything about kickboxing. Any way have you read that passage in the bible where the guy falls asleep in church. If a presbyterian is filled with the spirit than people look at them funny...My head was full with all this stuff and now it's gone.....

by Todd Smith

FCA enjoys flurry of activity

by Lori Leffel
Reporter

The Fellowship of Christian Athletes has been booming this year at Maryville College. The group, which meets every Tuesday night at 8 p.m. in Carnegie Parlor, is averaging 70 people per meeting. This is a dramatic increase compared to the four people per meeting average two years ago.

The officers for this year are Co-presidents Ralph Kidd and Chris Thomas and Secretary/Treasurer Kristen Arwood. There is also an FCA Board, which includes about 12 other MC students. The purpose of Maryville College's FCA is to "reach people for Christ."

There have been and will be many FCA activities going on, and everyone is invited to attend. In October, the FCA took a group to Calvary Baptist's "Judgment House," an alternative to a haunted house. According to Hallie Burger, "It really made you think about life after death, and where you would be."

Coming up on Dec. 3, there will be an FCA Christmas party in the Center for Campus Ministry (CCM). It will begin at 7:30 p.m. There will be a special performance of "The Champion," and snacks will be available. Also, for Christmas, the FCA is going to participate in the Adopt A Child program, in which they will buy toys for needy children. In February, the FCA will be attending "College Advance" in Dixon, Tenn. During "College Advance," all of the FCA groups in Tennessee get together and have a weekend of fellowship and praise for the Lord. Speaking of last year's conference, Ralph Kidd said, "It was the highlight of my college career." Anyone that is interested is welcome to attend.

Also, towards the end of spring, the FCA will be taking a group to a chalet in Gatlinburg for a weekend of praise. This year, FCA will meet in J-term. Everyone is welcome to come out and join them every Tuesday night at 8 p.m. in the Carnegie Parlor.

"Tips" cont. from p. 5

the movies, walk around the mall, go dancing, read a book, or take a drive. This activity is a chance for you to get away and relax, to slow down. Third, get plenty of rest. Sleep deprivation can result in bouts of depression for many people. All depression does is magnify the negatives, increasing stress.

Last, use common sense. There is no quick and easy way to lose weight. As Savage said, "There is no Band-Aid treatment." If you restrict yourself, it is highly possible you will end up breaking your own guidelines, causing more damage.

On the other hand, binging and purging hurt your physical and mental health as well. Therefore, set limits for yourself, and eat in moderation. If you want to eat healthy, feel full, and still enjoy what you are eating, Savage recommends an increase in your fiber intake. This includes fruits, vegetable, and whole grains. Something else worth considering is to simply slow down when you are eating. Most important, however, is to stop eating when you become full. After all, you can always go back and finish the dish later.

Getting through the holidays without gaining some weight is next to impossible. Therefore, don't worry about it. Make plans to begin losing weight in January.

While you are going through the holidays, keep these things in mind to enjoy the time: make a plan of action, relax and get away, do not feel guilty, eat in moderation, and, above all, use your common sense. After all, as Savage observed, "You can't fix yourself with food."

Officers envision progress

by Shannon Bryant
Reporter

They are leaders of their peers. They make decisions which affect the entire campus. The respective fates of many Maryville College issues lie in their hands. They are the sophomore class senators, Joy Bailey and Joel Campbell. But how well do sophomores know these influential classmates?

Bailey, a resident of Maryville, Tenn., is a mathematics for secondary education major and plans on attending law school after she leaves MC. Bailey has fourteen years experience as a pianist and loves the mountains of her native region. Bailey takes pride in her collection of over 100 souvenir hat pins which she has gathered from many exotic locations, including Ireland and Paris.

Bailey states that her reason for running for senate was that she wanted to see progress. "I'm the kind of person that the only way I know it gets done is for me to do it," she said. Her goals for this year are to see less tension in the senate chamber and to prompt more students to attend senate meetings.

Bailey would also like to see students become increasingly content with the residence life "situation." Bailey is the traffic and safety committee chair and encourages students to speak to her about their parking or traffic concerns.

Campbell's major is economics, which he plans to utilize in the field of stock market analysis. Campbell enjoys sports, especially basketball and baseball. However, claiming a lack of proficiency in baseball, he states that he actively participates in basketball while remaining in the stands during baseball games.

Campbell's reasons for participating in senate include an interest in politics and a desire to represent his classmates. "I thought I could do a good job of... represent[ing] my fellow students," he stated. Campbell is a member of the food services committee and the constitutional committee and invites student comment in these areas.

Junior class leaders focus on unity and spirit

by Lori Leffel
Reporter

This year's junior class officers and senators are making a difference. They are set on having class unity and spirit, so that the Class of 1998 will have an impact on Maryville College. So far, they have had a car wash and a pumpkin carving contest. They are working on spirit ribbons for sports at MC and also adopting a family for Thanksgiving and Christmas.

The officers and senators include the following: President Staci Kerr, Vice-President Lori Leffel, Secretary/Treasurer Whitney Nations, Senator Emily Brock, and Senator Jarred Younger.

Kerr, junior class president, is from Maryville, Tenn. Besides being on Senate, she is currently on the student programming board and student foundation, a peer mentor, the pre-medical society president, an American Chemical Society officer, co-chair of Inter-Club Council, literacy corps member, and a presidential scholar. Her major is biochemistry. Kerr's main goal as junior class president is to work closely with the class officers so that the class will have unity and spirit. She wants the junior class to have identity and know that she is here to voice any of their concerns. If anyone has a concern, they can come to her.

Leffel, junior class vice-president, is from Knoxville, Tenn. Besides being on senate, she is currently on student programming board and on The Highland Echo staff. She is also a member of the Big Brother/Big Sister program, an MC Honors Scholar, a psychology assistant, and a volunteer for a local lawyer. Her major is political science with a minor in writing communications. Leffel's main goal as junior class vice president is to help students realize that they do have a voice in what goes on at MC and that the student in student senate truly does include the students. Also, she believes that there is not much class spirit and, like the other officers, would like to do something about it.

Nations, junior class secretary/treasurer, is from Seymour, Tenn. Besides being on senate, she is currently a member of the Big Brother/Big Sister program, a volunteer for a local physical therapist, and a Presidential Scholar. Her major is biochemistry.

Nation's main goal as junior class secretary/treasurer is to make sure that the junior class needs are fully met. She wants to represent the juniors and what they have to say.

Brock, junior class senator, is from Hamilton, Ohio. Besides being on senate, she is currently a peer mentor, the cheerleading coach, a member of the Big Brother/Big Sister program, a member of in Kids on the Block, a Bonner Scholar, and a volunteer at Dismas House. She has a double major in English and psychology. Brock's main goal as junior class senator is to make sure that students' views are represented. She heard complaints about students believing that they have no voice, and she decided to do something about it, she said.

Younger, junior class

senator, is from Maryville, Tenn. Besides being on senate, he is currently chair of the Covenant Committee, a member of the Academic Life Committee and the Academic Integrity Board, Under-Secretary General of the Model United Nations, a residence assistant, a Bonner Scholar, a member of ICC, and Student Foundation. His major is psychology, with minors in political science and sociology. Younger's main goal as junior class senator is to get involved with the students and ask them what they think about issues that are going on. He believes that, in the past, students did not know who their senators were, and he wants to make a difference. All of the junior class officers and senators are working hard to make the Class of 1998 one that will be remembered.

Senior thesis keeps Denning wide awake

by Traci Tidwell
Reporter

Coke is it!!!

At least, according to Maryville College Senior Carol Denning, it is. Denning is studying the value and impact of caffeine on students for her senior thesis research project. As a chemistry major, Denning is required to both research and experiment for her senior thesis project.

To fulfill these requirements, Denning chose to investigate the caffeine content of various market products, primarily coffees, teas, chocolate and several over-the-counter nonprescription drugs such as Tylenol, Excedrin, No-Doze and Vivarin. When asked why she chose to research these products, Denning revealed her own weakness for caffeine. "I'm a caffeine junkie," she said.

Her preference for caffeine-based products led Denning to wonder just how much caffeine she was ingesting by using them, so she decided to research their actual caffeine content. By chemically extracting the caffeine from each product, she is determining the effectiveness of each product as a stimulant.

Thus far, Denning can conclusively support and condone student use of and addiction to Coke and Snickers bars. Scientifically speaking, these are the high energy solutions in times of high stress and low energy. "I know [caffeine] definitely affects my body," Denning said, sharing her own experience.

So, be forewarned—everything that goes up must come down. That huge caffeine rush does have some side effects. Be prepared for irritability and total exhaustion.

Part of Denning's project is to learn just how dependent MC students are on caffeine. She plans to base her final conclusions on a study of forty randomly selected MC students. Denning is asking participants to make a record of all caffeine-based products they use over a three day period. She then plans to repeat the study during finals week in order to find out how much caffeine use actually increases during times of high stress. She hopes to find a general average of caffeine intake among MC students. "I think people will really be surprised at how much caffeine they're taking in," Denning said.

Many job opportunities offered through Career Services Office

(Holiday Work)

U.S. Postal Service. Dec. 2-31. Between 2 p.m. - 5 p.m. and 8:30 p.m. - 11:30 p.m. $7/hr. Inquire in Career Services. JOB 126

Honey Baked Hams - Competitive wage - free meal. Flex hours. JOB 134

Home Depot - positions available for holidays. $6/hr. JOB 125

(Part-Time)

Talley Ho Inn located in Townsend needs a front desk clerk. $5.50/hr. Flexible schedule 2-3 days a week; Saturday, Sunday 8 a.m. - 3 p.m. Some typing, phone skills required. Must be friendly. Come to Career Services and inquire about JOB 152.

Main Street Monograms needs someone to run embroidery machine. Will train. $6/hr. Flex schedule between 4 p.m. - 11 p.m., Monday-Sunday. JOB 151

Hospitality Franchise Reservations Systems will be hiring Dec. 2-5. $6/hr. No Christmas work. JOB 150

Hertz Rent A Car has several positions ranging from $4.75/hr. to $6.25/hr. in vehicle shuttle, return rentals, and customer service. Come to Career Services for more information. Refer to JOB 147.

Maurice's located in Foothills Mall offers part-time permanent employment. Salary depends on experience. Inquire in Career Services for application procedure. JOB 146.

Olympia Athletic Club needs a swim instructor. Hours flexible around class schedule. Salary depends on experience. Refer to JOB 145.

Peninsula Village needs assistants to work with ages 13-18. $7.50 days or $8.30 evenings 2-3 times a week. Any major. Need at least one year experience working with children (baby sitting okay). JOB 140.

Central Parking System needs parking attendants through the holidays. $8/hr. from 4-6pm. JOB 38

Smoky Mountain Sports Club has a position for trapper. $4.25/hr. plus tips. Friday afternoons noon-5 p.m.; weekends optional, Saturday 8 a.m. - 5 p.m. and Sunday 1 p.m. - 5 p.m. Can be flexible. JOB 38

Child Care needed for one 8-year old girl. Pick up from school at 2:45 p.m., take home and stay until 6 p.m. Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Friday. Take to ballet once a week. Salary negotiable. JOB 50.

Kwik Oil - car wash/lube bay. $5.50/hr plus tips. 8 a.m. - 4 p.m. or 9 a.m. - 5:30p.m. JOB 33

(Full-Time)

Branch Manager Trainees. Commercial Credit, nationwide consumer finance subsidiary of Travelers Group, is currently recruiting for its 1997 Branch Manager Trainee Program which begins January 1, 1997. Salary is $23,000 during training.

State Farm Insurance Company is recruiting on campus Dec. 6 for claim representatives to do underwriting. Salary is $28,000/year.

Hertz Rent A Car has several positions ranging from $4.75/hr. to $6.25/hr. in vehicle shuttle, return rentals, and customer service. Come to Career Services for more information. Refer to JOB 147.

Kwik Oil - full-time hours available for car wash/lube bay. $5.50/hr plus tips. 8 a.m. - 4 p.m. or 9 a.m. - 5:30 p.m. JOB 33

DRB, J-Board rulings

10/19 One student in Gamble was charged with alcohol policy violation. The case was dismissed. warning in the file, and one was placed on probation until May, 1997.

10/20 One student in Pearsons was charged with drug abuse. The case is pending, and the student was assigned to a private hearing with the Vice President of Student Development. 10/31 One student in Copeland was charged with drug abuse. Suspension was held in abeyance until December 11, 1997, and the student was placed on drug use assessment and counseling plans.

10/24 One student in Gamble was charged with disorderly conduct and was therefore assigned to five hours of community service in Gamble. 11/2 One student in Lloyd was charged with first offense alcohol policy violation and verbal harassment, for which a warning was received.

10/26 Two students in Copeland were charged with telephone harassment. One received a warning in the file, and one was placed on probation until May, 1997. The case is pending appeal by a staff member.

DRB Spot Open

There is a VACANCY

on the

Disciplinary Review Board

for a

Lloyd Hall representative.

Contact Cathy Cate in the Student Development Office for more information.

Lost Jewelry Found

An article of jewelry was found near Career Services on the 2nd floor of Fayerweather Hall. Claim your lost jewelry by providing an accurate description to a Career Services representative.

The Upper Room Praise & Prayer Group

will have its first meeting on Tuesday, Nov. 26, at 11:30 on the second floor of Bartlett Hall. Contact Jan Bible at x8220 for more information.

For more information on these jobs and numerous other positions available, contact Career Services by visiting the office on the second floor of Fayerweather Hall or by dialing x8220.

Bo's sure-fire cure for that semester crunch stress

by Bo McMichael
Reporter

I am glad to say that the holiday season is starting a bit early for me this year, and, with glad heart and happy soul, the film industry has begun its holiday free-for-all. For a few of us on this campus, comprehensive exams are completed, and thesis is either finished or half way done, so there is singing in the air and time to relax. As for the rest of campus, papers are due and exams are being prepared, so a break in the action is critical to survival; however, in many cases, you get the good with the bad. This was the case in the two movies viewed this time around.

"Dear God" stars the up and coming actor from the hit "Sabrina," Greg Kinnear. It seems that the jails are getting crowded around the holiday season, so, instead of slapping a con man in jail, the court orders Kinnear to obtain a real job for one year. The job turns out to be at the Los Angeles Post Office. He is assigned to the dead letter department where letters that have no home go: the ones addressed to Santa, Elvis, and God...hence "Dear God." Now the con man has decided to con the people who have asked for help from God. Just like the Grinch who stole Christmas, this man gets a heart, and wishes begin to come true in the city of Los Angeles.

When you go to a movie, you hope to see a great movie every time, but most of the time that is not the case. No, this movie was not great — it was not even good — but it left me with a nice smile and a Miracle on 34th Street attitude about the post office and God. The place for this movie is in the video store, and, if you are in for a feel-good movie, the video is all yours.

As for the next movie, I should just say two words and end it with that — MUST SEE. In its opening weekend, it grossed nearly $40 million. More people saw this movie than voted on Nov. 5, and I can tell you that the results of the film are a lot more satisfying than what occurred on Nov. 5. The movie I am speaking of is "Ransom." The star-studded cast is directed by the man who brought you "Apollo 13" — Rich Cunnigham, a.k.a. Ron Howard. Mel Gibson, Rene Russo, Gary Sines, and many more play through a kidnapping where the tide is turned on the kidnapper by the father of the kidnapped child. It seems that, when a ransom drop-off goes sour, the father decides to put a bounty on the kidnapper's head instead of paying for the return of his son.

The movie was intense, suspenseful, and has edge-of-your-seat action. You might be saying, "How many more adjectives could he be using?" My answer is that you need to go see it and come up with some of your own. I guarantee that you will enjoy it, and my guess is that we might see Mr. Howard's name on the Oscar list, as well as "Ransom" for best picture.

From now until the end of the year, the film industry of Hollywood is unleashing 34 films to the American public for our viewing pleasure, so let the games begin. Santa has come early! See you at the movies!

Polly Graff's 'Good Answer'

Dear Polly,

My best friend, Larry, and I do everything together — football team, same classes, etc. Lately, however, I'd love to strangle him. You see, Larry recently became a vegetarian. While this abrupt change surprised me, I adapted and respected his new lifestyle until, that is, he started preaching and analyzing everything that goes into my mouth! He's even yelled at me in public, disgusted that I'm consuming meat. This is very embarrassing. What can I do to keep this from ruining our long-time friendship?

Signed, Carnivorous in Camegie

Dear Carnivorous,

So, you Evil Devourer of Flesh... Larry's devout diet leaving a bad taste in your mouth? Before you flush your friendship, keep in mind that New-Born Veggie Heads tend to be like Born Again Christians: eager to convert and testify. He probably means you no harm, he's just very excited and proud of himself about his new and righteous path. The problem here is the major guilt trip he's taking you on. First, you need to decide if Larry's changed his eating habits for health reasons or for political reasons. If it's the latter, and his fanaticism seems to convey this, you need to lay down the law, toot sweet. Check for PETA propaganda and cans of spray paint in his room.

Something about many vegans and vegetarians is that they seem to express concern for and outrage over only cute, furry creatures (I guess sewer rats aren't included). They insist that all forms of life are sacred and that we should not eat animals. But what about plants? Does life have to have big Disney eyeballs and a cuddly tail to be worth saving? That way-green salad Larry just choked down at lunch killed a vibrant head of lettuce, two perky tomatoes, and a lovely onion. We would all starve if the whole of nature were off limits. Needless to say (and if you haven't gotten my point), I'm a devoted meat-eater. I personally don't feel healthy when not eating meat. (I've tried the veggie route.) Yes, even RED meat. Nummmmmmy! Perhaps you should explain to Larry that you do indeed respect his decision, but you don't want him to make you feel bad for doing what is perfectly natural and good for a human to do. He shouldn't force his beliefs on you, just as you shouldn't taunt and tease him by wallpapering his dorm room with Hardee's wrappers and raw lambchops. If he still feels and acts as though his vegetarianism proves that he has evolved past mere mortal status, you may need to find a new dining partner. You might also prepare yourself for the fact that he may eventually find it easier to surround himself with a majority of vegetarian friends instead.

First, however, try appeasing him by making an effort to make sure the meat you eat has not been processed in a tortuous manner. I know it's unfortunate that animals die to feed us, but I'm comfortable knowing that my thighs will make tasty little hors d'oeuvre

cont. on p. 14

Children who come from Alcoholic or Other Dysfunctional families often . . .

- Guess at what normal behavior is
- Have difficulty following a project through from beginning to end
- Lie when it would be just as easy to tell the truth
- Judge themselves without mercy
- Have difficulty having fun
- Take themselves too seriously
- Have difficulty with intimate relationships
- Overreact to changes over which they have no control
- Constantly seek approval and affirmation
- Usually feel that they are different from other people
- Are super responsible or super irresponsible
- Are extremely loyal even in the face of evidence that the loyalty is undeserved
- Are impulsive—they tend to lock themselves into a course of action without giving serious consideration to alternative behaviors or possible consequences; this impulsivity leads to confusion, self-loathing, and loss of control over their environment

(Source: Dr. Janet Woititz, Adult Children of Alcoholics)

If any of this applies to you, or you would like to learn more, please come to the CCM on Wed., Nov. 20, at 7 p.m. Linda Behel of Cornerstone, R.T.C., will be speaking on Alcoholic and Dysfunctional Families. A support group will be formed for dealing with these issues.

"Our purpose is not to seek blame for the past, but to seek solutions which may enhance one's future."

Kazu's travels, volume II: kimonos, judo, and Ford

by Kazu Nakano
Reporter

If you think that Japanese wear Kimono all the time, you are completely wrong. If you think all Japanese men have kuro-obi—black belt made of cloth, that the judo and karate wrestlers receive at the advanced level, you are totally wrong. To solve these misunderstandings you might have, "clothing custom" is introduced in the following.

First of all, let me explain about Japanese traditional clothing. Kimono might be one of the most famous and beautiful clothes in the world. It is made of all silk and is very expensive, so it goes from generation to generation. The clothes are very gorgeous because the craftsmen dye raw silk brilliant colors such as madder red, color of green that the young grass have, orange, yellow, gold, silver, etc. After they dyed them, they start weaving the kimono. Recently, it is woven mainly by machine. (By the way, did you know that the first machine that weaves cloth was made by Sakichi Toyota, the first man who established TOYOTA?) They have a variety of designs. It can be pattern, but it can be pictures like cranes, flowers and so on. So are yukata. They are summer clothes made of cotton and simple design and colors. One thing you have to remember is that kimono is for women, not for men. Men have haori-hakama, a Japanese half-length coat and wide and loose pants. About how to wear them: you can imagine that is close to how to wear a bathrobe. We just tie on a lower back. They are pretty long and tight, you can't walk with long strides quickly. It may be the reason why it was said that women walk slowly, three steps behind men, with elegance. They are not very relaxing, so everyone wears the same clothes as you do. Therefore, it is quite a special case that Japanese women wear kimono or yukata.

Let me tell you an experience I heard of an American who came to Japan. He had thought that all the Japanese men knew how to do judo, or karate, probably, and he was scared that he might be tossed over someone's shoulder. In fact, we have to learn about kendo (Japanese fencing) and judo (you know, right?), and we were to learn naginata (similar to kendo, but used with a pole sword) in quite a few schools. Actually we have learned them in PE classes from junior high school through high school, but I don't think everyone can do them.

One of the surprising facts about Japanese culture is that people think all clothing with English lettering is cool for us somehow. With no reason, we've thought it's cool to wear them. For example, the T-shirts and shirts with collar and sleeves that lots of clippings from newspaper or magazine are on were very popular. Of course we didn't know what those articles meant, and we had never thought about it before. However, one matter awoke me suddenly. One day, I was riding in a train to go to school. On the way to the station I had to get off at, I found one girl who wore a unique T-shirt that I'd never seen and I've never seen after that. The T-shirt that she wore had just one simple mark on her chest, and I thought it was a mark of "Ford." I couldn't recognize that because she wasn't near to me, but when I glanced (carefully), the word in a blue beautiful ellipse said "Fxxx"!! Why did I have to see that word? Was that because my eyes were on her chest? It must be on purpose, but anyway, I couldn't hide being freaked out. In the same way, many English speakers have found so many meaningful words on Japanese clothing.

Well, that's why I didn't bring many of my clothes here. I threw away almost all the clothes that any uncertain English words were printed, I had decided to buy nice American clothing like we've seen in some American fashion magazines. However, I have a serious problem now; I still can't find nice, reasonable clothing here! Why!?

"Polly" cont. from p. 13

for those friendly cemetery worms someday. What I'm talking about here is avoiding products sold by corporate monsters who overlook or advocate cruel and unnecessary treatment of animals being bred and ranched for food. For example, some carnivores refuse to eat veal. They like the idea that an animal had a full life before becoming a rump roast, and they may also be opposed to the horrific way in which many ranchers keep veal tender before it's slaughtered (look it up). We're a part of the cycle of life. It's the fact that we're at the top of the food chain right now that must bother Larry and others. If you still truly feel guilty, perhaps you should try vegetarianism yourself. A life of soy isn't that bad, and you may have become suspicious of that vengeful bovine wearing the Spike Lee "Justice" hat and loitering around your bedroom window at night, hungrily licking his chops...

Whatever you decide about maintaining Larry's friendship, remember that he's just trying to grow as a person and explore what ideals are important to him — common and very healthy when in college. So, the next time he gags when you bite into a Double Quarter Pounder w/ Cheese, simply smile, pop his "Babe" tape into VCR for the patillionth time, and appreciate how he'll understand when you run off to join the Hare Krishnas this summer. Anyway, he's just mad because his tofu burger is giving him gas.

Love,
Your Cosmic Guide and Nurturer,
Polly

If you have a nagging, burning (no, not hemorrhoid, you freak) question for Polly, please send it to "Good Answer," Box 2247. All questions will be read, but only one chosen for each issue. We cannot promise satisfaction with answers, but entertainment is guaranteed. (No inquiries on the meaning of life, please. Polly is still working on her doctorate.)

$1000 Samuel Robinson Competition

Open to all MC Juniors and Seniors

$1000 is awarded to winning participants in this competition. A 2,000 word essay must be written using the suggested resources, and participants must memorize and recite the answers to the Westminster Shorter Catechism.

Details, guidelines, materials, and encouragement are available in the Center for Campus Ministry. Contact Chaplain Stephen Nickle (x8299) if interested.

Dance All Night at the I-Party

ATTENTION!!!

The I-party particulars have been changed. These changes are:

Date: Friday, November 22

Place: Cafeteria

Time: 9 p.m. to 1 a.m.

• FREE ENTRANCE •

Just bring your money for refreshments.

Dear Editor,

Sometime in the past Patrick Leslie challenged the student body to speak their ideas about issues on this campus. Well, after deliberating for a while and reading the editorials in the paper today, I have decided to do just that. I have three things that I think this campus needs to hear.

The first issue is the issue of religion. I know that many, many people on this campus claim to be religious, or Christian, or whatever. When I look around at the student body, I get a very different message. The spiritual life on campus is upsetting; to say the very least. I am not talking about the spiritual opportunities on this campus; I am talking about the lack of interest in the student body. Every week I attend worship with anywhere from two to ten other students. Two to ten? Give me a break. We have 927 students on this campus, and there are seven or so at worship. Now I am not trying to say that we should have mandatory attendance at worship, because those of us that are there don't want people who are uninterested to be there and bitch through the whole thing. What I am talking about are the people who are "Christians" on this campus that are Christians in name only. I know that people are free at the time of worship (at least I would hope that everyone is free) and there is no excuse why people should miss worship. It is a time on this campus to help build community and spirituality at the same time. Worship has helped me understand my spirituality much better than any church service could because the message is one that I can relate to in everyday life. One week, Stephen Nickle told us that we should all do is look around at the beautiful world that we live in, just to see what God can do by action without words. By doing this, we can see that our actions are what people judge us on, not our words. I guess this is the point to this whole letter. Our actions speak louder than our words, and by the actions of this student body, it seems to me that the religious life of this college is very ill, if not dead.

The next issue I would like to discuss is race relations on this campus. This is a touchy subject, but it is one that needs to be addressed. The first thing I want to write about is the editorial by Matt Waters in the Echo on November 6. It is enough to make me sick when I hear a white male in America telling me how bad they have it because of affirmative action. White men have oppressed just about everybody they have come into contact with because of their false sense of superiority. Mr. Waters needs to step back and look how easy life has been and then he can tell me how bad he has it. You might not have held slaves, or you might not be a racist, but does that absolve you from the concern for our past? Does that mean that since you didn't own slaves you are an O.K. person and are absolved from any responsibility in race relations. What I would like everyone to do is imagine being taken from your home and put on a ship where you had about one square foot of space for a three month voyage across the ocean. People are dying around you and being thrown overboard, and you have no idea of your destination. You get off the ship and you find that you are the property of another person. You are no better than a house or a cow or a field; you are property. Generations later your children and grandchildren are no longer property, but they are treated as second class citizens in a nation that your family helped to build. I know that it is trite to say all that, but people really put themselves in these situations. Don't blow it off. It happened to the relatives of people you see and talk to and work with every single day. Make yourselves the oppressed rather than the oppressors. Talk to someone that lived through the Civil Rights struggle and then make your judgments on affirmative action. Do not let some college age white kid tell you that you are going to be turned down for a job because you are white. Don't believe the things you hear in the news until you have put yourself as the oppressed. Don't take my word for it that I am right. Find things out for yourselves. We need to make sure that we are responsible for our actions, past and future. Just because you are not a racist doesn't mean that you shouldn't help fight to end racism.

Excuse me if I get into a little theology, but that's what religion majors do, and that is what I am. What we can do by both promoting racial awareness and spiritual awareness is make this a community that we can be proud to live in. Groups that are active in the spiritual life of the campus, like FCA, Voices of Praise, the Church and College Scholars, the Bonner Scholars, and any other group that is interested in religion and race on this campus. This is not to say that we are in the middle of some racial storm. We are not, but with work there will never be a need to be. If most people on this campus claim to be Christian, then I for one would like to see it practiced. I would like to see the Christians on this campus try to practice a radical inclusivity, and allow everyone in this community to come together. It is exactly what Paul talked about in Galatians when he said there will be neither slave nor free, Jew nor Gentile, man nor woman, for in Christ they are one. We need to change that message for today's society and today's world rather than leaving it in Paul's time. For us, today, it reads there is no man nor woman, black nor white, straight nor gay, Christian nor Non-Christian, because for their humanness they are one. What I am driving at is that I would love to see basic goodness of humankind shine out on this campus in the form of an open inclusive spirituality. We have the means to do it, and think that no matter what your religious preference, the call for a basic understanding of religion and race is important. The two go together. This radical inclusivity that I speak of was one of the tenants of the early church, and it can be like that today. I know that the Christian community means different things to different people, but it needs to mean only one thing, and Paul's statement earlier, we are all one. Whether we are one in Christ is debatable, but as humans we are one. All are included in the humanness of people. So I would encourage Christians to shed their fears of gays, minorities, and other people that are not just like them. I would encourage non-Christians to listen to the message of spirituality and oneness, and let that oneness permeate your lives. Both groups of people need to open up, and listen to humanity call out to them, unifying them and bringing them together. If you would have told me four years ago that I would be closing a letter with scripture I would have laughed at you, but now the verse in the book of Micah sums up nicely what I am trying to say. Micah wrote "...And what the LORD require of you, but to do justice and to love kindness and to walk humbly with your God?" This is what we all, as people, should do. Remember, no matter who you are and whatever people say, you are loved by someone, or something, somewhere. You are the beloved.

Eric Obermiller, Box 2175

Eternal life: science versus religion

by Patrick E. Leslie
Layout Editor

This past week I saw a documentary show on the Discovery Channel which really made me think. It was a documentary on cryogenics, which is the freezing of people in the hopes that they can one day be thawed when a cure for whatever illness they had is found or when science has devised a method for regenerating their worn-out bodies.

As a whole the documentary was not that disturbing; however, there were a few major questions which were not brought up and which no one even seemed to have thought about. The documentary dealt entirely with the science and psychology and avoided any of the potential theological issues of cryogenics.

The main concern of the scientists and people who have planned to be frozen for an indefinite amount of time is how will the damage done to a human body be repaired once it is frozen. When water in the body freezes, they explained, the ice-crystals form with sharp edges which puncture through cells, effectively destroying them. Scientists hope to be able to one day find a way to repair the damage that has been done.

Throughout the entire documentary no one considered the issue of the spirit. I was amazed to discover that nobody had considered this question.

The individuals who are frozen are dead. They are drained of all of their blood and then filled with a human antifreeze in an attempt to stave off the effects of freezing. So, what happens to the spirit?

Personally I do not see the point in having myself frozen. If I am dead at the time when they freeze me, then what would be the point? My soul or, depending on how you look at it, the spark or essence that is life is gone. I perceive that this project is doomed for failure for exactly this reason. My body will be thawed, but the essence which once drove my body will be gone. That only leaves an unanimated husk which might be able to respire but do nothing more.

Of course the individuals that run the service, known as ALCOR, think differently, but I do not see how they can bring back a soul once it has left a dead body.

This topic has even led me to write a short story on it. What if they are right? If they reanimate the body and the person's essence is still there, does this conclusively prove that a soul is nothing more than electric pulses through a system of organic pathways, or does it return upon the request of power that we still do not understand? I am interested in anyone else's opinion or input into this issue.

Ambition, ambiguity, $100K

by Sarah Christians
Reporter

Stop right now and give yourself a pat on the back. Give yourself a hug. Now give someone near you a pat on the back, or a hug, or both. Say to yourself, "Congratulations! You're in college. You're doing well and you know where you're going." Say these things even if you know you're only doing well running up your long distance bill or are only on your way to the laundry room. If you want that atrocious phone bill and you want those clean clothes, you're on your way to total success. I say these things because I have been and have heard many more of you dwelling on the subject of ambition. Lately, it seems, that in the midst of cable television induced complacency, most of us are still worried about life outside our idyllic little campus. While I'm sure few students lose sleep (And if they have sleep to lose, I want them brought to me with all speed, so that they will, under duress if necessary, explain where they have hidden my portion of this semester's sleep rations.) over this subject, it still needs a little attention.

When was the last time you answered the question "What do you want to be when you grow up?" without stating your major? Are you sure you even know what you want to be when you grow up? How many of us have considered just chucking the whole growing up idea? Unfortunately, perhaps, there is life beyond MC. We would all like to be happy and wealthy, but how many of us are actually planning on it? Were we to all sit down and make out five, ten, and twenty year plans, I'm sure most would be purposefully vague. Not because we don't want to go new places and do great things, but because we don't know which places and what things.

I write this not to scorn you. Neither do I write it to rally you into a frenzy of planning, squaring away, or committing. Rather, I applaud all of you who have an idea of what you like, but haven't totally figured out how to turn it into $100,000 a year and a company car. For those graduating this December, we all bid you luck in a cold world, but hope you don't lose your dreams or your sense of "Hey wait! That'd be cool, too." As long as there is that little uncertainty in your life, you'll be successful. When I was little, my outstanding career ambitions were first, ballerina, and then astronaut. However, I

Dear Editor,

Let me begin by paying my respects to the Echo and its staff for the excellent work that it has produced this semester. I was particularly impressed with the most recent issue of the Echo, and I must confess that for the first time, I read the entire issue. My only qualm with this issue of the Echo was a particular letter to the editor. I am referring to the letter which gave a great big proverbial slap on the back to the 104th Congress. Upon reading this letter, I immediately wonder how it is possible that the "Republican Revolution" has been able to brainwash so many unsuspecting and innocent victims. Before we pull out the punch and party hats and call the 104th Congress the best invention since Velcro, I would like to offer several reasons why "Newt and the Gang" have made some of the greatest legislative mistakes in history.

First, thanks to the Welfare reform that the Republicans are so proud of, "an additional 12 million children will be made poor." The best quote that I've read regarding this issue was rendered by Marion Wright Edelman, President of the Children's Defense Fund, who stated that "it is immoral to place the burden of balancing the national budget on the back of poor children and families while didn't let those ambitions get in the way of wishing to be a professional French horn player, and now, an etymologist. Accordingly, you shouldn't let that bachelor's in physics get in the way of your dreams of painting in the South Seas.

You see, college should be about growing, expanding, and nurturing, not conforming and stifling. Worry enough about the future to make sure you don't totally screw it up, at the same time providing huge tax breaks to the wealthiest one percent of Americans." It baffles me that a party that is practically controlled by the Christian Coalition would turn a deaf ear to the poor of our country.

The 104th Congress has also managed to pass some of the most environmentally damaging bills ever. I know that in the 20th Century, "Environmentalism" has almost become as negative a label as "Liberal," but the Republicans have gone much too far in their attacks on the environment. Some of these damaging bills include the increasing of timber sales from public property and freezing the current Endangered Species List in order to keep any endangered animals from being added to the list. Without Democratic opposition, the Republicans would have also repealed the ever-popular Clean Water Act.

These are merely a few of the numerous mistakes made by the 104th Congress, and I am sure we are in store for another roller-coaster ride courtesy of the 105th Congress. There, I have taken my shots, and I feel much better. In conclusion, I would like to offer my congrats to Bubba in winning that ever elusive second term. FDR would have been proud.

Thanks,

Matt Webb

but don't exhaust yourself. Don't feel bad because you're just not quite sure. Not quite sure is sort of a good way to be. So next time someone says, "What do you want to be when you grow up?" Er, get outta school, that is?" say what you think you'd like to be, even if you're not sure. And if all else fails, fall back on the one answer you have in common with every student at MC: Dr. Schneibel.

Students teach and learn at MC Families

by Kim Schuenemann
Reporter

Many members of the Maryville College community may take their abilities to read and write for granted, but the MC Student Literacy Corps has made literacy its cause. MC Families is the home of the program that encourages adults to earn their high school diplomas. In 1993 a grant for a student literacy corps was given to MC. The grant allowed for a practicum course that would combine MC students with various Adult Basic Education programs in the area. From this community report, a need was found in the area of whole-family education.

A special project grant funded the Family Education

Laboratory (FEL). When this endowment ran out, new funding was found in the form of an Even Start grant in October 1995. By the spring of 1996, a building was donated for the use of MC Families—the latest development of the literacy corps.

MC faculty and staff have shown tremendous interest in the program as experiential learning for their students. The community has also proven that MC Families

photo by Matt Waters

Literacy Corps Member Staci Davis reads with Marvin Perez at MC Families, as Maria and Kayla Perez look on.

meets the needs for families who want to integrate learning for the parent learner and the child learner. Catherine Nickle, director of the organization, said that MC Families is a place for MC students not only to learn but also to serve. "Our goal is two faceted—learning for MC students and Alcoa [high school] students and serving the needs of our under-educated families," she FEL was started. "I enjoy diversity; this was a project that promised that," she said. To Nickle, MC Families is an outgrowth of student development but with a community appeal.

The goal of the program for the children of the adult learners is to help them succeed in school by affecting the educational level of the parent, especially the mother. Statistics show that the education level of the mother directly affects the level of educational achievement of the child.

"It [the program] reminds me of the simplicity of children," said Karson Leitch, a Bonner Scholar.

The experience of seeing the program work toward this goal comes when one witnesses the graduation of

cont. on p. 2

Inside

Beeson update.....	2
History board.....	3
Community Forum...	3
SPB spring.....	4
Hearing-ear dog....	4
Officers & senators..	5
Lady Scots.....	6
Men's basketball....	7
Voices of Praise.....	8
Greens hanging...10
Life as Kazu.....	14
Sarahs' Columns...16

Highlights

News.....	1-5
Senate.....	1, 3, 5
Sports.....	6-7
Arts.....	8
Arts & Literature....	9
Features.....	10, 11
Job Listings.....	12
Advice Column....	13
Op/Ed.....	13-16

by Sherrie Brents
Reporter

Throughout this semester, the student senate has voted on proposals concerning the Pre-Med Society, the Judicial Review Board, the senior class, Isaac's, an election party, Voices of Praise, the freshman class, Impressions, and The Highland Echo.

The Dec. 5 meeting brought a proposal from the freshmen class. The proposal, sponsored by Gamble Hall senator, Brian Gossett, requested $200 for a freshmen class lock-in during January term. The funds will be used to buy refreshments, games, movies, and sound system rentals. After questions were asked concerning borrowing items and attendance, the proposal went into voting and passed with little opposition.

Impressions also presented a proposal at the last meeting of the fall semester. The proposal, which requested $250, was sponsored by Davis Hall senator, Sara Baker. Baker pointed out that $50 was absolutely

Nickle became involved with the program when the ## Student senate: the semester in review

photo by Matt Waters

Student Senate President Jason Thompson talks with constituent Janis Burge in the senate office located in Fayerweather Hall.

necessary for Impressions to go to print, and the remainder would go to cash awards for winning submissions. With no opposition, the proposal was passed.

Matt Webb, commuter senator, presented a proposal on behalf of the Echo, who requested $1,220 to assist them in transforming the paper into an eight-page weekly. Sarah, West, Echo editor, gave senate a

cont. on p. 3

Beeson update

by David Dupont
Reporter

The dismal sight of ground-breaking around the tennis courts will soon be replaced by new residence halls. There will be three buildings built and ready to house students by the fall of 1997.

Many students believe that these new residence halls will increase tuition. Dr. William Seymour, vice president of student development, said not to worry because the "funding of this dorm is coming from gift money that was donated by the Beesons." The late Ralph W. and Orlean B. Beeson left a bequest in their will for the new halls, which will be built in their memory.

Seymour said that the building of these dorms will accommodate the growing number of students. Maryville College is very fortunate and thankful to have received such a gift because more students are enrolling at MC every year.

These three buildings will house eighty-four students, while each building will house twenty-eight students. Wheelchair accessibility, alarms for the hearing-impaired, and a gas-installed heater system are all features of these new dorms. Also, every room enjoys a full kitchen and bath. Some rooms even share a living room and a study carrel. For those who are lucky, six two-story apartments await them. These two-story suites house six people and are quite roomy. Only one of these dorms will have a basement. This basement will primarily be used as a laundry room by all three of these dorms.

The outside is equally impressive. These three dorms mimic the appearance of Carnegie Hall with the same style of architecture. The building company has also done a great job in preserving the trees. It is estimated that only two trees may have to be relocated somewhere else on campus. All of the other trees will remain in their present location. A new parking lot will be built as well. Some say that these plans are far-fetched, but Andy McCall, physical plant director, said if every thing goes as planned the buildings will be finished in July of 1997.

In addition to the new residence halls, six new tennis courts will be built and located behind the Crawford House on the practice soccer field. Why six courts instead of two? Seymour said that if MC ever got an intercollegiate tennis team they would need at least six courts.

New tennis courts and new residence halls will help MC accommodate more students and their interests.

"Literacy" cont. from p.1

this goal comes when one witnesses the graduation of a learner. This experience is about to occur three-fold. One of the Bradford Scholars who tutors at MC Families, Wes Unger, is preparing to see the graduation of a learner who he has been working with since the program started last spring.

"It [the program] has given me the fulfillment in that I was able to work with one of the first graduates," Unger said.

Although MC Families has a majority of teenage mothers, the program is designed to have a loose definition of what a family is. That way, a relative who has assumed the parental role for the child can participate in

New Prof appreciates MC community

by Lori Leffel
Reporter

Dr. Karen J. Ott, a science professor, is one of the new faces around Maryville College. She is here for a year in the place of Dr. Lynnette Sievert, who was an assistant professor of biology.

Ott and her husband moved here from Indiana this past summer, when her husband took a job offer at Tennessee Wesleyan College in Athens, Tenn.

She is currently teaching Comparative Animal Physiology and helping science instructor Dr. Paul Threadgill in Biology 113.

Ott's area of specialty is parasitology, the study of tapeworms and malaria. She will be teaching a course on this subject next semester.

the program if he lacks a high school diploma or general equivalency diploma. Nickle said, "We want to be known as a family literacy program."

Due to the number of teenage mothers involved in the program, the issue of teenage pregnancy has been pushed into the spotlight for many people involved with MC Families. The organization is allowed to take in only people over the age of 17. Thus, the teenage mothers who are only 14 or 15 are not allowed to participate in the experience of MC Families that many learners find beneficial. This particular experience allows parents to spend time with their children, increasing the bond between the parent and

Although she is originally from Atlanta, Ott received her master's degree at the University of Kentucky and completed her doctorate at Rutgers University in New Jersey.

Ott said, "There is a real kind of community here, and that is something you rarely see."

Students in the sciences will benefit from the expertise of Ott. MC is very fortunate to have such a wonderful variety of professors.

child.

Nickle said that the teenage parents often have a lot of growing-up to do. "We work with a 17-year-old who is a parent and yet in many ways is still a child," she said.

Seeing the faces that make the statistics brings home just how real the statistics are. This exposure to "real world" issue causes the students who tutor at MC Families to have a better awareness of the world around them.

Nickle said that the program allows tutors to learn about themselves as teachers and learners and as a part of the world in which they live. It also teaches them that they can make a difference within their community and that they are not powerless.

The Highland Echo

Editor

Sarah H. West

Copy Editor

Matt H. Waters

Layout Editor

Patrick E. Leslie

Associate Editor

Chris Stephens

Staff Writers

Sherrie Brents, Tonya Briggs, Shannon Bryant, Sarah Christians, Joey Cody, Eric Daugherty, Allison Dunn, David Dupont, Chuck Gilkey, Lori Leffel, Andy Long, La-Toyia Lundy, Joe Malheiro, Bo McMichael, Rissa Miller, Kazu Nakane, Sun-Im Ryu, Kim Schuenemann, Michelle Shuler, & Christi Stalans.

Photo Staff

Keli Jennett, Lori Leffel

Cartoonists

Carl Gombert,
Jessica Wilkins

Ad Representative

Justin Leslie

Faculty Advisor

Jeff Gary

Please send letters to the editor, poetry, short stories, photographs, and art to box #2247.

Phone

981-8176

E-Mail

SWest75@aol.com

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 500 words.

Spring forum goes medieval

by Sarah Christians
Reporter

Why should anybody study the middle ages? Most people would say they can sum up the middle ages in six words: the great schism, the black death. The Maryville College Community Forum scheduled for spring 1997 is titled The Medieval Past: Distant Mirror or Discarded Image.

"It's the dark ages in which the inquisition tortured people over questions of conscience..." said Dr. Sam Overstreet, assistant professor of literature and forum committee member.

There are five lectures scheduled, allowing time for February meetings and spring break. In addition to the lecture format that is so common to the series, there will be a reading of "The Miller's Tale" by Geoffrey Chaucer. To aid the understanding of this particular Canterbury Tale, it will simultaneously be mimed.

"We try to come up with these really broad topics," said Dr. Chad Berry, assistant professor of history and chair of the community forum committee.

The lectures will include information on history, art, music, and literature.

Overstreet will give the first lecture of the series. The second lecture, scheduled for Feb. 27, will be given by Dr. Daniel Taddie, chair of the division of fine arts. Taddie's lecture is entitled, "A Cathedral Built in Tone," and discusses the way medieval sacred music lays foundation for later music.

On March 6, Michael Frassetto, assistant professor of history at Lagrange College in Georgia, will give a lecture entitled, "In My Father's House There Are Many Mansions: Orthodoxy and Heresy in the Medieval Church."

On April 3, Dr. Amy Livingstone, assistant professor of history and a forum committee member, will give a lecture entitled, "Beyond Damsels in Distress: The Real Women of the Middle Ages."

The final lecture of the series is scheduled for April 24, when MC senior Kathryn McDonald will present her senior thesis, "The Search For a Heroic Past: Medieval Influences in Northern Renaissance Art."

"There are some respects in which it [the middle ages] is a distant mirror and some respects in which it is a discarded image," said Overstreet.

The faculty seems enthusiastic about the choice of topic for the spring. Berry said, "We could draw in so many topics and different perspectives... with art, literature, music, because we try to make it as appealing as possible to the varied constituents of the Maryville College community."

The senior class president, Kerry O'Keeffe, presented a proposal calling for $300 to be used by the senior class for events, such as the senior class fall picnic, the Wine and Cheese celebration, Senior CIV, and printing expenses for invitations. O'Keeffe assured the senate that all costs and expenditures would be reported. The proposal passed with no opposition.

A charter for the creation of a Pre-Med Society was introduced by the junior class president, Staci Kerr, at the Sept. 19 meeting. Kerr stressed the advantage the society would give its members by bringing speakers to campus, finding internships, and helping prepare them for entrance exams. The senators unanimously approved the charter.

Senate also chose the members of the Judicial Review Board.

Bulletin board makes history

by Sarah Christians
Reporter

Common to a liberal arts education are questions of What can this major do for me? and Will I be able to make money after I get a degree? The history department at Maryville College has attempted to answer these questions in a helpful, accessible way: a bulletin board with letters from alumni, detailing not only the benefits, but the advantages of majoring in history.

"History is a way of seeing things, seeing the world. And that's what we were trying to capture," said Dr. Chad Berry, assistant professor of history.

The history department sent letters to alumni who had majored in history, updating them on the department's activities and faculty and requesting that they please share what a major in history had done for their lives, both professionally and non-professionally.

"We are blown away by the response we got," said Berry. Alumni have sent letter after letter detailing the impact a history major has made on their lives.

Among the alumni is a former editor of the American Historical Review, the most prestigious history journal in the United States.

The department has received around 20 letters so far, and more continue to trickle in.

"It's not peculiar to history. It's a good way for departments to answer questions of what can I do with this major," said Berry.

Located on the second floor of Thaw Hall, the bulletin board is covered in letters, pictures, and quotes answering exactly what an individual can do with a history major. From professors and journalists, MC alumnus prove that a history major is useful and can also be extremely personally fulfilling.

"I really hope students take time to see what history can do for people," said Berry.

photo by Patrick Leslie

In the history department, a bulletin board is used to display what majors can do with a degree in history.

"Senate" cont. from p. 1

review of expenses involved. Eric Obermiller, Pearsons Hall senator, called for a ten minute caucus to allow for discussion between senators and to allow senators to speak with West. The proposal went into voting following the caucus and was unanimously passed.

During the Oct. 31 meeting, Obermiller, presented a proposal seeking $4,500 for new VOP robes. The new robes will replace those that were donated to the school. Obermiller reminded the senators that the funds requested would be offset by the $5,000 that the Alumni Board will be adding to the senate contingency fund in the spring. After several senate members spoke in favor of both VOP and the proposal, the senators unanimously voted to approve the proposal.

Commuter senator Yosef

Addis sponsored a proposal requesting $100 to be used for an election returns party. According to Addis, the funds would be used to buy refreshments. Several senators raised questions regarding expected attendance and previous allocations. After Addis finished answering questions, the proposal went into voting and was approved without resistance.

A proposal to ban smoking in Isaac's was presented at the Oct. 3 meeting by the Copeland Hall senator, Brian Hastings. The proposal cited the harm caused by second-hand smoke to nonsmokers. Also mentioned in the proposal was the alienation of nonsmokers from Isaac's. Several senators reminded the senate that Isaac's is the only indoor location that permits smoking, while nonsmokers have several options. The proposal was rejected by a vote of two to fifteen.

SPB's spring: hypnotist, hockey, and more hoopla

by Allison Dunn
Reporter

The Student Programming Board, headed by Student Activities Coordinator Holly Bailey, is planning on having a "busy, but a lot of fun" spring semester, according to Bailey.

The fun begins during January term on Jan. 7 when SPB is sponsoring a trip to see the Knoxville Cherokees and the Columbus Chill battle it out on the ice at 7 p.m.

"Spaces are extremely limited," said Bailey. There will be a sign-up day on Jan. 6 from 8 a.m. until all spaces are full. Those students interested must sign themselves up in the student development office, and buses will leave from Maryville College at 6 p.m. on game night.

Also, on January 14, a hypnotist will be appearing in the Music Hall. "Volunteers will be needed during the performance," said Bailey. On Jan. 20, SPB will be showing another one of its $1 movies. Another movie is scheduled for Feb. 3.

Later in the month there will be a concert honoring Black History Month sponsored by SPB and the campus Black Student Association. The group performing will be Regency, a black a capella group. "Staff and students are encouraged to attend," said Bailey.

The March movie, on the 10 at 8:30 p.m. in the Music Hall, will be "Ransom", Mel Gibson's latest. April 7 will be the next movie date.

Blister in the Sun will be held on April 19.

May will be a relatively quiet month for SPB because of exams. But SPB's Spring Fling will be held on May 3 at Royal Oaks Country Club from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m.

SPB is considering activity suggestions from students and faculty alike because they like to have an event if not "every week, then at least every other week to give students a break from classes," said Bailey. Of the suggestions already being considered, there is chance of another comedian and possibly the reanimation of Fun Flicks.

All these decisions are made at the weekly SPB meetings on Tuesdays at 1 p.m., which are open to students not currently members of SPB. Suggestions can be made at any time to Bailey as long as they "stay within the budget."

SLI major trains hearing-ear dog for senior thesis

by Kim Schuenemann
Reporter

Many people have noticed a red chow around campus this semester. Her name is Texas, and she is a hearing-ear dog in training. She is also the thesis project of Rachel Gregory Bates, a senior sign language interpreting major.

Bates is working on the 351 portion of her thesis currently. She hopes to "raise the awareness of the importance of hearing-ear dogs."

Bates became involved with the project of training Texas to be a hearing-ear dog because of her desire to combine her love of animals with her interest in deaf culture.

Bates said, "There is not much research out there on hearing-ear dogs specifically, although there are many programs."

She is considering using this experience to guide herself toward veterinary school or toward training canines to become hearing-ear dogs. Currently, all training projects are non-profit or private.

Because of the high cost involved in training the dogs, there is a serious need for donations. Each dog comes from the Humane Society at no cost, although the bills for veterinary visits, spaying or neutering, feeding, training, and other necessities can be as much as $5,000.

When the training program is completed, there are three categories that the dogs may fall into depending on how much they were trained and how well they responded.

The first category is fully certified, meaning that the dogs are allowed to go everywhere that a seeing-eye dog can go.

The second category mandates that they can be used only at home.

The third category states that hearing-impaired children can become adjusted to the dog and learn to take care of the animal. A dog in this third category knows some commands but is used for preparing children for their hearing-ear dogs.

Although there are many people in need of these special dogs, there are few that actually receive them because of the budgeting of the training programs. The hearing-impaired person pays nothing when he receives the dog. Bates plans on donating Texas to a hearing-impaired person if Texas can become fully certified.

Before the dogs can be trained to be hearing-ear dogs, they go through intensive obedience training and socialization. There are two types of training that the numerous programs use.

The first is praise-oriented, in which the trainer praises the dog every time the dog does something correctly.

The second is treat-oriented, in which the trainer starts the dog out by rewarding it with treats whenever it does something correctly. By the end of the latter method, however, the treats are replaced by praise. This second method is the one that Bates will use with Texas because the dog has responded to it well.

The training process involves not only voice commands but also sign language commands and various sounds. The most important sound is the smoke alarm. So far,

Texas has responded well to hand signals and is working on learning what to do when an oven timer rings.

Bates wants everyone to be more aware of the functions that hearing-ear dogs serve, and she hopes that everyone will be more supportive of the training programs in the future.

photo by Patrick Leslie

Rachel Gregory Bates works at training Texas, her hearing-ear dog, for her senior thesis.

Senators profiled

by Tonya Briggs
Reporter

The student senate is considered by many to be a very important part of the Maryville College community. The senate would not be around if it did not have its leading members like seniors Jon Davis and Mark Hatfield.

Davis, a Maryville native, is a biology major. He is the chairman of the intramural committee for the student senate. After graduation he plans to attend graduate school. This year is his first year to be in the senate. According to Davis, the senate has helped him with his communication skills, which will be very important when he enters the work force. He thinks that the student senate would be more effective if the students would give more input at meetings. He said that it would help if more people would listen and give their opinions on the discussed topics. "Better student participation is already beginning to happen because more people are coming to meetings and community forum," Davis said.

Hatfield, the other senior senator, is from Kentucky and is a music major. He is a member of Delta Omicron, the jazz band and the concert band, and the concert choir. Hatfield is also the chairman of the food service committee. This is his second year in the senate. He was the junior class secretary/treasurer last year. The senate has also helped him with his communication skills. "It has helped me in speaking in front of a group, particularly in articulating my opinion," he said. Hatfield thinks that the senate should change its meeting format from the parliamentary procedure to more of a group discussion. He encourages anyone and everyone to be involved in the senate. Anyone can come to meetings, listen to what is going on, and talk to the people who have a vote. "The student senate is an organization and not an elite group," Hatfield said. "Everyone is welcome."

Both members have the opportunity to make important contributions to the MC community. They have enjoyed their roles and are looking forward to next semester.

Adam Ray, the senior class vice president, is from Winchester, Tenn. After graduating from MC with a bachelor of science degree in biology, he plans to attend graduate school to study environmental science.

Ray hopes to convey to his classmates the message that they can make changes and that their unified voices can be effectively heard. "We need to understand that students do have a voice on this campus, even though sometimes we may not think so," he said. "A lot of people may think what they say doesn't matter, but I believe what they have to say can make a difference in what happens."

"Being an officer has helped me understand that, by saying what you want and working hard enough to get what you want, you can make changes," he said.

Grace King, a native of LaFayette, Ga., fills the spot of secretary/treasurer. A biology major, she intends to attend either graduate or

cont. on p. 10

Hall reps help residents

by Allison Dunn
Reporter

Three hall senators are focused on representing the campus and the opinions and feelings of their residents. Maryville College is full of activity, and Nicole Brabender, Sara Baker, and Brian Hastings find themselves in the middle of it all.

Brabender is a sophomore senator for Lloyd Hall from Murfreesboro, Tenn. Besides being a member of the MC Women's Soccer Team and a Human Services major, Brabender believes she must "represent the opinions of Lloyd's residents to help the Hall Council" make decisions affecting the whole of the campus. Brabender, an MC Scholar, tries to encourage Lloyd's participation in all campus events.

Baker is a sophomore senator for Davis Hall from Cincinnati, Ohio.

Besides being a double major in English and Religion, she is also a participant in theater, a member of MC's concert choir, a peer mentor, a Big Sister, and president of the Humanities Club. Baker has found being the Davis Hall senator interesting because of the effectiveness of the Davis Hall Council, including the decision to keep the escort policy.

Hastings, from Memphis, Tenn., is also a sophomore senator for Copeland Hall. He is a Bonner Scholar, a Big Brother, a member of the Voices of Praise, and a member of the MC environmental club. As well as being an international business major, he takes time as a senator to "help support Copeland residents' best interests," said Hastings. In addition, he attends the Van Metre School of Dance and is an MC Scholar.

Seniors lead the way

by Matt Waters
Copy Editor

The class of 1997 is wrapping up a successful career at Maryville College, thanks in part to well-steered guidance from its diligent leaders.

Kerry O'Keeffe, the class president, is from Hendersonville, Tenn., a city near Nashville. After attaining her bachelor of science degree in biology at MC, she intends to go to nursing school at the University of Tennessee, Knoxville.

Her main goal as the leadership head is to ensure that her peers are well-represented among the college community. "I want to make sure that we're properly represented," O'Keeffe said. "I want to see that we get as much as possible out of our senior year."

MC is the ideal school for her to assume a leadership position, she said. "The size of the college is one reason I've been able to do this and other things that I've wanted to do," she said. "For me, Maryville has been a door—a real window of opportunity."

ROBERT ©1996 PITTSBURGH POST-GAZETTE

Lady Scots place second in Classic; Buck leads way

by Chris Stephens
Associate Editor

So, who needs a huge senior class to be successful?

That is what the Lady Scots are saying as they are off to a 3-2 start and looking just fine, thank you.

Led by their lone senior, Jennifer Buck, and a host of returning players on the perimeter, the Lady Scots started the season with a second place finish in the First Virginia Bank

Tip-Off Classic in Arlington, Va.

The Lady Scots' first game of the tournament came against Christopher Newport.

Buck led the Lady Scots with 26 points and six assists in the 83-71 win.

Junior Meghan Casey poured in 13 points in just 16 minutes.

Melanie Shepherd also reached double digits as she had 11 points, two assists, and three steals.

The Lady Scots were unable to pull out a win in their second game of the tourney as they lost to Salem State, 71-67. Again, Buck went off, scoring she scored 27 points to go along with three assists and four steals.

The Lady Scots wrapped up second place with a 58-45 win over Alverna. For the game, Buck had 15 points, and Shepherd, 14.

On Nov. 29, while almost everyone was gone for Thanksgiving, the Lady Scots opened up their home season with a loss to Division I NAIA Freed Hardeman by the score of 93-76.

Buck had 28 points and six assists, Leslie Roberson had 12 points and five rebounds, and Shepherd added 14.

The Lady Scots got over the .500 mark for the season with a 69-66 win over Centre College in Danville, Ky., on Dec. 1.

Freshman Erin Lockerman began South Region play with a bang, as she racked up 14 points and eight rebounds. Buck again was the Lady Scots' leading scorer, with 26 points, seven rebounds, and four assists.

Junior Chris Rajkowski and Shepherd had 11 each.

The Lady Scots' next home game will be Dec. 12 against Milligan College at 7 p.m. After the break, the Lady Scots will hold the Lady Scots Invitational on Jan. 3-5. Teams coming to MC will be Thomas More, SCAD, Scranton, and Lebanon Valley.

Dear Maryville College Basketball Fan:

As we prepare to compete against our rivals on the basketball floor, there is another battle taking place all across America. We are asking you, our fans, to help us in this fight against cancer.

The National Association of Basketball Coaches and the American Cancer Society have teamed up in a nation-wide campaign against cancer. Coaches from several colleges in all divisions of the NCAA are sponsoring the Three-Point Attack.

The program is simple. For every made three-pointer, we are asking our fans to make a pledge to assist in our efforts. Last year the Scots made 175 three-pointers and the Lady Scots made 151. A generous pledge could result in a worthwhile contribution to a very meaningful cause. The Three-Point Attack pledges will support American Cancer Society research, education, and patient service programs here in our community and state.

Help us in the battle. Let's finish first as supporters for the Three-Point Attack against cancer.

Sincerely,

Randy Lambert

Head Men's Basketball Coach

Athletic Director

Kelli Cook

Head Women's Basketball Coach

LET'S GIVE CANCER THE FULL COURT PRESS!!!

- ☐ Sign me up for Coach Lambert's Team ☐ Sign me up for Coach Cook's Team ☐ Sign me up for both Teams!!

Name _____
Address _____
City/State/Zip _____
Home( ) Office( )

Can we use your name in this promotion? ☐ No ☐ Yes
In lieu of my name, please use the name listed below in honor or memory of someone special.

☐ In Honor of: ☐ In Memory of:

Return this form to:

American Cancer Society, East Region, 871 Weisgarber Road, Knoxville, 37909

Team Member Enrollment
Enroll me as a member of the Three Point Attack Team
in the following category:

- ☐ Booster: I pledge $.10 per 3-point shot
☐ Supporter: I pledge $.25 per 3-point shot
☐ Member: I pledge $.50 per 3-point shot
☐ Leader: I pledge $1.00 per 3-point shot
☐ MVP: I pledge $5.00 per 3-point shot
☐ I pledge a flat donation of $ _____

Signature

Date

AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY

Scots off to vigorous season start

Senior Dee Bell has helped the Scots to a 3-2 record

by Chris Stephens
Associate Editor

Like the Lady Scots, the men opened up their season on the road at the Millsaps Tournament in Jackson, Miss., on Nov. 23-24.

The Scots (3-2) opened up play in the South Region in their first game of the tourney against Rhodes College.

The Scots were able to come back and win by the score of 74-60. Senior Dee Bell led the Scots with 26 points.

Rhodes led at the half 30-22 but were overpowered after the break.

Also getting in on the scoring action were Spencer Beaty with 17 and Jason Poag with 12.

In their second game, the Scots were unable to get by Millsaps and lost by the score of 74-63.

The Scots did have four players in double figures. Senior Jon Vaughn led all MC players with 17 points and 10 rebounds. Junior Freddy Taylor had 12 points, with Beaty and freshman Chris Housewright each chipping in with 10.

The Scots had their home opener on Nov. 30 as they hosted the MC Invitational.

The Scots got some revenge with a 75-72 win over Millsaps in the opener. Millsaps was ranked No. 2 in the South and No. 22 in the nation which made the win all the more big-time.

In the game Bell had 21 points, Housewright had 17 points and 10 rebounds, and Poag dialed up long distance three times on his way to 10 points.

In the championship game, the Scots took on Lindsey Wilson, and, after the first couple of minutes, they were taking the trophies to have Blue Raiders put on them.

Lindsey Wilson jumped out to a 31-11 lead with more than eight minutes left to go in the half. And then the bombs started falling.

With around eight minutes to go before the break, freshman Benny Shepherd from Nashville, Tenn., stepped on the floor. At 7:49 his first three found nothing but the bottom of the net. Vaughn said anything you can do, I can do better.

With :19 left Vaughn let one go. Score, 31-17. The Scots weren't finished.

With 6:31 left Shepherd hit his second. With 6:03 left Vaughn hit his second. Score, 31-21, Blue Raiders.

Poag decided it was his turn as he scored eight straight, including a four-point play, to cut the lead to 63-33 with 2:35 to go before the break.

All told, the Scots went on a 25-10 run the final 7:49 of the half to trail 41-36 at the break.

In the second half, the Scots picked up right where they left off and took their first lead on a basket by Bell with 16:23 to go in the game. The Scots would stretch the lead to 57-51 on another basket by Bell with 13:15 to go.

The Blue Raiders responded with a 9-0 run to regain the lead.

The Scots looked in position to win with 1:35 to go when Shepherd hit two free throws to pull the Scots ahead by the score of 71-68.

The Blue Raiders went on to score the game's next five points, including two free-throws with 1.9 seconds left, to give the visitors the win and the championship of the MC Invitational.

For the game Bell had 16 points, Vaughn 15, and Shepherd 11.

Housewright and Bell were both named to the all-tournament team for their play in the two games.

Some upcoming games for the Scots include a Dec. 7 date with Ferrum College at home, and then, after the break, a Jan. 8 match-up with Methodist College, also at home.

by Chris Stephens
Associate Editor

This is my last issue of The Highland Echo. I have been writing for this paper for the past four years, and it has taught me about everything I know about journalism. I have taken writing classes here at MC and did a 12-week internship as a full-time sports writer, but nothing compares to the lessons this paper has taught.

I just wanted to say thank you to all the people that made it possible. First, to Paul Weaver for asking me to come write for him, and then later for giving me a chance as Sports Editor. Without saying anything more, that first semester of my sophomore year was incredible. For every one thing I learned in the classroom, Paul taught me a dozen in the Echo lab. Thank you, Paul.

Next, to both Joe Malheiro and Kenny Cobble for all of the great stories. Have fun next semester.

In my four years here, I have had a few different editors, so thank you all, from Paul to Sarah West. I enjoyed working with you all and thank you for all of your help. Sarah, I wish you and your staff the best of luck next semester, and, to you, no matter what path you choose, you will do well.

Through all the editors, I have had only one advisor, so thank you, too, Jeff Gary. Thanks for helping find my internship and a place on this staff for the past four years.

And I will not say thanks without saying thank you to Dr. Schneibel. Your encouragement and support did wonders.

From the Sundquist election my sophomore year to all the movie reviews with the big guy, my portfolio has more than enough. I have written nearly 100 stories for this paper over the years and have seen so many good games. It has been quality, to say the least. So, I would also like to thank all of the athletes and fans that had writing sports here so, well, big-time.

To the Class of 1997, I will see you in May. To Mom and Dad, I will see you soon. To everyone else, good luck.

The Echo has appreciated the time, hard work, and dedication of its associate editor, Chris Stephens, and its assistant editor, Matt Waters. We wish them both success in their future endeavors. Thank you.

VOP looks ahead to busy spring

by Andy Long
Reporter

The Voices Of Praise of Maryville College has built its reputation praising and giving thanks to God for his goodness, mercy and blessings. Through good times and bad, VOP has continued to shout, sing and minister and as a result of their perseverance, they have been tremendously blessed.

Only five years old, VOP has tripled in its size. They began touring four years ago and have two tours scheduled this year instead of one. VOP has most recently been blessed to receive funds to purchase new robes.

For several years, VOP has been using robes that were donated by a local church. Many of the robes are falling apart, and the choir has outgrown their inventory.

Presenting their dream of getting new robes with their own identity sewn onto them to the Alumni Board allowed VOP to accomplish their dream.

Not wanting to set a precedent of handing out money to student organizations, the Alumni allotted $5,000 to the student senate to distribute to groups who had need. VOP went before the senate and was granted funds which allowed them to order about 50 new, customized robes. The robes that the choir chose are mostly a cream with maroon trim. They will have "VOP" scripted in gold on the stohls on the front left of the robe and a large gold cross embroidered on the back. The robes for the musicians will be reversed in color--maroon with cream trim.

The robes are scheduled to be mailed on Dec. 27. VOP will be holding a robe-dedication service at St.

John's Missionary Baptist Church in Alcoa on Jan. 19, 1997. This will be the first time the choir sings in their new robes.

VOP is a black gospel choir comprised of students. There are no auditions for the choir and though they sing black gospel music, there is a good inter-racial, international mix. The choir has included students from Japan, Korea, Kenya, and Laos and currently has a few from Honduras. The choir was started by Larry Ervin, director of minority services for MC, because he felt that it would add a new refreshing dimension to campus life. Ervin is delighted and proud to see the racial and interational diversity and unity that the group offers. Since its inception, VOP has grown from a 15 voice choir with relatively few engagements to a 45 voice choir that must graciously decline many invitations due to time constraints. So far this semester they have had six engagements: United Way's kickoff breakfast, the Black Alumni breakfast, Homecoming, morning worship at St. John's, evening

photo by Matt Waters

The band Polished by Young Hands performs at MasterCard Acts.

worship at Mother Love Baptist, and revival service at Robinson Chapel Presbyterian, morning worship at the Center for Campus Ministry, and evening worship at St. Peter's Primitive Baptist Church in Alcoa. On the agenda so far for next semester are services at Parkway Christian Fellowship on Jan. 12, morning worship at St. John's at 10:45 a.m. on Jan.

19; Martin Luther King Day celebration with Blount County Celebration Mass choir on Jan. 20; 1st tour of Charlotte and Brevard, N.C. and Clemson, S.C. on Jan. 24-26; Gospel Jamboree with Berea and Clemson University gospel choirs on Feb. 15; VOP's annual concert on Feb. 22; 2nd tour of Woodstock, Decatur, and Atlanta, Ga on March 7-9.

Congratulations

Congratulations to the following Maryville College teachers:

Ms. Linda Yoder Clark, Instructor of English and Faculty Coordinator of the Student Literacy Corps;

Mr. S. Kelly Franklin, Director of Center for English Language Learning (CELL);

Mr. Burt Rosevear, Adjunct Professor of Voice; and

Dr. Terry L. Simpson, Professor of Education.

These individuals are being placed in the 1996 edition of Who's Who Among America's Teachers.

*Students, staff, and faculty, please share with the rest of the Mayville College community your visual art and/or creative writing.
Please mail your submissions to box 2247.*

photo by Jenna Oxford

Bellowing up from the cellars of my soul Comes a voice I had shunned.

Seldom have I pondered its survival
Through years of negligence,
Or believed its present existence;
Yet, its beckoning has never ceased.

It moans at the sight
Of my lackadaisical lifestyle.

Mourning that I have let it lie

Unattended,
Festering in boredom;

Hence it has determined to be heard.

Horrifically howling it heralds its undertaking

Of its emphatic vocation.

Wailing without regard

To those within earshot,

It summons strength;

Now, its preparation is complete.

Dislodging all impediments and vice from its Circumference allows for its discharge.

Launching itself through its Own insatiable inclination,

It embarks relentlessly;

Thus, its conquest

but the sole center of its being.

Unsuspecting I continue to wallow

In the doldrums of ambivalence and self-pity.

My lusts have darkened my eyes

And silenced my ears,

Filtering out my innocence;

Alas, I stumble because of my ignorant listlessness.

Inundating all assailants with its sonorous bellows

This voice arrests my fixation.

Shrieking at my blindness

And lack of concern, It has dispelled my lusts;

Innocence, it has quelled its opponents and conquered my attention.

by Izzy Kidding

Holiday season begins with Hanging of the Greens

by David Dupont
Reporter

As Christmas draws near, students' Christmas lists are growing longer, and Santa is packing his sleigh for his journey on Christmas Eve. Christmas trees are being decorated, lights illuminate whole cities, and cookies with milk await Saint Nick. Santa Claus, toys, Christmas trees, egg nog, and mistletoe are all things we imagine when we think about Christmas. Many times, these things overshadow the true meaning of Christmas.

On Dec. 1, from 5:30 p.m. to about 8:15 p.m., the Hanging Of the Greens in the Center for Campus Ministry was once again successful. Every year Maryville College students and staff come together in fellowship to celebrate the birth of Jesus Christ during the Hanging of the Greens.

Rebecca Bowman, an MC student, said, "Even though there was only 13 or 15 people, we all enjoyed ourselves; the cookies and hot apple cider were excellent."

Decorations were hung, and the Christmas tree was clothed with ornaments and lights. In addition to decorating and eating food, everyone who participated helped kindle the Christmas spirit.

Dr. Stephen Nickle, MC Chaplain, led the congregation in song and message. During the ceremony traditional songs such as "Joy to the World," "O Little Town of Bethlehem," "O Come O Come Emmanuel," and "Come Thou Long-Expected Jesus" were sung. After the lighting of the candles, scriptures from the Biblical books of Mark, Isaiah, Luke, and Psalms, and litanies of joy, love, hope, and peace were shared.

"May we be filled with wonder and humility, so that we will not miss the unpredictable messages of love shared with us this season," read the litany of love, which hints at the true meaning of Christmas. Joy is also a part of the Christmas spirit. The litany of joy read:

cisions should be put more and more in the students' hands," she said. "Students should be more directly involved with running the school."

There are times in life when joy travels the way of pain and suffering.

Often we don't appreciate the fullness of joy until we have known its opposite.

We are promised that, on the other side of difficulty, joy can be found.

May those who sow in tears reap with shouts of joy.

Famine will turn to feast;

Night will turn to day;

The wounds of the brokenhearted will be healed;

Those who are bound will be released.

The promise of joy—that deeply felt gratitude-gives meaning to our days.

Help us, O God, hear the message of joy, even through our tears.

The perception and

photo by Keli Jennett

The Christmas tree in the CCM was decorated during the Hanging of the Greens festivities.

celebration of Christmas is different for every one. However, the death of Jesus Christ and all that He represents — joy, love, hope, and peace — are remembered in this special time of year.

"Seniors" cont. from p. 5

medical school upon receiving her degree from MC.

"The senior class officers have made a difference this year, with all three of us working together," she said. "We are all willing to work for what the senior class wants."

King has a definite vision for the future of the students' role in MC's government. "Every year, the de-

PITTSBURGH POST-GAZETTE
ROGER

The Echo begins planning for a weekly for spring semester

Beginning on Tuesday, Feb. 11, The Highland Echo will become an eight-page weekly. Every Tuesday morning, the Maryville College community will receive an issue of the newspaper.

The change was confirmed when the student senate voted to allocate the $1,220 necessary to pay for the increased production.

In addition to the aspects of the newspaper the community already enjoys, the College Press Exchange, an internet service, will provide college-focused features, crossword puzzles, columns, cartoons, and more.

The Echo will also be printing the Foothills Cinema's movie schedule on a weekly basis.

Ideally, the paper will contain three pages of news, one sports, one alternating arts/literature and classifieds/DRB, one feature, and two opinion/editorial. Polly's advice column and Bo's movie review will also alternate weeks.

The paper will also be adding an activities calendar to keep the community informed of what is happening on campus. Other changes to enhance the coverage in the paper are in the works.

To facilitate this experimental semester of a weekly, the staff will be divided into two groups. Their deadlines will alternate weeks so that they are not over-worked.

Although the Echo is trying to broaden its resources, it does not want to minimize student talent. Anyone who would like to write for the newspaper or submit columns, letters to the editor, cartoons, creative writing, photography, etc. are more than welcome.

The first meeting for the spring semester will be on Feb. 4 at 1 p.m. in the Echo lab, located on the second floor of Fayerweather Hall.

During January term, much of the preliminary work will be done. For examples, the staff will be gathering potential businesses for which to advertise, and it will be organizing the staff and redefining members' roles.

The month will also allow time for the editorial staff to offer seminars on the aspects of production to prepare the staff for the spring semester and the next school year.

photo by Matt Waters

Jackie Broeker, Jackson Swaney, and Yusuke Isanamori study for their final exams.

Making production club representatives are plans with The Daily Times and contacting other goals the staff would like to complete.

THE STAFF OF THE HIGHLAND ECHO WOULD LIKE TO WISH EVERYONE A MERRY CHRISTMAS AND A HAPPY HOLIDAY SEASON. WE LOOK FORWARD TO SERVING
YOU AND RECEIVING YOUR CONTINUED SUPPORT IN THE UPCOMING SEMESTER.

STEVIE D'S PIZZERIA & DELI

(3/4 MILE PAST BLOUNT MEMORIAL HOSPITAL)
1807 E. LAMAR ALEXANDER PARKWAY

PHONE: 681-2200

// FINALS WEEK SPECIAL //

EAT FOR $4, $5, OR $6

NO MINIMUM ORDER FOR FINALS WEEK ONLY!
FREE DELIVERY

$4

HAMBURGER COMBO

1/3 LB. BURGER W/ CHEESE, FRENCH FRIES, AND FOUNTAIN DRINK

$5

SUB COMBO

11" HAM, COTTO SALAMI, BOLOGNA, CHEESE, FRENCH FRIES, AND FOUNTAIN DRINK

$6

LARGE ONE TOPPING PIZZA

PICK FROM ANY OF THESE TOPPINGS

ANCHOVIES, HAMBURGER, PEPPERONI, BLACK OLIVE, HAM, GREEN PEPPER, GREEN OLIVE, ITALIAN SAUSAGE, ONION, PINEAPPLE, FRESH TOMATOES, AND FRESH GARLIC

* ALL PRICES INCLUDES TAX -MUST HAVE MC ID FOR THIS SPECIAL

Job opportunities and announcements

ATTENTION JUNIORS:

By now you should have received your letter inviting you to apply for the 1997 Summer Experience Program. This program provides, for those selected individuals, a free room on campus for the summer and placement in a job that will provide valuable major-related experience.

If you will complete your junior year by the end of spring semester and did not receive a letter, please call Jan Bible in Career Services at x8220 or come by the office. Deadline to complete the application process is January 15, 1997. A resume and letters of recommendation are required. Applications should be picked up in Career Services as soon as possible.

PART-TIME JOB ANNOUNCEMENTS

DRB reports total six

Six offenses were presented to the Disciplinary Review Board or Judicial Board during the month of November, according to Assistant Dean of Students Cathy Cate. In all, one student was charged with violating a residence hall's visitation policy, two students violated the alcohol policy, two students were cited for failure to comply, and one student was charged with harassment. Of these charges, one each occurred in Copeland, Davis, Lloyd, and Pearsons Halls, while two students were charged in Gamble Hall. No students were cited in Carnegie Hall.

Maryville College Protective Services reported that, from Nov. 1 to Nov. 30, two offenses occurred between midnight and 2 a.m., two offenses happened between 4 p.m. and 6 p.m., one student was charged between 8 p.m. and 10 p.m., and one student was charged with an offense between 10 p.m. and midnight.

THE OFFENSE:	NUMBER REPORTED:
violation of visitation policy	1
violation of the alcohol policy	2
failure to comply	2
harassment	1
TOTAL:	6

LOCATION OF OFFENSES:	NUMBER REPORTED:
Copeland Hall	1
Davis Hall	1
Gamble Hall	2
Lloyd Hall	1
Pearsons Hall	1
TOTAL:	6

Check with Human Resources in Foothills Mall for holiday work opportunities.

Airline Customer Service Agent. Comair Airlines is hiring. 25-30 hours per week. Some flexible scheduling. Start $6.50 per hour. JOB 154

Church Pianist. Small local Methodist church needs pianist Sundays 10 a.m.-noon. $25.00 per week. JOB 153

CAREER SERVICES HAS MANY JOB OPPORTUNITIES ON FILE. COME BY AND LET US HELP YOU FIND WORK!

THE UPPER ROOM

The Upper Room Prayer and Praise Group will meet at 12 noon during January term. Everyone is welcome to come. Don't miss the opportunity to become a charter member of this new, dynamic group! Meetings are on Tuesdays on the second floor of Bartlett Hall. Regular meeting time will return to 11:30 a.m. for spring semester.

For sale: 1981 Toyota Celica coupe. Reliable. CD player, automatic transmission, cell phone antenna. Great condition. Good kid's car. Call Jan, x8220, or 982-5841 after 6 p.m. $1,800.

Would you like to create your own public service job after graduation?

Are you committed to social change? Are you a risk-taker with the ability to get things done? The echoing green foundation's Public Service Fellowship for Undergraduates may be right for you.

echoing green is a private foundation in New York City that gives graduates of selected business, environmental, international relations, law, public policy, divinity, medical, and education programs the opportunity to start their own public service organizations or new projects within existing organizations. The Public Service Fellowship for Undergraduates offers a one-year award of up to $15,000, plus support and technical assistance in getting projects off the ground. echoing green is looking for entrepreneurs with a plan. We support social change agents working in any field (education, the arts, human and civil rights, health, community economic development, and the environment, to name a few).

For more information, contact Dr. Stephen Nickle, MC Chaplain, at x8298.

Kazu's journal, entry III

by Kazu Nakane
Reporter

One thing I have been impressed with is the fact that people take care of their family very much. It is amazing that families takes precedence over jobs. Especially around Christmas, I have been surprised that they switch their minds to concentrate more on their family and its importance. At the same time, everyone knows that it's commercialized, and I think it's the same all over the world. For this article, the difference between Japanese and American Christmas and New Year's Day customs are introduced.

Probably because most of Japanese is Buddhist, every celebration related to Christianity became days on which we have fun. For example, for Japanese kids, Christmas is just one of their opportunities that they can have a party like birthdays. In the old time, fathers had pretended to be Santas, but now children are less naive. Therefore, it became a day the children ask parents to buy toys and a day their parents became broke.

When they grow up, Christmas is a very romantic, sweet day for couples. This is sort of silly, but they meet romantically, eat dinner romantically, give some presents together romantically, and go to somewhere and spend a night together romantically. One of my friends was working at KFC, and I met her accidentally. She pointed out one of the hotels we could see there and said, "Isn't it ridiculous!? So many couples bought fried chicken to go and went to that hotel!! You know what? There's no vacancy there."

I had no idea how they knew it, but I bet she was jealous. I didn't care about it, but I have learned that this Christmas was completely different from the Christian countries.

Another fact that is strange is that Japanese and Americans buy specific food and become very satisfied that they did well on their celebrations. This action corresponds to all celebrations, including the ones originally from Japan or the ones that came from overseas. For example, people buy Christmas cakes on that day. In the same way, the following systems make sense in Japan: the Valentine's Day = chocolate, Mother's Day = carnation, the New Year's Day = money (Adults give children some money) and so on.

I talked about how Americans think their families are important, but I don't mean Japanese can't treat their family finely, OK? Talking about the days we think about our family the most would be the New Year's Day. Like you are gathered on the Thanksgiving Day, we are gathered on the New Year's Day. The first thing we do is eat noodles made of buckwheat at 0 o'clock at midnight on January 1. The reason we eat it is we hope life will be long like noodles. We see the very first sunrise, and then we go to shrines to pray for health, good scores on studies, luck for entering colleges, love, etc. In fact, Japanese people in general, especially young people, are not so religious; this day might be the only day they pray. People buy a wooden plate with a string circled and drawn a horse, they write their hope and hang it on the branches. Also they buy fortune paper and tie them if the papers said something negative. Some liquor with sake and herbs are also available.

When we came back to their home, we eat lots of food stuffed in boxes before the day. The reason we prepare it before the New Year's day is so mothers do not work the New Year's Days. Every food in the boxes has meanings; for instance, one kind of it means hope that we can have many children, another kind means diligence, and another kind means long life. It sounds good for some people, but there is a problem; we became tired eating the same dishes during the first three days in New Years Days.

In front of the entrance, a pair of gate decorations with pine and pieces of bamboo are decorated like you do on Christmas day. We make rice cakes made by pounding a special kind of rice steamed into it, stuck, and congealed altogether. Some family give it to a god in a little wooden house and pray. The rice cake, called Mochi, is so delicious that I suggest you eat it because it is one of the best Japanese foods.

The season like New Year's, you'll see old, good, real Japan just the way you imagined. But it's not that old that samurai, the Japanese old knights, still walk the streets!

Polly's 'Good Answer'

Dear Polly,

I have an annoying problem I hope you can help me with. My roommate (who is also my best friend since diaperhood) is driving me insane. She no longer wants to hang out with me or any other girls for that matter. She has become catty, competitive, and surrounds herself only with men (boys actually). Why the sudden change? She used to be the best girlfriend.

Signed,

- Dumped On in Davis

Dearest Dumped,

Ahaa . . . jes . . . A have zeen zis before . . . (Your first mistake, hon, was making your friend your roommate . . . but that's another can of worms altogether . . .)

I would probably diagnose your friend with what I affectionately call "Smurfette Syndrome." (People afflicted thusly are right up there on the GETOVERYRSELF Scale with that guy who wouldn't go out with you because you just weren't "alternative" enough . . . ichh—okay, no, I'm not bitter . . .) Smurfette Syndrome is the need for a female of the species to surround herself with a large majority of male specimens for admiration and attention (and sometimes sex). C'mon now, didn't you always wonder about that selfish little blue wench? Now, don't jump to the conclusion that your friend has become a freaky ho in the past few months, but you are right to inquire about her strange behavior. It's true that this may be unnatural for her, because you say she has not always been this way, but for some women it's perfectly normal. She may now, as a college freshman away from home, be needing more male attention. Some women are chronic daddy's girls, some have many brothers, and some may simply be athletes or interested in "traditionally male" activities and identify more with men. Some, however, may simply be extremely insecure about themselves and therefore highly competitive with other women. Snubbing the competition simply makes it easier to charm those testosterone-laden beasts around them. It's kind of like hams who think that anything not caught on the camera is not worth doing; SS girls just have to be on stage (not necessarily at the Mouse's Ear, tee hee) in the proximity of men.

This may just be a phase, but note that the disease has truly taken hold if she begins to act like um, I don't know, say, Jenny McCarthy maybe. In this case, the disease is particularly advanced. Excessive giggling, fondling, and shameless flirting are not only symptoms of Smurfette Syndrome, they are also dangerously nauseating to any classy women within earshot. A mature woman needn't feel threatened by other attractive, intelligent, successful women. We should share feminine joys and learn from one another. But many women need to learn how to make true friends with women. Very often, our society pits sister against sister in relationships and career arenas. True, it sounds like your friend was true blue before the semester started, but she is still very young. You both may not have had time to develop

cont. on p. 14

All I want for Christmas . . .

by Bo McMichael
Reporter

All I want for Christmas is movies . . . movies . . . and more movies! December offers plenty of movie pleasure and relaxation time. During the holiday season, Hollywood has begun to unwrap its presents under the tree a bit early this year, and the first gift was a pair of Nike shoes with Mr. Air on the sole of the shoe.

Michael Jordan takes time off from his busy schedule to play a little basketball with Bugs Bunny and the rest of the Looney Tunes gang. "Space Jam" debuts Air Jordan's Hollywood career. Since most actors in Hollywood have no chance to compete with Jordan and his athletic ability, the Hollywood producers talked to the Looney Tune characters and set up the contract. "Space Jam" is an interactive movie between humans and the cartoon world. It seems that an evil outer space ruler is intent on capturing the Looney Tunes character, and the only person in the universe to stop them is Michael Jordan.

When I went to the ticket booth to buy my ticket, the little lady at the cinema said, "You know, you are the only adult without a kid!" She laughed and accepted my money, and my two buddies, and I headed into the theater. I have to say that I enjoyed the cartoon, and I am not any worse or any better from this entertaining cartoon. Some might say that it is a 90-minute commercial featuring Michael Jordan. The only response I can think of is that sometimes commercials are the best part of TV.

The next unwrapping was the Starship Enterprise. The eighth installment of Gene Roddenberry's creation "Star Trek" was the first film with no mention and no appearance from the original cast. The Next Generation was at the helm, and Jonathan Franks (number one) took the director's chair. The battle for existence over the Borg was the plot of "Star Trek: First Contact."

The interesting thing about this movie was the subplot of the origin of the Federation and how warp speed was invented. The movie began at 1:30, and there wasn't a seat left in the house. My only response is that I miss the old gang; however, everything is always changing, and so does the crew of the U.S.S. Enterprise. I enjoyed it, so, if you are a Trekkie or just a science fiction nut, this will be a good visit to the good old movie theater for you.

You know it is Christmas time when the films have titles like "Jingle All the Way." This comedy about the ultimate toy hunt stars Arnold Schwarzenegger, Sinbad, and Phil Hartman. The toy of all toys is nowhere to be seen on the eve of Christmas, and Arnold and Sinbad are hunting for TurboMan for their two boys. Arnold has attempted comedies ("Junior," "Twins"), and Sinbad is making his second big screen appearance after "Houseguest."

The movie sure did get me in the holiday spirit, although it is only the beginning of December and Christmas is still a few weeks away. Overall, it was historical, and, if you ever tried to find the impossible, then this movie is for you.

Well, the new year is right around the corner, and before the apple drops in New York Square the theaters will be busy with excitement. "Mars Attack" with Jack Nicholas and Tim Burton, "One Fine Day" with George Clooney (Batman) and Michelle Pfeiffer (Catwoman), and "Evita" with Madonna are just a few movies that are must-sees this holiday season.

So have a safe and fun Christmas! I hope you all get what you have asked for . . . Merry Christmas and Happy New Year . . . See you at the Movies!

Happy Soel-Nal

by Sun-Im Ryu
Reporter

Regardless of the differences between the East and the West, New Year's Day is considered an important day, but especially in South Korea, where New Year's Day is literally the first day of the lunar year.

People say, "Well begun is half done." Like this saying, the beginning of the new year is very important; however, there is an interesting difference. Our New Year's Day is the first day of the lunar January. Unlike the West, where people think the moon has a bad meaning, or in the East, where people are afraid of it, Korean people think the moon is the symbol of good things. We call our New Year's Day "Soel-Nal."

On New Year's Day, relatives come together in the oldest son's house to spend the holiday together.

In the morning of Soel-Nal, women are busy setting the table for ancestor memorial rites. This ceremony is for ancestors, like our parents or grandparents, already passed away.

Filial piety from Confucian ideas is important to us, so we prepare this ceremony on New Year's Day.

After this, we eat special rice-cake soup for breakfast instead of the rice which we usually eat all the time. We say if we eat one bowl of rice-cake soup, it means we grow older. After eating rice-cake soup, we wear traditional Korean clothes called "han-bok" and then we perform a New Year's bow to our elders.

After we bow to our elders, they give us good advice, like "Be healthy," "Study hard," and "I hope you will get everything you wish," and they also give us some money as a return courtesy. Also, we bow to the neighbors or teachers we respect on the same day.

Koreans spend New Year's Day in their own way. The way that people of each country spend New year's Day may be different; however, the meanings of this day may be similar because it is a celebration of life and new beginnings.

"Polly" cont. from p. 13
ideas about healthy adult friendships.

I would like to caution you concerning any suspicions you may have of reasons behind her behavior, though. If she is behaving promiscuously and/or you think she may have had a traumatic experience lately which may explain her new social agenda, please do not answer her silent treatment by ignoring her, too. She may be trying to compensate for damaged self-esteem resulting from an emotional or physical injury. (You could contact a counselor at Crawford House for advice on how to deal.)

On the other hand, however, it's probably completely harmless. She may just be exploring a side of herself she never got the chance to at home. Make sure you're not overreacting and courting the green-eyed monster before you talk to her. Remember, there's a lot of fun to be had by you just hanging out with the guys, as well. Ask her what she does with the boys and why the two of you haven't cruised the malls in a while. There may be some fantastic paint-ball club in Knoxville that you didn't know about. A well-rounded woman should feel free to paint her toenails Perky Pink while watching "Must-See TV" on Thursday night, go dancing with her man (or woman) on Friday night, referee a rugby match on Saturday afternoon, cry over The Bridges of Madison County on Saturday night, and win the belching contest finals at Fred's during the big football game on Sunday. Whew! (If she doesn't have thesis deadline, that is . . .)

Love, Your Faithful Soul
Sista,
Polly

P.S. "Tangent ology" letter-writer: would you please be so kind as to send me another copy of your letter? I seem to have misplaced it in my beautifully messy karmic clutter. (remember, a clean desk is the sign of an empty mind . . .)

- All other letters are welcome to MC box 2247.

Dear Editor:

Graduation is supposed to be a time of joy and happiness for the senior class with the rest of the community celebrating as well. It is supposed to be a time of remembering the past, admiring the present, and looking forward to the future. Over the past three years, the Class of 1997 has had memories to last a lifetime. We have contributed to the wealth and well-being of this college by sharing our concerns with the campus administration, and when we have made an impact, we were very proud. The Class of '97 is one to be remembered. Our contributions to the life of MC and the surrounding community of Blount County are to be noted. Whether being a Bradford Scholar, Bonner Scholar or helping to compose the college Covenant or the Alcohol Policy, we have given our all. But on graduation day, will the joy and happiness of these contributions be seen and celebrated? Maybe so on the surface, but underneath will be hurt and anger. This hurt and anger will come from the tyrannical and communistic process in which graduation was changed to a Monday morning. Tyrannical and communistic may be strong choices of wording, but that is what it feels like. It feels this way because we were "sold" on coming to Maryville College because we could make a difference in the life and community. We were "sold" into believing that we have say so and power in issues that directly affect the student body. That all sounds good, and for the past three years that has happened to a certain extent. Now, in the peak of our senior year, we are being told and "sold" that Monday is a better day for graduation, other than the Sunday that our class is used to observing.

The hurt and anger stem from this very thing. Graduation was changed without consultation to the whole class. "About half-dozen senior student leaders with good feedback" just doesn't cut it. Other possibilities in reaching the rest of the class should have been explored. A committee should and could have been formed over the summer to help make a better decision. Mailings to the rest of the senior class, other than the "half-dozen" on campus, should and could have taken place. Then, consultation with students would have been fine, and maybe this whole graduation on a Monday issue would not even be an issue. Residence Life picks a particular hall for the summer to house students; if students are to move in on Tuesday and Summer school session to begin on Wednesday following graduation, how in the world is the maintenance staff going to clean that particular hall in time for summer school and CELL students to move in. There is a foreseeable problem in our midst — students angry with Residence Life. That staff has quite a bit of hostility to look forward to.

Could changing the summer school schedule of the finals schedule take place? Those are not the easiest solutions to a problem, but changing graduation to Monday morning is not either. Graduation was changed for safety reasons, weather, and registrar working too hard to get grades done on time for senior students to graduate. Safety reasons are wonderful in supporting the change, but these safety issues stemmed from several people almost dying from heat exhaustion. One particular person that had a spell had just gotten out of the hospital for pretty serious reasons and should not have been at graduation sitting in the hot sun. That incident involving that person is the main reason for the change of graduation whether we are told it or not. The second reason has to do with the weather. It has something to do with the pressure in the morning building up from the heat and by the afternoon, the front will move in and it will come a shower. That is a crock of @#!* if ever heard. It has not rained the past two graduations, and there was not even a cloud in the sky. Surely administration is smart enough to think of something better other than that crap. It sounds very fake and funny because it has never been a big issue until now. Getting the grades done for graduating seniors is important and is a legitimate excuse. The only thing is, this year's class is one of the smallest in a long time. We entered with around 177, and at least one fourth of those students are no longer here. So will it be just as hard to finish grades with a staff of three people? Any rebuttal given to these excuses is not a personal attack on anyone in particular, it is simply to bring to the light what is realization. Sounds like EGO talking to me, and not only from administration, but from students as well. We are only doing what we are taught to do, only what the Statement of Purpose of this institution is setting out to do — "to encourage analytical thinking and effective expression, to foster discriminating aesthetic taste and sound judgment, to provide opportunity for developing personal values, and to nurture the deep concern for persons that leads to constructive action." What-ever happened to "caring for others on campus and beyond, sharing genuine concern for the world, and working to fulfill the College's purpose, directors, administration, staff, faculty, and students strive together to build and strengthen the human community." A hint of all those things may have taken place in the changing process, but is the true statement abided by? As Dr. Gibson would say so nicely, "Let's make Maryville College the Best Possible College." Working together and creating a sharing atmosphere has to take place first. "Let's put the student back into student affairs" (original thought, Jason Thompson).

by Aaron N. Stone,
Adam Ray, and Michelle
Lawson

This letter was sent before graduation was changed to Sunday evening. More information will come soon.

'Y'all get to work'

by Sarah West
Editor

What has happened to our work ethic? Many people seem to think that performing their tasks efficiently and responsibly is an absurd expectation and that their employers must be slave-drivers if they happen to have such an idea.

While employed in various places, including a factory and a law firm, and even working in different organizations, I have realized that working responsibly is not important for many, while others choose not to work at all.

How can someone be guiltlessly lazy on someone else's time? These people have not figured out the benefits of working hard and think that the satisfaction and respect achieved from doing an honest job are a phenomena, if not right-out falsehoods.

Slamming one's employer and business is at the very least rude and qualifies as disrespecting the one who is putting money in your pocket.

Yawp, Let It Be, & American Pie

by Sarah Christians
Reporter

Emerson once called for the great American poet. He envisioned a writer that would break new ground and revolutionize American literature. His answer came with Walt Whitman. Give us a YAWP! Whitman did make an impact. Scholars have traced his influence directly into the literature of post World War II America, the Beat movement. "I sing the body electric..." became, "I saw the best minds of my generation destroyed by madness...." So, before this puts you to sleep

Gratitude and loyalty have been replaced by resentment and mistrust. If employment conditions are substandard, employees may have a reason to complain; however, employees who have an acceptable environment are beholden to their employer.

The people I have worked with seem to think that the employer should be subordinate to them. The "give me" attitude of some of my past co-workers has been so overwhelming that I have wanted to fire them. We need to reintroduce the work ethic in East Tennessee before we become an area of hostile employers and employees or even welfare recipients.

Illegal aliens will work twice as hard as many spoiled Americans, so why is it so bizarre that businesses are so quick to hire them instead of accepting more future workman's compensation recipients? The yearly 300,000 or so illegals entering our country help support our economy more than many American citizens do.

because you think you might be in an English class, I'll make my point: No one can say "I love you" more manly than Paul McCartney

Random! Seriously, think about it. One of my closest friends pointed this out to me over dinner this summer. And I, ever prone to contemplation, have not quit thinking about it. And I have come to the conclusion that Emerson would be happily stunned at the profusion of innovative American poets who regularly disguise themselves as lyricists. Not that Paul McCartney is American, but they spelled it Beatles for the

What I have seen in the places I have worked in East Tennessee disturbs me. I think our ideals about democracy have become perverted. We think about freedom and equality and... not servile attitudes, which just happen to uphold the structures of our society. Accepting the role of the servant happily may be a foreign ideal to many Americans, but it is one that does not hurt at all and is essential to our capitalistic society. Regardless of what my job is, I am still a servant to others. Acting out the role of a servant is not hard or belittling, unless that is what one makes of it.

Illegal immigrants, and even legal ones, are willing to do jobs that Americans are not. Many people in the world would love to have a job and would be ever-so-grateful for it, but we Americans have developed arrogant attitudes that suggest we would prefer to live off of our government or only halfway do a job than to work responsibly and respectfully, which is how our employers have to work.

American literature that influenced them, and in turn, became the most impactful band in the history of rock and roll.

There is poetry around you everyday in your music. Now, all 47 declared English and Writing Communication majors on campus this semester will applaud, but for the rest of you who deal in science, math, and other non-humanities majors, does this surprise you? Have you listened to that new Cake song, "Going the Distance," and thought about the really groovy beat for a song about a race car driver? Listen harder. There is poetry there. There is lost love across campus, cost money for the

To the editor of the Echo:

I am writing this letter to you in hopes that someone, somewhere, will read this and listen.

In the Fine Arts Center, there are four bulletin boards which are dedicated to various groups. One is for the art department, one is for the preparatory piano program, one is for the music department, and one is for Delta Omicron, the honor fraternity of the music department.

This may not seem like a big deal, but almost daily signs are taken down from the various bulletin boards. Sometimes, the space is used for other campus notices, but many times the signs just disappear. It is not just meeting notices, either; one of the items taken from the Delta Omicron board was an award letter from our international governing board.

All I am asking for is for all students to recognize that these signs, as well as all of the signs and shattered hope. This is why Emerson would be impressed. Because Paul McCartney wrote such impassioned words to such catchy tunes, people wanted to be like him and write more impassioned words to catchier tunes. While exceeding the Beatles may be near to impossible, it did allow for a revolution in American music. But, thanks to lyrics like "And in the end, the love you take is equal to the love you make," contributed to a poetic revolution. Soon thereafter Don McLean wrote "American Pie," one of the most profoundly poetic songs of all time.

Emerson could look at any modern writer/singer, from Don McLean, Paul Simon and David Gates all the way to Ed Kowalczyk and Michael Stipe, to see the poetry that is so essential in modern music. This organization or the person who has put them up. In the case of Delta Omicron, that money comes from internal sources; for the organizations, who receive funding from the senate, that money has come from the student activity fee which each of us pays. Further, to take a letter, which has obvious significance to Delta Omicron, especially in this year, which is the thirtieth anniversary of our chapter at Maryville, is just plain mean.

Am I wrong in my general faith of Maryville College students? I would hope not, since our community has taken strides to establish a covenant which binds us all together. This covenant cannot exist without respect, for ourselves, for others (regardless of what they believe), and for this place we call home.

Sincerely,

Dara DiGiacomo

President, Delta Omicron,
Alpha Zeta Chapter

very well may be an entirely new brand of American poetry, written by a new brand of American poet, who also happens to play the guitar. While the words of today's musicians often look back to influences like Allen Ginsberg and Walt Whitman, it is still a unique expression of the poetry of life in and around our Millennial Generation.

Emerson would probably be shocked, but I also think that he would feel as though his call for the great American poet had been answered many times over. And so, the next time you hear your favorite song and think a little about how much meaning there is beyond the obvious, think back to when McCartney wrote "There will be an answer. Let it be." and wonder if he wasn't comforting Emerson as well.

The Highland Echo

The weekly voice of Maryville College - Founded 1914

VOL. LXXXII, NO. 6

Tuesday, February 11, 1997

502 East Lamar Alexander Pkwy, Maryville, TN 37804

BSA kicks off a spirited Black History Month at MC

by Eric Daugherty
Reporter

While Feb. 1 officially marked the beginning of Black History Month, activities throughout Maryville College and the surrounding community began weeks before. Campus and community activities are coordinated in a joint sense of celebration and fellowship.

On Saturday, Jan. 18,

Maryville Middle School was host to A Day in African-American Music. This celebrated the varied types of music that are indigenous to the African-American community. One of the many performances was a jazz ensemble comprised of MC Minority Services Coordinator Larry Ervin, Professor of Music Dr. Larry Smithee, and students and community members.

Saturday's activities prepared for Martin Luther King, Jr. Day on Jan. 20. Campus and Community members remembered the slain civil rights movement leader with a march that began on campus and traveled throughout the community. MC students Folami Ford and Dee Bell served as masters of ceremony.

The majority of activities planned for Black History Month take place over a three day period, beginning Feb. 14.

On Feb. 14, the MC Black Student Association (BSA) will present a talent show, featuring performances from both campus and community.

On Saturday, Feb. 15, BSA and the MC Voices of Praise will co-host a Gospel Jamboree. The Jamboree will feature VOP, the Berea College Gospel Choir, and the Clemson University Gospel Choir. The Jamboree begins at 5:30 p.m. in Wilson Chapel.

On Sunday, Feb. 16, at 3 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center, BSA will hold the Mr. and Ms. BSA pageant.

On Sunday, Feb. 23, at 6 p.m., MC VOP will present their annual concert. The concert will be given at St. John's Baptist Church.

cont. on p.2

Constitution reviewed during J-Term

by Sherrie Brents
Reporter

The Student Senate Constitution calls for an ad-hoc committee to be created every three years to review the constitution. The committee consists of the Student Senate President, Vice president for Student Development, faculty advisor, and four senators. This year, Jason Thompson, Dr. William Seymour, Dr. Kathi Shiba, Mark Hatfield, Yosef Addis, Joel Campbell, and Eric Obermiller are participating in the committee.

Yosef Addis, a committee member, said that some of the terminology in the document was outdated, and updating the document was one of the first projects of the group. According to Addis, another suggestion that the committee will bring before senate is the addition of a Center for English Language Learning (CELL) senator.

Also, Addis stated that the committee is considering new senate election guidelines. More specifically, the candidates for senate president will run with their selection for vice president. This decision will have to be made in a timely

cont. on p. 2

Synge heats up music scene

by Shannon Bryant
Reporter

Many students dream of someday achieving fame and fortune, but Maryville College senior David Downs is already well on his way. After less than a year of songwriting and performing, Down's alternative rock band, Synge, is achieving local, regional, and national recognition.

Downs, the lead vocalist for the group, states that "destiny" played a large role in the band's success. In July of 1996, the band members found each other through ads at local music stores. Their original bassist left the band in September, forcing the members of Synge to find a replacement.

Synge, whose musical influences include Korn, the Deftones, and Tool, has played at several local music venues including the Mercury Theatre, Bombay Bicycle Club, Gryphons, and The Frog (formerly Bullfrog's). They have opened for Top Twenty Alternative acts.

Synge will also be opening for Helmet at the Mercury Theatre in March. Downs states that he identifies closely with the performance style of Jim Morrison in his concert appearances.

In addition, Synge will be releasing a ten-song CD this summer. In October, the band cut a three-song demo with the aid of Travis Wyrick, formerly of the Knoxville band Sage. The band will return to the studio in March to record the remaining seven songs.

Downs and his Synge get perform at the Mercury Theatre in Knoxville

Downs gives much of the credit to his fellow band members. "They let me do something I really enjoy... I owe the other guys a lot," he said.

Downs also says that the band's manager, Bing Foo, and independent booking agencies have given the group good exposure. "Each show the crowd gets bigger and crazier," stated Downs, "which makes me get crazier."

So how does Downs react to the proximity of success? He stated that, if they make it big, "so be it. We'll live it up to the fullest until the ride stops."

Those who would like a demo tape or a T-shirt may call Downs at x8722.

Dear patrons,

The staff of The Echo would like to bring to your attention a few changes for this semester. First, we are going to be producing the paper every week. You should have an eight page issue in your box every Tuesday morning. There will be some new additions including columns and articles pulled off the Internet. We would also like to congratulate Sarah Christians who will be serving as our new copy editor.

Inside

Webb goes to DC....	2
New from the 'Net...	3
Theater awards.....	5
Star Wars.....	6
Dave Barry.....	6
What's up at MC.....	6
Southern Exposure..	7
Cupid's Corner.....	8

Highlights

News.....	2
Senate.....	2
Sports.....	4
Job Listings.....	5
Features.....	6
Cartoons.....	7
Op/Ed.....	7

Webb interns with Senator in DC

by Sarah West
Editor

The Maryville College experience includes many opportunities for students to augment their learning outside of the standard classroom, and one student leader will be taking full advantage of one this spring.

Matt Webb, a senior majoring in English and minoring in political science, left on Jan. 24 to spend the spring interning in Washington D.C.

Webb was accepted by the Washington Center, an organization that provides student interns with a position in a congressman's office, and received a phone call from the office of Senator Bob Kerry of Nebraska two weeks later.

The Washington Center also requires students take an evening course related to their studies. Webb will be taking "Politics and the Congressional Arena," for which he will receive political science

"BSA" cont. from p. 1

A concert by the acappella vocal group Regency caps off Black History Month activities. The concert will begin at 7:30 p.m. on Tuesday, Feb. 25, in the FAC Music Hall. Admission is free.

While Ervin is pleased with everything planned for Black History Month, he added that he "would like to see the whole campus have more of a part." Ervin suggested that perhaps having some J-Term classes geared toward the upcoming month of February would help. Ervin also expressed interest in seeing classes suspended on Martin Luther King, Jr. Day, with students encouraged to participate in or attend campus and community activities. "Black History Month is not just African-American history," said Ervin, "but it is a part of every American's history."

credit. His job description includes researching, writing bill drafts, responding to constituents, and more.

"I want to see how the American political system works first hand," said Webb. He believes the experience may help him decide whether or not he would like to get involved in politics later in life.

Webb intends to go to law school after he graduates from MC.

Webb, who is an honors student, has spent three years on senate representing commuters and has served on various committees. He also participated for two years in MC's

Senate considers movie channel

by Sherrie Brents
Reporter

The first Senate meeting held on Feb. 6 included committee reports and a presentation by Dr. William Seymour, vice president of Student Development, and April Hicks, Residence Hall Coordinator.

Several committees gave reports at the meeting, including the Student Programming Board, intramural committee, and fitness center committee. SPB reported that "Regency" will be the next activity, and the intramural committee reported that five on five basketball sign-ups are underway. Adam Ray, student senate vice president, announced the new fitness room hours: Monday thru Thursday 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. and 7 p.m. to 10 p.m., Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Saturday from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m., and Sunday from 4 p.m. to 8 p.m.. Jason Thompson, student senate president, reported that MC's student senate has been invited to participate in the Tennessee Outreach Day. This event, in its first year, will include representatives from every college or university in Tennessee. The representatives will perform a community service project on April 12, in the name of their institution.

Seymour and Hicks presented an option for the $25 portion of the activity fee that was added last year to fund the fitness center. Thompson told the Senate members that they could either remove the $25, or any portion of it, or use it to create more services for the students. Seymour and Hicks pre-

Model United Nations.

As a Bonner Scholar, Webb is most proud of his opportunity to volunteer at the Boys' Club, an organization which promotes interaction between positive role models and underprivileged, fatherless boys. "The Boys' Club has probably been the most rewarding thing I have done," said Webb.

He is pleased with the progress he has witnessed. "Kids change over four years, and being able to see the change and knowing that I've played a role in helping them mature is very fulfilling."

sented a movie channel as a possibility. Seymour told the senate that the channel would utilize one of the two channels not being used in the cable contract. According to Hicks the channel costs $780 a semester and requires signing a three year contract. The cost includes all the equipment necessary and twelve movies per month. The movie selection would be comparable to what is in the dollar theaters. Also, Hicks reported the number of showings per movie would not be limited. The channel would also display campus messages, which could run all day, except during movies. Seymour and Hicks said the channel would be a convenient way for clubs to announce meetings and events.

"Review" cont. from p. 1

manner, according to Addis, "because the election committee needs to know what is going on in order to start planning the elections."

Addis stated that the committee would also like to add a grade point average requirement to the position of Chief Justice. "Right now, that is the only position that does not have a G.P.A. requirement," said Addis.

"We've met about five times this year, but we have accomplished quite a bit," stated Addis.

According to Senate President Jason Thompson, the committee is looking at the constitutions from other schools to see how they compare to Maryville's. Thompson stated, "It gives the committee the opportunity to look at what other schools are doing. It helps us to see what works and what doesn't and to introduce us to other options." Thompson said that this is in an effort to find a better government for the students. Also, Thompson said that the committee was correcting the typographical errors that were found in the document. "We hope to have those corrections finished by Spring Break," said Thompson. "Ultimately, our recommendations will go back to Senate for approval."

The Highland Echo
Editor

Sarah H. West

Production Editor

Patrick E. Leslie

Copy Editor

Sarah Christians

Staff Writers

Sherrie Brents, Tonya Briggs, Shannon Bryant, Joey Cody, Dara DiGiacomo, Dave Dupont, Chuck Gilky, Brian Hastings, Kristi Johnson, Lori Leffel, Caraline Leggett, Andy Long, LaToya Lundy, Joe Malheiro, Bo McMichaels, Rissa Miller, Kazu Nakane, Dallas Rightmeyer, Sun-Im Ryu, Kim Schuenemann, Michelle Schuler, Adam Shepherd, Christi Stalans, and Traci Tidwell

Public Relations Coordinator

Michelle Shuler

Photo Staff

Keli Jennett and
Jenny Oxford

Cartoonists

Carl Gombert, and Jessica Wilkins

Faculty Advisor

Jeff Gary

Please send letters to the editor, poetry, short stories, photographs, and art to box #2247.

Phone

981-8176

E-Mail

Swest75@aol.com

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 500 words.

President's education plan faces questions

by Charles Dervarics
CPS

WASHINGTON—President Clinton's new two-part approach to higher education spending—a Pell Grant increase coupled with tax credits—is drawing a mixed response among both education advocates and Republicans in Congress.

Most express enthusiasm about the Pell Grant increase, which would raise the maximum grant for the neediest students from its current $2,700 to $3,000 next year. However, some favor an even higher grant as an alternative to tax components of the Clinton plan, which some argue would mainly benefit higher-income families at a cost of about $35 billion.

The tax proposals "create a real dilemma," said Arnold Mitchem, executive director of the National Council of Educational Opportunity Associations. He said college presidents "can't go to parents" and criticize the tax plan, even though it costs more than the annual discretionary budget of the U.S. Department of Education.

The tax plan consists of two elements—a $1,500-a-year HOPE Scholarship to students who maintain a B average and a tax credit of up to $10,000 to offset the cost of tuition. Families could choose the scholarship or the credit, which would begin to phase out as family incomes reach $75,000 annually. HOPE Scholarships could last up to two years, part of the president's goal to make a community college education within the financial reach of all Americans. Students with HOPE Scholarships would remain eligible for other financial aid programs but would receive the $1,500 maximum minus other federal grants they receive.

"Any investment in education is good for the country," Mitchem said. However, "both tax plans are irrelevant for a low-income student.

One alternative is to spend the equivalent of the tax credit on raising the maximum Pell Grant to as much as $5,000 a year. Sen. Paul Wellstone (D-Minn.) introduced such legislation recently. "It is frightening to imagine how expensive colleges would be without the Pell program, and how few lower-income families would be able to obtain diplomas," Wellstone said. A much higher Pell Grant would help the neediest, unlike the tax plan, he said. However, Wellstone's Pell Grant plan also would reach fewer students. About 4 million students may receive Pell Grants next year, while at least 8 million would benefit from the tax credits alone.

The tax plans also have met criticism from Republicans, who question how the federal government would enforce the B-average requirement of HOPE Scholarships. "Will the Internal Revenue Service collect students' report cards in the same manner in which they obtain written reports to verify other tax data?" asked Rep. Bill Archer (R-Tex.), chairman of the powerful House Ways and Means Committee. And Senate Republicans prefer another alternative: tax-deductible contributions of up to $1,000 a year into education investment accounts and deductions of up to $2,500 a year for interest payments on student loans.

Clinton administration officials downplayed those concerns, however, as the president sought support for his tax and Pell Grant proposals as part of a 10-point plan to renew American education. "This is the education age, and America must have an education budget right for the times," said Education Secretary Richard

Riley in presenting his agency's 1998 budget proposal.

For student aid, the budget plan proposes $47 billion, 10 percent above current funding. The plan would increase spending on direct loans, in which colleges receive loan capital directly from the government without assistance from banks. It also would provide more college work-study funds and cut student loan fees. College work-study would receive $857 million, an increase of $27 million from current funding. In the budget, the president also reiterated his plan to recruit work-study students for his America Reads! effort, in which 1 million tutors would help ensure all children can read by third grade. About 100,000 of these tutors would come from the work-study program, according to the president's plan. The federal government would waive the required campus matching funds for work-study students when students become tutors.

AmeriCorps volunteers, most of whom are college students, would make up many of the other 1 million tutors, according to the budget. Thus, the administration would spend $1 billion through AmeriCorps during the next five years as part of the America Reads! effort. The cut in loan fees would affect most financial aid programs. Fees would drop from 4 percent to 2 percent on need-based Stafford Loans and from 4 percent to 3 percent on other loans.

Independent students, or those not financially dependent on their parents, also would gain better access to federal aid in the new budget. The government would change the need analysis for these students, making it easier for about 200,000 students to access grants. Students age 24 and older would benefit the most, Riley said.

Elsewhere for student aid, the budget requests:

- $583 million for Supplemental Grants, the same as current funding;

- $188 million for Perkins Loans, $10 million above the current figure; and

- no new funding for State Student Incentive Grants, funded at $50 million this year.

The program has fulfilled its aim by helping states establish their own financial aid grants, the budget stated. The budget also proposed $132 million for Presidential Honors Scholarships for the top 5 percent of graduating students in every high school. These students would receive a one-year, $1,000 grant for college. Congress turned down a similar request last year.

The administration proposed a 5-percent increase, or $25 million more, for federal TRIO programs that help recruit disadvantaged youth for college. The program would receive $525 million next year.

The budget's release culminated a week in which the president in his State of the Union Address pledged to make education "every citizen's most prized possession."

Making college more affordable is one part of his 10-point agenda to improve American education. Other goals include higher standards; safer schools; improved education facilities; expanded early childhood education; and consolidation of job-training programs to better promote lifelong learning.

The plans now go to Capitol Hill, where Congress is promising an in-depth review. The budget covers the government's fiscal year that begins Oct. 1.

(c) Tribune Media Services, 1996. All rights reserved.

© 1997 Tribune Media Services, Inc. All rights reserved.

Yesterday's Puzzle solved:

2/8/97

- 7 Last queen of Spain
8 Hermetic
9 Captured
10 Elegant
11 Son of Jacob
12 Involved
13 Sharp pain
21 Dodgers' Nomo
23 From the past
25 Hispanic
26 Diamond
27 Case off
28 Waterway
31 Boutonniere's milieu
32 Oust
33 Lala
35 Sac
37 Play it by—41 Indebted
42 Lifting tool
45 Grew molars
48 Elbowed

- 50 21
52 Car part
55 He wrote "The Republic"
56 Rank
57 Clothing
58 Roman, abbr.
59 Ran's garment
61 Little bit
62 Shortly
63 Hawaiian bird
66 Simian

Scots ranked #1, could go to NCAA tournament

by Joe Malheiro
Reporter

With eight games remaining, the fighting Scots look to be heading to the NCAA tournament barring a disastrous late season collapse.

With the number one ranking in the South now in their possession, the Scots must look ahead to the final eight games of the regular season and play well enough to secure a tournament birth.

Six of the final eight games are home games, and Coach Randy Lambert is optimistic. "Several more wins should get us in the tournament," said Lambert. "Twenty or more wins could get us a number one seat which would allow us a first round game at home."

The fighting Scots basketball program is excited and energetic. They have reason to be.

Following their 73-66 victory over division I Belmont on February 2 in Nashville, the Scots vaulted to the number one ranking in the South among NCAA division III basketball programs. Coach Lambert and his veteran group have a glow in their eyes and an NCAA tournament bid on their minds.

"I feel that 19 or 20 wins will get us in the tournament", coach Lambert said. "The team has set a goal to win at least 20 games, and hopefully more". With eight games remaining in the regular season, and six of those at home, the Scots have an excellent chance to make the 20-win plateau. "The last six home games are crucial", said Lambert "Any win from here on out will help us keep our ranking".

The Scots just recently had a six game winning streak snapped by SCAD at home on Feb. 6. The Scots fell by a final count of 78-67 and were led in scoring by Dee Bell with 16 points and Chris Houseright with 14 points. Prior to the loss, the Scots had been playing well, a sight that pleased their coach. "All five of our starters have been playing consistently," said Lambert. "Someone has always risen to the occasion and played at the top of their game during the streak."

During the streak the Scots rattled off back-to-back victories over Fisk and Division I Belmont in Nashville during the weekend of Feb. 1-2. "Beating Belmont got us the respect we needed for a number one ranking," added Lambert.

"Now we must play well enough to maintain our ranking."

The Scots have a crucial upcoming game at home against Sewanee on Thursday, Feb. 13. The Scots also play on the road on Monday, Feb. 10 at Greensboro in an important Division III matchup.

"Sewanee is ranked third right now, and that is going to be one of the biggest games we have left," said Lambert. "I'd like to issue a challenge to the student body to get behind this team and support us for the remaining six home games. The team would really appreciate and enjoy added support," said Lambert. "We need to create a good basketball environment in our gym and get the fans excited."

Fans cheer the Scots on to victory

photo by Keli Jennett

Stat Box Information NCAA Division III Mens's Basketball Regional Rankings Through February 3

1. Maryville, Tenn.	14-3	6. Hampton Sydney, Va.
2. Roanoke, Va.	14-4		14-5
3. Bridgewater, Va.	15-4	7. Christopher Newport, Va.
tie. Sewanee, Tenn.	12-4		12-5
5. Hendrix, Ark.	16-3	8. Stillman, Ala.	13-5

photo by Keli Jennett

Lady Scots challenge Savannah College of Art and Design for the ball.

Scots Basketball Results Week of February 2-8

Men	Women
Sunday: Scots 80, Fisk 54	Sunday: Wilmington (Ohio) 81, Lady Scots 72
Thursday: Savannah A&D (78): McMilan 16, Morris 13, Richards 12, Perry 11, Brown 11, Nagbe 8, Robins 4, Alexander 2, Moody 1.	Thursday: Savannah A&D (74): Combs 24, Sullivan 20, Corbin 15, Sommerfeld 6, Ford 4, Brkere 4.
Scots (67): Bell 16, Housewright 14, Bryan 12, Danzey 11, Beaty 7, Shepherd 2, Stiles 2, Wright 2, McGreal 1.	Lady Scots (84): Buck 31, Casey 17, Shepherd 16, Dunlap 14, Alexander 3, Roberson 2, Loveday 1.
Saturday: Rust (69): Armstrong 20, Saulsberry 14, Hearn 10, Davidson 9, Young 6, Pitts 4, Wise 4, Taylor 2.	Saturday: Rust (47): Jackson 22, Bailey 8, Stovall 8, Glover 4, Patterson 3, Adams 2.
Scots (79): Bell 25, Housewright 22, Beaty 10, Danzey 8, Poag 5, Wright 4, Vaughn 3, McGreal 2.	Lady Scots (76): Buck 20, Dunlap 9, Cockerham 8, Roberson 8, Loveday 7, Shepherd 7, Hewitt 7, Casey 6, Johnson 2, Yaksich 2.

CAREER SERVICES ANNOUNCEMENTS JOB FAIR '97

The annual Career Services Job Fair will be held on Thurs. Mar. 13, from 11 am until 1 p.m. in the PDR. Opportunities for PT, summer, internships, and FT employment will be available. Everyone is welcome.

JOBS FOR GRADS

Proffitt's will be on campus to interview May grads for Mgmt. positions. Come by to sign up.

NBC Bank is accepting resumes for local jobs. Come to Career Services if interested.

Northwestern Mutual offers positions in all aspects of financial planning. More info and employer profile available.

Sea Ray Boats is calling for resumes of May grads. Express interest in Career Services.

Dogwood Technology, a local company, is looking for a computer programmer. A+ graphics, C&X Graphics and exposure to Unix helpful. Competitive entry level salary. Need to start FT now. Fax resumes to 584-7999.

INTERNSHIPS:

Summer '97 TVA applications are available. Requires at least a 2.5 GPA, major in computer science, environmental sciences, physics, biology, marketing, or business admin. Deadline is Feb. 28.

PART-TIME JOBS:

Fort Sanders West needs aerobics instructors; child care for health and fitness center; front desk receptionist - health and fitness; lifeguards; and personal trainer/fitness instructor (requires major in P.E.).

Temporary:

Brookhaven Farm needs servers for Feb 14. $5/hr plus tips. Must complete employment papers by Feb. 12. See Jan.

John Sevier School needs after school group leader. $5.25/hr. See Job description.

Small church needs Sunday pianist. $25/wk. 10am-noon. Inquire about Job 167.

HMR in Foothills Mall needs people in marketing. Approach people and ask them to participate in survey regarding consumer products. $4-$8 per survey. Pays monthly. More info. Refer to JOB 182.

Knoxville Utilities Board offers various student positions. Applications will be accepted through Dec. 31, 1997, to fill temporary student positions on an as-needed basis. More info available.

Perpetual Motion Gym needs instructors for cheerleading and tumbling. Salary negotiable. Come by Career Services for details.

There are many other PT job listings in the Career Services Center, 2nd floor Fayerweather.

Travel and earn college credit in paid summer internship. Call 1-800-251-4000 (x1428).

Stand out from the crowd! Be an R.A. Pick up applications in Residence Life on 2nd floor Fayerweather by Feb 21.

SIX MEMBERS OF THE MC COMMUNITY AND THE COLLEGE THEATRE HAVE BEEN NOMINATED FOR AWARDS WHICH WILL BE PRESENTED AT THE THIRD ANNUAL KNOXVILLE AREA THEATRE COALITION AWARDS CEREMONY ON SUNDAY, FEB. 23. NOMINATIONS INCLUDED:

"The Threepenny Opera" for Best Musical

"A Doll's House" for Best Small College or Student Production

Timothy Barnes in "A Doll's House" for Best Actor, Play

Sara Baker in "The Threepenny Opera" for Best Actress, Musical

Todd Smith in "The Threepenny Opera" for Best Actor, Musical

Jill Stapleton-Bergeron in "A Doll's House" for Best Director, Play; in "The Threepenny Opera" for Best Director, Musical; in "A Doll's House" for Best Sound Design

Barbara Kistler in "The Threepenny Opera" for Best Supporting Actress, Musical

Alan Reihl in "The Threepenny Opera" for Best Scenic Design

DRB and J-Board Reports

1/5 Eight students were charged with violating the visitation policy in Davis Hall. All eight students received a warning.

1/6 Three students were charged with violating the visitation policy in Davis Hall. All three students received a warning.

1/7 Three students were charged with violating the visitation policy in Gamble Hall. All three students received a warning.

1/7 One student in Carnegie Hall was charged with illegal entry. The case was dismissed.

1/10 One student was charged with violation of the alcohol policy in Lloyd Hall. The case is pending a j-board appeal.

1/10 Three students were charged with harassment in Pearsons Hall. All three students were assigned to counseling.

1/10 Two students in Pearsons Hall were charged with vandalism. The students were assigned retribution and community service.

1/11 Four students were charged with violation of the alcohol policy in Lloyd Hall. The case was dismissed.

1/12 Two students in Carnegie Hall were charged with assault. Both students have been assigned to private counseling.

1/22 Two students in Carnegie Hall were charged with violation of quiet hours. The students received a warning.

1/23 One student was charged with violation of the alcohol policy in Carnegie Hall. The case is pending.

1/27 Two students in Gamble Hall were charged with violating the visitation policy. The students were given a warning.

1/28 One student was charged with violation of the alcohol policy in Carnegie Hall. The case was dismissed.

Artworks of MC

Submit your cartoons, photos, drawings, pics of art with an MC theme to be displayed throughout the Chilhowean. Mail them to box 2784 or 2080 or call x8769 or x8729.

Compact Discs Records Cassettes

NEW & USED

Buy * Sell * Trade

The Other Record Shop

2131 E. Broadway
Maryville 977-9959

MC Student Special

1.00 OFF
PURCHASE W/
THIS FLYER

BOUJ'S

MARYVILLE'S

MOST HAPPENING COFFEEHOUSE
IS NOW OPEN!

ESPRESSO CAPPUCCINO LATTE
STEAMERS

BAGELS CROISSANTS PASTRIES
ETC. ETC. ETC.

Always Fresh
Always Delicious

Live music (call for schedule)

Jazzberry General
905 Court Street
Phone: 984-0391

HOURS

7A.M.-7P.M. MON-THURS
7A.M.-11P.M. FRIDAY
10A.M.-11P.M. SATURDAY
IF YOU WANT SUNDAYS
LET US KNOW!!

Directions: Take a right at the Court Street Exit and drive till you see us!

At the movies: "Chapter IV A New Hope"

by Bo McMichael
Columnist

"Hello My Fellow Americans," it has been a "Scream" this holiday season. "Jerry Maguire" and "Michael" saw "The Preacher's Wife" at "The Relic," and there was some added "Turbulence" when the "People" went against "Larry Flynt." As you can see, the season was filled with all types of movies. The industry had an anything-goes attitude. The season began with the Wes Craven horror film, "Scream." This particular film might just spark a new era of horror films ranging back to the days of Jason, Freddy, and Michael. However, the epic drama reined supreme with Tommy "Boy" Cruise in "Jerry Maguire" and John Travolta in "Michael." I was unable to see Madonna's "Evita," but have heard mixed reports.

The Echo is now a weekly, which allows me to focus on the hot movie of the week. A LONG TIME AGO IN A GALAXY FAR FAR AWAY. . . Chapter IV "A New Hope" is a particular phrase that everyone should know unless you are from a galaxy far away. On May 24, 1977, George Lucas introduced us to the inside of his imagination. Lucas was a high school senior when he developed the script for "The Star Wars Trilogy." The lines were long, and the wait was even longer to see this epic space adventure. Now it is Jan. 31, 1997, and Lucas is celebrating the twentieth anniversary of a film that redefined the film industry. Since, every director has tried to duplicate or better Lucas, but unsuccessfully.

We are now close to the next Millennium. Although "Star Wars" has not become a reality, it has become a household name. A group of fourth graders was polled about the world we live in and then asked questions about "The Star Wars Trilogy." The results explained that Han Solo is president and Princess Leia first lady.

I was two and a half years old when "Star Wars" shot to the big screen. My parents said I saw it at a drive-in, but I don't remember. When I heard they were bringing the trilogy back, I felt like a little kid. On that Friday, I donned my "Star Wars" tie and hat, placed my Jedi light saber by my side, and headed to the theater. The next two and half hours were like taking a trip back in time and visiting good friends. "Star Wars: Special Edition" is not the same as the original film. The

Return to sweet games of childhood

by Dave Barry

OK, here's a nostalgia question: What childhood game does this remind you of?

"Colonel Mustard in the library with a candlestick."

If you answered, "Spin the Bottle," then I frankly do not want to know any more about your childhood. What I'm referring to is of course the classic board game "Clue," in which you try to solve a murder by using a logical process of deduction to narrow down the various possibilities until your sister has to go to the bathroom, at which point you cheat by looking at the answer cards. At least that was always my strategy.

In Monopoly, my strategy special edition allows the Father of Special Effects, Lucas, to add some fairy dust to a movie that was ahead of its time. There are some added scenes and some nice surprises in this edition. I was very content with the final results. In 1977, due to lack of equipment, "Star Wars" jumped around from scene to scene. Now Han, Luke, and Leia ride through the galaxy in style. The quote below the movie poster says, "The reason theaters were built." Enough said . . . See you next time. May the force be with you.

Activity briefs

If you or your organization would like to post an event in the Echo Calendar, contact PR Coordinator Michelle Shuler at 983-4459.

The Political Club, a non-partisan club forming on campus, will meet to discuss issues in politics. The first mtg. will be on Thurs., Feb. 13 in the CCM. This will be an organizational meeting. Everyone is welcome; refreshments will be provided.

On Sat., Feb. 15 a Gospel Jamboree will be held at 5 p.m. in Wilson Chapel featuring Gospel choirs from Berea College, Clemson, and MC's VOP. Free to MC students.

was to be the car. The car was one of the little metal game-board pieces; the other ones, as I recall, were the hat, the dog, the shoe, the guy on the horse, and the iron. I never wanted to be the shoe, and I definitely did not want to be the iron. I wanted to be the car because I could make car noises by vibrating my lips—brmmmm—and drive the car around on the floor to amuse myself while waiting my turn, which is mainly what you do in Monopoly, which I always considered to be one of the most boring activities on the planet.

But I had friends who LOVED it; when we played, they became insane money-grasping capitalist pigs. They'd crouch next to the game board, looking over the tops of their hotels with greed-crazed eyes, watching me throw the dice, waiting for the little car to come around the corner, motoring innocently along—brmmmm—until it stopped on—HAH!!—Boardwalk, and they'd triumphantly announce that I owed them some huge amount of pretend money that they knew to be the exact pretend cost of landing on Boardwalk without looking at the cards.

I'm not saying that ALL of these friends went on to become attorneys, but it is a healthy percentage.

I will say this about Monopoly: I was better at it than at chess. My problem with chess was that all my pieces wanted to end the game as soon as possible. "Let's get this over with!" was their battle cry. If the rules had allowed it, my pieces would all have charged out onto the board simultaneously the instant the game started. Unfortunately, this was not legal, so they had to content themselves with charging out one at a time, pretty much at random, and immediately getting captured. Here's what they sounded like:

PAWNS: Oh no! They got the Knight!

KING: Dam it!

BISHOP: I'll go next!

KING: Good luck!

PAWNS: Oh no! They got the Bishop!

KING: Dam it!

QUEEN: I'll go next!

KING: Good luck!

PAWNS: Oh no! They got the Queen!

KING: Good! I mean, Dam it!

Because of the level of my chess game, I was able—even against a weak opponent, such as my younger brothers, or the dog—to get myself checkmated in under three minutes. I challenge any computer to do it faster.

The one board game that I still play is Scrabble. I like it because, unlike most other board games, which basically are pointless time-consumers, in Scrabble you can do something mentally stimulating and worthwhile: make naughty words. There is nothing quite like the sense of intellectual accomplishment that comes from spelling out, say, "b-o-s-s-o-m," knowing that it will be sitting there on the board for hours, staring up at your opponents.

The problem with Scrabble is that it leads to arguments like this: cont. on p. 8

Foothills Cinema

Star Wars PG T,W,R 4:30, 7:05, 9:35; F,S,S,M 1:45, 4:30, 7:05, 9:35
Love and War PG13 T,W,R 4:30, 7:05, 9:35
Scream R T,W,R 4:20, 7:15, 9:20; F,S,S,M 1:40, 4:20, 7:15
Meet Wally Sparks R T,W,R 9:20
Beverly Hills Ninja PG13 T,W,R 3:30, 5:30, 7:30
Pest PG13 T-M 5:25, 7:20, 9:25
Michael PG T,W,R 4:15, 7:00
Metro R T,W,R 9:45
Beautician & the Beast PG T-R, 4:25, 7:15, 9:35; F-M 1:50, 4:25, 7:15, 9:35
Dante's Peak PG13 T-M 1:55, 4:35, 7:05, 9:50
That Dam Cat PG F,S,S,M 1:30, 3:30, 5:30, 7:30, 9:30
Absolute Power R F,S,S,M 1:45, 4:40, 7:15, 9:45
Vegas Vacation PG F,S,S,M 1:40, 3:35, 5:30, 7:35, 9:35
Fools Rush In PG13 F,S,S,M 1:50, 4:20, 7:10, 9:40
Midnight shows also, call 977-4499.
$3.75 admission until 5:30 and $5.75 after, $3.75 for children anytime.

MC activities calendar

Tuesday, Feb. 11

11am Community Worship in CCM

Lunchtime—Carnegie Valentine's card making

12:30pm Adult Children of Alcoholics/Dysfunctional Families meets in CCM

6pm Mtn.Challenge: Wall climb

7pm WB vs Milligan-Away

Wednesday, Feb. 12

Lunchtime—Carnegie Valentine's card making

6pm MC: Wall climb

8:30pm VOP Concert @ St. John's Baptist Church

7pm JV vs Lindsey Wilson-Home

8pm Dr. Ramger on Relationships &amp; Sexuality in Carnegie

Thursday, Feb. 13

11am Community Forum in CCM

11am ICC Mtg. in PDR

6pm MC: Wall climb

6pm Political Club Mtg in CCM

7:30pm MB vs Univ of South-Home

Friday, Feb. 14

Lunchtime—Bring $1 to find your perfect match

6pm BSA's Talent Competition in Wilson Chapel

Saturday, Feb. 15

BSA Weekend

5pm Gospel Jamboree in Wilson Chapel

WB vs Tusculum-Home

MC: Cave

Sunday, Feb. 16

Peer Mentor Training

Mr. &amp; Miss BSA pageant FAC Music Hall

Monday, Feb. 17

WB vs Rust-Away

7pm JV vs Cleveland -Away

Dear editor,

I am writing in regard to past editorials submitted to the Echo, particularly the sentiments expressed about the spirituality on campus. We must not forget that people express their spirituality in a variety of ways. Attending worship at Maryville College is often not placed as a top priority for many students. To some there may be a schedule conflict, to others worship elsewhere fulfills their spiritual needs. I am in no way being critical of such a devotion or discouraging a community value. However, we must realize that worship outside of the college is a personal and rewarding part of many of our lives. I enjoy attending worship with loving, forgiving, and accepting Christians. Thus, I am deeply committed to support the idea that there is a strong spiritual life on our campus that will hopefully survive long after we bid our alma mater farewell.

I am also concerned that some of the most spiritual and devoted groups on campus are often overlooked. Although I am not familiar with all organizations, I have had several encounters with FCA. In my opinion they go out of their way to be inclusive. This group has been devoted to the work of Christ; undoubtedly, their work should be commended. However, spirituality does not have to be proven by gathering in God's name. A friend once said a lot by merely declaring, "God is all around in the midst of everything." The intricate part of our religious beliefs can be extraordinarily personal. I see this as being positive, rather than detrimental to one's spiritual life.

To skeptical students, especially to Eric Obermiller, I would like to express my sincerest hope for seeing not only the negative aspects of life but the positive as well. We must realize that no matter what the situation, we can find things to agree upon. I have no doubt that this can be one of the most rewarding experiences of our lives. I am merely like you in more ways than you might realize. I do not believe in spiritual perfection, simply because reality is often cruel and unjust. To some up my cause, I would like to say Christianity is important, and if you look around carefully I am sure you will find it.

In Christ,
Jessica Garrett

How to mix a mint julep

by Adam Shepherd
Columnist

I am writing this column to dispel some common myths and stereotypes of this beautiful region where we attend school. Of course, I am referring to the American South. I am appalled at the untruths and falsehoods about the South, and I will use this precious space to sound off.

Everyone knows the South's image. Many people north of the Mason-Dixon line think of extremely poor people who can't read, find love in a beer joint with their cousin Lurline, and score in the back of a Ford F-150 with a rebel flag or a gun rack proudly displayed in the back window. How many times has Hollywood portrayed the bubba sheriff behind the dark glasses or the southern belle who sips mint juleps while watching her hired hands slave in the hot sun?

I think Hollywood and uninformed people should talk to southerners before they spread myths. I have never seen a southern belle in one of those big dresses, and I don't know anyone who drinks or even knows how to mix a mint julep. I have yet to see a big gutted, racist, cop. We do wear shoes. Those few people who have rebel flags in their trucks give the South a bad name and should be ignored.

The South I know is a marvelously diverse region with small towns and sprawling urban centers, beaches, mountains, agriculture, and industry. I was raised in this region and am quite fond of it. I love the South in all seasons. The winters are mild and snows are rare, but beautiful. Spring brings gorgeous foliage such as dogwoods and magnolias bloom. Summer is sticky, but we can take advantage of beautiful wildlife and lakes. Of course, we all know how pretty the trees are in the fall.

The people are extremely friendly, and we do take our time and don't get in a hurry over much. Southern people know how to cook. Some of the delicacies the South can claim are fried chicken, biscuits, and sweet potato pie.

The South is not only home to friendly people and great food, but growing industry and growing economies. Big cities are slowly taking over farmland, and companies like Saturn continue to migrate to the South. The South was proud host of the 1996 Summer Olympics. There the world got a taste of legendary southern hospitality. The South is home to some of the fastest growing economies in the country. In fact, Georgia has the fastest growing economy in America, and Tennessee is not far behind.

In closing, I would like to say that I love the South and its people. It is a place that is trying desperately to cope with its past and overcome years of a stagnant economy and racial tension. The South is on the rise and can finally be taken seriously. But most importantly, the South is the place that I am proud to call home.

Dear Editor,

Those students involved with the MC Model United Nations should be commended for all their hard work during J-term. I was very impressed with their willingness to give 110% to make the event successful. Despite the actions of one student who seemed intent upon stealing headlines with a childish stunt of a by-gone era, the event ran smoothly and showed the visitors the excellence that is the Maryville College student. Karen Strachan, proved to be an outstanding leader who was organized, flexible, and dedicated to making the event successful. Congratulations to Karen and all of the other students involved in MC's Model UN!

Brian Todd
ARHC Carnegie Hall

To Mom:

Thank you for everything you've done for me for the past ten years. I just want to let you know I love you for everything you've done for me, and I still need your money.

Yosef

Hope you have a wonderful Valentine's Day,
Andyl

Your secret admirer

To All My Friends:

Thanks for all your love and friendship. You know who you are!
Huge Hugs,
Amy-Lisa Brewer

Renae,

Happy Valentine's Day to my greatest love.
Forever yours,
Eric

To JGMock:

Roses are red.
Waffles are yummy.
Melrose Place sucks.
This mac is crumbly.

Happy Valentine's Day,
Barbara M.!

From: Xavi and Xio

To: VOP members and musicians

We wish you the best of the best and hope that this day will be full of great surprises. May God bless you, we love you all.

To my wonderful friends, Amethyst and Jennifer--

Have a wonderful Valentine's Weekend!

A. Wong

To Tinkerbell:
You're always in our dreams.
The Juxtaposers

To Sir Richard Blackmore,
Can't wait for happy hour in your grotto underneath Pope's pad.

Love
the Scriblerians.

To Batman:
May your day be filled with movies, bats, and love.

- R

Elizabeth:

You have the key to my heart.
Happy Valentine's Day.

Love, Joe

John,
wishing you many happy times.
Happy Valentine's Day!
Your Valentine

To S.K.

I love you!
Steve

To: Norma and Raul

From: Xavi and Xio
A great Valentine's day for two great friends! Love you both!

To the India crew:
Wishing you a joyous Heart Day free of explosive bodily functions.
Namaste, Sarah S.

Ron,
Thanks for breaking my heart. I love you, too!

Amy

Amy,
Have a great V-Day. You are loved. -J

To Naylor and Bunde:

You are the Bunsen Burner of my dreams . . .

To: Jeanna
From: Hoochie Mama
You make my heart go pitter patter when I see you walking by.
Much love and smooches

I love you, Mom.
Thanks for everything.

John

Happy Valentine's Day, Helen!

Eventhough you are far away, my heart is still with you.

To: Fabulous FRS 120-15

Cheers and all the best to some very special people.

From your biggest fan.
To all my Argentina friends,
Thanks for the good time at Maryville.

Yosef

Barry cont. from p.6

FIRST PLAYER: . . . e, e, t. There!

SECOND PLAYER: "gleet?" What the hell is "gleet?"

FIRST PLAYER: I have no idea, but if you can use "pood," I can use "gleet."

The thing is, according to the American Heritage Dictionary, both "gleet" and "pood" really ARE words, as are "kloof," "fremitus" and "woomera." It turns out that, if you have a big enough dictionary, just about everything is a word, which means you can put down any old letters you want and claim it's a legal move.

Of course, you have to be careful whom you're playing with. The number of violent Scrabble-related incidents is on the rise. I have here a news item from the Nov. 29, 1996, Hagerstown, MD., Morning Herald, sent to me by alert readers Bill and Louisa Sonnik. Here are the first two sentences of this item, which I am not making up:

"SMITHSBURG—A Hagerstown woman was charged with second-degree assault on Wednesday night after her husband was struck in the forehead with a Scrabble game board, according to the Washington County Sheriff's department. The incident happened when the man tried to restrain the woman after she threw the Thanksgiving turkey into the yard."

The item does not state WHY the woman threw the turkey, but I would not be surprised to learn that a word like "gleet" had something to do with it. I would also not be surprised if, next Thanksgiving, this couple leaves the Scrabble board in the closet and just throws the turkey, which sounds like more fun.

(C) 1997 THE MIAMI HERALD

The Highland Echo

The weekly voice of Maryville College - Founded 1914

VOL. LXXXII, NO. 7

Tuesday, February 18, 1997

502 East Lamar Alexander Pkwy, Maryville, TN 37804

Feb. meetings begin today; Thomas speaks

by Chuck Gilkey
Reporter

It started over a century ago, here at Maryville College, as a religious revival, and over the course of the years it has transformed into a lecture series with related activities that examine issues of both faith and learning. Past speakers have included a Native American theologian from Denver, a minister from India, and members of the Presbyterian Foreign Mission Board.

It is known as February Meetings. This year's lecture series will take place on Feb. 18-20 at the Center for Campus Ministry (CCM) from 11 a.m. until noon, and will then dismiss for lunch. At lunch, students and faculty will have the opportunity to continue discussion with Reverend Buzz Thomas, featured speaker.

Thomas as the invited speaker for the series will address the issues of "Religion and Public Life," "The Place for Faith in Public Education," and "MC's Calling as a College of the Church."

Thomas is an attorney, a Baptist minister, a member of the Maryville Board of Education, and special counsel to the National Council of Churches. He holds the title of consultant to the Freedom First Amendment Center at Vanderbilt University, and is the acting director of the former Alex Haley Farm in Clinton, Tennessee, on behalf of the Children's Defense Fund.

New to the lecture series this year is a 4 p.m. discussion that will be held at the CCM. The discussion will be lead by students, and it is designed to give the students an opportunity to respond to what they have heard and examine possible implications.

Dr. Stephen Nickle, the campus chaplain, said, "Often time the speaker brings in a perspective that is not the norm on our campus." He added that this gets the students and faculty to think about religion and religious issues in a way they are not used to.

MC's Habitat recognized by HFHI

by Kristi Johnson
Reporter

For several years, Habitat for Humanity volunteers have been providing shelter and facilities for local families and organizations. Maryville College's Habitat for Humanity is now a recognized, official campus chapter of Habitat for Humanity International.

In celebration of their initiation into the Habitat family, students who participate in the on-campus division are tentatively planning several events for everyone.

Members have named March 3-7 "Habitat Week," during which they will host such activities as a hammering contest, in which the objective is to be the quickest to hammer a nail into a piece of wood with the least hits.

There may also be a Sack-A-Thon for those who want to experience homelessness, by living in cardboard boxes. This event will serve to raise money for Habitat by use of sponsors.

A guest speaker will kick off Habitat Week, sharing experiences of overseas travel with other Habitat divisions.

The officers of Habitat for Humanity for 1996-97 are as follows: Karson Leitch, president; Brad Smith, vice president; Lauren Buschle, secretary/treasurer; Allison Cornish, work project chairperson; and Trey Tinney, fundraising chairperson. Advisor for the MC division of Habitat is Dr. Kathi Shiba, MC professor of psychology.

Meetings are held every other Tuesday night at 9 p.m. in the Center for Campus Ministry (CCM).

Freshmen Jane Hadden and Lauren Buschle are building a house in Maryville.

Overstreet speaks on medieval images in forum

by Kim Schuenemann
Reporter

What do you think of when you hear the word, "medieval?" Knights, dungeons, and plagues? The first spring community forum held on Feb. 13 featured Dr. Samuel Overstreet, associate professor of English, speaking on the forum's topic, "The Medieval Past: Distant Mirror of Discarded Image."

Sarah Christians, a sophomore English and history major, introduced Overstreet with a list of his academic achievements.

Overstreet began his lecture by drawing the students into the topic with a paraphrase of Monty Python's The Quest for the Holy Grail. He used the movie as a jumping point for his topic.

Overstreet explained the two models of the medieval world to which historians refer and then launched into a truly liberal arts discussion on how the medieval world differs from and is the same as the modern world. Overstreet used not only his knowledge of English and history but also proved that his realm of interest is not limited to those areas alone as he delved into science and religion in order to further illustrate his point. He used science to show how much astronomy has changed and how science itself has changed and religion to show that even in the Middle Ages people asked some of the same questions that people ask today about the universe and how it started.

Overstreet quoted and paraphrased frequently from many well known authors including C. S. Lewis, Dante, Pascal, Ambrose of Milan, and many others.

In the end Overstreet showed that there are areas of life where the medieval image has been discarded, but that there are also many other areas where the image is still a distant mirror.

Inside

Ware, Hewitt.....	2
College dating.....	3
Equestrian team.....	4
Irish Students.....	5
Calendar.....	5
Sun-Im's Italy.....	6
Downs on love.....	7
Dave Barry.....	8

Highlights

News.....	2,3
Sports.....	4
Senate.....	5
Features.....	5
Workshops.....	6
Cartoons.....	7,8
Op/Ed.....	6-8

Ware remembered for refinement, kindness

by Tonys Briggs
Reporter

Margaret Susanna Ware is a name seen by the Maryville College community everyday, yet many students do not know who she is. Ware is for whom the dining hall in Pearsons is named, as the plaque on the wall clearly represents.

The North Carolina native was the college's first resident dietitian from 1934 to 1973. The dining hall took on a new atmosphere under Ware's guidance. She continued to serve grits and okra but varied the menu by adding such delicacies as shrimp. She insisted upon cleanliness and correct service. Ware also kept the dining room attractive with fresh flowers and plants, even when the budget would not allow.

Once Ware was dissatisfied with an oil painting because the colors clashed with her decor, so she touched it up herself. Rumor had it that the artist was not happy. She also encouraged formal dinners with candlelit tables, attractive table decorations, and music.

Elizabeth (Libby) Welsh, an employee at Willard House, worked for Ware while a freshman here at MC. She said, "Margaret Ware was a real nice lady, a unique MC person. I enjoyed working for her."

Billie Sue Hood, a business office employee, also remembers Ware as a nice woman. She said, "Margaret Ware was a refined lady who fixed real good food." Mrs. Hood worked during the time of Ware's management.

Probably the most common memory of Ware was that her Chihuahua, "Chili," is buried in the college cemetery with its own headstone.

Ware passed away on Dec. 30, 1996. She spent her final years at The Fairhaven Home in North Carolina. She is believed to be buried in Maryville.

New program pairs students with elderly

by Andy Long
Reporter

Going away to college is a real challenge. Friends can be a tremendous help during these challenging times. People of all ages long for companionship, yet have trouble meeting people with whom they can be friends. Carol Denning is in the process of starting a program which is intended to help people meet friends.

Her program, modeled after one in Knoxville, pairs students at Maryville College with elderly citizens of the community who have no relatives. Some are in nursing homes, while others are very independent and live alone, taking care of themselves.

Denning started the program, entitled "Polishing the Golden years," in collaboration with Jenny Cummings, the assistant director of volunteer services, and Chris Nugent, the director of the MC library.

Although there is a large interest from the elderly in the community, student interest seems to be untapped. Denning believes that it is because "the students feel like they lack the time, but it doesn't take a lot of time. They can simply go visit, go grocery shopping, or just call their adopted grandparent on the phone."

This is not a program that is intended to have students supplying the needs of their adopted grandparent; instead, it is simply a way to combine friendship, benefiting both parties, with community service.

Denning, a senior peer mentor, said "There is a huge need and demand for this, and it is a good way for college kids to make community contacts."

Bonner students interested in participating should be aware they will receive credit for their Bonner hours.

For more information, call Denning (x8325), Cummings (x8122), or Nugent (x8257).

Hewitt, 42, dies of cancer

Dr. Glen Hewitt, age 42, died of brain cancer on Jan. 5, leaving a legacy of good humor and faith.

The associate professor of religion and philosophy came to Maryville College in 1988 as the interim coordinator of campus ministries. Also, he had served as associate dean and coordinator of the senior ethics course.

Hewitt's book, "Regeneration and Morality," focuses on the ethical thought of three nineteenth century American theologians. He also wrote many articles and reviews.

"He influenced MC with his continual good humor in the face of adversity and bad luck," said Dr. Marti Craig, associate dean.

"He saw life as a gift that guaranteed nothing, and, therefore, we should rejoice in what we have," said Craig.

Craig also talked about Hewitt as a "staunch advocate of liberal education" and a student-focused professor who spent much time and energy with students.

Hewitt received his B.A. in philosophy and religion and graduated cum laude at Wake Forest University. He earned his M.Div. from the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary in 1981 and his Ph.D. in Theology at the University of Chicago in 1986.

After a lengthy battle with cancer, Hewitt's body was cremated in Maryville.

The Highland Echo

Editor

Sarah H. West

Production Editor

Patrick E. Leslie

Copy Editor

Sarah Christians

Sports Editor

Joe Malheiro

Staff Writers

Sherrie Brents, Tonya Briggs, Shannon Bryant, Joey Cody, Dara DiGiacomo, Dave Dupont, Chuck Gilkey, Brian Hastings, Kristi Johnson, Lori Leffel, Caraline Leggett, Andy Long, LaToya Lundy, Bo McMichaels, Rissa Miller, Kazu Nakane, Dallas Rightmeyer, Sun-Im Ryu, Kim Schuenemann, Michelle Shuler, Adam Shepherd, Christi Stalans, and Traci Tidwell

Public Relations Coordinator

Michelle Shuler

Photo Staff

Keli Jennett and
Jenny Oxford

Cartoonists

Carl Gombert, and Jessica Wilkins

Faculty Advisor

Jeff Gary

Please send letters to the editor, poetry, short stories, photographs, and art to box #2247.

Phone

981-8176

E-Mail

Swest75@aol.com

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 500 words.

Is Dating Dead On Campus? Students Report "Pack Dating"

by Colleen DeBaise
CPS

Susan McWilliams, an Amherst College junior, met her boyfriend at a campus party, which she describes as "lots of beer, lots of kegs and lots of drunk people."

"We never had a first date. It started as a hook-up," explained McWilliams, 20.

Classmates are still surprised the relationship has lasted for two years, she said. "Most people go to parties on weekends, probably hook-up, and not necessarily talk about it ever again," she said. "Or it happens again the next week, and it goes on for months. This is not a romantic place, by any means."

Indeed, long gone are the days when campus courtships began with young men delivering roses and candy hearts to co-eds. Instead of pairing off, students at colleges across the nation say they tend to go out in herds together, a phenomenon called "pack dating."

"Dating is dead," said Arthur Levine, president of the Teacher's College at Columbia University in New York. He recently finished a four-year lifestyle study of 9,100 students on several hundred campuses, including focus groups on 30 campuses.

"The most startling finding was the majority of college students said they've never seen a successful adult romantic relationship," he said. "Some are children of divorce; some are children of parents who didn't get along."

But while today's students say they've given up on dating and the romantic rituals that go with it, they haven't given up sex. Despite the fact that students have grown up with excessive warnings of AIDS and date rape, casual sex and one-night stands are common, say students.

"I have a lot of friends who have had sex just meeting someone for the first time," said Jennifer Park, a freshman at the University of California-Los Angeles.

On a typical night out, students go with a group of friends to a party, movie, or a club, Park adds.

"On Thursdays, we have a lot of parties. You either go with a lot of girls, if you want to meet someone, [or] if you just want to have fun with friends, you go with guys and girls mixed. It depends on what you're looking for."

Romantic commitment isn't what most students are looking for, said Levine, whose book-length study will be published next year. Emotion and sexuality seem divorced in many student relationships, he said.

"Everyone has hormones; it's [become] more a hormonal activity than emotional. That's the way life works."

Even the slang terms students use to describe sex—scrumping, shacking, scamming—believe a lack of romance associated with the act, he says.

"You go out in groups [then you end up] getting drunk and going back to someone's room," he said. Then in the morning there's the proverbial "walk of shame" across campus in the same clothes worn the night before.

"It's real scary," he said, of the casual sex liaisons. "It's startling that a group of people could be so cavalier about their sexual practices given the risks."

Last Valentine's Day, Brown University's student government hired a computer dating service to breathe some life into the dating scene. The response was overwhelming: More than 1,500 students filled out questionnaires for HUGS, or Helping Undergraduates Socialize.

Rajib Chandra, a Brown senior who formed HUGS, theorized that the response was driven by students' desire to return to traditional courtship.

"There's no real dating scene at Brown," he told the Brown Daily Herald. "In a normal Brown relationship you meet, get drunk, hook up, and then either avoid eye contact the next day or find yourself in a relationship."

At the University of Nebraska, junior Chad Lorenz is trying to organize a campus version of MTV's dating show, "Singed Out," for a fraternity fund raiser. Unfortunately for him, the idea hasn't piqued the interest of Nebraska students.

"Formal dating is not a real popular thing," he said.

To collect research, Lorenz interviewed students about their dating habits. "They say, 'a few of us will go out to dinner or go to the movies . . . or bowling,'" he said. "They always have that group element to it."

As a result, the prize for the two couples who win the dating show will be—what else?—a group date. Lorenz is working on getting gift certificates and tickets in sets of four, rather than two.

He thinks students tend to go out in packs because of the "student poverty" factor. Unlike a date, where it's typical for one person, traditionally the guy, to foot the bill, "people pretty much pay for themselves," he said. Also, "it's less inhibiting," he said.

At UCLA, two people interested in one another usually try to meet at the same place, Park said. "Everyone usually meets up at parties and stuff," she said. "I don't think we even categorize it as a date. 'Oh, I'm just spending some time with him.' 'Date' is like a fearful word, like commitment."

There are exceptions, of course. In his study, Levine found students could point to campus couples or "velcro twins" who met during the freshman week and have been inseparable ever since.

The norms of dating vary by region, too. At some colleges in the South and the Midwest, old-fashioned courtship is still alive and well.

At the University of Georgia, junior Kieva Adams said she notices plenty of serious couples walking around campus together. "They're affluent around here. There's a lot of holding hands, a lot of pecking," she said. "I know people who are engaged."

The opposite is true at colleges in the Northeast. McWilliams, at Amherst, said she knew a woman who married her senior year. "That was a horrible anomaly," she said. "I don't see a lot of people who have found their soulmate."

At academically elite colleges such as Amherst, students often come to campus with high SAT scores but seem learning impaired when it comes to the social graces.

"I hear a lot of girls saying, 'These guys are brilliant. They could talk about molecular physics for hours, but if they ever had to walk up to say "hi" to someone they wouldn't know how to do it,'" McWilliams said. "People here do worry about their work. That's how they got here in the first place. I think it makes it hard to start a relationship and hard to re-evaluate priorities."

That's why most students are "uncomfortable with social situations unless they're drunk," she said.

In fact, a study two years ago by the Harvard School of Public Health found that 20 percent of binge drinkers engaged in unplanned sex, and 10 percent had unprotected sex.

"Binge drinking" is defined as a person drinking four to five drinks at one sitting.

"Alcohol is a critical factor in risky sexual practices because it lowers inhibitions and makes people less likely to use protection," said Linda Alexander, former director of women's health at the American Social Health Association.

In a 1995 survey of college women, ASHA found that half use no protection against sexually transmitted diseases. That's particularly worrisome, since women's internal reproductive systems serve as a "safe harbor" for bacteria and viruses and put them at greater risk than men.

Of the 12 million new STD infections reported each year, two-thirds are in people under 25, according to the ASHA. Gonorrhea remains the most commonly reported disease in that age group, with 392,848 cases. Also, cases of venereal warts are believed to have risen 600 percent in the last 30 years.

Levine said students engage in risky sexual practices because of a mistaken belief that they're "immortal." Also, they tend to think that middle-class college students aren't at risk for STDs, and say things like, "Oh, there's nice people here."

By not dating, students spend even less time getting to know a person—and their sexual history. Levine said he interviewed a college junior who received a phone call from a fellow student, asking her to go out on a date.

"She had no idea what she was supposed to do," he said. With the soaring costs of tuition, more students are holding down jobs and finding less time than ever to socialize. When Levine asked students what they did for fun, 21 percent said "study," and 11 percent said "sleep."

"What's happening with more and more students is not only are they juggling college they're also juggling work," he said. "They've joined the monastery."

Equestrian team attends fourth horse show; many place

Team members participated in English and Western riding and walked away with numerous ribbons.

by Caroline Leggett
Reporter

The Maryville College Equestrian team attended their fourth horse show, which was held at Morehead State University in Kentucky on Feb. 14-16. The team members participated in English and Western riding and walked away with numerous ribbons. Some of the team members qualified for regionals.

Qualifying for both English and Western was Reenay Stephens, while Kelly Lyon also qualified for regionals in English riding. Jennifer Brewer, Laura McMahon, and Kendra Moore are currently looking to qualify.

Competition results include Janel Beckley with first and third in her walk/trot class; Jennifer Brewer with first and second in her walk/trot class; Angie Brown with first in her walk/trot/canter class; Mandy Good with first in her jumping class, fourth and fifth in her novice flat class; Laura McMahon with fifth in her advanced walk/trot/canter class; Kendra Moore with two thirds in her walk/trot class; Tiffany Rudicil with fourth on novice flat and fourth in Western; Rennay Stephens with second and fourth in her beginning walk/trot/canter class and a second and fifth in Western; and Ferrah Williams with fourth in Western.

Megan McWhorter

and Christen McCammon, former students of MC, returned to show in the alumni class.

Two of the team members gained great experience from this horse show. Lyon placed out of the walk/trot class at the last horse show and moved to show in a more difficult category. Parri Sikes, who did considerably well, participated in a large novice jumping class at this horse show.

"The IHSA (Intercollegiate Horse Show Association) is awesome because we just have to worry about doing well. We don't have to worry about taking care of horses. We simply go to the show and get on to ride, and then someone else takes the horse away," said Moore.

After receiving first and third place ribbons, Beckley said, "Life is full of surprises."

A special event occurring this weekend at the show was the honor of meeting Robert E. Cacchione, who is the founder and executive director of the IHSA and resides in Fairfield, Conn. He founded the IHSA when he was only 17 years old. Cacchione currently spends his time travelling to visit the different regions. He gave a speech this past weekend on "The History of the Horse Show." Talking to Cacchione after his speech was the highlight of the weekend for a few team members.

The team had wonder parental support from the Browns, Goodwins, McMahons, Moores, Stephens, Rudicils, and the Thompsons. The team members wish to thank these parents for all of their reassurance and support.

The next meet will be on Feb. 28-Mar. 2

Scots stamp Sewanee, 90-65

by Joe Malheiro
Sports Editor

The Scots prevailed in a crucial game against Sewanee by a final count of 90-65. Sewanee was ranked third in the latest division III men's basketball poll, the Scots were ranked number one.

The Scots connected on an amazing eleven three point shots during an explosive second half sprint. The Scots led by the count of 44-34 at the half, enroute to a very impressive victory over the highly touted Sewanee squad. The Scots were led in scoring by freshmen Michael Danzey with 21 points on the night including six of the Scots eleven three point shots.

The win helped the Scots improve their record to 16-4, improving their chances of securing a number one seed in the upcoming NCAA tournament.

With the Scots having six remaining games, five of those coming at home, not only does the 20-win excite senior forward Jon Vaughn, "At the start of the season we didn't know what to expect, but now we have a chance to enter the tournament on a high and really do well", said Vaughn. "Fan support has been great at home; everybody seems to be getting involved in the games", said Vaughn, "The crowd really got involved against Sewanee, and that gave us a lot of momentum."

Head coach Randy Lambert still urges fans to come and support the team for the final five home games. His hope is for a good basketball atmosphere in our gym that will help energize the crowd.

The crowd really got involved against Sewanee, and that gave us a lot of momentum.

-Senior John Vaughn

plateau become more of a reality, so does their chance for a higher seed in the NCAA tournament, a prize that would allow the Scots at least a first round game at home. The win and the possibilities

Scots Basketball Results Week of February 9-15

Men

Tuesday:

Greensboro College (53): Tucker 11, Ssk 8, Lancaster 6, Ware 6, Scales 4, Campbell 4, Davis 4, Lassiter 2, Hariston 1.

Scots (77): Bell 21, Housewright 26, Poag 12, Vaughn 6, Bryan 4, Danzey 2, Shepherd 2, Wright 2, Stiles 1, Hall 1

Halftime: Maryville 33-24

3-point goals: Greensboro (13): Tucker 3, Maryville (3): Housewright 2, Poag.

Thursday:

Sewanee (65): Harrigan 32, Emery 11, Porter 7, Truitt 6, Trahan 5, Jones 4.

Scots (90): Danzey 21, Poag 19, Housewright 14, Bell 14, Beaty 12, Stiles 5, Vaughn 5.

Halftime: Maryville 44-34
3-point goals: Sewanee (6): Emery 2, Trahan. Maryville (11): Danzey 6, Poag 3, Beaty, Vaughn

Women

Saturday:

Tusculum (60): Starnes 18, Connaster 12, Metcalf 8, Taylor 6, Szarnier 5, Wolfenbarger 5, Justus 4, Morgan 2.

Lady Scots (55): Buck 19, Dunlap 12, Casey 10, Shepherd 8, Roberson 2, Loveday 2, Alexander 2.

Halftime: Maryville 35-34

3-point goals: Tusculum (3): Metcalf 2, Wolfenbarger. Maryville (5): Casey 2, Buck 2, Shepherd.

Irish students enjoy MC

by Sarah Christians
Copy Editor

For two Maryville College students, this year has been the most exciting of their lives. This is not because of the new food service or the new alcohol policy. Carolyn Beattie and Kevin Sira are students from Queen's University of Belfast spending a year at MC.

The program that brought Beattie and Sira to the U.S. is called the Business Education Initiative. Each year, the program sends 165 students to different colleges and universities in America. MC was the first choice for both Beattie and Sira.

They both say that life in America is exponentially different from that in Ireland. "It's a lot smaller," said Beattie, of MC. Added Sira, "It's green." Both acknowledge that the education is greatly different. According to the two, students here are expected to be much more responsible to professors for daily work during the semester. "It's more demanding here. You're more accountable," said Beattie. "Back home I'm not accountable to anyone unless I bomb every exam."

Also, the grading system is different. Beattie related an anecdote of preparing her parents for a drop in grades next year. "Back home, if you make 80's, you're a genius," said Sira. On average, students at QUB make between 50 and 70. The QUB grading scale places 75 approximately equivalent to our A. Summing up the typical nightly load of homework, Sira said, "It's bloody annoying."

"I wanted to experience USA but I didn't think I could live here because of my preconceptions," said Sira. Explaining her desire to spend a year abroad, "I just wanted to travel, see a new part of the world, meet people, do things."

"Your culture is a lot different," said Sira. Both commented that they missed pubs.

"There's no central place you can go and just be guaranteed to run into students," said Beattie.

"Going home with an American accent, that was..." said Sira, trailing off and never quite explaining what exactly returning to Belfast with an "American" accent was like.

All of this is not to say that both students have not had completely enjoyable experiences. "Washington and going to New York was real fun," said Sira, "seeing all the things I saw on TV." "I like all the people with cowboy hats and trucks, and I like your big ugly cars," he said.

Beattie made it clear that British student life is often misrepresented. She accounted part of a text she had read talking about how much the British government funds education and how students were mortified at the idea of working a part time job while attending school.

Kevin Sira and Carolyn Beattie are from Northern Ireland.

"Every British student I know has a part time job." On the other hand, Sira states, "I can't believe how hard you Americans work."

Both said the study abroad experience is life changing. "I've become more independent and have learned a lot more," said Sira. "I think I'm still changing," said Beattie.

Sometimes the experience is unreal for Sira. He relates driving back from a weekend in Huntsville, Ala., looking out the window at the countryside, and disbelieving that he was indeed here. "I'm really glad I came here. I really am," said Beattie. "I'm not going to look at Ireland the same way," said Sira. "I'm not going to look at myself the same way. I'm not going to look at anything the same way."

Images "unseen" in FAC

by Rissa Miller
Reporter

Throughout February, the FAC Gallery is displaying "Images the Camera Didn't See." The exhibit can be seen every weekday from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

The theme of the display, as suggested, is photography that has been manipulated and modified to create an interesting variety of works. Several of these photographs have been changed through hand-coloring, over-exposure of the film, or the use of alternative processing. Computers were also utilized to manipulate and revise both color and black-and-white photographs. Dr. Carl Gombert, an MC art professor, used various pictures "as reference material, as a means of noting a fleeting expression or pose." Thelma Bianco and Laura Reister produced black-and-white Polaroid photos by means of an electronic microscope. By cutting, tilting, or scanning, a few artists were able to create unique works.

Olga Alexandratos uses Incidents to "talk about how images are represented and digested as fragments which do not have a clear reference or narrative." This exhibit shows photography in a distinct and new angle.

Other artists who contributed to the exhibit include Jack Weiso, Sandi Weiso, Donna Haynes, Nobuyuki Teruya, Wendy Krumm, and Sahra Tinker. Programs detailing the individual works are in the Gallery.

Anyone interested in showing in the March Student/Faculty exhibit must submit them to Bianco, ready for display, by Feb. 27.

Hall senators ready to speak

by Lori Leffell
Reporter

This year's hall senators from Carnegie, Gamble, and Pearsons Halls have some differing but complementary ideas about their leadership roles. Carnegie's senator is Matt Wilkes, Gamble's senator is Brian Gossett, and Pearsons' senator is Eric Obermiller. Each of these men are ready to voice opinions for their halls.

Wilkes, a senior chemistry major, is from Proctorville, Ohio. This is his first year in senate. Wilkes' biggest goal for senate is to make sure that the money is allocated to the greatest number of organizations possible. He feels that every organization deserves a fair chance. Besides senate, Wilkes is currently involved in football and student foundation, and is the co-president of Maryville College chapter of the American Chemical Society. After graduation, he is interested in attending Physician's Assistant School.

Gossett is a freshman from Etowah, Tenn. He is an undecided major. This is Gossett's first year on senate, and he wants to represent Gamble so that it has a voice. He feels freshmen do have good ideas even though they are new to the college experience, and he is glad to do the job.

Obermiller, a senior double majoring in History and Religion, is from Norwalk, Ohio. He believes that in years past, student senate has truly had a valuable impact on campus and, therefore, wants to make sure that this year's senate has just as much of one.

Activity Brief

On Saturday, Feb. 22, Dara DiGiacomo, Mezzo-Soprano, will be performing her Senior Recital which will feature songs in four languages, by various composers. The recital is at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Music Hall, and free child care will be provided. The recital is free of charge; a reception will follow.

Activities Calendar

- Tuesday, Feb. 18
    - >11a.m. Community Worship in CCM
    - >12:30 p.m. Adult Children of Alcoholics/Dysfunctional Families group meets in CCM
    - >6p.m. MC: Wall climb
  - Wednesday, Feb. 19
    - >6p.m. MC: Wall climb
  - Thursday, Feb. 20
    - >12:30p.m. Senate Meeting in CCM
    - >6p.m. MC: Wall Climb
    - >8p.m. Delta Omicron: An all Brahms recital. FACMH
  - Friday, Feb. 21
    - >7p.m. WB vs Emory & Henry-Away
  - Saturday, Feb. 22
    - >4p.m. MB vs Rust-Away
    - >8p.m. Senior Recital- Dara DiGiacomo, Mezzo-Soprano
  - Monday, Feb. 24
    - >1p.m. FAYL: CS- Resume Writing
- If you or your organization would like to post an event in The Echo Calendar, please contact Public Relations Coordinator Michelle Shuler at 983-4459.

"Rome is the city of fountain"

by Sun-Im Ryu
Reporter

Even though my friends and I were exhausted by a long, hard trip for 13 days in Europe, we had to cope with the possibility that thieves might steal our baggage because we had heard so many rumors about Italian thieves. As soon as our night train for Venice arrived at the platform of the Geneva Station, we, being advised by a friend, got on the train, occupied a compartment, locked the door, and stuck a short apology, our passports, and tickets on the window. After a smiling conductor passed by our compartment, I tried to sleep, but woke several times. Arriving at Venice, I was so relieved to realize all our baggage was still next to me.

Among the ten European Countries I visited during my vacation, Italy is my favorite. I visited Venice and Rome.

Venice was very fascinating and exotic the one day I got to see it. Its whole atmosphere was suffused with the breath of relentless decay. People used their first floors as stores because of the wetness and their second floors for living. Water goes between buildings, and all kinds of transportation, like taxi or bus, is on the canal. The road in Venice is like a maze and is narrow, so tourists should follow the signs, for example, "Rialto" or "S. Marco." The Grand Canal from The Rialto was gorgeous. Many gondolas and shops next to the Grand Canal were emphasizing its beauty. "Ground Plan of the Basilica San Marco" is easy to find. On the way to San Marco, you can see many kinds of souvenirs, like masks, in Venice. Anyway, if you go through the narrow way for a while from the Rialto, you can see the vast piazza San Marco with its number of pigeons and many visitors standing at the heart of Venice.

Two famous towers flank the Basilica. You will enjoy many great works of art at the Basilica. However, for me, the most exciting thing was that we bargained for better pay with gondoliers. After bargaining with four gondoliers for over 30 minutes, we got on the gondola with our handsome gondolier at half price. Remember! The price of gondola is not fixed. When you bargain with gondolier, you will find yourself enjoying bargaining. In spite of the smell from dirty water, I really enjoyed 50 minutes on the gondola listening to the gondolier's song.

Rome, my second city in Italy, was not easy to love. Foul-smelling traffic and aggressive inhabitants made me nervous at first. Some people were not willing to wait for the green light and went through on red. Every time I crossed streets, I had to risk my life. However, I met so often helpful natives pointing the way. Some told me the way very friendly even if they couldn't speak English at all. I realized body language is the most useful, powerful language. I like them.

Every town of Italy has one or more piazzas. Rome has many piazzas. Piazza Venezia, one of the most famous in Rome, marks the center of contemporary Rome. To get a photo of it, I almost had a car accident. Most piazzas in Rome have their fountains. I wanted to say, "Rome is the city of fountain."

The Grand Canal from the "Rialto"

The Trevi Fountain, well-known by a movie, "A Roman Holiday," is the most grandiose and famous fountain, in which I threw a coin. After seeing it, you may want to see the steps where Audrey Hepburn ate ice cream. That is the Spanish Step in front of the church of Trinità dei Monti which is always crowded. Of course, you should go to the Vatican which has many great works, including Michelangelo's and Raphael's, and other places I didn't mention.

Sighting in Rome is exhausting, but if you don't walk, you will miss many real things on the street. I finished my trip with no troubles. Italians are aggressive but kind, and they love their culture.

Spring Workshops Career Services

Resume Writing:

Mon. Feb. 24 1:00pm
Mon. Mar. 3 3:00pm
Thurs. Apr. 3 1:00pm
Mon. Apr. 21 3:00pm

Job Searching:

Mon. Mar. 10 1:00pm
Mon. Apr. 7 3:00pm
Wed. Apr. 30 1:00pm

Interviewing:

Thurs. Mar. 6 1:00pm
Wed. Apr. 23 3:00pm

Graduate School

Wed. Mar. 19 3:00pm
Thurs. Apr. 17 1:00pm

Choosing a Major:

Tues. Apr. 1 3:00pm

All Workshops will be in the Faculty Lounge, 2nd floor Fayerweather.

Buy * Sell * Trade
New, Used & Collectibles
Cassettes, CD's, Records

The Other Record Shop

2131 E. Broadway, Maryville, TN 37804
Trade For New Releases!
977-9959

Bo reviews "Dante's Peak"

by Bo McMichael
Columnist

When we think of God's fury, we think of natural disasters—events in the world over which mankind has no control, and mother nature holds all the cards. Jean De Bont, the director of "Speed," brought the terror of a thunderstorm to life this past summer in "Twister." Hollywood has opened the flood gates (no pun intended) to mother nature's fury. "The Flood," starring Christian Slater and Morgan Freeman, opens this spring in theaters depicting the terrors of a town during a downpour. The movie that opened this past Friday shows a town in terror; however, this terror has nothing to do with rain. Rain and tornadoes would be welcome to what mother nature has in store for the little town of Dante's Peak. "Dante's Peak" stars television stars/action heroes—Arnold Swarzenegger, Linda Hamilton, and Pierce Brosnan, who must get off a mountain before the volcano kills them all.

"Dante's Peak" is set in a small town in the Cascade mountains. Certain signs have suggested that a nearby dormant volcano is waking up from a long nap. A world famous vulcanologist (Brosnan) is sent to find out if the signs are true. The relationship between Brosnan and Hamilton heats up just as the volcano begins to blow its top. It looks like everyone will get away in time, until Hamilton's kids decide to go up the mountain to rescue their grandmother, who is content to fight through mother nature's turmoil.

The best thing about the movie, "Twister," was that they were finding out ways to help people in case of a tornado threat; in "Dante's Peak" the Career Services and Aladdin food Service are offering free to seniors an opportunity to learn and experience fine dining etiquette. The program will be offered on Mar. 4, 6-8:30 p.m. in the PDR. Ms. Donnie Bland will present a five course meal and discuss differ-only help is getting as far as way as possible, and as soon as possible. The special effects were incredible. Volcanoes have certain warning signs, although in some cases they just explode. This made the movie very scary to me and many people around me, and created a sense of uneasiness in the theater. We, as human beings, take a lot of things for granted, and mother nature sometimes gets overlooked as an inconvenience. After viewing this film, you will realize that we are definitely out-gunned. Even though the acting was tame, the special effects and idea were an A+. Go see how mother nature blows off steam.

ent types of dining, business meals, entertaining, wines, and behavior. This will prepare you to enter the business world. We can accommodate the first 36 seniors responding; sign up in Career Services.

Foothills Cinema

Star Wars PG T,W,R, 1:45, 4:30, 7:05, 9:35
Scream R T,W,R 1:40, 4:20, 7:15
Pest PG13 T,W,R 5:25, 7:20, 9:25
Beautician & the Beast PG T,W,R 1:50, 4:25, 7:15, 9:35
Dante's Peak PG13 T,W,R 1:55, 4:35, 7:05, 9:50
That Darn Cat PG T,W,R 1:30, 3:30, 5:30, 7:30, 9:30
Absolute Power R T,W,R 1:45, 4:40, 7:15, 9:45
Vegas Vacation PG T,W,R 1:40, 3:35, 5:30, 7:35, 9:35
Fools Rush In PG13 T,W,R 1:50, 4:20, 7:10, 9:40
Midnight shows also, call 977-4499. $3.75 admission until 5:30 and $5.75 after; $3.75 for children anytime.

Dear Editor,

As a political science/history major who is currently teaching eighth grade U.S. History, I have a few thoughts to share concerning "Black History Month." I think that is fine for the BSA to have all kinds of special activities to celebrate "Black History Month," but is it not sad to think that black history is celebrated only one month out of the year?

As a history teacher, I will never do anything special for "Black History Month." I think every month is "Black History Month" . . . and "White History Month" . . . and "Women's History Month," and so on. Every month should be "History Month" . . . period.

The United States of America has flourished because many different types of people have contributed to the entire nation. It wasn't just black people or white people. For that reason, we shouldn't take just one month to honor the contributions of any race. Every month should be "History Month," with us giving due recognition to all people who deserve it, be they black or white.

Kevin Rowland
MC Box 2192

Polly gives advice on psychics and romance

Dear Polly,

My girlfriend and I went to a psychic fair last month, and an astrologist told us that our star signs are completely incompatible. I love him very much but ever since we had our profile done we can't seem to get along. Should we break up?

-Starstruck in Sevierville

Dear Star,

Sounds like a little down-home stargazin' has left you in a black hole. Now, even though I seem to have been blessed with equal parts logic and mysticism (if that's at all possible), I must say you seem to have taken a wrong turn at the Big Dipper. Don't get carried away by so-called psychics (how much did you pay for that friendly little bit of advice again?) and trust your heart on this one.

You sound like you may be insecure in your own decision-making abilities if you're laying so much stock in your palm-reader's predictions. Faith is good, but when a person relies too heavily on the speculations of religion, magic, or astrology, it can be a good clue that they are just not comfortable with making big choices on their own. It takes all the guess work (although not the risk) out.

Sometimes reality is hard to face, and astrology can be an easy guide (if you want someone else determining your destiny). Reading your horoscope and astrological profile can be fun, but when you take it too literally there could be trouble.

However, if you're looking for an excuse to dump your gal, what a way to go! By all means, give her your explanation and watch her go through the roof! After all, do you think it's just coincidence that things seemed to be pretty much fine before your little trip to Helga, the love goddess, and now everything is fubar???

Before I became the incredibly well-rounded and spiritually grounded guru I am today, I too enlisted the aid of a cosmic guide. It was a time in my life when I was very lonely and confused, and I spent over $300 on 1-900-INN-DEBT. I felt so foolish the next day having been suckered in like that. They can be very good at telling you what they sense you want to hear and playing off your physical cues. Some are great con men (people? PC?).

I do believe there may be some true psychics, but nothing has convinced me that I've met one. I know that Ms. Dixon (and other frequent Sally guests) sound convincing, but all ya gotta do is look at the way she dresses! Does this suggest cosmic knowledge to you?

Anyway, feel free to entertain yourself with your fashion horoscope at cocktail parties and such, but please don't map out your life according to random stellar placement and that goes double for Chinese cookie fortunes (they don't actually have those in China, y'know). Maybe you could use those stars for a more romantic purpose—make an evening of counting shooting stars with your girlfriend. Maybe then you'll see the universe differently. Happy Stargazing!

Love,
Polly

Dr. Feelgood's spin on love . . .

by Dave Downs
Columnist

Valentine's Day . . . the hallowed celebration of an emotion called love in which a little winged creature named Cupid shoots a bullseye into the heart of your destiny. Valentine's Day is the traditional day in the world when you honor the person that captivates your heart. There is only one question that constantly persists to ravage the minds of the masses, "When am I going to know who that ONE person is?"

Now, I am not going to sit here and tell you that I understand all of the dynamics of love. To tell you the truth, I am probably the last person to ask. I suggest having a deep, personal conversation with Dr. Ramger or take his J-term Human Sexuality class (which was a wonderful experience in not only learning the physical aspects, but the emotional as well). So, now I will attempt to answer this question that has puzzled historians and romantics since the beginning of time.

Needless to say, I have not found the person (as of yet) that has launched my crazy world into a tailspin. Most people that know me would probably say that I want a girl with purple hair, a voracious appetite for love, tattoos running from her toes to the top of her head, and the willingness to jump in a mosh pit at a Korn show. I'll be honest, some of these may be true, but the real accessory that I am looking for is three words that I learned about in Dr. Ramger's class: trust, honesty, and respect.

These three, often overlooked words are the foundation of any relationship. Given, I would love a girl that feeds on the music of Korn as much as I do and that maybe even has a tattoo hidden somewhere on her body. But more importantly, my advice to all you little horny young adults is to find a person that will accept you for who you are. They should trust the actions and decisions you make, they should be up front and honest with their feelings and emotions about you (games-we all hate them), and most of all, respect you for being YOU!! Just because a person has their ears pierced or a tattoo stenciled down their arm doesn't mean that they may not be the person with whom you would fall madly in love and spend the rest of your life.

So when will you know when you have finally found that special someone? My advice is that that person will not only make your little heart pitter patter, but will fall in love with every aspect of the person you are! Whether that includes braids in the hair or an obsession for a college football game on Playstation, never settle for someone who won't trust you, respect you, and give you the honesty you deserve. Until then, if you need any other further love advice from me, Dr. Feelgood, my office is located at the nearest Korn concert in the middle of the pit as I search for the girl that will turn my eyes "blind" to the world and my heart into a sculpture molded from her hands.

Mother Theresa for Miss Universe

by Sarah West
Editor

It has often been said that beauty is in the eye of the beholder or only skin deep. Miss USA would agree.

According to the new Miss USA, her success is due to her inner beauty, but that is just another load of PC. In fact, she must dedicate herself to a stricter than average diet and exercise routine to have achieved her level of fitness. Outer beauty is very important to the candidates, or else they wouldn't be in the world of horse shows.

Not that pageantry is a social ill, but it is what it is—a contest to find an idealized physical beauty. Overweight, visibly-handicapped, acne-faced women do not go far in this big money industry, regardless of their brains or talent.

The Miss Universe controversy, which by the way, is the fact that she has gained a ton since being crowned, happened to be the dilemma about which Miss USA finalists were questioned in this year's contest, which, also by the way, incorporated more than one question.

Pageant directors seem to want to legitimize the contest by adding questions in order to test how well contestants think and talk under pressure. Or maybe they just need a process to narrow down the selection. Fine, but pageants are primarily and superficially about one's physical looks.

Miss Hawaii, the new Miss USA, gave the crowd-pleasing, acceptable answer when she proclaimed, with attitude, that the pageant directors would have to deal with her weight because her inner beauty was what was important. Inner beauty is great, but why hasn't Mother Theresa won any beauty contests? In other words, pageantry is pageantry, and that is fine.

Poor Miss Tennessee was not so lucky, but neither was her answer so vulgar as one might guess by the crowd's response, which was nothing compared to what they so generously gave Miss Hawaii. She said that if she were in Miss Universe's place, she would lose the weight. Shame, shame, shame. Admitting that she would preserve her idealized beauty for the honor for a year may have been ingenious to her interest, but she was not supposed to say it.

It was as if the crowd and judges had decided pageantry was superficial and would only participate if it were disguised under a new name, or in this case, purpose.

PABLO PIGASSO

Vegetables' Heyday

by Dave Barry

Two dramatic recent developments have demonstrated, once again, why these are such exciting times in which to be a vegetable.

For openers, scientists have finally realized one of humanity's oldest dreams—the dream of creating, in the laboratory, a potato that commits suicide.

If you don't believe me you should dig out your Oct. 24, 1996, issue of Machine Design magazine and check out the article on page 139, sent to me by alert reader Mrk Mielke, concerning work being done by leading potato scientists in Cologne, which as you know is a city in France or Germany or possibly Belgium.

But wherever it is, Cologne contains the Max Planck Plant Breeding Institute, where scientists have been messing around with potato genes. Genes are little items that are found in every living thing except Sen. Alfonse D'Amato. As most of us recall from biology class, a gene can be either "dominant" or "recessive," depending on which type of gene it is. With this knowledge and a pair of very tiny pliers, scientists can alter the genetic structure of a living thing, and the Cologne scientists have modified a potato so that, if it catches a fungus disease, it will cause itself to die. (I did not follow the technical details of how the potato does this, although we can probably rule out firearms, because many states, despite the clear intent of the U.S. Constitution, no longer allow vegetables to obtain handguns without a "cooling-off" period.)

The question is: Is it morally right to make potatoes commit suicide? Potatoes are, after all, living organisms that perform the same basic life functions as humans—growing, reproducing and purchasing state-lottery tickets. Can we look a potato square in its eyes and say that we have the right to "play god" this way? And once we do this to potatoes, what is to stop us from doing it to other species? Every day, in TV commercials and magazine advertisements, we see close-up color pictures of the feet of human beings who are suffering from the heartbreak of toe fungus. Are we going to start putting suicidal potato genes into these people? I hope so, because those pictures are disgusting.

We also need to give serious thought to the issue of radicchio. I don't know about you, but I hate it when I order a salad, and instead of some nice, green lettuce, I get these scrawny sprigs of radicchio, which is Italian for "tastes so bad that even a starving goat spits it out." If we're going to make a NY vegetable suicidal, this is where we should start.

But enough about killing vegetables. What about the other side? What about the issue of HEALING vegetables, specifically tomatoes, through prayer? This issue recently was the subject of an experiment, which I absolutely swear I am not making up, conducted by Jay Ingram, who does a science show on the Discovery Channel on Canadian TV. According to newspaper articles sent in by several alert Canadian readers, the experiment involved six tubs of tomatoes, some of which had been punctured and infected with tomato blight. Some of the tomatoes were visited by healers, who, according to Ingram, directed "healing thoughts" toward them. The public was also invited to "think powerful healing thoughts when the tomatoes are periodically shown on your TV screens."

The results, according to the show's World Wide Web site—http://www.stemnet.nf.ca/\(tilde\)yliu/tomato.htmlyliu/tomato.html)—were as follows:

"In the three tubs that had good thoughts sent to them, the average size of the wound was virtually the same as the wounds on the tomatoes in the control group. However, of the three tubs of tomatoes prayed for, one tub was interesting in that the size of the wounds was the smallest of the six tubs. What is the explanation for this? Is it simply biological variation? Or, is there something else at work here? More tightly controlled experiments would need to be conducted to explore this outcome."

So there you have it: A definite "We don't know" from the groundbreaking Canadian tomato-prayer experiment. The Web site does not say what happened to the tomatoes, but it would not surprise me in the least to see them on TV advertising their new psychic hot line.

Meanwhile, all this research has aroused my scientific curiosity. I'm going to go conduct a tightly controlled experiment to see what happens when you put ketchup on fries. Pray for me.

© 1997 THE MIAMI HERALD
DISTRIBUTED BY TRI BUNE MEDIA SER-

Bowl For Kids' Sake

Area church groups are invited to participate in Big Brothers/Big Sisters annual fund-raiser known as Bowl for Kids' Sake. Each year, communities across the nation hold one day bowling events to raise money for this worthwhile children's program. Here in Blount County, BFKS will be held at Crest Lanes on Saturday, Feb. 22 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

What is Big Brothers/Big Sisters? It is a national United Way agency which places carefully screened adult volunteer friends with at-risk children. The mentoring relationship provides support and encouragement for kids who have suffered family loss or disruption. BB/BS receives one of the highest charity organization ratings because of its low overhead and its effectiveness in helping families.

What can you do? Form a team of three to five people (no bowling experience necessary!). Call 523-2179 to reserve a lane time and get sponsor forms. Obtain pledges from sponsors. Come with your team to Crest Lane and have a free game and shoe rental as well as a lot of fun for a good cause!

Not much time is left, so get your friends and family together and Bowl for Kids' Sake.

The Highland Echo

The weekly voice of Maryville College - Founded 1914

VOL. LXXXII, NO. 8

Tuesday, February 25, 1997

502 East Lamar Alexander Pkwy, Maryville, TN 37804

Senate discusses Beeson, HFH, and commuter election

by Sherrie Brents
Reporter

The guidelines for the Beeson lottery, a proposal for Habitat for Humanity, and the commuter senator election were the highlights of the Feb. 20 student senate meeting.

Michelle Ballew, director of residence life, presented the proposed guidelines of eligibility to participate in the lottery for Beeson Hall. According to Ballew, the guidelines were created completely by students. The proposed minimum GPA was 2.0; however, some senate members recommended that it be raised to 2.5. Erin Palmer, a member of both senate and the Beeson committee, said raising the GPA requirement should not be a problem.

The proposed guidelines also eliminate students who have been convicted of a serious judicial infraction or of excessive damage assessments from the lottery process for Beeson. Joel Campbell, sophomore senator, suggested that excessive damage and serious judicial infraction be explained in more detail. The proposal calls for the lottery to be held before the general lottery, which will allow students who do not get rooms in Beeson to participate. Furthermore, the proposal suggests that a lottery for the six room apartments be held on one night, followed by a lottery for the four room apartment. This will allow students who do not get six person apartments, to adjust their groups, and pursue a four person apartment. Groups will apply together. However, if one member is not accepted, the group will be given time to replace that person. The proposal also calls for a contract to be signed, stating that the apartments will be kept clean and damage free. The proposal includes a monthly inspection of the apartments. If damage occurs, the responsible party could be removed from the apartment. If no one steps forward, then all occupants of the apartment could be moved.

Karson Leitch presented a proposal on behalf of the campus chapter of Habitat for Humanity. The proposal, sponsored by the sophomore president, Ryan Stewart, requested $490 for supplies. Leitch said that the campus chapter has not had the opportunity to hold fundraisers, because it has not been in existence for long. Leitch stressed that the chapter has intentions of raising its own money. The proposal passed with no opposition. The money will be used to buy hammers, nail aprons, gloves, measuring tapes, and utility knives.

A special election will be held to fill the commuter senator position vacated by Matt Webb. An open forum will be held on Feb. 26 at 6 p.m. in the CCM to discuss the Beeson proposal, activity fee, and the commuter elections.

MC celebrates Black History Month

by Sherrie Brents
Reporter

Maryville College's Black Student Association honored Black History Month with many activities. Feb. 14-16 was named BSA weekend, which included a talent show and a Mr. and Miss BSA pageant.

The talent show was held on Feb. 14. According to Will Caldwell, BSA president, the talent show was a community event. There were nine acts, several of which were not from MC. Funmilayo Eke was awarded first place in the competition. Second place went to Sheila Shearer, and third place went to Losandra and Tawana Walker, all from Alcoa High School. Caldwell was the master of ceremonies at the event.

On Sunday BSA sponsored the Mr. and Miss BSA pageant. The competition included the option between displaying a talent or answering an educational question. Another aspect of the competition was the future wear segment. The competitors wore clothing that they would wear for their future career. Other aspects included questions and formal wear. The Lady Tornadoes Step Team from Alcoa High School provided entertainment for the pageant. Tera Smith, the former Miss BSA, served as a judge. Ayana James was selected to be Miss BSA, and Sammy Crawford is Mr. BSA.

photo by Keli Jennett

Beeson Village selection is expected to take place in March.

Inside

Virgin Islands.....	2
Shakespeare.....	3
Basketball.....	4
Crossword.....	5
Sherrie Brents.....	6
Adam on Wal-Mart...	7
Dave Barry.....	8

Highlights

News.....	2,3
Sports.....	4
Classifieds/DRB.....	5
Features.....	6
Op/Ed.....	7,8

by Kim Schuenemann
Reporter

Maryville College's Theatre won best production for a small college for "A Doll's House" on Sunday, Feb. 23, during an awards ceremony. MC was also nominated for several other awards both individual and group by the Knoxville Theatre Coalition, which gives awards to the various area theatres it believes are talented in the art of performing.

The nominees attended the awards gala and performed a scene from "The Threepenny Opera" during the ceremony.

"That award was announced right before we went on stage, and we were all jumping around," said Sara Baker, a nominee for best actress in a musical.

Baker also said the nominations "say a lot about all of the work that went into the shows on the whole."

Barbara Kistler, nominated for best supporting actress in a musical, has been involved with the theatre at MC to keep in touch with students. Kistler believes her love of theatre keeps her balanced and is thrilled to have been nominated. She said, "It [being in the theatre] is like coming home because it's where I started."

Alan Reihl, nominated for best scenic design, is the technical director for all main stage performances. The last scene from Marlin Brando's "On The Waterfront" was one of his inspirations for the set of "The Threepenny Opera."

Todd Smith, nominated for best actor in a musical, said that being nominated was "better than a beer on a Saturday night."

Jill Stapleton-Bergeron, nominated for best director of a play for "A Doll's House," best director of a musical for "The Threepenny Opera," and best sound design for "A Doll's House," was honored to be nominated and said, "The nominations were a good opportunity for the college as a whole."

Timothy Barnes was nominated for best actor in a play for "A Doll's House."

MC theatre wins "best production" for "Doll's House"

Hastings prepares to attend drug conference

by Michelle Shuler
Reporter

At any time on any campus you can find students complaining about social issues, but one Maryville College sophomore is doing something about it and has been for four years. Brian Hastings is a member of the National Youth Team of "Pride," an anti-drug organization based in Atlanta.

The team, comprised of dancers and vocalists, performs every year at a national conference. The goal of the team is to "exemplify through music." The performers are giving "a 100 percent no-use message" involving social use of drugs and alcohol.

Hastings said, "The program is a good tool to guide children" in situations where a family member may be abusing drugs or alcohol.

Hastings got involved in the "Pride" club at his high school, which went to elementary schools to teach children how drugs can effect the body and mind and tried to help them learn to avoid peer pressure.

Hastings studies dance at the Van Metre school and has been dancing for five years. He and the rest of the "Pride" team will be performing three shows at the conference, which will take place March 2-5 at the Atlanta Congress Center. The expected attendance is 10,000.

"A lot of bad things come out of drinking and using drugs," said Hastings, who points out the number of injuries and fatalities caused by drunk drivers. "They do it because they're bored," said Hastings, who does not believe that is a valid reason. He believes people "don't need to get drunk or wasted to have fun . . ." His advice is to "just be yourself."

Virgin Islands course offered for ninth year

by Brian Hastings
Reporter

Dr. Robert Ramger, professor of natural sciences, and some Maryville College students head south again for the Virgin Islands experiential course for the ninth year.

During the first three days, students will spend time becoming familiar with the various types of marine life. While on the island, they will identify plants and animals. After observing the marine life and attending evening seminars throughout the seven-day course, the students will be required to record the things that they saw and to write a one-page review on the marine life in the Caribbean. Ramger encourages student to try to learn all they can about marine biology while in the Virgin Islands.

The first year this course was offered, a group of 24 students participated, and they brought back many new experiences from the Virgin Islands.

ten two books on the subject, enthralled students with some kissing trivia: most Americans kiss for less than a minutes, and one-third like to kiss with their eyes open, which is usually considered the ultimate smooch faux pas.

But the professor said his expertise on the subject has not helped his love life.

For some it was their first time flying, and for many, it was their first time out of the country. After this first trip, Marine Biology in the Virgin Islands became one of the most popular experiential courses for students.

After being asked why he wanted to take a group of college students to the Virgin Islands, Ramger said he visited the Islands back in the late 80's which allowed him to experience the beaches and the crystal, clear water in which he snorkeled on the coral reef. He had enriching encounters with the plants and animals while snorkeling. This is what sparked his idea of taking college students to the Islands in order to let them experience something they would remember as the best biology class at MC.

If anyone would like to get more information about this course, contact Ramger as soon as possible. The trip dates are May 22-29.

"Women's expectations are too high," he told students. "They always say things like, 'You've got to be kidding. You wrote the book on 'The Art of Kissing' and this is the best you can do?"

Christian, known on stage as William Cane, also has written "The Book of Kisses."

Brian Hastings performs with the National "Pride" Youth Team.

Kissing professor knows all the angles; still doesn't get dates

By College Press Service

EVANSVILLE, Ind.—Kissing is easy: Just push your lips against another person's and SMOOCH! You're there.

Of course, things get more complicated if you want to try the French kiss, the lip-o-suction kiss or the upside-down kiss, according to kissing expert Michael Christian, a Boston College professor.

At a speech at the University of Southern Indiana,

Christian told students about 25 different styles of smooching, plus he offered some tips on how to get over first-time jitters.

Christian demonstrated the art of kissability by calling students on stage for a lesson in liplocking.

"He had students come up, and it was the first time they had met, and they were kissing," confirmed Kathy Funke, a USI spokesperson.

Christian, who has writ-

The Highland Echo
Editor

Sarah H. West

Production Editor

Patrick E. Leslie

Copy Editor

Sarah Christians

Sports Editor

Joe Malheiro

Staff Writers

Sherrie Brents, Tonya Briggs, Shannon Bryant, Joey Cody, Dave Dupont, Chuck Gilkey, Brian Hastings, Andy Hoover, Kristi Johnson, Lori Leffel, Caroline Leggett, Andy Long, LaToya Lundy, Bo McMichaels, Rissa Miller, Kazu Nakane, Dallas Rightmeyer, Sun-Im Ryu, Kim Schuenemann, Michelle Shuler, Adam Shepherd, Christi Stalans, and Traci Tidwell

Public Relations
Coordinator

Michelle Shuler

Photo Staff

Keli Jennett and
Jenny Oxford

Cartoonists

Carl Gombert

Faculty Advisor

Jeff Gary

Please send letters to the editor, comments, suggestion, or story leads to box #2247.

Phone
981-8176

E-Mail
Swest75@aol.com

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 500 words.

The Shakespeare debate

By Sunni DeNicola
College Press Service

Much ado about nothing. That is the response of many English departments to the tempest that has erupted over dropping Shakespeare as a requirement for majors. "I have never seen a crisis that has less foundation to it," says Carol Schneider of the Association of American Colleges and Universities (AAC&U).

Many educators say that just because an English student isn't required to take a course devoted to Shakespeare doesn't mean he or she isn't reading the Great Bard in other classes.

But critics say eliminating such basic requirements for English majors underlines a bigger problem: America's dumbing down.

The National Alumni Forum (NAF) recently released findings of its study called "The Shakespeare File: What English Majors are Really Studying" and concluded that "Shakespeare is out, and pop culture is in." The study says two-thirds of the 70 leading colleges and universities have dropped the Shakespeare requirement and that "taking the great poet's place are courses on popular culture and sex."

To illustrate its point, the study lists more than 60 English course topics including: advertising imagery, AIDS activism, alehouses, atomic age, carnivals, computer games, fashion, homophobia, Madonna, Pop Art, theme parks, vagrancy, and Vanilla Ice.

"The survey confirmed our worst fears," says Martin. "Dropping Shakespeare is not just a trend, it is the norm. The study shows that, despite higher costs and a public demanding excellence, prestigious colleges and universities are contributing to the dumbing down of America."

But Schneider accuses the NAF of using Shakespeare to advance their own orthodox ideas about education and that they grabbed headlines by making it appear to be "an attack on the 'great books.'"

The media hoopla started last spring when Georgetown University eliminated the requirement for English majors to take two courses of three great authors: Shakespeare, Chaucer and Milton. Instead students chose from three areas of study: literature and literary history, culture and performance, and writing skills.

These changes were "inspired by recommendations of Association of American Colleges and Universities," says Schneider, who is studying curriculum reform. "Georgetown knew virtually all its students had taken Shakespeare; it was taught in courses where Shakespeare wasn't in the title. They weren't concerned and had no reason to be."

But "dropping Shakespeare" set off alarm bells for groups such as the newly founded NAF, which claims this is further proof of the "dumbing down of America."

"Alumni are expected to send money—and lots of it—to higher education, but not to ask any questions," says Jerry L. Martin, NAF president. The NAF describes itself as a non-profit organization of alumni and college trustees dedicated to academic freedom and excellence.

However, James Lusardi, an English professor at Lafayette College, says reports in the press about the "dropping of Shakespeare" are misleading.

"Georgetown and other colleges and universities are really getting a bum rap," says Lusardi, who also is an advisor on the rebuilding of Shakespeare's Globe Theatre in London. "For example, technically we don't require Shakespeare, but we offer advanced Shakespeare courses, and at every level we have courses that include Shakespeare. It would be very difficult for a student to avoid studying Shakespeare, and I expect this is the way it is at most colleges."

Schneider says the NAF is funded by conservatives who wish to advance their agenda on campuses. "Their goal is to mobilize conservatives to resist progressive and multicultural programs," she says. "They organize alumni to protest multicultural dimensions."

This is a frightening concept to some educators, since, in theory, alumni could force colleges to adapt a more conservative curriculum or threaten to withhold funding. Smaller colleges could be particularly vulnerable, Schneider adds.

"It had no effect at Georgetown, but it has a chilling effect on other schools," says Schneider. "What happens when a conservative group decides to make an example . . . to make a demand on a less prosperous school?"

Some professors, however, agree with the NAF. "This study documents nationally what many of us have observed: that shoddy propaganda is replacing the study of great literature," says Roger Shattuck, professor at Boston University. "Parents should sue for breach of contract."

"Not requiring Shakespeare is a joke," says Ernest Suarez, English Department Chair at Catholic University in Washington, DC. "Particularly since professors who are now denying students that experience were able to benefit from it themselves."

Suarez says he believes requiring Shakespeare sends the right signal—that "some writers are more important than others. It's not all just cultural relativism. I think English departments are confused about what they are; they want to be—come departments of sociology or overt social engineering."

The NAF study comes on the heels of another curriculum study by the National Association of Scholars (NAS). NAS found that 50 of the top institutions in the U.S. are requiring fewer core courses. In the mid 1960s, 60 percent of these institutions required history courses, 90 percent physical and biological sciences, and 82 percent traditional math requirements. By 1993 those numbers dipped to 2 percent, 34 percent and 12 percent respectively. They also conclude that students are learning less.

"This is another skirmish in the 'cultural wars' that have been raging for at least a decade," says Kenneth R. Johnson, English Department Chair at Indiana University in Bloomington. "A 'liberal' reform

Cont. on p. 6

Construction continues on Beeson Village

photo by Keli Jennett

Beeson selection in March

by Lori Leffel
Reporter

Beeson Village will be open and ready for business at the start of the next school year. The building should be completed by the end of the summer.

The room selection for Beeson will most likely be in March, and the room selection for the other halls will most likely be in April. There will be 84 available spots. The committee is working on the qualification standards. However, one requirement will be a junior/senior standing. The others are not set in stone but may include GPA and disciplinary standing. Within the next week, the committee should be making some final decisions.

There will be four six-person apartments, which include two double bedrooms and two single bedrooms. The rest will be four person apartments, which will include two double bedrooms. Every apartment will include a common living area, a kitchen area, and the bedrooms. A loveseat, a chair, television hookups, telephone hookups, and internet hookups will be provided in every apartment. According to Tom Hardy of residence life, "Beeson will allow students to experience a more home-like environment."

Scots ranked number 12 in U.S. and promising more

by Joe Malheiro
Sports Editor

The 1996-97 edition of the Fighting Scots basketball team is a rather incredible story beneath the surface of what appears to be your average run-of-the-mill, 17-4, number one ranked team.

Not only are the Scots having an incredible season that may even see them capture a number one seed in the upcoming NCAA tournament, they are doing it with great balance and superior team effort.

Each time the Scots take the floor, it is no one individual that leads them to victory. Instead it is a great unselfish team effort that is bringing the Scots regional and national acclaim, including the number 12 ranking in the United States by CNN/USA TODAY.

Following impressive victories over the likes of Belmont and Sewanee, the Scots seem poised to make a solid run into the tournament. However, what makes the Scots so unique is the chemistry of the team.

Night after night, the Scots are led by seniors Dee Bell and Jon Vaughn, but what many do not know is that this is a very young basketball team.

Also found consistently leading the box scores every game are freshmen Michael Danzey and Chris Housewright.

Two weeks ago, Danzey scored 21 points in the Scots 90-65 blowout victory over Sewanee, including 6 three point shots. Housewright put on a show of his own that week, igniting the Scots with 26 points in the win over Greensboro college, returning two nights later to scorch Sewanee with 14 points.

Head Coach and Athletic Director Randy Lambert has done a great job recruiting the necessary talent to bring basketball excitement to the MC campus.

For this year's basketball team, nothing less than 21 victories and the number one seed in the tournament will do. However, regardless of the outcome of the upcoming three games,

Coach cancels season after team suspended

by College Press Service

PRESCOTT, Ariz.—When seven basketball players at Yavapai College were suspended for smoking marijuana at a motel, their coach canceled the rest of the season.

With only two players left, he didn't have a lot of options.

"I already bawled my eyes out over this," coach Dolph Carroll told reporters. "It's unfortunate, but someone somewhere has got to take a stand, has got to create heroes in today's society."

The Roughriders were on their way to a winning season with a 16-8 record when the players were arrested Feb. 8 on marijuana possession charges. The seven were attending a party at a Motel 6.

The team had been ranked second in the Arizona Community College Athletics Conference, and 25th in the nation among junior colleges.

"These are not bad kids. They are good kids who made a bad decision," said Yavapai president Doreen Dailey.

Fans of the team have called the college to express their disappointment. "It is unfortunate we had to cancel the season," Dailey said, "but we must take a stand against illegal drug use."

the Scots have already provided great excitement this season for the alumni, students, faculty, staff, and fans of the college.

The Scots are proving to be an exciting team to watch and quite possibly a team that will work its way deep into the

College basketball hurt by NBA defections, officials say

by Marco Buscaglia
College Press Service

March Madness is less than one month away, but many undergraduate college basketball players already have set their sights beyond the annual NCAA tournament—for the pros.

"We're losing our future for stupid, selfish reasons," says Mike Tranghese, commissioner of the Big East conference. "We're not even talking about take the money and run. We're talking about think about the money and run."

In 1994, 20 underclassmen declared themselves eligible for the NBA draft. In '95, 21 declared themselves eligible. Last year, the number swelled to 43.

Tranghese, who often is credited for the rise in college basketball's popularity during the 1980s, says the players must take some blame for their selfish actions. But Tranghese says you can find the main culprits in the hallways of the NBA headquarters in New York.

"The NBA has no respect for these kids," he says. "They see stars as freshmen and sophomores, and they lure them with fame and fortune. There's no sense of responsibility."

Rod Thorn, the commissioner of the NBA, often has said the league has no choice but to accept younger players because of a court decision in the early 1980s. Tranghese, however, says Thorn and his assistants do nothing to dissuade coaches from going after younger players.

Thorn, however, always has been quick to point out that it's the NCAA that allows a

NCAA tournament. With an obvious balance between senior leadership and experience, and freshmen excitement and youthfulness, the Scots are a team determined to go far after the regular season ends.

Basketball is alive and well at MC, and everyone should recognize this year's squad for its great accomplishments, as well as what lies in its future in the years to come.

The Scots final three games will be at home on Wednesday, Feb. 26, at 7:30 p.m. against Centre and in the MC Classic on Feb. 28 and Mar. 1.

There's no one to watch—they all bolted for the NBA."

Surely, players such as Gamett, Kobe Bryant, Jermaine O'Neal, Stephon Marbury and Allen Iverson could have benefitted their respective teams and the game in general by not opting to leave for the pros before their senior years. But these players already are having an impact on the NBA, so new fans are being created where others are lost, right?

"I don't look at it as a trade-off," says Tranghese. "This is going to hurt the NBA one day. There are differences in players when they don't get the college experience."

While Tranghese won't name names, Philadelphia 76er rookie Iverson is the most obvious example. The former Georgetown star left the Hoyas after his sophomore season. Although Iverson is enjoying a huge season, he has angered more than a few NBA veterans with his brash talk and cocky behavior. Even Charles Barkley and Michael Jordan—who left North Carolina before his senior season—have suggested that the lack of college experience breeds a different player.

Jim Delany, commissioner of the Big Ten, says players come and go. But there are always new stars to replace the old.

"It's part of the process," Delany says. "People move on, and the game still survives."

Tranghese says he's concerned about college basketball's survival, period.

"The game's not as pure as it used to be," he says. "And it looks like it's only going to get worse."

player to declare himself eligible for the draft, then change his mind and return for another season with his college team if he's not happy with the pick.

Tranghese says he can't always defend the NCAA, but adds he's now afraid the NCAA won't even get a fair shot.

"You see a guy like Kevin Gamett who joins the NBA out of high school," Tranghese says. "Now we'll have a new generation of players who'll think they can jump from high school to the pros. I mean, a 17-year-old in the National Basketball league—that's just absurd." Not according to Kevin McHale, the general manager of the Minnesota Timberwolves, Gamett's team.

"Kevin is going to be one of those exceptions," McHale says. "He plays with a lot of maturity, does the things he's supposed to do and has a great respect for the game. He's the kind of player that's good for the league."

Although many questioned Gamett's entry into the 1995 NBA draft at the time, he has won over most members of the league. Still, Tranghese says, "for every Gamett, you've got some kid who's going to get burned because he thinks he'll be the next Michael Jordan."

Aside from problems for the participating individuals, Tranghese sees a larger, more complex issue because of early collegiate exits.

"The game is slowly being destroyed," Tranghese says. "You get a kid who has one good year and then he carts off to the NBA. Then college basketball has no stars. You miss out on the fans who want to watch the can't-miss kids.

Full-Time

DynCorp, Knoxville has a full-time opening for Data Analyst 1. Work is performed on-site at the U.S. Marshal Service. Occasional travel may be necessary. Background check required. Involves organization and management of case files. Salary $11.47/hr. For full description, contact Career Services.

Part-Time

Spectrum Rentals needs a computer specialist. Flex hrs. Provide on-site support for rental customers - instructing, troubleshooting, software support. Salary negotiable. 1-2 openings. Inquire in Career Services about JOB 191.

Quality Inn-Airport needs a night relief auditor (2 days 11pm-7am) and a desk clerk (2 days 3pm-11pm). Prefer one person, but can time share. Start $5.50/hr. Raise after 30 days. Ask Career Services about JOB 192.

Child care for two children ages 10 and 11 needed Wed., Thu., Fri. approximately 3:30-7:30pm. $40.00/week plus your dinner furnished. Pick up children at Fort Craig school - take home (5 minutes from school); heat dinner, clean kitchen; help children with homework if needed. Call Jan X8220 about this job #193.

Substitute pre-school assistant teachers are needed on an as-needed basis at Fort Craig School. Salary d.o.e. Hours 2:30-5:30 (flex). Days will vary. Must love working with children. Full-time hours available this summer through second week in July. Come by Career Services for application process for JOB 190.

THE Crossword

ACROSS
1 US president
5 Norwegian saint
9 Steak order
13 Chills and fever
14 Cobbler's concerns
16 Cheers for Juan
17 Queue
18 Kind of cover
20 Pro and —
21 Cheryl or Alan
22 Antiquated
23 Long time
25 Theater award
26 Gaseous states
28 Go to bat for 31 Baltic Sea's — Islands
32 Resided 33 Confer knighthood
35 Wipes up
36 Cake sections
37 Poet Milay
38 Article
39 Lavin or Gray
40 Small and sprightly
41 Make preparations
43 Pal
44 Aware of 45 Prospero's servant
46 Sullenly aloof
48 Flair
49 Skedaddle
52 Something to model?
54 Top-drawer
55 Sea eagle
56 First name in cosmetics
57 "— the night..."
58 Rip
59 Social dud
60 Thin Man's dog

© 1997 Tribune Media Services, Inc.
All rights reserved.

ANSWERS

DOWN
1 Powder, briefly
2 Exchange premium
3 Cartoon page
4 Golf item
5 Hollywood awards
6 Noblemen
7 "When I was —"
8 Turkish cap
9 Stir up
10 Got down
11 Have faith
12 Superlative suffix
15 Trademarks
19 One of five, briefly
21 Fat
24 Long, long time
25 "Carmen," e.g.
26 Expansive
27 Good-bye, in Oahu
28 Scandinavian
29 Fraternal society
30 Arrest
32 Australian dog
34 Musical group
36 Photo of a kind
37 Nobelists
39 Rawboned
40 Land of leprechauns
42 Kind of wave
43 Tattered
45 Change
46 Title of respect
47 Arm bone
48 Major ending
50 Med. subj.
51 Plateau
52 Tennis division
53 Military org.
54 One — time

DRB

1/10 One student was charged with violating the alcohol policy in Lloyd. The case was dismissed by J-Board.

1/23 One student was charged with violating the alcohol policy in Carnegie. The case is pending a J-Board hearing.

2/7 One person was charged with second offense violation of the alcohol policy in Pearsons. The student is required to attend four counseling sessions and pay a $50 fine.

2/11 One student was charged with vandalism in Davis parking lot. The student has to pay retribution for damages.

2/14 Two students were charged with visitation violation in Davis. The case is pending a J-Board hearing.

MEDIC

Regional Blood Center will be sponsoring a blood drive on Maryville College's campus on Wed., Feb. 26 from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.

People with type O negative and A positive are urged to donate.

All donors will receive a free MEDIC t-shirt and cholesterol level evaluation. Donors must be at least 17 years old and weigh a minimum of 110 pounds.

For more information about donor eligibility, phone Medic:

423-524-3074.

ATTENTION SENIORS!

Be sure to sign up for the free five-course meal to be served on Mar. 4, 6-8:30pm, Proffitt Dining Room. An Aladdin representative will be on hand to enlighten you on the points of "Dining Etiquette". Hurry!

Accommodations for 36 only!

Activity Briefs

On Tuesday, Feb. 25, "Regency" will be performing in the Fine Arts Center Music Hall. There is a two year waiting list for this award-winning five member group of male vocalists: "Regency" is an a cappella group whose performances are a mix of modern sounds and the styles of artists, such as the Righteous Brothers, Elvis Presley, and James Brown. Admission to this performance, sponsored by SPB and BSA, is free to MC students, faculty, and staff.

March 3-7 will be Habitat for Humanity theme week. Activities will include male vs female penny wars during lunch on Mar. 3, and a shack-a-thon on Mar. 5 in which students will sleep in cardboard boxes and try to experience what homelessness is like.

Activities Calendar

Tuesday, Feb. 25

- >11 a.m. Community Worship in CCM
- >6 p.m. Mountain Challenge: Wall Climb
- >7:30 p.m. FACM: SPB-"Regency"

Wednesday, Feb. 26

- >4 p.m. JV vs Centre-HOME
- >6 p.m. Mountain Challenge: Wall Climb
- >6 p.m. WB vs Centre-HOME
- >7:30 p.m. MB vs Centre-HOME
- >9 p.m. Habitat for Humanity Meeting

Thursday, Feb. 27

- >11 a.m. FACM: Community Forum
- >2 p.m. SB vs Marywood Coll-HOME
- >6 p.m. Mountain Challenge: Wall Climb
- >6 p.m. VOP annual concert-St. John's Baptist Church
- >6 p.m. CCM: Political Club Meeting
- >7 p.m. CCM: Adult Children of Alcoholics/Dysfunctional Families
- >8 p.m. FACM: Student Recital

Friday, Feb. 28

- >2 p.m. SB vs Mississippi Coll-HOME
- >MB: Maryville Classic

Saturday, Mar. 1

- >7 p.m. SB vs Savannah Arts-Away
- >SB vs Georgia Wesleyan-Away
- >MB: Maryville Classic
- >MC: Tower

Sunday, Mar. 2

- >12 p.m. BB vs Emory Univ-Away
- >12 p.m. SB vs Savannah Arts-Away

Monday, Mar. 3

- >3 p.m. FAYL: CS-Resume Writing
- >Summer Programs Assistant Aps Available
- >8 p.m. WC:MACCO Artist Showcase

Brents tutors inmates and loves it

by Shannon Bryant
Reporter

Most college students make it a point to stay out of jail, but a group of students involved in Maryville College's Student Literacy Corps take pride in the time they spend in prison. Junior Sherrie Brents and several other female MCSLC students voluntarily spend four hours a week in Blount County Jail tutoring inmates for basic education and GED equivalents.

As part of English professor Linda Clark's literacy practicum, MC students may tutor in a variety of situations, such as MC Families and area elementary schools. The program contains mostly Bonner and Bradford scholars but is gaining popularity among other students.

Although the atmosphere of incarceration may intimidate some, Brents said, "I love it. It's hard to remember sometimes that they're there for a reason... Even though it sounds like a scary concept, once you start you'll get hooked."

Brents, who is currently on her second semester in the Literacy Corps, cited the experience as the campus activity in which she takes the most pride. "It changed my views..." Brents said. She encourages those considering the program to not be intimidated. She also calls attention to the need for more males in the program.

When asked about the most memorable experience she has had working with the inmates, Brents recalled, "I gave a copy of The Lord of the Flies to a GED student and asked him to write a book report" over her Christmas break. Brents stated that, although she did not expect anything, the inmate not only presented the report, but showed "huge improvement" in his writing skills. When she asked him why he did it, the inmate replied that he would not do anything to "disappoint" Brents.

Finally, Brents said, "I think it's important that people know this project is bigger than me."

Brents would like to call attention to all those who have voluntarily given of themselves to increase the knowledge of others.

the opposite effect, since students would "come to it under resistance rather than discovering it of their own free will."

"Shakespeare is so powerful that he will always be read," says Cummings. "We are unable to let him go. Look at TV shows and movies—[Kenneth] Branagh is our [Sir Lawrence] Olivier. That says we still find Shakespeare's works deeply analytical, beyond belief, and beautiful linguistically. He's a virus in our blood and in our spirit and has been for 400 years and will not stop. We don't need administrations to require it... it is utter foolishness. Anybody who gets through college or high school without reading Shakespeare is a dunce."

"Shakespeare is very safe," agrees Schneider, also citing the latest movie production of Hamlet. "Shakespeare and Jane Austin are not our most endangered authors, which is what makes this whole controversy so astonishing."

Shakespeare—to be or not to be? Only time will tell.

Gospel jamboree held at MC

by Andy Long
Reporter

On Saturday evening, Feb. 15, Maryville College's Voices of Praise, the Berea Black Music Ensemble from Berea College in Berea, KY, and the Clemson University Gospel Choir from Clemson University in Clemson, SC gathered for praise and worship at the Gospel Jamboree. Such an event has occurred several times annually over the past few years and is quickly becoming an anticipated occurrence.

The Jamboree was opened by the Master of Ceremonies Elder Roy Johnson, associate pastor at St. John's Missionary Baptist Church.

VOP led the service with a medley of their up tempo numbers; "A Message For the Saints" by The Tri-City Singers, "David's Dance" by Fred Hammond, and "He Can Handle It" by Kirk Franklin and Family.

The majority of the Jamboree was left to the featured guests. Clemson, directed by Vanessa Cannon, offered praises through three numbers; "Whatcha Lookin 4" by Kirk Franklin, "Till the End" by William Becton, and "Melodies From Heaven" by Kirk Franklin.

Berea followed with "Jesus Is A Rock," a traditional Gospel song; "Be Grateful" by Walter Hawkins; and "For He Is Worth," a James Moore and Mississippi Mass Choir arrangement. All three choirs gathered on stage to close the service with a song that each director had taught to the choirs at the rehearsal earlier that afternoon. "I Won't Be Satisfied" by Hezekiah Walker was taught by Clemson; "When My Enemies" (traditional) was taught by Berea; and a medley of "You're the Reason Why I Sing" by Kirk Franklin, "Be Encouraged" by William Becton, and "God Will Take Care Of You" by James Cleveland and Aretha Franklin was taught by VOP. After the service at the Martin Luther King Center dinner was served by Ms. Patricia Dean, Irvin's mother-in-law, who is affectionately referred to by VOP as "Moms." There was also after dinner entertainment offered in the form of foosball, ping-pong, television and a dance which was discjockeyed by VOP's own Anthony Dunning.

Other than being involved in Black Gospel music these choirs have only one thing in common, Larry Irvin. Now the Director of Minority Services at MC, Irvin is the founder and a co-director of VOP as well as the founder and former director of the Clemson Choir. Irvin's connection with Berea lies mostly in his connection with their current director Dr. Kathy Bullock. While Irvin attended Berea, he sang in their Ensemble under the leadership of Bullock.

VOP has traveled to Berea as well as hosted both Berea and Clemson in the past. This year was the first time for VOP to travel to Clemson on their January tour and the first time for all three of these choirs to be together.

Foothills Cinema

Star Wars PG T-M 1:45, 4:30, 7:05, 9:35
Scream R T,W,R 4:20, 9:35
Beautician & the Beast PG T,W,R 1:50, 7:15
Dante's Peak PG13 T-M 1:55, 4:35, 7:05, 9:50
That Darn Cat PG T-M 1:30, 3:30, 5:30, 7:30, 9:30
Absolute Power R T-M 1:35, 4:40, 7:15, 9:45
Vegas Vacation PG T-M 1:40, 3:35, 5:30, 7:35, 9:35
Fools Rush In PG13 T-M 1:50, 4:20, 7:10, 9:40
Empire Strikes Back PG T-M 1:55, 4:35, 7:05, 9:50
The English Patient R F-Sun 1:30, 5:00, 8:30; M-R 5:00, 8:30
Midnight shows also, call 977-4499. $3.75 admission until 5:30 and $5.75 after; $3.75 for children anytime.

Buy * Sell * Trade
New, Used & Collectibles
Cassettes, CD's, Records
The Other Record Shop

2131 E. Broadway, Maryville, TN 37804
(located in the Bi-Lo Shopping Center)
Trade For New Releases!
977-9959

Wal-Mart: that monument to mental instability

by Adam Shepherd
Columnist

Today's column deals with something that really irks me. I am not returning to the Democrats, Environmentalists, or radical religious conservatives. I am talking about that monument to mental instability—Wal-Mart.

My qualm is that once someone (usually intelligent and sane) enters the unfriendly environs of Wal-Mart, they usually get sucked into the vortex of stupidity. Once someone enters the store they can hear the doors clang shut and the hell commence. People are running into other people's buggies; little kids with messy diapers are knocking things off shelves; in the personal hygiene section, teenage boys are joking about condoms and sanitary napkins; and adults are getting into fist-fights over the last "Tickle Me Elmo." I don't think that John Walton envisioned this happening in his stores; however, Dante might have had this in mind when he wrote "The Inferno."

I detest trying to find things in Wal-Mart. Finding things with relative ease in that store is like trying to find a hooker at a tent revival. In other words, it is nearly impossible. I have found motor oil in the underwear section and baseballs in the lingerie. These items have probably been left behind by some kid, but the actual layout of the store does not make much more sense.

One may ask why these people go through this? The answer is quite simple—they are searching for that elusive bargain. But I would rather spend a couple of extra dollars at Target and save my sanity.

Many people think they can go into Wal-Mart and come out like they entered. Sadly this is just not true. In a matter of minutes they are in the same boat and may be forever altered. I plead with all of you who whoremong at Wal-Mart, stop the madness! Turn around before it is too late and you have to enter some twelve step program to regain your stability.

The Travels of Kazu: Migraine and I

by Kazu Nakane
Reporter

Yahoo! How are you doing? Oh, by the way, I finally finished my ESL (English as a Second Language) program last December and am entered here as full-time!! (applause) I hear that colds are prevailing, but I'm fine because I had a flu shot last fall, finally. So, no colds will bother me while I study in college.

The only thing I can't stand and prevent is a migraine. Mine is tremendously terrible, and I can't do anything when I have it. When my migraine is active, it hurts my head rhythmically every time my heart beats. The first time I had it was in junior high. It used to hurt at my temples at that time, but it transferred to my forehead, and then to the crown of the head; it continues moving backward.

When I have a migraine, or any headache, I would like to open my skull and put my head into cold water. Maybe taking pills is good. However, the medicine will stop working after awhile, and that's why people buy stronger and stronger medicine. This formula may look familiar: aspirin<Tylenol<Advil<Motrin<? However, it is not always a good idea to take chemical drugs. Until recently in Japanese hospitals, it had been common to use chemical drugs, but using drugs that are made of medicinal herb or relying on self-recoveries are in the limelight again because they have less risk and less or no

At the movies with Bo

by Bo McMichael
Columnist

Every week Hollywood brings another film into the waiting public eye. Just like a new creature born into the world, every film has a chance of survival, and a chance of death. Every new creature is different in shape and form, and the same can be said about a film. On Valentine's Day, the film industry gave birth to twins; however, these twins have nothing in common. They are total opposites in every aspects. Thieves and Romantics take to the screen and fight for survival in the world of Hollywood.

Clint Eastwood goes for a second title march to the Oscars of '97 with "Absolute Power." This particular film has the same equation that won Eastwood an Oscar in '93 for "Unforgiven," a Clint Eastwood film directed and starred in by the man himself, and his side kick Gene Hackman. Ed Harris and Scott Glenn co-star in this murder of all mur-side effects. This is why I don't like to take pills.

I'll show you my secret cure which is no risk, no side effects and makes you feel like you put cold water in your head. First, buy cotton pads that are used for make-up and a bottle of rubbing alcohol which is used to disinfect. Next, dilute the alcohol four times with water; that means alcohol:water=1:3. Then put cotton pads in it and soak completely. Pick it up and tear to adjust your ear hole. Then twist it a little bit like a small stick and stick into your ear. The deeper you put it into your ears, the more it works, but you don't have to put it in so deep that it hurts your ears. Also, don't twist it so much because the liquid cures the headache. Now, if you feel your ear is itchy, the liquid is rich and you may dilute a little more. I know it's pretty troublesome to do, especially if you have a big headache. So,

It seems that a professional thief sees the most unexpected crime, and the only people who know the truth are the thief (Eastwood) and the President of the United States (Hackman). This best-seller on the book stand was a riveting novel of conspiracy and cover-up. The big question is, Can they pull it off? Now remember "Unforgiven" was well developed and very descriptive. "Absolute Power" can be described as long and very descriptive. Eastwood wanted to do an "Unforgiven" for the nineties, and he has accomplished his goal. The question is can society breaks itself away from the action packed-special effects-science fiction idea that moviegoers are accustomed to seeing. My views are mixed as a movie-goer. I liked the idea and concept; however, the movie could have ended 30 minutes earlier than it actually did. Just like anyone with power, they overuse their welcome.

The other new born film

why don't you make extra and keep in a box shut tightly in the refrigerator? Once you get the size of cotton you like, it's so easy. Just cut the cottons before you put them in the liquid. Talk about the feeling I have when I put the cold cotton into my ear—it is exactly like I open my skull and dip my head into the water! If you put it in during the night, I bet most of your headache would be gone the next morning!!

If you would like to try an advanced way that I do sometimes, follow this: Make extras as guided above, except place into the freezer. And that's it! This works very well for me, and I feel like I put an ice bar through my ears. I don't guarantee it because this might be a little risky.

Especially when you feel awful because of a big headache, this is like a moment of ecstasy.

stars include "Friends" star Matthew Perry and "Desperado" star Salma Hayek. "Fools Rush In" allows a fun and delightful look into an old and ancient method of good old-fashioned love. What happens when a one night stand turns into a wife, a daddy and a new life? The answer is pure romance. The ups and downs of a relationship help the world go around, and Perry adds his help turning the world in "Fools Rush In." This must see date movie of the '90s allows a cast from "Friends" a hit in the books. Perry is truly my favorite character on "Friends" as Chandler Bing, and he takes that same character into his new movie. You will definitely need to Rush into the theaters to see "Fools Rush In."

"Vegas Vacation" also opened Valentine's weekend; however, it quickly died when the Fan Club President, Nathan Davenport, gave it two enormous thumbs down. I still was going to lend it my $3.75; however, Tom Arnold, the student—not the actor, also gave it two thumbs down. They said it was a let down from the last one. It looks like this one will be reborn at the video store. "The Empire Strikes Back" next week at the theaters.

THE HIGHLAND ECHO

WILL BE ACCEPTING DONATIONS FOR THEIR RUMMAGE SALE TENTATIVELY SET FOR SATURDAY, MAR. 15 FROM 8 A.M. TO NOON. ITEMS MAY BE BROUGHT TO FAYERWEATHER LOBBY ON FRIDAY, FEB. 28, FROM 3-5 P.M.

Test your "Star Wars" I.Q.

By Colleen DeBaise
CPS

"Luke," invokes Darth Vader, in an ominously raspy voice. "I...am...your...father!"

That was the sensational conclusion of "Return of the Jedi," the last installment of the "Star Wars" trilogy in which dizzying visuals left movie-goers feeling like they'd been hit by a dark star.

But would the trilogy re-released Jan. 31 with digitally remastered effects pack as much punch if Darth Vader had been named, say, "Jean-Luc"? Or if the lovely Princess Leia answered to the Greek-goddess-like "Xena"?

Filmmaker George Lucas recently told The New York Times just where on earth he came up with the catchy names that launched a thousand action figures.

As it turns out, names such as "Luke Skywalker" and "Hans Solo" did come from earth.

Lucas said he borrowed from a mix of literary, cultural and linguistic sources to devise

I wanted to stay away from the kind of science fiction names like Zenon and Zorba.

-George Lucas

the memorable names.

"I wanted to stay away from the kind of science fiction names like Zenon and Zorba," he told the Times. "They had to sound indigenous and have consistency between their names and their culture."

That's he why he borrowed from the Dutch to come up with Darth Vader, which roughly translates into "Dark Father." Vader's original name is Anakin Skywalker—"Anakin" is a variation on the race of giants in Genesis, while "Skywalker" is a take on Loki, the Norse god of fire and mischief.

Luke Skywalker's name comes from the Greek word "leukos" or light. Also, the biblical Luke was a gentile who converted to Christianity and became an apostle. That seemed appropriate for the young man who discovers "The Force."

The name Han Solo stems from two sources: "Han" is the archaic pronunciation of the common boy's name, John, while "Solo" is borrowed from the character Napoleon Solo in "The Man from U.N.C.L.E." A character named Napoleon Solo also appeared in the James Bond novel, "Goldfinger."

Princess Leia's name evokes the character Princess Dejah Thoris in Edgar Rice Burroughs' "John Carter of Mars" tales, and also Lady Galadriel of Lothlorien in J.R.R. Tolkien's "Lord of the Rings." The braids that look like earmuffs are all hers, however.

The loveable robot R2-D2 got his name from a sound editor's shorthand for "Reel Two, Dialogue Two" during the making of another Lucas flick, "American Graffiti."

Obi-Wan Kenobi, the Jedi knight, got his name from the Japanese word "obi," which is a sash used to tie a kimono. The sash, or belt, is thought to be connected to Obi-Wan Kenobi's status as martial-arts master.

Also, the desert scenes in "Star Films" were filmed in Tataouine, Tunisia. Luke's home planet, of course, is "Tatooine."

By the way, Lucas had a rambunctious pet dog named "Indiana," who later lent his name to the filmmaker's "Indiana Jones" series.

The incredible, raving press

by Patrick E. Leslie
Production Editor

on newspapers, including The New York Times.

However, I see this as a sad commentary on our society. Where else can a washed-up pro-football player be more important than the leader of our nation?

Should I be surprised? I often times wonder. Especially on a campus of higher education where students sit in the campus grill and spend endless hours watching sensationalist talk shows and whine when someone turns, or tries to turn, the channel.

Perhaps this is a faulty analogy but, talk shows and O.J. have become the bread and circus of our time numbing the brains of the populace.

Where will we be in the next century? We might have a better clue if the rebuttal to Clinton's address had not been preempted by O.J. and the incredible, raving press.

Over the past several weeks, the national press has been further adding to the problems that they have with credibility. Admonishment coming from such a lowly station as mine is probably construed by most as nothing more than a joke.

My general feeling of dissatisfaction started with the story of JonBenet Ramsey's death. The media were like a pack of rabid vultures moving in, and the police handled it as they should have. They avoided speculation and only released facts.

It is sad that publications, such as The National Enquirer and The Globe, can print such tripe and stay in business.

This is followed by the coverage of the State of the Union address. The press acted like a six-year old when it came to breaking into a conversation.

Between O.J. and the speech, which is more important? The State of the Union and the future of the country (yes, I know that he is the incumbent but he has no more presidential elections to win). O.J. even took the top spot

Gombert 12/96

Gombert 1/19/97

The Highland Echo

The weekly voice of Maryville College - Founded 1914

VOL. LXXXII, NO. 9

Tuesday, March 4, 1997

502 East Lamar Alexander Pkwy, Maryville, TN 37804

Two million dollars of renovations on docket for fall

New furniture, carpet, handicap ramps, repaired sidewalks, and more campus lighting among changes

by Sarah West
Editor

Next fall, students who were not lucky enough to get into the Beeson Residence Village may be pleasantly surprised about their own living conditions. Two million dollars is being devoted to residence hall renovations and other improvements at Maryville College.

Student satisfaction is the reason these changes are taking place. According to Ron Appuhn, vice president of business affairs, "We are here for the students, and clearly the living environment is important to students."

The buildings on campus will be receiving a make-over on the outside, as well as the inside. Residence halls will be painted, and their hallways and lobbies will be recarpeted. Residence rooms will be tiled and will receive new window dressings. Wilson Chapel, as well as the entrance to Thaw, will be recarpeted. Plaster will also be repaired in Thaw. The residence halls will be washed, while the Anderson Hall tower and trim and the Fayerweather trim will be repaired.

"I'm really excited because the halls are in need of great repair," said Dr. William Seymour, vice president of student development. "Where students live plays a big part in retention. When you compare what we are getting with Beeson to what we have, it's going to make them [other residence halls] look worse."

Safety is another area to which the money has been allocated. Panic hardware, located on fire doors, in

Copeland, Davis, Gamble, and Pearson will be replaced, as will the hard-wired smoke detectors in Pearson. Campus lighting around residence halls, especially in the Davis, Gamble, and Lloyd area, and other dark areas is another focus. Money will be spent on Copeland ventilation, broken sidewalks, lab safety, a residence hall card access system, and more.

American Disabilities Act issues are another goal, specifically the addition of an elevator in the Sutton Science building, accessible restrooms in Anderson, Sutton, Pearson, and Fayerweather, and access ramps in Pearson, Thaw, Fayerweather, and the Center for Campus Ministries.

Regarding the door peep holes to be placed in all residence halls, Michelle Ballew, director of residence life, said, "That's a safety issue that I'm concerned about."

Cont. on p. 2

Activity fee, Beeson discussed at forum

by Lori Leffel
Reporter

On Wednesday, Feb. 26, a student senate open forum was held to discuss next year's activity fee and Beeson Village.

A committee is currently working on ideas for the activity fee, which was raised last year to $25 for the fitness center. The suggestion made by the committee, which Senior Adam Ray represented, was to decrease the extra fee from $25 to $15 and start an endowment plan. The money would start accruing interest but could not be touched. The committee also suggested that a small sum of the money be spent on purchasing dumbbells and weights for the center. After this purchase, $9,450 would be left to start the endowment. Accordingly, the activity fee will go down each year. With the interest that is accrued and the estimated number of students, there will be $25,000 available in five years to keep the center running, so future students will not have to pay for it.

Beeson residence requirements, including GPA and disciplinary problems are two major concerns of students. Nothing was settled on these issues. Everyone is invited to come to the senate meeting on Thursday, Mar. 6 at 12:30 p.m. in the Center for Campus Ministries.

photo by Kei Jennett

Students are gathered in the CCM for the Feb. 26 Open Forum.

Clinic has saved students over $17,000

by Tonya Briggs
Reporter

The campus clinic, located on the ground floor of Carnegie Hall, has been a successful addition to Maryville College. Already, the clinic has saved students over $17,000. Through the months of October to December, the clinic saved students $13,028, and that is taking into consideration that students were here for only three weeks in November and two in December. The clinic has also saved students time. By having the clinic on campus, students do not have to worry about driving or finding a ride to a doctor's office around town that is open within an hour break from classes.

Daniel Norman, a freshman who had knee surgery last semester, said, "The clinic was convenient for me because I wasn't able to drive and I didn't have to find someone that would."

The clinic was established by last year's student senate and Blount Memorial Hospital. It is funded by a student fee of $25 per semester. It has been open since fall athletes arrived for pre-season.

Since then, the clinic has made a few changes. The hours have slightly increased. It is open from 8 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. The clinic plans to be open full time, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., five days a week this fall.

Its services have also expanded to include worker's compensation for MC employees.

Dr. Russell Gibson, a family practice physician and MC alumnus, visits the clinic several times a week, according to need. It costs no extra charge to see the doctor, but a prescription may need to be purchased off campus. He saw fifty students during the month of January.

The nurse at the clinic is Cydna Savage, who is employed by Blount Memorial. She is easy to talk to and a mother figure to many of the students who come and see her.

She likes working at MC because she loves the contact with the students. "They

Cont. on p. 3

Inside

Community Forum.....	2
Liquid Ecstasy.....	3
Basketball.....	4
Kerygma Coffee.....	5
Crossword.....	6
Downs on Rodman.....	7
Dave Barry.....	8

Highlights

News.....	2,3
Sports.....	4
Features.....	5
Calendar.....	6
Op/Ed.....	7,8

Taddie lectures on "A Church Built in Tone"

by Sarah Christians
Copy Editor

On Feb. 27, Dr. Dan Taddie, chair of the Fine Arts division, gave the second lecture of the community forum series "The Medieval Past: Distant Mirror or Discarded Image." Taddie's lecture "A Church Built in Tone" explained the origins of modern western music through medieval sacred music.

Taddie explained that much of what is today's music springs directly from the middle ages. Before the advances were made, music had nearly none of the characteristics modern listeners usually associate with it.

Taddie noted that a greater portion of the most important advances were made in the eleventh century. These changes included composition as a replacement for strict improvisation, the invention of musical notation, the beginning of distinct structure and principles of order such as modes and polyphony, which is two or more simtaneous parts.

According to Taddie it was not until the fifteenth century, however, that parts were named. What was then referred to as supramus, contratenor altus, tenor, and contratenor bassus have become common to modern musician's as the four basic parts: soprano, alto, tenor and bass.

Another of Taddie's enlightening facts was the invention of the sight singing method, which listeners know as the syllables Do, Re, Mi, Fa, Sol, La, Ti, and Do.

"It was cool," said Senior Eric Obermiller of the lecture.

Several recordings enhanced Taddie's presentation and were excellent examples of his thesis that in the medieval world, churches really were built in tone.

MC participates in blood drive

by Patrick E. Leslie
Layout Editor

On Tuesday, Feb. 25 the Medic Regional Blood Center held a blood drive on campus. Mike Prowell, coordinator of donor resources, said that on average 40 students donate blood when they hold a drive on campus, but they could handle as many as 80.

Many people, as did several MC students, believe that giving blood is unsafe. The rumors ranged from fear of AIDS to stories of people having their fingers fall off after giving blood. These stories and others like them often deter people from giving blood.

Prowell said, "We test the blood according to FDA regulations." He also said that one cannot under any circumstance get AIDS or hepatitis by donating blood. Before anyone can donate blood, the potential donor is carefully screened to make sure it is safe for both the giver and the receivers. Each person is given a clean unused needle.

Giving blood has several benefits tied to it. The most important is that for each time you donate you receive blood free, in case you have any type of surgery or are in need of a transfusion, for one year after you have donated. This can be a great financial benefit especially when you take into account the price of one unit, equivalent to one pint, of blood which ranges from $55 to $140 dollars.

Blood can also be broken into four components which can be used on four different patients. Approximately 240 pints of blood are needed each day in the Medic area. The donating of blood is essential to helping save lives in the East Tennessee region.

For additional information on donating or other Medic services you can call 615-524-3074.

"Halls" cont. from p.1

Functional areas where money will be allocated are classroom renovations and equipment replacement, kitchen appliance replacement, residence hall bedroom furniture, closet door repair, administration and faculty offices, and Fayerweather renovation of the third and fourth floors. After the second and third floors of Fayerweather have an adequate fire escape, the third will be re-wired for smoke detection and used for offices.

Other structural concerns, such as roofing and guttering, will also be addressed.

"The president has approved the list, and we have started the process of scheduling for projects and purchases," said Appuhn.

The money being used for these improvements

If they [students] see attractive living facilities and come, they will stay where they are comfortable.

-Dr. Seymour

comes from a bond issue received to finish Beeson. Two million dollars will finish Beeson, and another million will be spent on redoing electrical systems, including lighting, heating, and air conditioning. The final two million is what is being used for the other renovations.

Regarding the reasoning of how the money is being used, Seymour said, "The money is better served if we deal with out current needs."

Seymour and Ballew spoke of the importance of the quality of residence halls to recruitment and retention. "If they [students] see attractive living facilities and come, they will stay where they are comfortable," said Seymour.

Lloyd Hall, which does not have air conditioning, may not be left in the heat for long. "Even though there are no current plans for Lloyd, we are actively pursuing alternatives," said Appuhn.

Seymour also paid the Board of Trustees has been involved. Seymour said, "They have even toured Copeland Hall."

"It's an exciting time for Maryville College," said Seymour.

Painting may begin as soon as spring break.

The Highland Echo
Editor

Sarah H. West

Production Editor

Patrick E. Leslie

Copy Editor

Sarah Christians

Sports Editor

Joe Malheiro

Staff Writers

Sherrie Brents, Tonya Briggs, Shannon Bryant, Joey Cody, David Downs, Dave Dupont, Chuck Gilkey, Brian Hastings, Andy Hoover, Kristi Johnson, Lori Leffel, Caroline Leggett, Andy Long, LaToya Lundy, Bo McMichaels, Rissa Miller, Kazu Nakane, Dallas Rightmeyer, Sun-Im Ryu, Kim Schuenemann, Michelle Shuler, Adam Shepherd, Christi Stalans, and Traci Tidwell

Public Relations
Coordinator

Michelle Shuler

Photo Staff

Keli Jennett and
Jenny Oxford

Cartoonists

Carl Gombert

Faculty Advisor

Jeff Gary

Please send letters to the editor, comments, suggestion, or story leads to box #2247.

Phone
981-8176

E-Mail
Swest75@aol.com

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 500 words.

photo by Keli Jennett

Senior Adam Ray speaks at the Open Forum on Feb. 26.

Nail polish for guys is on the way

Knight-Ridder/Tribune News

Men--are you ready for nail polish?

Not that clearcoat you sometimes get at the end of a manicure, but serious nail polish with dark, metallic colors that you notice, and names like Dog for purple, Oedipus for forest green, Testosterone for a shade described as "steel gun" and Libido a teal coloration just made for San Jose Sharks fans.

Candy Man is the name of this first line of nail polish aimed specifically at men. Priced at $12 a bottle for .45 ounces in a choice of seven shades, it's expected to hit cosmetics counters around the first week of February.

"I don't know if Mr. Wall Street will be wearing it," admits creator Dineh Mohajer. "I don't think he'll put Gigolo on for work, but who knows what the night may bring?"

Tom Julian, a men's fashion trend analyst for McFallon Elligott, a marketing company, says, "We've had acceptance of tattooing and ear piercing, so colored fingernails and toenails goes right along with that.

But "will Revlon embrace it in a big way? Probably not. It's for a small segment of the urban population--and it does exist--but I don't envision guys going down to the corner drug store and saying, 'I'll buy a new shade of nail polish for tonight.'"

Still, Mohajer thinks there's a market, and her sense of the cosmetics marketplace is legendary at the age of 24.

Unable to find a baby-blue shade of polish to match new shoes in 1995, Mohajer mixed her own in her Beverly Hills home. People noticed, asked to buy it and finally she heeded the advice to market it from her sister Pooneh, now her business partner. Sales for 1996 were $10 million and spawned copycat shades from other manufacturers following her lead.

She's not predicting a similar explosion for Candy Man, but she won't be surprised if it generates a million or so its first year.

"Candy Man came about because we've had such interest from men as well as women.

We were to the point where men were stealing their girlfriends' bottles and putting it on in the bathroom," Mohajer says.

Hard Candy's Bubble Gum, Trailer Trash and Sky colors are marketed to women, and famous fans include Alica Silverstone, Lisa Marie Presley, Madonna and Cher.

Mohajer can easily tick off a list of well-known men who gladly paint their nails with it.

Lenny Kravitz, Quentin Tarantino, Dennis Rodman, Antonio Banderas and Sean Lennon, as well as members of rock bands like Red Hot Chili Peppers, Smashing Pumpkins and Garbage are among the enamel-enamored men she expects to buy Candy Man.

"There's something very sexy about a man wearing nail polish, and it doesn't compromise his sexuality. It's a hip, fashionable thing to do. It's not caught up in machoness. It's more about fashion, style, fun and sexiness," she says.

Naturally Mohajer's boyfriend, musician and business partner Ben Einstein, wears it. "I think he's got Gigolo on," she

GHB, or liquid ecstasy, appearing on campuses

By Colleen DeBaise
College Press Service

WASHINGTON—It's often touted on the Internet as a muscle-builder, an aphrodisiac and an easy high.

But gamma hydroxybutyric acid—a popular party drug better known as GHB or "liquid ecstasy"—is no magic pill.

The government warned Feb. 18 that GHB, which was banned in 1991 but is experiencing a resurgence, has been linked to a number of recent hospitalizations, date rapes and even some deaths.

Three Massachusetts college students were hospitalized, two in a coma, after trying GHB, according to news reports.

Last September, a 17-year-old Houston girl died after someone slipped the drug into her soft drink at a night club.

GHB, also known as Grievous Bodily Harm or Liquid X, is an odorless drug with a slightly salty taste, often distributed as a clear liquid that can be mixed into a drink.

In the 1980s, the drug was promoted as a steroid alternative and widely sold in health food stores until cases of GHB-related illness were reported.

Symptoms include vomiting, dizziness, tremors and seizures. The Food and Drug Administration declared it illegal to manufacture or sell GHB in the United States in 1991, and several states such as Texas have made it illegal to possess.

FDA investigators have begun a nationwide crackdown on underground GHB manufacturing.

GHB often is compared to Rohypnol, widely known as "roofies" or the "date rape" drug. As with Rohypnol, GHB can be slipped into a victim's drink, causing them to pass out and have little memory of the crime or the attacker's identity.

At nightclubs, partyers can dispense GHB from small, perfume sample-sized bottles into their drinks, she said.

In March, the government banned imports of Rohypnol, which is sold over-the-counter in Mexico. The president signed legislation in September that stiffened the penalty for possession of Rohypnol to that of cocaine, heroin and LSD.

"I would hope that GHB would be close on its heels," Roy said.

The biggest problem with GHB is that students "don't seem to have a sense of problems with the dosage and individual reaction," she said.

Because the drug is produced so haphazardly, its potency varies from batch to batch. The same dose that gave someone a mild buzz once may send them into a coma next time, doctors say.

She adds that students worried that they may become the victim of a "date rape" drug should take the following safety precautions:

- Never accept a beverage unless it is in a sealed container;
- Never leave a beverage unattended;
- Never leave a friend who is displaying any effects of a drug.

"Clinic" cont. form p. 1

have been open and honest with me and receptive to my suggestions," said Savage.

She also said that working on campus has given her a new perspective on college students. "I've gotten so much from these students; it's wonderful." She says it is the perfect setting for her right now.

She is excited about the full-time schedule in the fall. Her goal for next year is to have more preventive care for the campus. She would also like to do more workshops and educate on campus. For example, she would like to conduct a seminar on "Healthy Eating on the Run For College Students."

Overall, the campus clinic has been a resounding success and convenience to the MC community, and it looks to promise even better things.

Lady Scots end season with big win

by David Dupont
Reporter

After beating the Centre Kernels by twenty-eight points, the Maryville College Lady Scots ended their season with a respectable 12-11 record. Throughout the 96/97 season the Lady Scots beat some great teams.

Junior Melanie Shepherd led the attack against the Kernels with sixteen points. Meghan Casey, a junior, added thirteen points and pulled down seven boards. Juniors Leslie Roberson and Beth Loveday and Sophomore Lolita Johnston also put up some big numbers against the Lady Kernels. Chris Rajkowski, a junior, was unable to play against the Lady Kernels because of an ankle injury.

Senior Jennifer Buck was also out for her last game, due to a knee injury. However,

Buck ended the season and her career with over one thousand points. Buck has been a constant performer, playing a key role in many of the season's victories.

"I've enjoyed my four years at Maryville College," said Buck. "I have learned in the classroom, as well as on the court."

Even though the Lady Scots were plagued with injuries, they still found a way to win. One reason for their victory was their tough defense. This has been the main focus of the Lady Scots for the 96/97 year and will carry over to the 97/98 year. Coach Kelli Casteel-Cook was proud and boasted of their hard work and tremendous heart.

This season has tested the character and stamina of the Lady Scots and has also seen young and exciting players step up to fill the positions of last year's seniors, Jama

Cameron, Whitney Williamson, and Jamie Parrot.

Although many players were not used to playing a particular position, they did a great job. Casey has had to step up and play where she was needed at the post. Other key contributors to the success of the Lady Scots season have been Roberson, Rajkowski, Loveday, Shepherd and freshman Lyndy Dunlap.

The Lady Scots are returning everyone on the roster, except Buck. Even though they are a young team, they finished the season strong, boasting a record over .500.

Regarding next year, Casey stated, "We are losing a great player, and it's going to be interesting to see who will step up. How hard we work in the off season, will determine how good we are next year."

The Lady Scots have seen tremendous contributions and improvements from a very talented freshmen class. As the Lady Scots look to next year, they are eager to make things

photo by Kelli Jennett

MC's Beth Loveday, a sophomore, dribbles down the court.

Scots Basketball Results Week of February 23-1

Men

Friday:

Bluffton (47): Minning 9, Gudorf 9, Parker 7, Morris 6, Nixon 6, Shelton 6, Trail 2, Lehmden 2.

Scots (94): Beaty 22, Bell 12, Housewright 11, Poag 10, Danzey 8, McGreal 6, Stiles 6, Wright 5, Leroy 5, Vaughn 4, Walker 1.

Halftime: Maryville 45-29

Saturday

Defiance (52): Newlove 5, Scharf 2, Vordemask 9, Maillard 8, Roth 11, Dumonte 4, Kable 13.

Maryville (68): Michael Danzey 10, Jason Poag 15, Spencer Beaty 10, McGreal 2, Stiles 2, Chris Housewright 12, Bell 9, Wright 2, Vaughn 8.

Halftime: 35-27, Maryville. 3-point goals: Defiance (3)-Newlove, Maillard, Roth. Maryville (6)-Danzey, Poag 3, Beaty 2.

by David Dupont
Reporter

After beating the Kernels 76 to 53, the Scots increased their record to 18-5.

At half time the Scots were only up by eight. However, changes were made, and the second half broke the back of the Centre Kernels. The fighting Scots opened up a huge lead with the help of Jason Poag and Chris Housewright.

Housewright and Poag stated, "We couldn't have done any of it without the rest of the team." The Scots have played as a team this season.

Poag, better known as Re Re, was in a zone. Poag was 6 of 10 from the field. He drained five of his six baskets from behind the three point line and then hit one at the top of the key for a total of 17 points. Housewright was also on fire. He shot for over 85% from the field adding a total of 16 points. Dee Bell and Michael Danzey furthered the lead by adding 14 points. Other key contributors to the Scots win over Centre were Spencer Beaty, David McGreal, Jon Wright, and Jon Vaughn.

Regarding the game McGreal said, "Re Re and Housewright opened up the game for us. We were getting shut down inside for a while, so we slipped it out to Housewright and Re Re. When they started hitting from outside, it freed up the post."

McGreal also stated, "Our defense is the biggest and most important part of our team. We limited their best player to 15 points and then shut down every other player to seven points or less. Our defense is the reason we are 18-5."

The fighting Scots' talent on the bench exceeds the expectations of coaches and fans. Defense, ball movement, smart (open) shots, and hustle are the pride behind this team.

The Scots are currently ranked number one in the South and are in a position to host the first two rounds of the National Tournament.

Scots beat Kernels, 76-53

Kerygma coffee: social alternative to the "strip"

by Traci Tidwell
Reporter

Coffee and conversation are the two primary focuses of a new organization called Kerygma Coffee established here at Maryville College.

This organization is directed toward those individuals on campus looking for an opportunity to get together with other people in a social setting, an ideal setting for those students looking for something beyond the social drinking culture of "the Strip."

Quite simply, Kerygma Coffee is a time set aside for students to get together over coffee or tea and chat about the issues that are important to them; it is an alternative solution to socializing in Knoxville's bars and dance clubs.

"Kerygma" is traditionally a Greek word meaning "proclamation" or "preaching," which, as Rev. Stephen Nickle, MC chaplain, noted, is the students' foundation for the group. Kerygma Coffee is the students' proclamation of ideas and issues, their time to express what is important to them; it arose out of a need to help students interact more socially here on campus. The main idea behind creating the Kerygma Coffee forum centered on "How can we create a space for conversation?" said Nickle.

The solution? Invite students to come, at their leisure, to enjoy a little caffeine and chatting without the pressures of a lecture setting—no requirements or expectations imposed. Students are welcome to talk and socialize or even not talk and simply enjoy the company of others.

Some students have been known to bring a book and relax in the coffeehouse atmosphere. Occasionally a staff member stops in to share his or her views with the group, for those interested. It is, however, not a frequent occurrence since the main purpose is for the students to express themselves socially.

Students involved in Kerygma Coffee sometimes do put in a little extra effort to support the cause. For example, MC puppeteers recently volunteered to host a puppet show at the Alcoa Wal-Mart in exchange for coffee and tea donations.

Kerygma Coffee meets every Thursday, Friday, and Saturday between 8 p.m. and midnight. Anyone interested is welcome to stop by and enjoy the coffee (or tea) and conversation.

Alpha Zeta honors Brahms in recital

by Rissa Miller
Reporter

Athletes show their skills during games. Actors portray their abilities in plays. Artists display their talents through their work. But, how do musicians exhibit theirs? In recitals and concerts. During the last weeks of February, the Fine Arts Music Hall was filled with students demonstrating their musical expertise.

On Feb. 20, Delta Omicron, the Maryville College chapter of Alpha Zeta, presented "A tribute to Brahms." As a result of his highly structured style, Brahms has been thought of as a great traditionalist. On the other hand, many musical historians consider him to be a powerful romantic because of his development and experimentation with music. No matter how he is classified, Brahms was a master. Members of the music society wanted to show his brilliance to others. They succeeded.

J. McFetridge, an MC freshman, said, "It was a very dignified celebration of one of the greatest composers of all time.

Freric Neitzche said, 'Life without music would be a mistake.' I say life without Brahms would be unfortunate to say the least."

Dara DiGiacomo, a senior, struggled with the terrible effects of bronchitis throughout her senior recital on Feb. 22. She was forced to stop and begin again as a result of serious bouts of coughing. This would be a nightmare for many performers; however, DiGiacomo was able to continue her performance despite her illness.

Sara Baker, a sophomore who attended the recital, remarked, "She did a good job. She did a good job keeping her composure."

The Highland Echo is accepting donations for their rummage sale (set for March 15, from 8 a.m. to noon) on Tuesdays at 1 p.m. in the publications room located on the second floor of Fayerweather Hall.

We, the Bums of Isaac's,

Off at the beginning,
We didn't know each other,
Slowly we grew to liking,
The sums of one another.

As time passed on by,
We grew into friends,
We spend our days—in a room,
All until the ends.

We, the bums of Isaac's,
Always seem to go,
Into a place where we can meet,
Live and love and grow.

If we cannot find each other,
We know where to meet,
Playing upon the table,
One of us will be.

Sitting in the smoke filled room,
Enjoying each other's company,
Finding all there is to know,
About each other's history.

We, the bums of Isaac's,
Never wanting to leave,
Play our last game of pool,
Forcing ourselves to leave.

We, the bums of Isaac's,
Have grown into friends,
Always talking, sometimes laughing,
Hoping—we are friends until the end.

From one of the Bums to the rest,
Robert Bailey

Gombert 12/96

VOP holds concert honoring Black History

by Andy Long
Reporter

On Thursday, Feb. 27 the Maryville College Voices of Praise held their Annual Concert at St. Johns Missionary Baptist Church. VOP led the worship service/Black History Month celebration with six songs. They led off with "For He Is Worthy To Be Praised" by Rev. James Moore and the Mississippi Mass Choir. They followed with "Make Me Over" by the Wilmington Chester Mass Choir, "Melodies From Heaven" by Kirk Franklin and the Family, "Conquerors" by Kirk Franklin, "Don't Forget To Remember" by Donald Lawrence and The Tri-City Singers, and "Jesus Paid It All" a traditional Hymn that was rearranged by Kirk Franklin.

In the middle of the program, the Youth Department of St. Johns performed a series of skits in commemoration of Black History Month. Freshman Folami Ford and alumnus Tara Sanders organized the skits which showed the development of African-American History from Africa and the beginning of the slave trade through the present, as well as presenting hopes for the future. Ford and Sanders held a brain storming session with the youth, then took the ideas, historical characters, and groups which were offered and organized them in chronological order, as well as wrote skits to depict the different periods of Black history. The African life, the Slave Trade and Emancipation, the segregated schools and facilities, and the Civil Rights Movement were reflected on.

THE Crossword

ACROSS
1 African nation
5 Portals
10 Word of sorrow
14 Excellent
15 Cove
16 Ear section
17 Silent
18 Landscape
19 Boxing match
20 Gorilla
22 Occupants
24 Notable period
25 Certain jellied garnish
26 Grower of vegetables
30 Reduced the speed
34 Pub drink
35 Frighten
37 Rub out
38 Distance measure
40 Les — Unis
42 Abstract being
43 Happening
45 Serpent
47 Danson or Turner
48 Certain dog
50 Shines
52 Elevate
54 — and order
55 Decorative trinket
58 Man-made channels
62 Amount of space
63 Furniture piece
65 Changing star
66 Fasting season
67 Plumed bird
68 Ireland
69 Whirlpool
70 Peruses
71 Strike out

© 1996 Tribune Media Services, Inc.
All rights reserved.

DOWN
1 Vacation spot
2 Time of day
3 Against
4 Judged
5 Extent of place
6 Single time
7 Mexican cheer
8 Leases
9 Soaks
10 Tuna
11 Diving bird
12 Lean against 13 Matched collections
21 God of war
23 Egyptian waterway
25 Put in order
26 Monopoly and rummy, e.g.
27 Existing 28 Lease again
29 Dines
31 Squander
32 German city
33 Heroic actions
36 And others: Lat. abbr.
39 Plea
41 Frying pans
44 Duck
46 Son of Isaac
49 Uprising participant

ANSWERS

51 Braided
53 Actor's milieu
55 Bundle
56 Angered
57 Flex
58 Luge
59 Center
60 Wicked
61 Sensible
64 Bikini top

Buy * Sell * Trade

New, Used &
Collectibles
Cassettes, CD's,
Records

The Other Record Shop

2131 E. Broadway, Maryville,
TN 37804
(located in the Bi-Lo Shopping Center)

Trade For New Releases
977-9959

MC Student Special

$1.00 off
purchase w/ flyer

ATTENTION SENIORS!

Be sure to sign up for the free five-course meal to be served on Mar. 4, 6-8:30pm, Proffitt Dining Room. An Aladdin representative will be on hand to enlighten you on the points of "Dining Etiquette".
Hurry!
Accommodations for 36
only!

Correction

The Echo staff would like to offer its sincerest apologies to Larry Ervin for errors made in last weeks article on the Gospel Jamboree. We misprinted Ervin's last name as "Irvin." We also stated that Ervin had sung in the Berea College Black Music Ensemble under the direction of Dr. Kathy Bullock, when in fact Ervin directed the ensemble for three years while he was attending school at Berea.

Spring Workshops Career Services

Resume Writing:

Thurs. Apr. 3 1:00pm
Mon. Apr. 21 3:00pm

Job Searching:

Mon. Mar. 10 1:00pm
Mon. Apr. 7 3:00pm
Wed. Apr. 30 1:00pm

Interviewing:

Thurs. Mar. 6 1:00pm
Wed. Apr. 23 3:00pm

Graduate School

Wed. Mar. 19 3:00pm
Thurs. Apr. 17 1:00pm

Choosing a Major:

Tues. Apr. 1 3:00pm
Workshops are in the Faculty Lounge, 2nd floor Fayerweather.

Activities Calendar

Tuesday, Mar. 4

11 a.m. CCM: Worship Service
2 p.m. BB vs Sewanee-Away
6 p.m. MC: wall climb

Wednesday, Mar. 5

6 p.m. MC: wall climb

Thursday, Mar. 6

11 a.m. FACM: Community Forum
12:30 p.m. Senate Mtg. CCM
1 p.m. FAYL: CS-interviewing
6 p.m. MC: wall climb

Friday, Mar. 7

FACM: Jr/Sr Recital

Saturday, Mar. 8

2 p.m. SB vs Union Coll-Away
FACM: Sr Comp Recital
MC: Cave

Sunday, Mar. 9

1 p.m. BB vs VA Wesleyan-HOME

Monday, Mar. 10

1 p.m. FAYL: CS-Job Searching
2 p.m. BB vs VA Wesleyan-HOME
8:30 p.m. FACM: SPB $1 Movie--"Ransom"

Foothills Cinema

Star Wars PG T-M 4:30, 7:05, 9:35
Scream R T-M 4:20, 9:35
Beautician & the Beast PG T-M
1:50, 7:15
Dante's Peak PG13 T-M 4:35,
7:05, 9:50
That Darn Cat PG T-R 5:30,
7:30, F-R 1:30, 7:30
Absolute Power R T-R 4:40, 7:15,
9:45, F-R 4:40, 9:45
Vegas Vacation PG T-M 5:30,
7:35, 9:35
Fools Rush In PG13 T-R 9:40
Empire Strikes Back PG T-M
4:00, 7:00, 9:45
English Patient R T-R 5:00, 8:30
Marvin's Room PG13 T-M 5:25,
7:30, 9:35
Jungle to Jungle PG T-M 2:00,
4:30, 7:00, 9:30
Howard Stern's Private Parts R
2:15, 4:45, 7:15, 9:45
Midnight shows also, call 977-4499.
$3.75 admission until 5:30 and $5.75 after, $3.75 for children anytime.

Downs defends Rodman

by David Downs
Columnist

Hey boys and girls, it's me again...Dr. Feelgood with another intriguing mindset. I hope everyone is enjoying this weather. My final conclusion is that we live somewhere between Dante's "Inferno" and reruns of "Mr. Roger's Neighborhood."

Now, to the subject at hand. I would like to introduce all of you youngsters to a close personal friend of mine (okay, maybe not an actual friend of mine, but, hey, we can all dream can't we?) This person is the notorious bad boy of the NBA; the rebounding king that sits upon his dignified throne; the freak of the Western world; Madonna's boy toy; the cameraman-kicking, Chicago Bull tattooed, earring wearing, colored hair role model of small children everywhere. Just walk into the mall anytime and count the Rodman jerseys. Yes, I am speaking of Dennis Rodman!

Now let's get past the camera incident, the fact that Madonna wanted to bear his child (read about the Material Girl in his new book), his infamous night with Toni Braxton (HE IS THE LUCKIEST MAN ALIVE), and basically his freakish, scary (for some) attire. What intrigues me the most is his persistent goal of being the best that he can be.

A year and a half ago, Rodman was facing a situation that happens to thousands of Americans—unemployment. The San Antonio Spurs did not want his playing efforts anymore due to his antics on and off the court. Rodman was in the hole financially and basically was at a point in his life when most people would just give up and take the quickest job they could find at McDonald's. Most NBA teams were scared of him due to these antics on-court, like fights with other players, temper tantrums with referees, and basically a blatant disregard for other teammates. The problem did not only lie with Rodman. How can you play for a team when the other players that are supposedly your teammates slam you constantly on and off the court (hint: David Robinson). The aspect that these teammates failed to miss is that Rodman has been one of the best defensive players in the league since his days with the other bad boys (Detroit Pistons), when they won numerous NBA Championships, and that he has led the league in rebounds for...hell, it's too many years to count.

Now let's make a comparison—since trading Dennis Rodman for Will Perdue and other players to the Bulls (big loss, Chicago), the Spurs failed to make the playoffs last season and appear to be heading in the same direction again this season. The Bulls...one NBA Championship, a 72 win season (the best ever in the NBA), and another rebounding title, not to mention a horde of media attention and more excitement for an NBA team in years thanks to Michael Jordan's prosperous return and a man that has more hair colors than a box of crayons (we're talking about those big crayon boxes)...have obviously been successful. The scary thing is that the Bulls this season are currently one game off their record from this time last year.

Okay, I'll admit, Rodman is a freak of society. And yes, maybe he does crave attention. But why shouldn't he. He grew up in the slums, went to a small college that most people have never even heard of, and went on to become one of the greatest players in NBA history. As far as the All-Star game and the fact that he wasn't present to take his role on a team that features the best in the NBA, I say screw them, Dennis. For once in history, there is an individual who stays true to himself, is not afraid to show his emotion (watch Oprah's special with him), and plays a game that millions would love to be able to play just because he loves the game. To me, Dennis Rodman represents the best in society—individuality. As far as his future, his days in the NBA will come to an end, so I say, DENNIS FOR PRESIDENT. He can't do any worse than what we already have, right? This is Dr. Feelgood with yet another brilliant effort on the radical evolution of society. Long Live the Rodman.

Chapter V: The Empire Strikes Back

by Bo McMichael
Columnist

On Jan. 31, 1997, the world was reintroduced to a galaxy far, far away. Now it is Feb. 21, 1997, and the world has spent three weeks watching a new version of "Star Wars." "The Empire Strikes Back" is even better.

I was seven years old when Han Solo was frozen, and Luke lost his hand to Darth Vader. I can vaguely remember how unhappy I felt leaving the theater on that bright Saturday afternoon. I just wanted everything to be okay. Now, 15 years later, I watched the Empire crush the Rebels on the Hoth Planet and chase the Millennium Falcon all the way to Cloud City. As I left the theater, I still felt for Chewie, Leia, Lando, and Luke; however, I knew what was going to happen and enjoyed it even more.

"The Empire Strikes Back" is recognized as the best film out of the three movie saga. I will not try to argue that. The reasoning is our characters are grown up, and so are we. Han and Luke have formed a special bond, and Leia has become more of a person than a princess. However, the most in-depth scenes have to do with Yoda. The spiritual and religious overtones give "The Empire Strikes Back" a totally different climate than "Star Wars" or "Return of the Jedi."

The only new additions are the Wampa on the Hoth Planet and a more exciting Cloud City,

Polly's "good answer"

Dear Polly:

Please get my parents off my back! Each time I go home it's like the Spanish Inquisition! (insert Monty Python sound effects here) I consider myself agnostic, and my parents are devout Christians. I'm comfortable with my current state of mind, but how do I deal without totally alienating them? Their religion plays a part in every aspect of their lives, and I can't seem to carry on even a normal conversation without this becoming a huge issue.

Signed, Damned in Davis

Dearest Damned:

I'll try to answer this as best I can. Remember, we're in the Bible Belt: conversational taboos are exes, religion, and politics, but folks can be gabby on just about any other topic, as long as it's the Vols.

It's never easy to be a true individual. It's often difficult for very religious people to see others' perspectives objectively. Your parents are concerned for you because they view you as a lost lamb and probably blame themselves for your having strayed. They're worried that they went wrong somewhere. I'm assuming you were brought up in church and have since developed your own ideas about spirituality. I must commend you, not on rejecting Christianity, but on finding your own vision and following your heart. Very often it's difficult to question what we've been taught especially when a certain belief is deeply entrenched in a community.

Your parents just need some time to adjust to your new freedom and the opinions that come with that. You'll have to deal with the fact they'll probably never give up on trying to bring you back to the fold (along with converting all your friends), but they will eventually see you as an autonomous adult if you deal with your disagreements in a mature and respectful manner. Diffusing theological bombs is never easy; however, if you don't purposefully provoke your parents into heated debates, they should eventually come to respect your views.

Something my mom does that used to infuriate me is to tell me that she is praying for me. "I'm not worried; you'll eventually come around," she'll say with a cheesy, less-than-convincing, Kathy Lee Gifford permagrin. "You just have too many people praying for you!" When all I want is a little motherly advice! But I've come to see, in her mind, this is the most important and considerate thing she can do for me. Of course I know she's still freaking out over my soul, but I'm not afraid to die. I'm a good person, and so are you. Your parents know you are, but they feel just as strongly about their convictions as you do yours. Hopefully you can appreciate that they are trying to look after you through their Heavenly Father and don't mean any harm. My recommendation is to be patient. As long as you're not sacrificing baby doves to your roommate's Tickle-Me-Elmo, the tension should ease.

Something I've learned is that great religions seem to have many common themes. In my opinion, no one faith has a monopoly on Goodness and Light. I thank [insert deity] for that because so many of my spiritual, but non-traditionally religious friends have cups overflowing with goodies from above.

Love, Sister Mary Polly
*Send your letters to Polly to box 2247.

which I especially liked. "The Empire Strikes Back" is an enjoyable ride.

Announcements of nominations for the 69th Annual Academy Awards have been made. However, only one major studio made the final cut. "Jerry Maguire" wrapped up five nominations—best picture, best actor—Tom Cruise, and best supporting actor—Cuba Gooding Jr. Other nominations went to the independent film maker. "The English Patient," "Fargo," "Shine," and "Secrets & Lies" were just a few of the films that were also nominated.

You have plenty of time to cast your ballots as the films re-enter the theaters for a last ditch chance to swing votes.

It's time to admit our mistakes

by Dave Barry

You can say what you want about us newspaper journalists. You can say that we are atheistic, liberal, family-hating, snake-worshipping, communist perverts. You can say that we dress like the character Ratso in the 1969 movie "Midnight Cowboy" and apparently have our hair styled by angry wrens. But the one thing you CAN'T say about us is that we don't admit our mistakes.

Yes, we have made some "doozies." Everyone remembers the famous 1948 picture of Harry Truman holding up a copy of the "Chicago Tribune" with a huge front-page headline declaring DEWEY DEFEATS TRUMAN. But what people DON'T remember is that the very next day, "The Tribune" corrected that error with a front-page headline declaring DEWEY DEFEATS COOLIDGE.

That is the high standard of accuracy to which we hold ourselves. And that is why, today, I want to correct a statement that I made in a recent column about a police officer in a Finnish city called Espoo who invented a harpoon for cars.

In that column, I stated that Finland is also known as "Norway." Shortly thereafter, I received dozens of letters, and do you know what they said? That's right: I may already have won $10 million!

But I also received a lot of letters, some of them quite angry in tone, stating that Finland is NOT also known as "Norway." A typical statement came from Patty Young, who wrote: "Though Finland and Norway are both within Europe, they are two individual countries." Another writer, Elizabeth Natti, noted that "Finland was the only foreign country that paid off its World War I debt to the United States." She also took issue with my suggestion that the civic motto of espoo should be "The City That Sounds Like A Person spitting." She states that "there is no 'Pe' sound in the Finnish alphabet," and therefore "Espoo" is pronounced "Es-BOO."

So I wish to sincerely apologize and issue the following corrections;

1. Finland is NOT also known as "Norway." Finland is, in fact, also known as "Sweden."

2. The civic motto of Espoo should be "The City That Sounds Like A Person Barfing."

3. None of this should be construed in any way as a criticism of Neil Diamond.

Now that we've cleared that up, let's get to the real purpose of this column, which is an alarming medical discovery that was made during Valentine Season by alert reader S. Scott Hanan, M.D., a family practitioner who apparently has (1) access to medical research materials, and (2) a lot of spare time.

Dr. Hanan's discovery, which he backs up with six pages of diagrams from medical books, is that—prepare to be shocked—the human heart is NOT shaped like the valentine-style "heart" that is used in candy boxes, cartoons, tattoos and the signatures of women named "Brandi." By way of proof, Dr. Hanan sent a medical diagram of a human heart; it looks like a member of the mollusk family. Right next to this diagram, for comparison purposes, Dr. Hanan who notes, "I am a medical doctor, and therefore more than qualified to comment on such matters," has drawn a standard valentine "heart" and written "I DON'T THINK SO!"

And that is not all. Dr. Hanan has also reviewed the medical literature to see if any human organ IS shaped like a valentine. He found one: It is the PROSTATE GLAND. He enclosed several prostate diagrams, and there can be no medical doubt: It's a dead ringer.

This discovery has MAJOR implications, and not just for people who play bridge ("I bid three prostates"). It also means that there are thousands, perhaps millions, of hairy men walking around with the word "Mom" tattooed on a picture of a prostate gland. But the biggest impact has to be on the greeting-card industry, which I imagine will have to recall the billions of prostate cards it has sold over the years.

In an effort to gauge the extent of this crisis, I called the Hallmark greeting-card company, which is located in Missouri (also known as "Kansas"). I spoke with spokesperson Allison Novela and told her about the heart/prostate situation. She checked into it, and, a short while later, she called back to read this statement, which I am not making up:

"The doctor is correct about the shape of the human heart. However, Hallmark decided to sacrifice accuracy for sales after the poor performance of the following verse:

Valentine, I'd follow you clear 'cross state,

For you to hold the key to my prostate."

So that settles that. All that remains to be done now is for whoever is in charge of these things to send Dr. Hanan his Nobel Prize and a large cash award. Speaking of which, I have this important announcement for those nations that have not yet paid off their World War I debts to the United States: It's NOT too late! Send the money to me, and I assure you that will be the end of it.

(C)1997 THE MIAMI HERALD
DISTRIBUTED BY TRIBUNE MEDIA SERVICES, INC

Seize the day?

by Sarah Christians
Copy Editor

I heard a story last night that nearly made me cry. A friend told the story to me and a few other people, and most of them reacted the same way. He told a story about a man who worked the controls at a drawbridge over a large river. In addition to freight and transport ships, party boats full of revelers frequented the river. One evening, the control man took his young son to work with him. We all remember going to work with dad from our youth. We remember what fun it was to be in the new environment, to find new things to play with and places to play in, and especially, to get to spend more time with him. Well, the son decided that exploring was what he had in mind for the evening; dad has brought me here so that I might have an adventure. The father, knowing that a drawbridge over a large river is not a safe place for a child, continually coaxed his son back inside the control room. Then, as is like to happen, one of the cruise ships, full of merrymaking, came into view. The father, doing his job, began to raise the drawbridge. Then he noticed his son was not in the control room with him. He rushed out—the drawbridge still rising slow—and called for his son. He heard a small weak voice coming from the gearshift, under the control room. The father rushed over, looked down into the shaft, and saw his son hanging on a cog that was about to lock into a sprocket to continue lifting the bridge. Of course, his first instinct was to stop the bridge and save his son. Then he realized that the cruise ship was too close. If he stopped it, the ship would crash into the bridge, and everyone on board, too many people to count, would be killed. So the father spent his young son's last minutes telling him that he loved him and trying to keep him calm. Of course, the boy was crushed to death, the father was heartbroken, and the partiers went on into the night, never knowing how close they came to death.

It's quite a story. But I transcribed it here not to give campus new Humanities 349 fodder, but to ask if the story sounds somewhat familiar. Is this the first time you've heard a story about a caring, loving father sacrificing his son so that unsuspecting people could live on and go about their lives? I write this to make you think about how important that "father" is, what his "son" died for, and how you fit into the story. Hint: you're an unsuspecting partier, concerned with carpe diem.

The Highland Echo

The weekly voice of Maryville College - Founded 1914

VOL. LXXXII, NO. 10

Tuesday, March 11, 1997

502 East Lamar Alexander Pkwy, Maryville, TN 37604

Many MC2000 goals met; more to come

by Sarah Christians
Copy Editor

"This is one of those approaches to the future that is somewhat methodical and yet exciting..." said Dr. Gerald Gibson, Maryville College president. MC is progressing excellently toward the goals set forth in the MC 2000 plan.

The goals set fall under 11 specific headings: Reputation, Enrollment, Students, Faculty, Staff, Curriculum, Financial Resources, Campus Facilities, College Community, the College in the External Community, and a College of Faith and Learning.

In each category, the goals set have either been exceeded as planned for 1996-7 or maintained.

In the Reputation category, the first goal of the college is to "have a concise, clear and specific message which accurately portrays its distinctive features and serves as its marketing theme." Since 1994, MC has improved on this goal, especially in important U.S. News & World Report rankings. MC has been designated in the top-five position among southern liberal arts college for its "unusually strong commitment to undergraduate teaching." Also, since 1994, MC has risen from 18th in academic reputation to a top ten position in each of the following three years.

It is obvious that MC is reaching its enrollment goals. Fall 1996 set a record enrollment of 927 students.

The first goal in the Student heading details specific goals for the incoming freshman class, with 70 percent drawn from the top 25 percent of their graduating high school classes and with test scores 15 percent above the national average. This fall, 67 percent of freshmen were in the top 25 percent of their graduating class and had ACT scores 14 percent above the national average.

Faculty goals include "... enthusiasm for liberal education; a variety of outlooks, experiences, and backgrounds; strong motivation for a career in teaching; genuine concern for students; and a commitment to collegiality." Details of faculty achievements toward these goals include such awards of excellence as 11 development grants in the past two years and two-thirds participation in professional group activities.

Staff goals for MC 2000 outline a model staff dedicated to total student education. Nine staff members participated in the first annual Liberal Arts Institute held in June 1996.

The new curriculum is the most obvious example of the Curriculum goals. The

Cont. on p. 2

Shepherd elected to senate

Sophomore Adam Shepherd was elected the new commuter senator on Tuesday, Mar. 4 by 28 of the 70 commuters voting.

"I'm looking forward to serving the senate and working with the other senators for the good of our constituents," said Shepherd.

Shepherd is taking the seat vacated by Matt Webb, a senior commuter who is interning in Washington, D.C.

Shepherd's opponents, Emily McLemore, Michael Templeton, and Josh Wade received 12, 23, and 7 votes.

Shepherd is a music major, a member of the Maryville College Concert Choir, and a columnist for The Highland Echo.

Emily Brock, chair of the election committee, and Yosef Addis, commuter senator, planned the Mar. 3-4 election.

"I'm very excited and happy with the voter turnout," said Addis.

photo by Kelli Jennett

Humanities Div. Chair Dr. Susan Schneibel serves Senior Ron Moore at the senior etiquette dinner.

MC theatre presents "Heidi Chronicles"

by Rissa Miller
Reporter

A dance, a protest march, a rap session, and a wedding. What binds this odd assortment of events? One woman, a baby boomer, who is struggling to find her place in the world. These events are found in Wendy Wasserstein's play, "The Heidi Chronicles." This hilarious, moving, prize-winning play will be presented by Maryville College Theatre Thursday, Mar. 13 -15, at 8 p.m. in the MC Playhouse. This play traces the coming of age of art historian Heidi Holland. Wasserstein's play not only describes the life of a woman during the '60's, '70's, and '80's, but also the experiences and roles of many men and women born into the "baby boom generation."

"The Heidi Chronicles" was first presented in New York City on Dec. 12, 1988. On Mar. 9, 1989, it was moved to the Plymouth Theatre on Broadway. During 1989, Heidi received the Pulitzer Prize for drama, the Hull-Warner Antoinette Perry Award (Tony) for best play, and the award for best new play from the New York Drama Critics' Circle. Mel Gussow of the New York Times said,

"[Wasserstein] has been exceedingly watchful about not settling for easy laughter, and the result is a more penetrating play." Recalling numerous attempts to approach the theme of "The Heidi Chronicles" by several other playwrights, Linda Winer of Newsday told the Los Angeles Times, "Somebody finally got it right."

"Heidi is a modern day baby boomer 'every woman,'" said Director Dr. Jill Stapleton-Bergeron, "especially for my own generation of women who grew up in the politically repressive fifties and came of age in the 60's and '70's. Our production examines the social climate of the latter half of the twentieth century in a way that is what I hope will reveal the turmoil, pathos and satiric humor of our time." To help create a feeling for the '60's, '70's, and '80's, a series of slides will reveal events during each decade as a backdrop to simple and quickly moving scenery. Craze and fads experienced in these decades, including music, fashion, and pastimes, make the scene changes an integral part of the production.

Playing Heidi Holland will

Cont. on p. 3

Inside

Community Forum...	2
Senate.....	2
MACCO.....	3
Basketball.....	4
Calendar.....	5
Adam on Politics.....	7
Dave Barry.....	8

Highlights

News.....	2,3
Sports.....	4
Classifieds/DRB.....	5
Features.....	6
Op/Ed.....	7,8

Senate discusses humanities club, J-board, activity fee

by Sherrie Brents
Reporter

Student senate held its ninth meeting on Mar. 6. Topics of conversation were the Humanities Club, selection guidelines for the Judiciary Boards, and the student activity fee.

Sara Baker, Davis Hall senator, sponsored a proposal on behalf of the Humanities Club. The proposal requested the allocation of $100. The money is to be added to $207 that the club already has. The total of $307 will be used for various reasons. The Susan B. Anthony reenactment will be $100, refreshments for the event will be an additional $100. The remaining $100 will be used as an honorarium for guest speaker Dr. Pat Craddock. The proposal passed without opposition.

Three proposals pertaining to revised selection processes for the judiciary boards were sponsored by Joy Bailey, sophomore senator, and Smith Jean-Philippe, freshman senator. The proposal regarding Judicial Board selection requires 12 members to serve continuously. The applicants will file an application with the recommendation from three faculty or staff members. Each application would go to a review committee, and applicants' disciplinary records would be checked. There will be two members from each class, four members-at-large, and three alternates. The proposal for the Disciplinary Review Board requires the Chief Justice, Assistant Resident Hall Coordinators, and the Assistant Dean of Students to work together to assure that representatives from the residents halls are selected within the first week of classes, and the commuter representative within the second week of classes. The proposal for Chief Justice requires each applicant to file an application with the Assistant Dean of Students and be elected by the Joint Senates. All three proposals passed without objection.

Two senior class officers, Kerry O'Keefe and Adam Ray, presented a proposal for the activity fee. The proposal retained $15 of the original $25 used to fund the fitness center. This is not an additional cost over last year, but a retention of funds that were used to create the fitness room. The money would be used to fund the student work used in the fitness center, as well as mirrors, an ab roller, athletic mats, dumbbells, and a dumbbell rack. Also, $9,430 would be used to start the Maryville College Fitness Center endowment. The interest from the endowment would be used to cover the costs of maintaining the fitness center. This is a five year plan, and the cost to students would decrease each year for five years. The proposal passed by a vote of 12-0, with one abstention.

Senators Yosef Addis and Nathan Anderson sponsored a proposal to retain the remaining $10 of what used to be the funding for the fitness room. Again, this is not an added cost over last year, but it is the remaining $10 that was used to fund the fitness room. Of the $10, $8 will go to fund an on-campus movie channel. The channel will have twelve movies per month and enable campus organizations to air announcements on the channel. The remaining $2 will go towards a commuter fund, that can be used to pay for commuter activities. The proposal was tabled for further discussion in a senate meeting to be held on Mar. 13. An Open forum to discuss the proposal with students is scheduled for Mar. 11 at 6 p.m. in the Center for Campus Ministries.

The beginning of the meeting brought the announcement that Adam Shepherd is the new commuter senator. The meeting ended with the announcement that student senate sponsored free admittance to the NCAA basketball game to the first hundred students.

Orthodoxy and heresy

by Shannon Bryant
Reporter

What comes to your mind when you think of the medieval church? To most of us, this institution is an icon of intolerance and brutality. However, in his recent Maryville College Community Forum lecture, Dr. Michael Frassetto of La Grange College claims that this horrific concept is a "partial image at best." In Frassetto's scholarly opinion, the medieval church had "a fluidity and flexibility" most people do not appreciate.

So, why does modern culture stereotype the medieval church as a "monolithic" institution? Frassetto cited modern films such as The Hunchback of Notre Dame and Monty Python's Search for the Holy Grail as pop culture's symbols of the religious currents present in the Middle Ages. In addition, Frassetto stated that some of the overpowering images in medieval history may prevent a more realistic view.

For example, he called upon memories of the Crusades, "the church militant," Gothic cathedrals, and the Spanish Inquisition which evoke a negative generalization of the medieval church. However, he added that many people neglect the presence of such figures as Saint Francis of Assisi in their estimation of medieval religion.

Finally, Frassetto called attention to the fact that the so-called "heretics" of this time were slowly accepted into the church. These factions which left the formal church because of the blatant corruption of religious leaders were able to change the church for the better. In Frassetto's opinion, this denotes the same "fluidity and flexibility" which is missed by most historians. Truly, the Medieval church holds many lessons for today's society: a group of courageous believers can change what seems set in centuries of stone.

"MC2000" cont. from p. 1

class of 2000 will appropriately be the first class to graduate under this distinct general education curriculum.

The Financial Resources goals have been met continually since 1994. Fiscal Year 1996 was the eighth consecutive year of operation in the black, and the endowment has grown to $19 million.

In the ever-important Campus Facilities section, the most obvious achievement is the construction of the Beeson residence village. In addition, however, Gibson said, "We have made plans for...refurbishing all the older dormitories. This means new furniture, new carpets, new lighting..."

Progress in the College Community section includes the expansions and improvements of Fayerweather Hall as an interim student center until the completion of the Bartlett Hall complex. The success of the Bradford Scholar program established success for the goals for the College in the External Community. Among the goals achieved as a College of Faith and Learning, MC has maintained covenants with the Presbytery of East Tennessee and Synod of Living Waters.

MC is well on its way to achieving the tremendous goals set by the MC 2000 plan. "I'm pleased we've made the progress we've made and look forward to continuing on through the year 2000," said Gibson.

The Highland Echo
Editor

Sarah H. West

Production Editor

Patrick E. Leslie

Copy Editor

Sarah Christians

Sports Editor

Joe Malheiro

Staff Writers

Sherrie Brents, Tonya Briggs, Shannon Bryant, Joey Cody, David Downs, Dave Dupont, Chuck Gilkey, Brian Hastings, Andy Hoover, Kristi Johnson, Lori Leffel, Caroline Leggett, Andy Long, LaToyia Lundy, Bo McMichaels, Rissa Miller, Kazu Nakane, Dallas Rightmeyer, Sun-Im Ryu, Kim Schuenemann, Michelle Shuler, Adam Shepherd, Christi Stalans, and Traci Tidwell

Public Relations
Coordinator

Michelle Shuler

Photo Staff

Keli Jennett and
Jenny Oxford

Cartoonists

Carl Gombert

Faculty Advisor

Jeff Gary

Please send letters to the editor, comments, suggestion, or story leads to box #2247.

Phone
981-8176

E-Mail
Swest75@aol.com

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 500 words.

photo by Keli Jennett

Business Vice President Ron Appuhn serves seniors Lucy Alexander and Becky Heckler at the senior etiquette dinner.

MACCO showcase successful

by David Dupont
Reporter

On Mar. 3, at 8 p.m., the Maryville-Alcoa College-Community Orchestra (MACCO) put on another successful show in Wilson Chapel. This concert was the orchestra's annual Showcase of Area Artists, in which solo performers are chosen by audition.

Un-Jin Kim played the thrilling Piano Concerto in A minor, Op. 16 by Grieg. Anthony Pierce performed Cello Concerto in E minor, Op. 85 by Elgar. Kent Kennan's contemporary "Night Soliloquy," performed by MACCO flutist Judy Megibow was an interesting addition to the traditional program. Before intermission, Katy Wolfe Zahn, soprano, performed two arias by Puccini from "Gianni Schicci" and "Turandot."

In the second half of the concert, Bryan Tramel led the way with a French Horn Concerto No. 4, by Mozart. The UT Saxophone Quartet played the "Brilliant" movement of DuBois' Concertino for Four Saxophones. As a finale, the orchestra performed the fourth move-

More money spent on prisons than colleges

By College Press Service
WASHINGTON—More money is spent on prisons than colleges, says the Justice Policy Institute.

From 1987 to 1995, spending on state prisons rose 30 percent while higher education funding fell 18 percent, according to JPI, a research justice center.

"These findings prove that, in the funding battle between prisons and universities, prisons are consistently coming out on top," said JPI director Vincent Schiraldi, who co-authored the report with Tara-Jen Ambrosio.

In 1995, state spending on prison construction increased by $926-million to $2.6 billion nationwide, while construction funds for higher education dropped $954 million to $2.5 billion.

The study noted that such ment of Symphony No. 8 in G major by Dvorak.

According to Sarah Christians, sophomore french horn player, "the showcase concert was extraordinary. I was very impressed with all the performers."

The MACCO concert has a strong tradition of excellence. This orchestra is a very talented group of musicians of all ages from the Maryville-Alcoa area.

funds are discretionary, so state officials must choose whether to fund construction for prisons or universities.

The authors argue that stiffer sentences send too many non-violent offenders to already overcrowded jails, at a cost to higher education.

"It is apparent that the current criminal-justice policies are far-reaching and expensive to implement," says the JPI report. "Now, state legislatures are forced to cut the budgets of other vital programs, such as higher education, in order to construct more prisons."

The report also found that it cost taxpayers about $22,000 to $25,000 each year to incarcerate a prisoner. That's roughly the tuition at the nation's most expensive private colleges.

BOUJi'S

MARYVILLE'S

MOST HAPPENING COFFEEHOUSE IS NOW OPEN!

ESPRESSO CAPPUCCINO LATTE STEAMERS

BAGELS CROISSANTS PASTRIES
ETC. ETC. ETC.

*Always Fresh
Always Delicious*

Live music (call for schedule)

Jazzberry General
205 Court Street
Phone: 984-0391

HOURS
7A.M.-7P.M. MON-THURS
7A.M.-11P.M. FRIDAY
10A.M.-11P.M. SATURDAY
IF YOU WANT SUNDAYS
LET US KNOW!!

Directions: Take a right at the Court Street Exit and drive till you see us!

"Heidi" cont. from p. 1

be Sarah Stevenson, with Eric Obermiller as her long-time hearthrob Scoop. Russell Groff and Tiffany Rudicil will portray Peter and Susan, Heidi's best friends. The women Heidi comes into contact with during her personal evolution will be portrayed by Sara Baker, Amy Brewer, Shannon Bryant, Mandy Goodwin, Karson Leitch, Becky Lill, Rissa Miller and Jennie Taylor. The roles of Chris, Mark, and Ray will be played by Bo McMichael. Alan Reihl is the productions' technical director and stage manager is Todd Smith, assisted by J. McFetridge. Other technical positions are filled by Teresa Ray, Nathan Zumwalt, Barbara Milton, and Heather Devilbiss.

Tickets will be available at the door and all seating is general admission. Adult price is $7.50. Tickets for area students, college students with current ID, and Senior Citizens (60 and over) are $5.00 each. Any tickets purchased by Maryville College Faculty or Staff will cost $5.00. Maryville College students will be admitted free upon presentation of college ID. Due to strong language and adult situations, parental guidance is advised. Please call 981-8161 for further information.

The Chillhowean

is now accepting photos for the yearbook. Please put your name and box number on the back. List those in the photo, and event, on a separate sheet of paper. Submit photos to box 2784. Questions? Please call 8769.

Also, The Chillhowean is accepting any artwork, photos, or drawings for the yearbook. Please submit your talent to box 2784 or 2080. Questions? Please call 8769 or 8722.

Fighting Scots fall to Bridgewater, 62-64

by Joe Malheiro
Reporter

In the first round NCAA tournament game held at MC, the Scots gave all they had, but came up two points short of advancing to the second round.

Led in scoring by Junior Jason Poag with 19 points, the Scots seemed to be in control with a commanding 34-26 half-time lead. But the second half proved to be a disaster for the young Scots, falling behind quickly as Bridgewater exploded in route to an 8-0 scoring run to open the first 1:33 of the second half.

Scots Coach Randy Lambert signaled his crew to take a time-out which helped to stem the scoring run by Bridgewater. After appearing to get back on track, holding a firm five point lead for a good portion of the second half, the Scots came unglued in the last several minutes.

Sophomore Spencer Beaty, whose nine points helped the Scots keep the score close, hit a fade away jumper in the last minute, which would prove to be the Scots' final basketball game. After two missed shot opportunities inside the final minute, the Scots' defense broke down with the score 62-62. Bridgewater drove to the basket with seven seconds remaining, hitting a jumper with 1.7 seconds on the clock, giving them a 64-62 lead.

The Scots made the best of the final 1.7 seconds, as Spencer Beaty inbounded the ball to Senior Dee Bell at mid-court, where Bell immediately called time-out, leaving .8 seconds on the clock.

Michael Danzey's three point shot attempt with .8 seconds left came up short, giving Bridgewater the win and a place in the second round of the tournament, playing the winner of the Sewanee/Rust game.

Peyton Manning: the role model

by Joe Malheiro
Reporter

I know, by now everybody is tired of hearing about the Peyton Manning decision to stay at the University of Tennessee, so I promise that this will be the only thing you ever read about it in the Echo.

Regardless of the media coverage, all of the hype, and the basic pandemonium over this spectacle, this decision was truly important and extraordinary.

Peyton

Manning, a young man, who is not much older or younger than any of us, was faced with what will certainly be one of the most crucial decisions of his life. should he forgo his senior year of eligibility and take the millions of dollars awaiting him in the National Football League, or should he return to the University of Tennessee for what will be his final season in a Volunteer uniform, possibly to fulfill his childhood dream of quarterbacking a team to a national cham-

Not only does this remarkable decision speak volumes for the character of a young man who is not even 21 years old, it also gives children and other young people, a positive role model to look up to. With Northwestern's Darnell pionship, and earning himself a Hiesman trophy.

Regardless of the media coverage, all of the hype, and the basic pandemonium over this spectacle, this decision was truly important and extraordinary.

To the many people in the world who don't care much for sports, this decision was something that was seemingly blown out of proportion. However, in a time when most college athletes are leaving school early to go after the tremendous financial benefits of professional athletics, Peyton Manning made a very refreshing choic.

Instead of becoming a millionaire, and a possible number one pick in this year's NFL draft, Peyton Manning chose to return to UT, and enroll in graduate school, even with the possibility of injury next season, and the chance of a mediocre statistical season which could hurt his position in next year's draft.

Autry and Ohio State's Orlando Pace entering this year's NFL draft as underclassmen.

Some may see Peyton Manning as being a fool for risking a very promising career. But, as he's done since he stepped foot on the UT campus, Peyton Manning made a first class decision, to go along with his first class reign as king of UT football.

Yesterday, as I was driving home from Knoxville, I spotted a billboard that simply read: "THANK YOU PEYTON!"

Though some might find it to be ridiculous, I couldn't have said it better myself. THANK YOU PEYTON, for your effort, kind heart, good intentions, leadership, and sensibility.

Coach Regrets Remark

by College Press
Service

TOWSON, Md.—A basketball coach who started a campus controversy when he referred to his team as "my plantation" has apologized.

In a written statement, Goucher College coach Leonard Trevino called the remark "in poor taste and unprofessional."

The comment, made during a practice in December, prompted a campus discussion on racism.

Nearly 150 students gathered at a forum Feb. 26 to discuss the coach's remark and other alleged racial incidents at Goucher.

Several students also wore black and held up signs denouncing racism at a Feb. 23 basketball game, according to news reports.

CORRECTION

The staff of the Highland Echo would like to apologize for confusing "colonels" with "kernels." Thank you, Dr. Cartlidge, Jim Lummus, Dan Dockery, Dan Hayes, and the rest of you who were so kind to point out the mistake.

PART-TIME JOBS:

Housekeeper/Driver needed for a local woman. Vacuuming, cleaning, possibly some food preparation. Must drive her to grocery store. Flexible schedule twice a week for 2 hrs/day. Pays $8.00/hr. If interested ask about Job 199.

Child Care. Employer would like to interview now for 97-98 school year. $100/week to stay with two children ages 11-13. Close to college. Help with homework if needed, cook dinner, etc. Must have car and references. Job 198.

Pianist needed for New Hopewell Baptist Church. $50-$100 for 2 services a week. Job 197.

HMR Marketing has positions available in Foothills Mall. Approach people and ask them to participate in survey. Pay is between $4-$8 per participant. Hours during the day with some Saturdays. Must be outgoing. Job 182

Birdwell Chiropractic

JOB FAIR!!

Career Services' annual Job Fair will be held on March 13 from 11am-1pm in the PDR. This includes summer, part and full time positions. Diverse types of employment will be represented.

Other Record Shop

Buy * Sell * Trade
New, Used & Collectibles
Cassettes, CD's, Records
2131 E. Broadway, Maryville
(located in the Bi-Lo Shopping Center)

Trade for new releases!

977-9959

Clinic needs a file clerk. $5-5.50/hr. Flex. schedule. No Tuesdays or weekends. Some patient contact for those that will be comfortable with it. Must be outgoing. Start ASAP. Job 195.

First TN Bank has various jobs available. 10-key skills required. $6.00-6.55/hr. Days and hours vary. Full job description in Career Services. Job 196.

Temporary worker needed. Local woman needs someone to help her move some furniture. Also, she needs some yard work done. House is within walking distance. Must be available for two days. Start ASAP. $5.00/hr. Job 200.

SUMMER JOB POSTING

Tennessee Dept. of Agriculture Division of Plant Industries has summer positions for Forestry Aide I - Gypsy Moth Trapping. Positions are in the Scott County area. Duties consist of placing traps, monitoring and reporting data. Must be able to work independently and be proficient in reading maps and use of compass. Monday-Friday 8am-4:30pm. No weekends or holidays. Wage -$942.00/month and mileage reimbursement at $.24/mile within 20 miles of job site. Application deadline is March 31, 1997. More information (including housing info.) available in Career Services.

Interested in a Summer Internship? Stop by Career Services to check out some of the possibilities.

ON-CAMPUS INTERVIEW

NBC Bank will be on campus doing interviews on Thursday April 3, 1997. If you are interested, please stop by Career Services to sign up.

INTEREST LISTS

We are currently taking names of people interested in the possibility of a position or interview with Mass Mutual. Call 8220 or stop by Career Services to sign up.

DRB Report

Jan. 23: one Carnegie student was charged with a violation of the alcohol policy. The charges were dismissed.

Feb. 14: two Davis students were charged with violating visitation and received a warning.

Feb. 19: one student in Anderson was charged with disorderly conduct and harassment, received a warning, and will apologize.

Feb. 25: one Lloyd student and one non-MC student were charged with disorderly conduct and assault, are on probation, and are required to make restitution and attend counseling.

Feb. 26: one MC student and one non-MC student in Gamble were charged with violating the visitation policy. The case is pending.

Feb. 28: one student in Gamble was charged with disorderly conduct. The case is pending.

THE Crossword

ACROSS

- 1 Postal matter
- 5 Theme
- 10 At the end of one's —
- 14 A bone
- 15 Think
- 16 Mr. Kazan
- 17 Denomination
- 18 Food from heaven
- 19 Stiffens
- 20 Safe driving item
- 22 Snub
- 24 Charged particles
- 25 Hastens
- 26 Good luck bringer
- 29 Gangland figures
- 33 Pale
- 34 Muni and McCartney
- 35 Vessel
- 36 — irae
- 37 Literary category
- 38 Bamboo stem
- 39 Fruity drink
- 40 Plaster of —
- 41 Shield
- 42 Describing tin, iron, etc.
- 44 Occupation
- 45 Collition
- 46 Revolve
- 47 CA city
- 50 Like a strong seal
- 54 Lollapalooza
- 55 Components
- 57 Sverve
- 58 Wing-shaped
- 59 Work by Rousseau
- 60 — Domini
- 61 Mind
- 62 Stupefied
- 63 For fear that

DOWN

- 1 Rumble
- 2 Toward shelter
- 3 Peruvian Indian
- 4 Trellisworks
- 5 Instant
- 6 Iridescent gems
- 7 Color
- 8 Public house
- 9 Practicable
- 10 Oppose
- 11 Mr. Cassini
- 12 Essential part
- 13 The Orient
- 21 Blessing
- 23 Minus
- 25 Measures of time
- 26 "—, I'm Adam"
- 27 Stage whisper
- 28 Leaf
- 29 Frenzied
- 30 Sidestep
- 31 Kitchen item
- 32 A bovine
- 34 Hazard
- 37 Went very fast
- 38 Mardi gras, e.g.
- 40 Blueprint
- 41 One of the Simpsons
- 43 Irrational

Activity Briefs

At 11 a.m. on Thursday, Mar. 13, Community Forum will be held in the Fine Arts Center Music Hall. This week's forum will be a reading of Chaucer's "The Miller's Tale" performed with mime.

The 1997 Career Services Job Fair will take place on Thursday, Mar. 13 from 11 a.m. until 1 p.m. in the Profit Dining Room. Employers will be seeking to fill full-time, part-time, summer, and internship positions. Companies participating will be: Camp Nakawana, Inc., Camp Webb Cedar Ridge Camp, Colonia Hills Nursing Center, DeRoy Industries, Easter Seal Soci-

© 1997 Tribune Media Services, Inc. All rights reserved.

ANSWERS

- |                |                    |
|----------------|--------------------|
| 44 Swore at    | 50 A state; abbr.  |
| 46 Name        | 51 Heredity factor |
| 47 Level       | 52 Farm denizens   |
| 48 — the roost | 53 Horse's gait    |
| 49 Ardent      | 56 Drs.' org.      |

ety, Enterprise Rent-a-car, Excell Communications, FBI, Girl Scout Camp Tanasi, Hospitality Franchise Systems, Industrial Equipment Technology, Kelly Scientific Resources, Kings Food Service, Krystal Co., Oak Ridge Schools, Profits, Dept. Store, Staffing Solutions, Talbot's, Target, Tate's Day Camp, UT Employment Services, UT Medical Center, Wesley Woods, YMCA Camp Ocoee, YMCA Camp Pioningo, and Norwest Financial.

Typist Available

Do you need someone to type your papers? Call 984-3639 after 5 p.m., or leave a message.

Spotlight on Overstreet

by Sun-Im Ryu
Reporter

In the office of the Center for English Language Learning, there is always a reliable person who helps international students feel comfortable in this strange place (U.S.A.). Marj Overstreet, office manager at CELL, is just that person.

First, Overstreet handles the correspondence when students request information about CELL or about MC. She sends letters and applications to them and usually does initial processing. Mr. Kelly Franklin, director of CELL, and Overstreet work together on application processing. Frankling accepts the students, and Overstreet keeps records in the computer. Also, she talks to people when they ask for information or want to leave messages for teachers. In addition, she handles health insurance for students by sending the information to the insurance company and helping students fill out forms. Overstreet has met a lot of international students from different countries, so she can understand their plight well. Because she grew up in Hong Kong and her major at Yale University was Chinese Studies, she understands international students and their concerns.

She and her husband, MC English Professor Dr. Sam Overstreet, married in 1978 and lived in Ithaca, New York. They went to China to teach in 1986. Her first year, she taught 400 student freshmen, whose majors were not English, in the University, and in her second year she also taught graduate school students, whose majors were also not English. However, she said, "Teaching in China was not very interesting because I had too many students. Teaching at CELL is much more interesting because classes are small. Teachers meet students every day, so they know students well."

In fact, she taught at CELL and enjoyed it for five years before becoming the office manager. She has done a number of different things throughout her life: bookkeeping, radio announcing, and teaching. The main reasons she stopped teaching were the job demands. She was getting tired quickly and burned out because being a teacher is like being a student having homework every day. She would work every night from about 8 p.m. to 11 p.m. preparing classes for the next day. There was very little time off. She had four weeks time off when she was a CELL teacher. Even though she has two weeks time off now, she is glad to have free time on weekends and evenings.

"The disadvantage of being an office manager is that I don't know students well like grammar teachers do who get to know students well because they have them four hours of class every day or writing teachers who share journals students wrote," said

Overstreet. Right now she is satisfied with her job. She said, "Sometimes, there is too much to do. It is hard to keep up with everything, but I like my job. I like systems, and I like to try to be organized."

This year, she will have been married 19 years, but her husband and she haven't been able to have children. Overstreet wants to adopt children. She said, "Many women stay home a few years when the children are young, even until children get into high school. Maybe when they are 40, they don't know what to do. After their children leave home, they go back to work. Well, I am doing the opposite. I worked the first 20 years." Now she is trying to save money to adopt two girls from China, and she wants to stay home at least for a while. Probably during the summer of 1998, she is going to retire for the rest of her life and be a mother. She said, "It's difficult to do well a lot of different things. I'd like to do one thing well. When I have children, I want to give them all of my attention."

Moreover, she said, "Personally I'm very glad that international students are here at Maryville. Maryville is a very small town, but the international community adds a lot to MC. My husband and I have met many people from different cultures. I feel that in order to have a balanced life, people need to know people from a lot of different cultures."

Advising international students, Overstreet said, "Don't give up. I know it is difficult to study another language, but we have had students who finished the

Bradford remembered for generosity and smiles

by Sherrie Brents
Reporter

Maryville College lost a much-loved member of the community on Feb. 27. Elizabeth Hendley Bradford, or "Lib" as many called her, passed away at her home. Bradford lived a full life and touched the hearts of many. She was a graduate from Converse College, the mother of two, and a former school teacher, and she had served on the executive board of The Daily Times. Bradford was an active member of the community and a great supporter of Maryville College.

Through the Bradford Scholars program, students at MC are given the opportunity to participate in adult literacy programs, such as MCFamilies and the Blount County Jail. Because of the program, many students at MC were blessed to meet and get to know Mrs. Bradford.

Lizbeth Opiola, a junior Bradford scholar, said, "She was always ready with a smile and a hug, and always made time to talk to you, no matter how busy she was."

Jason Thompson, a senior Bradford scholar, mentioned the stories she used to tell and the interest she had in the students. "She always wanted to know how the students were and what they were doing," said Thompson.

CELL program and went to college. They were not always the best students, but they worked really hard. Just keep trying even if it takes a little longer. Besides, don't give up trying to make friends."

"She had a genuine interest that made you feel special, and you appreciated it."

Linda Clark, the MC Literacy Corps advisor, stated, "She was a strong, gracious, and loving supporter of what we are trying to do." Clark, also mentioning Mrs. Bradford's unselfish nature, said, "She looked for ways to say the kinds of things that encouraged you."

Monica Blackburn, MCSLC coordinator and senior Bradford scholar, echoed the sentiments of many when she said, "I consider myself lucky to have been blessed to have known such a strong and inspirational woman. Lib Bradford was the kind of woman that blessed the lives of each and every person she met."

Jessica Garrett, a junior Bradford scholar, said, "Lib was an amazing woman and a wonderful example for us. People with hearts as warm and generous as hers can and will not be overlooked. She will always be remembered as the exceptional person that she was."

Foothills Cinema

Star Wars PG T-M 4:30, 7:05, 9:35
Dante's Peak PG13 T,W 4:35, 7:05, 9:50, R-R 4:35, 9:50
That Dam Cat PG T-R 7:30
Absolute Power R T-R 4:40, 9:45
Vegas Vacation PG T-W 5:30, 7:35, 9:35, R-R 1:40, 7:35
Empire Strikes Back PG T-M 4:00, 7:00, 9:45
Marvin's Room PG13 T-R 5:25, 7:30, 9:35
Jungle to Jungle PG T-M 3:30, 7:00, 9:30
Howard Stern's Private Parts R T-M 4:45, 7:15, 9:45
Return of the Jedi PG R-R 1:05, 4:10, 7:10, 9:55
Sling Blade R R-R 1:00, 4:00, 7:00, 9:50
Evita PG R-R 1:10, 4:15, 7:20, 10:00
Midnight shows also, call 977-4499.
$3.75 admission until 5:30 and $5.75 after; $3.75 for children anytime.

CORRECTION

The six-person apartments in Beeson Village do contain six singles.

ADAM in 2012

by Adam Shepherd
Columnist

The other day my grandmother, a candidate for sainthood, asked me why I wanted to enter the often-sadistic world of politics. I think that this question should not only apply to those of us who are wanting to enter politics, but it should also apply to those who have been in the field for a long time. I have yet to give her a reply, but this column should clear things for her and give readers a chance to see how I stand on the role of politicians.

I want to enter politics because I know I can make a difference (hopefully for the better). A person should not enter politics expecting to make a great deal of money honestly. The highest paid elected official (Bill Clinton) only makes $200,000 a year, and members of Congress only make about $130,000 a year. One must not expect to get rich from serving their people. Unfortunately many politicians chose to earn extra milk money through dishonest means. Politicians should not choose to enter politics for the prestige—a freshman member of Congress is lucky to rate a basement office in the Russell Office building, and few of these freshmen are invited to glitzy parties.

The reason a person should enter politics is to serve the people who sent them to the local courthouse or Capitol Hill in Washington. It is very unfortunate that many politicians listen to powerful special interest groups before they will listen to their constituents. On matters of extreme importance to his or her district, a politician should consult "the folks back home." A member of Congress should know his district's interests so he or she can cast a vote in the best interests of the people.

This may sound like I have watched Mr. Smith Goes to Washington too many times. But it is time that politicians realize that their interests should lie in their constituents and not in the NRA, ACLU, or the Christian Coalition. It is high time that the Jesse Helms' and Ted Kennedy's realize that their job in politics is not cocktail party-hopping or courting lobbyists, but serving the people. Isn't that a novel idea? Politicians should re-evaluate themselves and their job performance, because perhaps they have forgotten that this is a government for the people, by the people. And the little people really do count as much as the big mules in the public arena.

A day for dolls: a sweet tradition

by Kazu Kanane
Reporter

Here's a good event for feminists. What I'm going to introduce you to is a special day for girls. The event, called Hina-matsuri ("matsuri" means festival) would be translated as Doll's Festival and is held on Mar. 3. The origin of Hina-matsuri is an ancient Chinese practice, in which the sin of the body and misfortune are transferred to a doll and washed away by setting the doll in a river to drift away. When this practice spread to Japan, it was linked to girls' playing with dolls and, in the Edo Period (1603-1867), was developed into the hinamatsuri. It's an occasion to pray for young girls' growth and happiness. Most homes with girls display dolls for this day and dedicate to them four items, Hina-dolls, Shiro-zake, Hina-arare, and Hishimochi.

Hina are small dolls for girls and have existed since the Heian Period (794-1185). They took their present form in the Edo Period. A "doll Emperor and Empress in ancient costume", patterned after the Emperor and Empress, are placed on the highest tier of a five- or seven-tiered stand covered with red carpet, and under them come the "Minister of the Right, Minister of the Left," the "three court ladies," and the "five court musicians," among others. However, in recent times, more and more homes have simplified this by setting only the Emperor and Empress dolls.

Shiro-zake is a kind of sake, and the manufacturing process is different from the regular one. This concentrated sake is made by blending a sweet sake and low-class distilled spirits with steamed glutinous rice and rice malt. It is not a regular alcoholic beverage; with its sweetness, it is mostly drunk by women and girls on special days like the Hina-matsuri. You may know amazake

Author, attorney, or ... ASTRONAUT?!

by Andy Hoover
Columnist

The other day I was re-evaluating my career plans, now that I've attained sophomore status after four and a half years of intermittent studies. (A few minor things have interrupted my collegiate endeavor: getting married, my wife having a baby, etc.) I sat down and wrote a list of the front runners in the "What Do I Want To Be When I Grow Up" contest. The list read thus: College English professor, High school English teacher, Op-Ed Columnist, Author, Attorney, and Astronaut.

I just didn't have the heart to take "Astronaut" off of the list, not yet. It's been on my list of possible career ideas for so long—since the third grade. It has seniority. I have always dreamed of the wonders of space flight, weightlessness, and travel to unknown places. I can remember when the space shuttle program was new. I can remember being at school and watching with the whole class in anticipation as a launch was about to take place. I remember noticing when they quit showing them.

I would have given any price to be on that shuttle as it rose skyward; barely moving at first, then gaining speed exponentially and finally breaking free of the "salty bonds of Earth." A secret desire to escape from the loneliness of my childhood into the absolute loneliness of space might have been a partial factor in my attraction to space flight. A sense of the adventure that space flight must be is what I most remember fantasizing about, though. I still do.

I hold on to that dream even though I didn't become a Navy pilot, which is the traditional route to astronaut-dom. I am a little too near-sighted, bad-backed, flat-footed, and asthmatic to be a Navy pilot, anyway. I still may have a chance to space walk, though. Seriously, I heard that NASA came up with a price for a round-trip ticket on the space shuttle, in the event that someone wanted to book a pleasure cruise at some point. Upon hearing this, I wanted to run down to Florida and get in line. I don't think there was much of a line, though; the price they set is somewhere around a million dollars per person (round trip, I assume). I'll just have to add that to my List Of Things To Do When I Become Obscenely Rich. For now though, I'll have to content myself with reading Asimov's short stories and Astronomy magazine.

If I can't travel to the stars, I can read about the trip, visualize what it would be like, and say in a sense that I had gone there. A character in one of Asimov's stories, unable to travel from Earth because of a health condition, develops a technology for "transporting" people much like that on Star Trek. I, also unable to escape Earth, have turned to my books to transport me.

that is similar to shiro-zake. It also has a sweet taste and is served mainly at Shinto (one of the religions and used to be national religion) shrines for New Year's and other festivals, and it is also drunk in homes in the cold winter. This sake is brewed by blending malted rice with rice gruel. Personally, I don't like them.

Hina-arare is tiny rice cake (called mochi—refer to my previous article about New Year's Day) cubes that is heated and colored, and Hishi (diamond shape) mochi is classed by colors (white, pink, and green) and shaped into a diamond. So the cut ends are pretty neat like a little rainbow.

Generally, collecting such expensive dolls is not so easy, and the dolls are mostly handed generation by generation. It is a very interesting point, but the more they are expensive, the longer their beauty lasts. Especially, it is said that the dolls made by great masters last decades to centuries. Because of the dolls' role, they are shown only on that day; otherwise, it is a curse to the family.

On this day I used to dislike girls because they are in a sense of superiority. Boys, don't worry. We have a Kodomo-no-hi (Children's day) which is for boys on May 5. He, he, he ...

Reference: Traditional Japanese Culture & Modern Japan by Yoichi Sugiyama & John K. Gillespie from Natsume Co.

GOMBERT 12/96

Politicians are too busy, so I'll save social security

by Dave Barry

I've been thinking about how to fix Social Security. Ordinarily, I don't. Ordinarily, I focus on issues such as how to remove little pieces of pepperoni stuck between my teeth, and I leave government problems to the trained professionals in Washington, D.C. (motto: "Overlooking The Obvious Since 1798").

But they are frankly not getting the job done. President Clinton hasn't had time, what with all these pesky scandals, which have forced him to scale down his vision for his second term from "build a bridge to the 21st century" to "settle out of court."

Congress has also been busy, focusing its brainpower on the scandal swirling around House Speaker Newt Gingrich, who was formally accused by members of the House Ethics Committee of reminding them of the Pillsbury Doughboy.

No, sorry, I'm confusing the House Ethics Committee with me. Newt was accused of violating the tax laws. Now you may say, in Newt's defense: "But EVERYBODY violates the tax laws. The whole POINT of the U.S. tax system is to be so complicated that no normal human can conform to it, or even think about it for more than 10 seconds without bleeding from the forehead. This system enables the Internal Revenue Service to select random taxpayers for audit with 100 percent confidence that they will be guilty of something, even if they live in isolated wilderness areas and measure their annual income in squirrel meat."

Yes, but Newt is not a "normal human." Newt is a member of Congress, the very organization, if you want to call it that, that PASSES the tax laws, and he is therefore theoretically supposed to have some idea what they say. Of course, the truth is that the congresspersons are too busy raising campaign money to read the laws they pass. The laws are written by staff tax nerds who can put pretty much any wording they want in there. I bet that if you actually read the entire vastness of the U.S. Tax Code, you'd find at least one sex scene ("Yes yes YES!" moaned Vanessa as Lance, his taut body moist with moisture, again and again depreciated her adjusted gross rate of annualized fiscal debenture").

My point is that our leaders, what with one thing and another, do not have time for leading, which leaves the Social Security problem up to me.

First, we need to clear up a misconception. Many Americans believe that Social Security works this way: The government takes money out of your paycheck, keeps it for you in a safe place such as a giant federal mattress, then, when you retire, starts giving it back to you. If that's how you think it works, then let me quote the famous French economist Francois Quesnay (1694-1774): "Ding dong, you're wrong."

What actually happens is, the government takes money out of your paycheck and immediately gives it to a retired person (in your particular case, this person is Mrs. Edwina P. Loogersnapper of Yeasting Springs, VT.; she says "hi"). This system works fine as long as there are enough younger people working to support the retired people. But there's going to be Big Trouble in the year 2012, which is the first retirement year of the massive Baby Boom generation (defined, technically, as "people who, when you say 'Shirley, Shirley, bo-berly,' instantly respond 'Bonana fanna fo-ferley'"). There will be WAY too many of us Baby Boomers collecting benefits, and WAY too few "Generation X" workers to support us unless they are forced to pay ridiculously high tax rates, and Social Security will collapse like a Wal-Mart lawn chair under Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass. (Get it? "D-Mass.")

What can we do? One solution would be to reduce Social Security benefits, but this is out of the question, because of the powerful senior-citizen lobby. If any politician dares to even talk about cutbacks, the American Association of Retired Persons notifies the politician's mother, and she immediately flies to Washington, marches into his or her office and twists his or her ear until he or she promises never to do it again.

So if we can't cut benefits, what can we do? Unfortunately, there is no one easy answer. There are in fact four easy answers:

1. GO AHEAD AND FORCE GENERATION X WORKERS TO PAY RIDICULOUSLY HIGH TAX RATES. They deserve it, for starting this stupid cigar craze.

2. SET A MANDATORY FIVE-YEAR MINIMUM PRISON SENTENCE FOR ANY PERSON CONVICTED OF USING SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFITS TO MAKE A PURCHASE FROM THE HOMESHOPPING NETWORK. The minimum sentence would be increased to 10 years if the purchase involved a ceramic cat.

3. DO NOT GIVE SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFITS TO PEOPLE WHO SPEND THE EQUIVALENT OF THE GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT OF CHILE TRYING TO LOOK AS THOUGH THEY'RE TOO YOUNG TO QUALIFY FOR SOCIAL SECURITY. This would be called the "Zsa Zsa" rule.

4. REDUCE THE EXPECTED CRUSH IN THE YEAR 2012 BY ALLOWING BABY BOOMERS TO RETIRE EARLY, GOING IN ALPHABETICAL ORDER, STARTING WITH THE LETTER "B."

See you on the shuffleboard court.

(C)1997 THE MIAMI HERALD
DISTRIBUTED BY TRIBUNE MEDIA SERVICES, INC

Managed Health Care

Professional duping alive and well

by Sarah West
Editor

During a political philosophy class my sophomore year, I remember Dr. Howard saying that the college should play a role in getting students to question their beliefs, but it shouldn't send them out believing in nothing. Professors have some great ideas, like this one; however, they don't know everything, and most know that.

It's easy to think that a professor who has spent a lifetime studying a field knows everything about that subject. This is not necessarily so, and it just might save you some grief to know it.

Although some professors might present their views as facts, it is your task to figure out the difference. Although for an A's sake, you may temporarily pretend they are facts. Of course, the way the facts are presented can be misleading.

In fact, integrious profs would welcome questioning because it is a sign of learning and because they have figured out their own humanness. Truth be known, they probably questioned their profs back when they were in school. That's right. They weren't born with doctorate's and master's.

So, when some person with a title blasts away at your belief system, you should think about why they are saying what they are saying before you chunk the principles that have anchored you for the past 18 years. If they're talking about contradicting facts, and not opinions presented as facts, then maybe you should slowly analyze your belief system, not making hasty decisions based on what one prof said.

Unfortunately, some of them do have agendas, which include reindoctrination, brainwashing, whatever you want to call it.

Our faculty are wonderful. They are what I brag about most when talking about MC. Nevertheless, most of them are dealing with theory, and in theory, there are competing legitimate views ("competing legitimate views" is borrowed from Dr. Howard's "competing legitimate values"). Some may forget this, but that doesn't mean you should be duped into forgetting your foundation.

Finding who you are is important, but it does not necessarily mean discarding your experiences and lessons previously learned. Reconciling your past with your new knowledge—which should also be tested—sounds like a good formula to me.

Editor's note: I am not brown-nosing Dr. Howard; he is not currently my professor.

The Highland Echo

The weekly voice of Maryville College - Founded 1914

VOL. LXXXII, NO. 11

Tuesday, March 18, 1997

502 East Lamar Alexander Pkwy, Maryville, TN 37804

Spring break plans: Everything from thesis to Mickey

by Carol Denning
Reporter

Spring break is almost here, and a spring will be in many students' steps as they flee classes and homework to have fun in the sun.

One of the most popular ways to spend spring break is to take a vacation by sea.

Many students are traveling to Florida's shores. However, Students Katie Greer, Tiffany Rudicil, Jennifer Woodhouse, Elaine Gibbs, Trisha Bean, and Kelly Jennette are heading for the sunshine state. This group of friends will spend their week in Orlando, Fla. with Mickey Mouse. According to Greer, they will

"party our butts off, no stress, no thesis, and we're going to get drunk, drunk, drunk."

Another group of friends will spend the week in the wilderness of Stone Mountain. Jennifer Day, Allen Blackwood, Jim Kringle, and Heather Devilbiss plan on camping. Tents will be their vacation get-away and the campfire will provide the gourmet meals.

Then there are those who choose to enjoy nature in the mountains of Colo. Sherry Oden is planning on skiing over spring break with some of her friends.

Although many students will be spending quality time with nature in one form or another, other students will be singing a variety of music in Washington, D.C. There will be a choir tour, and the choir will be performing in seven concerts. The music performed will be both sacred and secular selections. They will also have a homecoming

Cont. on p. 2

Alternative spring breakers prepare for D.C.

by Kristi Johnson
Reporter

Maryville College is preparing for its second Alternative Spring Break, which will involve a trip to Washington, D.C.

The trip, which will include thirteen MC students and three MC staff members, will give students the opportunity to work within the Washington area to provide community service work to agencies such as Habitat for Humanity and several battered women's shelters.

According to Holly Bailey, coordinator of student activities at MC, the trip will encourage students to "maintain human contact outside of their local communities."

While the trip to Washington will be a service-oriented trip, students will also be sightseeing and attending dinners at the homes of MC alumni.

The group will be staying at two local churches during their week in Washington.

Each student was asked to donate $50 each for the trip cost, which will be added on to the $3,000 that was raised at the silent auction in February.

Bailey said that she hopes that this year's trip will be as successful as last year's Jacksonville trip.

Students going on the trip include Patricia Trentham, Carolyn Beattie, Elizabeth Opiola, Joy Bailey, Sherrie Brents, Melissa Warlick, Rebecca Bowman, LeAndra Barriage, Tony Schuler, Randi Fuchs, Stephanie Payne, and Mandy Dollenmayer. Bailey, Jenny Cummings, the assistant director of volunteer services, and April Hicks, the residence hall coordinator, will be the staff members attending the trip.

photo by Keli Jennett

Patrick Leslie, Joey Cody, and Chris Lance mime the Miller's Tale at the March 13 Community Forum.

Bouji's offers coffee and relaxed atmosphere

by Sarah West
Editor

Have you been looking for a quaint place off campus to go, sit, drink some coffee, listen to music, and/or study?

Bouji's, Maryville's first coffee house, offers just that atmosphere and a variety of coffees, including mochas, cappuccinos, the house blend, and even hot chocolate. The House Blend is a rich Colombian-based coffee with a secret blend of four different kinds of beans.

"We are the only people in the area that fresh roast," said Jazzberry General Manager/Owner Patti Wharton.

"We opened this place with the college in mind," said Wharton. Knowing that not all students have cars, the owners thought their location was ideal for Maryville College students. Just go past the Courthouse on Court Street, and it's on the left.

"You don't have to go to Knoxville; you can walk across the street," said Wharton.

Their menu lists fresh bagels, pastries, humus and pita, juices, Stewart's drinks, desserts, and "any kind of coffee drink you could want," said Bouji's Manager Susan Godseaux.

Jazzberry General Boutique and Gallery opened in Nov. 1993, and Bouji's opened on Jan. 7 of this year. Both businesses are under the same business "umbrella" and roof.

Jazzberry has clothes, all mediums of artwork, jewelry, aroma therapy, incense, stationary, pottery, and more.

At least one night on the weekend, there is live entertainment. "The music goes with the mood of this place," said Godseaux.

"We try to get something that everybody would enjoy," said Wharton.

The entertainment will be expanding in coming days.

"We welcome submissions of art by students and staff," said Wharton. Bouji's is also interested in auditioning entertainers.

Bouji's and Jazzberry have a diverse market. "We have everyone from retired

Cont. on p. 2

Inside

Community Forum.2
Senate.....2
Spring break.....3
Softball.....4
Environmental.....5
Bo's movie review.7
Dave Barry.....8

Highlights

News.....2,3
Sports.....4
Calendar.....5
Features.....6
Op/Ed.....7,8

Activity fee to remain $225

by: Sherrie Brents
Reporter

Student senate met on Mar. 13 to determine the activity fee for the academic year of 1997-1998. One proposal was presented by Yosef Addis, commuter senator.

The proposal called for the remaining $10 of the former fitness room fee to remain in the activity fee. The proposal passed by a vote of 9-1-1. Emily Brock, junior senator, voted no, and Brian Gossett, Gamble hall senator, abstained.

The proposal, by Addis, requested that the money be left in the activity fee to fund a movie channel on campus, and to establish a commuter activity fund. Eight of the $10 will be used to fund the movie channel.

The other two dollars will be set aside for the commuter fund. The movie channel, is a three year contract with SWANK. In addition to movies, the channel will also be used to display campus announcements. Maryville College clubs and organizations will be able to use the channel to announce meetings and pro-

"Spring" cont. from p. 1
concert on Apr. 4, at 8 p.m., in the Fine Arts Center music hall. Eric Obermiller, a senior member of the choir, said "It's a good time every year, and I am looking forward to my last year."

Lastly, there are students who will not be frolicking, but hard at work. Nathan Davenport is going home to Hendersonville, Tenn. to work and make some extra money. Matt Wilks will be staying close to campus in order to finish up one important senior responsibility. Matt said, "I will be working on thesis; it sucks and I would rather go to hell."

grams.

The commuter fund will be used for commuter sponsored programs. According to Addis, a commuter theme week is one possibility. Although the money is designated for commuters, proposals must be brought to senate, and approved before any of the money can be used.

Miller's Tale mimed in forum

by Caroline Leggett
Reporter

In the Mar. 13 community forum, Geoffrey Chaucer's "The Miller's Tale" was mimed. Dr. Samuel Overstreet, English professor, gave an introduction with some background information on Chaucer and his Canterbury Tales.

Overstreet said, "In addition to the fact that this is the funniest piece ever written in English literature, the purpose of telling 'The Miller's Tale' is the invitation of the study of the real Middle Ages."

The "Miller's Tale" was narrated by Jason Ezell, Center for English Language Learning instructor and adjunct instructor of humanities. During the course of the narration, the

The funds that are not used by the end of the year will be absorbed into the student senate contingency fund.

Brock, opposed to the proposal, said that not everyone wants or can benefit from SWANK. She mentioned the increase in the activity fee that has story was acted out in mime by Robert Hutchens, CELL assistant director, acting as Nicholas the clerk; Christopher Lance, assistant residence hall coordinator for Gamble, as Absolon the parish clerk; Jessica King, a sophomore, as page; Chad Berry, assistant professor of history, as black-people to college students to sophisticated high school students," said Godseaux. "We have a very eclectic, alternative kind of crowd."

"Bouji's" cont. from p. 1

On Apr. 12, they will host a show of sculptural and wall pieces by Peter Green in coordination with the Dogwood Arts Festival. The works are based on Tibetan Buddhism.

Godseaux, who is originally from Seattle, was the owner of Pandora's Books in Knoxville. While there, Singer Tori Amos visited to try her caffeine concoctions and said her book store was the only interesting thing in Knoxville she had seen and the coffee was the best cup she had ever had.

Bouji's is open from 7 a.m.-7 p.m. from Monday to Thursday; 7 a.m.-11 p.m. on Friday; and 10 a.m.-11 p.m. on Saturday.

Smith; Patrick Leslie, a senior, as John; and Joey Cody, a senior, as Alisoun. Senior Kim Schuenemann was in charge of the props.

"I enjoyed being a mime," said Cody.

Sarah Christians, a sophomore, said, "It [the miming] was funny, bawdy, but great!"

Bouji's is open from 7 a.m.-7 p.m. from Monday to Thursday; 7 a.m.-11 p.m. on Friday; and 10 a.m.-11 p.m. on Saturday.

an annual "America's Best Colleges" rankings in the fall. Recently, the lists have generated criticism on a number of campuses.

At Stanford, a group of students launched a "Forget U.S. News" crusade to persuade the magazine's editors to drop the rankings, which they say are too influential and too misleading. A number of student groups at other colleges have joined the protests.

The magazine stands by its rankings, however. "We believe our rankings provide a significant service to our readers," the magazine said.

U.S. News ranks grad schools

by College Press Service

WASHINGTON—Harvard University's medical, law and business schools are among the best in the country, according to U.S. News & World Report.

The magazine recently released its eighth annual "America's Best Graduate Schools" issue, which many educators consider to be the most definitive of all academic rankings.

Harvard led the field in medicine, followed by Johns Hopkins and Duke universities. Yale University topped the list of best law schools, trailed by Harvard and University of Chicago.

For business schools, Stanford University grabbed No. 1, followed by Harvard and the University of Pennsylvania (Wharton).

Techies interested in graduate engineering programs can find the best education at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the magazine said. Stanford was No. 2 for engineering, followed by the University of California-Berkeley.

For education programs, Columbia University's Teachers College beat out Stanford and Berkeley for the top spot.

U.S. News also compiles

The Highland Echo
Editor

Sarah H. West

Production Editor

Patrick E. Leslie

Copy Editor

Sarah Christians

Sports Editor

Joe Malheiro

Staff Writers

Sherrie Brents, Tonya Briggs, Shannon Bryant, Joey Cody, David Downs, Dave Dupont, Chuck Gilkey, Brian Hastings, Andy Hoover, Kristi Johnson, Lori Leffel, Caroline Leggett, Andy Long, LaToya Lundy, Bo McMichaels, Rissa Miller, Kazu Nakane, Dallas Rightmeyer, Sun-Im Ryu, Kim Schuenemann, Michelle Shuler, Adam Shepherd, Christi Stalans, and Traci Tidwell

Public Relations
Coordinator

Michelle Shuler

Photo Staff

Keli Jennett and
Jenny Oxford

Cartoonists

Carl Gombert

Faculty Advisor

Jeff Gary

Please send letters to the editor, comments, suggestion, or story leads to box #2247.

Phone

981-8176

E-Mail

Swest75@aol.com

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 500 words.

Take a spring break, but don't get taken

By Mindy Charski
Northwestern University
CPS Campus
Correspondent

Ruth Berkowitz and five of her friends spent the cold winter of their sophomore year at Washington University in St. Louis with warm thoughts of a spring break in South Padre Island.

Berkowitz spent the months after the trip arguing with a hotel manager who accused her group of breaking the room's sleeper sofa.

"We called them several times and argued with them," Berkowitz said. "They were saying that we completely destroyed the sofa, that we must have had a party and jumped up and down on the bed." Despite their efforts, the group never got their $250 deposit back.

Every spring, as school lets out for a week, students pack their bags looking for a place to get away from it all. But too often scam artists are looking to get away with students' hard-earned money. Most commonly students fall victim to travel scams by companies selling dream vacations at amazingly low prices.

"Students and seniors are the most targeted groups to be taken advantage of," said Steve Loucks, the spokesperson for the American Society of Travel Agents (ASTA). "Students are wrongly perceived to be a little wet behind the ears in terms of travel planning."

"Usually what you find is some unscrupulous tour operator who's going directly to students on campuses with all sorts of flowery offers," Loucks said. "The bulk of those offers are not legitimate. What we tell people is anytime you see an offer that's too good to be true it usually is."

Tammy, an Indiana University student, says both a company offering a boat tour in Puerto Vallarta and the people she booked her package through misrepresented themselves.

"We paid for a boat cruise separate from the package, and then when we went to get the tickets there was another charge they hadn't told us about," said Tammy, not wishing to be identified by her last name. "On this cruise boat there wasn't a place for us to sit. They had snorkeling, but you're snorkeling in a place where there's nothing to look at."

The hotel wasn't a "dumpy" hotel, she says, but they did have to change rooms after they found cockroaches in the first one. "That wasn't good," she said.

The charter flight had its problems as well. On the way back the plane was so crowded "peoples' luggage was left behind," she said. "It was one of these 'Let's fit as many people as we can' things."

And the meals that were included? "They were disgusting," she said. "In Puerto Vallarta where you would think you would get Mexican food I think I had more Italian food. But they provided free drinks—that was a bonus."

The cost of a spring break trip usually depends on the price of the hotel room, said Leslie Carroll, branch manager of STA Chicago. The cheaper the price of the trip, the less amenities one can expect in a hotel room, she says.

"It sometimes sounds like a $299 round-trip with eight nights at a hotel seems like an amazing price that's too good to be true, but it actually does exist," she said. "You have to remember that's a quad rate for four people, and it's usually a downtown hotel . . . and it will be a one-star hotel with no extras whatsoever. They have been known to be unsafe."

Staying downtown in popular Spring Break destinations such as Cancun, the Bahamas and Jamaica means you should expect the hidden costs of cab rides to the beach, Carroll adds.

Carroll and other travel agents say the best way students can protect themselves against travel scams is to book the trip through reputable travel agencies. Agents have the same access to Spring Break tour operators as the people who advertise packages in college newspapers and on flashy posters. The difference is that most established travel agencies know which operators are legitimate and trustworthy; people targeting students do not always know or care.

And, when you book through a travel agent everything about the trip, including the hotel room and flight, are confirmed and you know exactly how much the trip will cost. One popular scam that surfaces about this time is a $199 per person cruise package departing out of Orlando or Fort Lauderdale to the Bahamas.

"The cruise they're talking about is like a day ferry," said Sharon Jackson, publisher of the online K.L. Smith's Cruise Letter (<http://www.chevy Chase.com/cruise>). The price does not include air fare to Florida, port charges or food and the motels included in the package are fleabags, Jackson said.

As if those details were not bad enough, people purchasing the package are actually only buying certificates for a trip. Ninety-nine times out of 100 the purchaser cannot even redeem the coupons during the spring's high travel weeks. "Families have booked their vacations a long time ago. While there may be a cancellation, you can't expect a good deal because they've sold at a high price," Jackson said.

"The best advice I can give to students is if they are online, go to the travel newsgroups like the ones about Caribbean vacations, Las Vegas vacations," she said. "These are regular chat groups and you can ask questions like 'I got this price on this,' and experienced travelers will tell you about these kinds of things."

The main piece of advice of Student & Budget Travel's Webmaster Lara Friedman is: "Don't trust everything you see on the Internet. Do some double-checking and get confirmation in writing whenever possible." Friedman's site (<http://www.lib.umich.edu/chdocs/travel/travel-guide.html>) helps locate travel-related resources

photo by Kelli Jennett

A customer relaxes with a cup of coffee at Bouji's located on Court Street.

on the Internet.

Always pay by credit card, advises Mark Kantrowitz of the Air Traveler's Handbook. That way if you don't receive the service or the service wasn't what you expected, you can dispute the charge with the credit card company. He also warns that students should be wary of companies with no telephone number and no listing with Directory Assistance.

When considering Spring Break tour packages, ASTA recommends the following guidelines to ensure you are not being scammed:

- Before paying, get all the details in writing, including total cost, restrictions that apply, cancellation penalties, and the exact names of the airlines and hotels the package includes. You should never have to pay up front just to get information about a travel package. Purchase appropriate insurance in case you must cancel.

- When you are getting an evaluation of the offer from a reputable travel agent, among the questions you should be asking are: Does the tour operator belong to a consumer protection plan that would protect your payment in the case of the tour company closed? Has the agency ever sent a client on a tour with the company? Also, make sure you are informed of what additional taxes or surcharges are involved, such as airport and port taxes (when going on a cruise). Also, ask what the customary or expected gratuities are on the tour.

- If speaking with a local travel agent is not convenient, consult directly with ASTA's Consumer Affairs Department at 703-706-0387 as well as the Better Business Bureaus or Consumer Protection Agencies in your state.

- If a charter flight is involved, ask for the charter operator's name and address and check their registration with the U.S. Department of Transportation, Office of Consumer Affairs, 1-25, Washington D.C. 20590. Make sure your check is made payable to an escrow account which federal law requires for charters. You can call the bank handling the escrow account to make sure it is valid.

- If you're paying with a credit card, don't give your information to a company you have not yet researched.

- Be cautious with companies that require you wait at least 60 days to take your trip or require that you select several dates of departure for your trip.

Ruth's advice to avoid scams like the one pulled on her group is simple: "Be really careful inspecting the condominium/hotel that you are staying in as soon as you arrive. Report anything broken, torn or stained. Take Polaroids of it. Make sure they can't pin it on you."

MC: In the shadow of the "Big-Time"

by Joe Malheiro
Sports Editor

Okay, I realize this is another story that involves UT athletics to some degree, but come on, can you blame me? The Vols are practically a daily media event featuring Peyton Manning, Kevin O'Neill, and the ever popular Doug Dickey. It kind of makes you think "as the vols turn" has a nice soap opera ring to it. However, what role if any does Maryville College assume in this media circus just twenty minutes up the road? Absolutely none!

Life on the Maryville College campus, from an athletic standpoint, is quite serene. As with most colleges, we have talented athletes and capable coaches. The facilities are an entirely different matter, but I'll save that for another column. Our quarterback didn't have to call a press conference to announce his decision on the NFL, and coach Randy Lambert isn't leaving for Sewanee or any other job. To be quite honest, I think the atmosphere of the MC sports community is very refreshing.

For a small college located in the foothills of the Smoky Mountains with roughly 1,000 students, the fighting Scots athletic teams are very well respected. Coach Lambert and his team are coming off of another 20+ win season and an NCAA tournament appearance. The Lady Scots basketball squad recently completed their season with a 13-12 record, the third

photo by Keli Jennett

Sophomore Pitcher Trisha Bean beats in last Tuesday's double header with Union College.

winning season by the Lady Scots in my three years at MC. The fighting Scots football program has also been a very respectable .500 team, two out of the three years that I've attended MC. The baseball Scots have also continued to post very impressive numbers in the win/loss column in the last several years. This is not bad for a school with no internal controversy brewing in the athletic department.

To be associated with the MC sports community is to be part of a family. No, we don't own an arena big enough to house a herd of elephants, and our football team isn't going to bring in 100,000+ fans every Saturday, but are those the things that really matter?

Only at Maryville College can anyone attend an NCAA tournament basketball game and have the pleasure of watching Brandon Derrick crucify the officiating crew while donning an officials jersey himself. Only at Maryville College can you attend classes with football players, and other prominent athletes who

Lady Scots have week of wins, now 4-5

by Joe Malheiro
Sports Editor

The Lady Scots softball team is now four and five, after a week filled with wins.

Last Tuesday, the Lady Scots had a successful home opener for the 1997 season. They went into the double header against Union College with a record of zero and five and finished with two wins.

In the first game, there were 12 runs going into the third inning, and the Scots won 15-3 with Sophomore Trisha Bean pitching. The game was over in five innings.

"We were excited and ready to hit, and we did," said Junior Centerfield Julie Posey.

In last Tuesday's second game, Freshman Leann Evans pitched. The close game went into eight innings. Union rallied in the top of the seventh and tied the score. Freshman Laura Alexander hit the game winning double which then scored Bean. The Scots won 7-6.

"We executed when we needed to," said Posey.

On Saturday, the Lady Scots played two games against Atlanta's Agnes Scott, who is competing in their first year of fast pitch softball. They won both games with little action.

The first game ended with five innings and with a score of 10-0. The second game was a replay of the first and aren't just athletes, but students and friends. MC is also a place where the athletic coaches will remember who you are and make a point to speak to you while walking across campus.

Sure we're not going to the citrus bowl next year, and we won't get to play Kentucky in basketball; we also won't produce any NBA or NFL first round draft picks, but that's what makes MC a special place. The MC sports community won't produce an earth-shattering press-conference about any players or coaches. However, what we will produce are quality people with a good education who found the small college atmosphere right for them. Yes, MC athletics lives in the shadow of the "Big-Time," which is more commonly known as UT athletics, but I wouldn't have it any other way.

ended 11-1.

"They weren't a tough team, so it wasn't difficult for us to win," said Posey.

Today, Tuesday, Mar. 18, the Lady Scots will be playing Tennessee Wesleyan at 2 p.m. and 4 p.m. at home.

"These should be tough games. They've got really good pitchers," said Posey.

This year's team is young, featuring eight freshmen, seven juniors and one sophomore. Freshmen outfielder Brianna Plunkett feels good about the team's potential saying, "we've won all of our home games, and we're young, so we should have a great season for the remainder of this year, and great squad next year."

Environmental club has busy spring

by Carol Denning
Reporter

This school year has seen a revival of the environmental club. The environmental club consists of about twenty active members who participate in a wide range of activities.

Currently, the club is split up into committees that are researching how much energy is wasted on campus. The committees work with faculty members to determine how much electricity and water are squandered. When this research is complete, Katie Greer, president of the organization, plans to organize a report and a proposal on how to manage the school's resources. The organization is also currently active in the "adopt a highway" program, and they clean a section of Court Street once a month. The organization is defiantly using all of its resources to have a successful spring.

Katie Greer heads a team of the environmentally aware, and she is backed by a strong foundation of fellow leaders. Amy Poag is acting as vice-president, Justin Buckles is the secretary, Chris Rademacher is the Historian, and Randy Nickum is the treasurer.

In the future, the environmental club is also hoping to take over recycling cans from housekeeping. This is a way not only to be actively environmentally aware, but it will also be a way to raise funds for future projects. They also have several activities planned for spring such as Earth Day on April 22. A booth will be present outside of Pearson Hall, and it will contain information and Earth Day T-shirts. There will also be the opportunity for students to tie-dye their T-shirt, and speakers will be present. The speakers will cover a variety of issues, but their main focus is to provide information to help the campus become more environmentally aware. The club will have another booth at Blister in the Sun. The booth will have the Earth Day T-shirts, and there will be beaded jewelry for sale. Several opportunities to participate in river clean-up are available to students and the community. Those interested in cleaning the river at Fort Loudon need to meet at Carnegie parlor on April the 5 or 12. The time will be announced. If anyone has any questions or is interested in becoming more involved with the environmental club, the officers are available to provide further information.

Activity Calendar

Tuesday, March 18

- >11am CCM: Worship Service
- >6pm Mountain Challenge: Wall Climb
- >7pm TH: Beyond Therapy auditions

Wednesday, March 19

- >1pm BB vs Emory & Henry-HOME
- >3pm FAYL: CS-Graduate School
- >6pm Mountain Challenge: Wall Climb
- >7pm TH: Beyond Therapy auditions

Thursday, March 20

- >6pm Mountain Challenge: Wall Climb
- >6pm CCM: Political Club meeting
- >7pm CCM: Adult Children of Alcoholics and Dysfunctional Families meeting
- >8pm FACM: Student Recital

Friday, March 21

- >9pm Residence Halls Close

Saturday, March 22

- >Spring Break-Residence Halls Closed
- >BB vs MC Invitational

Activity Briefs

At 3 p.m. on Wednesday, Mar. 19 Career Services will be sponsoring a workshop on graduate school. This will take place in Fayerweather Lounge, and topics will include what tests students need to take to enter graduate school.

On Thursday, Mar. 20 there will be a student recital in the Fine Arts Center Music Hall at 8 p.m. A variety of voices and instruments will be performing, and admission is free.

Soiled Memories

Midsummer sunny days, running through sprinklers
On broken sidewalks and sun-parched lawns.
Running inside, forgetting to dry off at the door
Just to get a dollar to spend on Good Humor -
The Ice Cream Truck, bell clanging as it dawdles
Down the lane - coloring books, water guns,
Playing with friends - I can't remember
When I've felt such joy. So I go searching,
Digging through my memories.
Old girlfriends, lost acquaintances, mistakes Affecting my outlook, soiled memories to be Sifted through and perhaps discarded.
Wading through dusty volumes to get to childhood
Albums of glossy-photographed memories.
Innocent, pure joy. No responsibilities
Or concerns attached. Just images of peace
And unscathed laughter.
But they're not the same now.
Years of neglect, buried under errors;
The joy has ebbed with the outgoing innocent tide.
Just images now, barely enough to Remind me of youth. Discarded peanut-shell
Memories that missed the wastebasket,
Picked up and placed randomly in a book.
Where do I go from here?
Seeking familiar friends in new faces,
Trying to put away grief and sorrow.
I buy water balloons to soak my mind
In unadulterated joy -
But the shadow still lingers
Behind the sparkle in my eye;
The rasp still carried by certain syllables in my voice;
My soul is filled with soiled memories
Yet my friends still greet me by name.

-Izzy Kidding

Applications

now accepted for positions of Editor, Assistant Editor, Sports Editor, & Photo Editor for the Chilhowean or the Echo. Pick up application in Anderson 205 and turn in by Friday, Mar. 21 to same place.

The Chilhowean

is now accepting photos for the yearbook. Please put your name and box number on the back. List those in the photo, and event, on a separate sheet of paper. Submit photos to box 2784. Questions? Please call 8769.

Also, The Chilhowean is accepting any artwork, photos, or drawings for the yearbook. Please submit your talent to box 2784 or 2080. Questions? Please call 8769 or 8722.

The Other Record Shop

Buy * Sell * Trade
New, Used & Collectibles
Cassettes, CD's, Records
2131 E. Broadway, Maryville
(located in the Bi-Lo Shopping Center)

Trade for new releases!

977-9959

VOP Atlanta tour: "Jammin' in Jaw-ja"

by Andy Long
Reporter

The Voices Of Praise have had a number of first occurrences during the 1996-1997 school year. This is the first year they have had forty-five members, brand new robes, held a Gospel Jamboree with a total of three choirs, toured North and South Carolina, and scheduled and completed a two phase tour.

At the end of January, they toured the Carolinas. In February, they sang locally—holding a Gospel Jamboree and their annual concert alongside a few other services. On Mar. 7-9 they toured the Atlanta Metropolitan area, concluding their two-phase tour at the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Choirfest at Wheeler High School in Marietta, Georgia.

"I feel like this has been the most blessed and the most talented group we've had wall to wall. The overall spirit of the group has grown, and our reputation is far beyond what we could ever have imagined," said VOP Director and Founder Larry Ervin. VOP's spirit and energy have accelerated greatly because they "worship not only through song, but also through fellowshiping with each other," asserts Freshman Xio Castro.

Leaving Maryville at 1 p.m. headed for Living Waters Christian Center in Decatur, Ga., VOP kicked off phase two of their '97 tour. At Living Waters, VOP tapped a keg of spiritual fervor that would carry them through the weekend.

The climax of the weekend was the service at Woodstock Community Church in Woodstock, Ga. Quickly becoming a tradition, VOP was introduced at approximately 7:30 p.m. by Master of Ceremonies Rev. Fred Forsche. VOP opened with their processional, "He Is Worthy," to a standing ovation and sang six hand-clapping, foot-stomping numbers in their forty-five minute Holy Spirit invoking first half. After an intermission and another standing ovation, VOP kicked off an even more jubilant second half with "David's Dance." Their spirit peaked in the second half as they danced and shouted through seven numbers ending with their dispersing to greet the crowd and shake hands while singing the medley: "You're the Reason Why I

From the Alumni Board . . .

The following are a couple of traditions and a few things about living on campus that I remember fondly these many years later. One of the things I miss when I return to the Maryville Campus is the wonderful sound of bells ringing from Anderson Tower. When I was a student, bells — real bells, not electronic buzzers — summoned us to classes, meals, Chapel, whatever. I remember my freshman year that a young man named Jim Davis (whose name I cannot find in the Alumni Directory) was a few minutes late to arrive at every class and a few minutes early leaving, so that he could reach wherever one had to go to sound those wonderful bells. That beautiful sound made even having to show up for a dreaded class less onerous. I mentioned being summoned to Chapel services — (I know, I KNOW, you don't want to hear this). I cannot tell you how meaningful was that assemblage of the entire student body every morning before classes. It was a short time to reflect, to re-group, if you will. It was a shared experience which started everybody off in the same direction every day. It was not heavily religious, but it was an important punctuation mark at the start of each day. A couple of years while I was there, Dr. Lloyd stood up in Chapel on a beautiful spring morning and announced — NO CLASSES TODAY. There was no advance warning — just a sudden gift of glorious leisure to spend however one wished. Now that was a chapel service. I wonder if you Sing, Be Encouraged, and God Will Take Care Of You," as arranged by Ervin.

"The Lord really blessed us with spiritual services," said Freshman Portia Frederick.

VOP sang four numbers at the morning worship service on Mar. 9 at Allen Temple AME Zion Church at 11 a.m., including two heavily requested favorites: the up still have Sunday evening Vespers. This was another moment in the week when many of us came together to hear the Choir, a short somewhat devotional message, and a chance to hear those hymns we knew by heart from having sung them so often in morning Chapel. To this day, my Sunday evenings call back memories of students streaming down the walks toward the Library, where the Chapel services had to be held. (The College Chapel had been destroyed by fire several years earlier.) I have to mention Tuesday evening "Town Night." The rules and regulations when I started at Maryville were still from the stone age, and women students remained on campus after 7:00 in the evening except on Tuesday nights when one was permitted to sign out with a date or with a group or friends to venture into the town of Maryville. There were a couple of restaurants, TWO movie houses, I believe, and that was about it for entertainment. But we all streamed up Cate or College Streets after dinner and stayed out, I believe, until 10:00 to enjoy the delights of being "downtown" for an evening. At graduation we had a Daisy Chain which the Junior Girls put together and held for the graduating Seniors to process through.... EVERYONE in their sophomore year took Systematic Discourse — a preparation for speaking and writing papers in a logical, outlined manner.... EVERYONE took Ethics taught by Dr. Orr in, I believe, their junior year.... It seems to me that EVERYONE had at least one course taught by Dr. Hunter — Chairman tempo "Ninety-Nine and a Half" lead by Ms. Patricia Dean and their vigorous rendition of "Near the Cross" lead by Leonard Ervin. They wrapped up their tour by singing three group favorites—"A Message for the Saints," "Get Your House In Order" and "Jesus Paid It All"—as special guests at the AME Zion Choirfest.

of the English Department. These required experiences, which I am sure we complained of mightily at the time, engendered a closeness within the student body which I am not sure exists today. Certainly the times are different, and I would not expect young people today to tolerate the regulatory environment we took for granted then. Certainly the mountain challenge program and probably others I am not aware of are present day substitutes for some of our more quaint experiences. I only hope that students today have a system of traditions and common experiences which they will remember fondly after they leave the Maryville campus. —Carol Corbett, Class of '51

Dr. Carl Gombert 1/19/97

In the Garden of Sweden

Foothills Cinema 8

Star Wars PG T-R 4:30, 7:05, 9:35
Dante's Peak PG13 T-R 4:35, 9:50
Vegas Vacation PG T-R 7:35
Empire Strikes Back PG T-R 4:00, 7:00, 9:45
Jungle to Jungle PG T-T,W 4:30, 7:00, 9:30
Private Parts R T-T,W 4:35, 7:15, 9:45
Return of the Jedi PG T-T,W 4:10, 7:10, 9:55
Sling Blade R T-T,W 1:00, 4:00, 7:00, 9:50
Evita PG T-R 4:15, 7:20, 10:00
Searay R T-T,W 4:00, 7:00, 9:50
Donnie Brasco R F-W 1:10, 4:05, 7:35, 9:50
Selena PG F-W 1:15, 4:10, 7:00, 9:35
People vs. Larry Flint R F-W 1:15, 4:15, 7:05, 9:45
Liar Liar PG F-W 1:30, 3:30, 5:30, 7:30, 9:30
Midnight shows also, call 977-4499.
$3.75 admission until 5:30 and $5.75 after; $3.75 for children anytime.

The missing pieces of life's puzzle

by Dave Downs
Columnist

The category: College Students.

To all of the Maryville College community:

I would like to take this opportunity to thank everyone for their support and kind words following my senior recital on Saturday, Feb. 22. While I wish I could say that it was an easy decision for me to continue with my performance after losing my speaking voice, that would be an untruth. Still, to hear so many kind words and good wishes made my efforts seem that much more worth it. And it was especially important to my parents, who had traveled over five hundred miles to see me sing.

In the past four years, I have continuously been pleased to consider myself a part of the MC family. After my recital, I was reminded once again about the things I love about this school—the friends I have made, the faculty who care enough to return to school on a Saturday, and the support of the school at large after facing a trying situation.

Thank you again. Those two words always seem so inadequate!

Sincerely yours,
Dara A Di Giacomo

Bo reviews Stern's "Private Parts"

by Bo McMichael
Columnist

On a Saturday afternoon eleven individuals ventured into a theater and joined an adventure that would break every moral and ethical sense I had.

The radio has been the most influential way of broadcast since the early part of this century. However, let's suppose that the anti-Christ becomes the most popular DJ of all times. What else? They make a movie! Since Mar. 7, the public has been exposed to

The answer: Beer drinking, porcelain god gripping, fun in the sun, dancing til the break of dawn, no parents, no rules, no money left annual trek to the sacred land of miles and miles of white beaches.

What is every second of my life in Pearson's? No!

What is Blister in the Sun? Whatever!

What is Spring Break '97!

Welcome to my little corner. This is Dr. Feelgood with another brilliant insight. This edition features the religious awakening event that all college students know as Spring Break '97.

Well, you can't find the definition of Spring Break in any dictionary nor can you find it on the Internet (you can find locations but not a definition). My advice is to go to the video store or to ask Jason Thompson (he has it on video) and watch the mind blowing rendition of every college persons life, National Lampoon's Animal House!

Spring Break represents a time in life when all pieces missing from the puzzle of life are found: walking around in a daze, drinking beverages named "screwdriver," "kamikaze," and "screaming orgasm," waking up laying next to some person of the other sex that can't speak English, your head feeling like a bomb just detonated in it, and by the time you the world according to Howard Stern. "Private Parts" starred Howard Stern, Robin Quivers, and Mary McCormack (Justin Appleton - Murder One). The story line traces the life of the most influential man on radio. The Bill of Rights states that the citizens of the United States are granted the right of free speech. Stern is the incarnation of this right. I admit that I did not know much about this tall, long-haired man; however, I am truly suprised about his life now. "Private Parts" allowed the public to look at a man who, in get home, you have to be hooked up to an IV for at least 48 hours just to get color back in your face.

Well, I feel obligated to tell you that every college student must experience this rite of passage at least once in their college tenure. Maryville College has a set list of the number of hours needed to graduate with a degree. Consider Spring Break as just three more hours of credit needed to graduate. But this degree does not represent the knowledge it takes to understand how a piece of hair reproduces. This is a degree in life.

Polly Graff's "good answer"

Dear Polly,

I have a real problem. Can you help me? I am afraid America has re-elected one of its worst presidents ever! Whenever I think of the list of scandals has come to an end, there's a new one! File-Gate, Travel-Gate, Whitewater-Gate and now the Fundraising-Gate! What next?

When I get married and have a child and he/she asks me if I respect the president, what do I say? How can I explain that character doesn't matter? How can I cope for four more years?

Signed, Sick of Slick
Dearest Sick,

Unless you plan on conceiving a child and presuming he/she will not develop political awareness in two years, you need not worry about a "slick" answer.

As far as coping for four more years, I must say this: you are in the minority. It's a large minority, but the US is still a (pseudo) democracy, and that's how the cookie crumbles. Take heart. The executive office is not a monarchy. People forget that we do have Senate and the House to (ideally) complete a system of checks and balances. Still, politics can be a mess. As long as there are politicians there'll be scandals.

I agree: character does matter. Perhaps not the allegation of cheating (for if that disqualified a person, most could never even be elected Grand Poobah of their Baywatch Droolcup Club), because that's a private matter. But Whitewater and foreign contributions should be a matter of public record! And that thing about "friends" staying in the Lincoln bedroom is just a little icky. Willie has turned into Tom Bodett!

When I'm unhappy with an election or candidate, I remember overhearing a racist troglodyte bitching about a black coworker. The man had on a Rage Against the Machine t-shirt: a band writing politically powerful messages. He just didn't get it! ("I don't know, Dick. It's got a good beat and I can hunt to it; I give it a 99!") If he were on a ticket, someone would vote for this creep. We need to educate ourselves lest we get corrupt leaders. Someone on campus has a great bumper sticker: "If the people lead, the leaders will follow." Apathy will kill us.

It's sad that we must choose from such extreme sides. Most voters do not align with radicals. Cheer up, you'll get another chance in 2000!

Love, Polly
If you need advice please write Polly Graff, Box 2247.

Dear MC community:

I just returned from a weekend trip with the VOP Choir and I want you to know what a honor and privilege it was to participate in this event. Approximately forty-five choir members, musicians and support persons spent the weekend representing Maryville College in ways that I know would make our whole community proud. I know I could not feel more positive about their accomplishments.

Not only was this choir impressive and inspirational through their performances, but they truly represented the spirit of what makes Maryville College great. This weekend VOP showed the rich diversity of Maryville College as students from different races, backgrounds and nationalities came together as one voice. They also showed, perhaps in the best way I have seen, the "church-relatedness" of Maryville College. They praise and honor God in all that they do, and they inspire others to do the same.

This past weekend we were well cared for by church members in Decatur and Woodstock, Georgia. Families from these churches took us into their homes, gave us a place to sleep, transported us when needed, and made sure we would not go hungry for days to come! VOP touched their lives, and they touched ours. We will always be thankful for their love and kindness.

With a trip of this nature everyone works hard. However, I want to comment on two individuals who provided the leadership necessary to make this tour a success. Larry Ervin as Director and Tara Sanders as VOP President did an excellent job. Thank you both so much for planning such a wonderful trip, and for including me.

-Dr. Seymour,
Student Development
Vice President

Researchers try to re-create discovery of law of gravity

by Dave Barry

Settle back, because today I'm going to tell you the dramatic true story of what happened when some Japanese researchers decided to re-create the historic discovery of the law of gravity:

As you recall, this discovery occurred in an English orchard in 1666, when, according to legend, Isaac Newton, the brilliant mathematician, fell out of a tree and landed on an apple.

No, hold it, upon reviewing the videotape I see that in fact the apple fell out of the tree and landed on Newton. Had this occurred today, of course, Newton would have simply put on a foam neck brace and sued everybody within a radius of 125 miles. But those were primitive times, and Newton was forced to settle for discovering the law of gravity, which states: "A dropped object will fall with an acceleration of 32 feet per second, and if it is your wallet, it will make every effort to land in a public toilet."

Later on, Newton also invented calculus, which is defined as "the branch of mathematics that is so scary it causes everybody to stop studying mathematics." That's the whole POINT of calculus. At colleges and universities, on the first day of calculus class, the professors go to the board and write huge incomprehensible "equations" that they make up right on the spot, knowing that this will cause all the students to drop the course and never return to the mathematics building again. This frees the professors to spend the rest of the semester playing cards and regaling one another with hilarious stories about the "mathematical symbols" they've invented over the years. ("Remember the time Professor Hinkwattle drew a 'cosine derivative' that was actually a picture of a squid?" "Yes! Students were diving out the windows! And the classroom was on the fourth floor!")

Yes, Newton made many contributions to science, but gravity was definitely his biggest. That's why a group of Japanese researchers decided, as an international goodwill project, to re-create the original discovery, using an apple tree that was descended from the original Newton tree.

I found out about this project thanks to an alert reader named (really) Harley Ferguson, who sent me a story about it from an English-language Japanese newspaper called The Daily Yomiuri. The article states that in August 1996, researchers at the Construction Ministry's Public Works Research Institute in Arai, Japan, received a sapling descended from the original Newton tree. This sapling, according to the story, came from the U.S. Commerce Department's National Institute of Standards and Technology, or NIST, which is in charge of weights and measures. (So if your pants don't fit the way they used to, this is the agency to complain to.)

I was curious as to why a U.S. government agency would be providing Newton saplings, so I called NIST and spoke with the official archivist, whose name (really) is Karma A. Beal. She sent me a bunch of information, which I will attempt to summarize here:

The original Newton tree—for simplicity's sake, let's call it "Bob"—died in 1814. But before Bob went to The Big Orchard In The Sky, cuttings were taken, and over the years these cuttings became trees, and cuttings were taken from those, and so now there are genetically identical offspring—let's call them "Boblets"—all over the world.

One Boblet lives at the NIST facility in Gaithersburg,

Md. It produces apples, but not many; the information Karma Beal sent me refers to the tree as (I am not making any of this up) "a very shy fruiter." The story gets a little murky at this point, but apparently the sapling sent to Japan for the historic re-creation of Newton's discovery was grown from a seed from one of the NIST Boblet apples. This is significant, because if the sapling came from a seed, as opposed to a cutting, it is probably NOT a pure Bob descendant. As the NIST documentation states, "the original flower was almost certainly pollinated by some other tree." (Trees are total sluts this way.)

But let's not be picky. The important thing is that the Japanese researchers had a sapling that was in some way connected to the original historic Bob. According to The Daily Yomiuri, their plan was to videotape the exact moment when the very first apple fell.

The sapling was planted and produced a single apple. The researchers set up a video camera. All was in readiness as, day by day, the apple grew riper, getting closer to the big moment. And then, it happened: A local resident, who knew nothing about this, wandered by, and ate the apple.

So the researchers never did get to videotape the apple falling in a historic manner, although the article states that "they did get scenes of the man munching on the apple." The man is quoted as saying: "It just tasted really bad."

But this doesn't mean the project was a waste. Often, in science, so-called "failures" produce the greatest discoveries. This project resulted in a discovery whose value to humanity can't be overemphasized. I refer to the fact that "Shy Fruiter and the Saplings" would be a great name for a rock band.

© 1997 THE MIAMI HERALD
DISTRIBUTED BY TRIBUNE MEDIA SERVICES, INC

Dr. Carl Gombert

Mrs. Spiderman

Residential fines unfair

by Sarah West
Editor

Residence life is a group of wonderful people who have accomplished some wonderful things this year. Their whole attitude is so much better than it has been in the past. Students are not treated as children, but as the budding adults we are. If we are old enough to vote, drink, and die for our country, I think residence life can communicate with us appropriately. Fortunately, the whole residence life situation has become infinitely better, but some of the policies have not.

Have you ever wondered how much money residence life policies will have cost you by the time you graduate. I bet it's a few hundred dollars. I'm talking about fines, and I imagine most of you have never committed the offenses for which the fines were given. Last I checked, RA's don't have to pay the fines; however, even if you can prove that you were out of the country when some very immature, probably drunk person decided to punch a whole in Carnegie's wall, you still have to pay, or you don't get your grades and some other important stuff.

Somebody is getting screwed, and it's probably you.

That old philosophy about all pay for one's crime because the one offender won't come forward is . . . dilapidated and unfair. I'm a student. I don't have a job. I'm certain my parents do not appreciate paying even more money to this school, because somebody decided to do something stupid.

Alternative solution? Students with disciplinary problems, assuming these are the rotten troublemakers who let everyone else pay for their crimes, should be put in one crappy residence hall, like Gamble for instance. Try for one semester, and see if the shape of the other residence halls and the frame of the other residents' minds doesn't improve.

The Highland Echo

The weekly voice of Maryville College - Founded 1914

VOL. LXXXII, NO. 12

Tuesday, April 1, 1997

502 East Lamar Alexander Pkwy, Maryville, TN 37804

Commuter Senators Yosef Addis and Adam Shepherd dispute use of funds.

Commuter senators brawl over funds

After a recent senate meeting, two commuter senators, Yosef Addis and Adam Shepherd, had an argument about the use of the commuter fund that led to a brawl in front of Fayerweather Hall.

Addis thought the money should be used to help make international students feel more welcome on campus through all-night lock-ins in the Commuter Lounge.

"Many of them are commuters, and the ones who aren't are commuting from another country," insisted Addis.

However, Shepherd believed that the money should be used to fund political awareness among commuters.

"If commuters are made aware of what's going on in this country, I'm convinced they'll vote right," said Shepherd.

Chief Eldria Hurst was called in to break up the fight.

"You ought to settle your differences in a more peaceful manner," Hurst told them. "This isn't the sixties."

Addis and Shepherd then proceeded to hug and say peace. During Addis' lock-ins, Shepherd may hand out information regarding American politics.

Bad as he wantsta be! the Downs world tour

By Christi Stalans and Joey Cody, Reporters

For those of you party people who were in another universe over spring break and are clueless about the numerous buses and billboards with musical genius David Downs' multicolored head plastered all over them, here's the rundown:

On Mar. 22, it just so happened that a rep from the label RatRazor

Records was at Flamingo's downtown and got a yummy earful of intense local band, Synge, led by Downs on lead vocals. Downs' frenzied screams and rough good looks mesmerized Razor scout Chris "The Conman" Corbin. They were signed on the spot, flown to L.A. to record with Shecky Mufflebime (a.k.a. Mr. Platinum), and sent on a world tour immediately. The first celebrity fan on hand to rave over the shock rockers' music was none other than Dennis Rodman, eclectic basketball star and all-around attention-starved maniac. This was a dream come true for Downs, who has idolized the man and his controversial style.

Rodman and Downs are reportedly hanging out regularly now (check out the Worm in Synge's MTV video for their first hit single, "Coma Girl"), which would explain Downs' walking out on stage at a recent Reykjavik concert sporting a brand-spanking-new and very flattering testicular piercing. When asked why he did it and if it would affect his music, he answered: "Dude, I don't know. It makes me rock harder. My dad got one too."

Downs, along with the rest of the Synge crew, has recently been spotted at posh New York clubs with

"Dude, we'll never forget our fans at Maryville College who've supported us from the beginning! I LOVE you, man!"
-Senior Dave Downs

notorious supermodel Fluffy dangling off his muscular biceps. Although the tour has been hectic, Downs took time out on Mar. 30 to visit friends, putting on a show exclusively for Maryville College and attending a dinner party hosted by Dr. and Mrs. Gibson. "Dr. G-Money ROCKS!" Downs said respectfully.

We finally caught up with the non-stop Downs backstage in Dallas.

"Wow. What a spring break!" said Downs while autographing a groupie's left breast. "I had planned on that fascinating alternative spring break identifying and classifying cat parasites in Sheboygan, but this has completely blindsided me!" And he adds (with a huge smile displaying his three gold teeth), "Dude, we'll never forget our fans at Maryville College who've supported us from the beginning! I LOVE you, man!"

Downs' plans for the future include the strategic purchase of MC which would follow a brief academic hiatus during which he will reflect on his success, and recover from the horrors of senior thesis as well as the hazardous prevalence of toxic mystery farts in the computer lab. There have even been rumors of an NBA tryout and plans are currently in the works for an action flick starring Downs and none other than French pinchboxing sensation Pierre du Pecs.

Illustrious designer Jean-Paul Gaudy has also been pursuing Downs for a signature halter top and hotpants line.

In addition to all this, Synge dreams of touring with infamous acid rock band, Korn-Pops.

Despite this whirlwind turn of events and the Cinderella treatment, Downs seems to be taking all the overwhelming attention in stride; he remains refreshingly humble. The man still puts one leg into his sequined kilt at a time, just like the rest of us.

"Dude, what color should I go with tonight," he asks seriously, checking out his rastalocks and touching up his purple eyeliner in the mirror. "The Salmon or the Cerulean?"

You can next catch Synge making a charity appearance at the "Sick Little Puppies" Benefit in Prague, Apr. 3.

Congrats, Dave! (You're not in the market for a wedding dress yet, are ya?)

Inside

Community Forum.....	2
Senate.....	2
Literacy.....	3
Baseball.....	4
Crossword.....	5
Kazu on eating.....	7
Dave Barry.....	8

Highlights

News.....	2,3
Sports.....	4
Classifieds.....	5
Features.....	6
Op/Ed.....	7,8

APRIL FOOL'S! FRONT PAGE ONLY.

MC Covenant revised to include faculty, staff

by Tonya Briggs
Reporter

The Maryville College Covenant is one of the most important documents to the community. However, it is about to change. There are plans to revise the covenant to include not only students, but faculty and staff also.

Dr. William Seymour, vice president of student development, and a committee from student senate compose the College Covenant task force. The reason for the changes is to make the covenant a more integral part of the MC community.

Seymour, co-chair of the task force, said, "The task force is primarily trying to change some of the wording to apply to more of the community as a whole."

The task force consists of David Wagner, chief justice, Kerry O'Keefe, senior class president, Andrew Johnson, senate parliamentarian, Staci Kerr, junior class president, Rev. Stephen Nickle, MC chaplain, Richard Brand, admissions counselor, Dr. Larry Smithee, associate professor of music, Debbie Nichols, catalog librarian, Jarred Younger, junior class senator and co-chair, and Seymour.

So far they have made structural changes, such as punctuation. They have also changed some of the wording to make it a more inclusive document, like changing "students" to "scholars."

Younger stated, "Our ultimate goal is to make the covenant a concept and not just a document."

The task force plans to conduct three forums, one for students, one for faculty, and one for staff. After these forums, the committee will combine suggestions and take another revision.

If you have any suggestions concerning the covenant, attend the student forum Wednesday, Apr. 2 at 8 p.m.

Senate assists BSA, discusses constitution

by Sherrie Brents
Reporter

Student senate met on Mar. 20 to hear proposals from the concert choir and the Black Student Association, as well as the constitution committee.

The proposal from the concert choir, sponsored by Adam Shepherd, commuter senator, requested $2,000 to purchase new risers for performances. However, Shepherd asked the proposal be struck from the agenda and added to the next meeting; the request was approved.

Freshman Senator Smith-Jean Philippe presented a proposal for $500 on behalf of BSA to help fund their spring retreat. The retreat is used to plan next year's events, as well as to unite the members of the organization. The proposal passed with little opposition.

The constitution committee also brought the proposed changes to the constitution before senate. The senate members were able to select and discuss the portions of the constitution that they questioned. Such suggestions included striking the clause that makes it necessary to approve all proposals that are passed through senate. Other changes involve filling senate positions that are vacated throughout the year. Also, an attendance policy for senate members, an impeachment policy, and allowing a sophomore with one year of senate experience to be either the senate president or vice president were discussed.

The following is the revised covenant:

Preface

Maryville College is related to the Presbyterian Church (USA) in a voluntary covenant. The college community, in the name of Jesus Christ, seeks to challenge all human beings to search for truth, to work for justice, to develop wisdom, and to become loving persons. To amplify noble ideals, the student body has developed its own covenant and invites the community to join in this set of ideals. The covenant symbolizes the fusion of basic values and ideals that people of all beliefs share. The heart of the covenant lies in commitment to integrity, responsibility of global citizenship, and appreciation of diversity. Individuals of high ethical standards do not lie, cheat, or steal. They realize their responsibilities as members of the global community and are diligent in fulfilling them. They recognize that tolerance implies no lack of commitment to their own beliefs; rather it condemns the oppression and persecution of others.

The covenant began as an idea in the Student Senate in 1990 and its spirit is maintained by the student body. Today it is a reflection of the values and ethics to which the community aspires. As the community evolves, so will the covenant.

Covenant

Maryville College is a community for learning that challenges individuals to grow in academic competence, personal and social maturity, and spiritual discernment and commitment. Our community has an obligation and responsibility involving relationships and mutual understanding, appreciation, and respect. As scholars, we strive to maintain a high level of academic integrity. As learners, we aspire to be responsible men and women of strong moral character. As members of a spiritual community, we continue to develop an acute awareness of our individual faith while fostering a sensitivity and understanding of all faiths.

We esteem:

Scholarship

to pursue lifelong goals of education and scholarship;

Respect

to respect and appreciate the diversity of our community and the global community, to respect the rights of others be they property, privacy, opinion, or expression;

Integrity

to act with integrity in all interactions—academic, personal, and beyond, to encourage and support my fellow learners as they aspire to be honest in their academic endeavors, as well as their personal relationships.

I affirm:

These standards are vital to my continued growth as a person. I realize that nothing is achieved by those from whom nothing is expected and recognize that constantly challenging myself to become a better person is the only way to achieve that end. With this in mind, I, entering into a covenant with all other members of the Maryville College community, vow to uphold the principles described herein.

The Highland Echo

Editor

Sarah H. West

Production Editor

Patrick E. Leslie

Copy Editor

Sarah Christians

Sports Editor

Joe Malheiro

Staff Writers

Sherrie Brents, Tonya Briggs, Shannon Bryant, Joey Cody, Carol Denning, David Downs, Dave Dupont, Chuck Gilkey, Brian Hastings, Andy Hoover, Kristi Johnson, Lori Leffel, Caroline Leggett, Andy Long, LaToyia Lundy, Rissa Miller, Kazu Nakane, Dallas Rightmeyer, Sun-Im Ryu, Kim Schuenemann, Michelle Shuler, Adam Shepherd, Christi Stalans, and Traci Tidwell

Public Relations Coordinator

Michelle Shuler

Photo Staff

Keli Jennett and Jenny Oxford

Cartoonists

Carl Gombert

Faculty Advisor

Jeff Gary

Please send letters to the editor, comments, suggestion, or story leads to box #2247.

Phone

981-8176

E-Mail

Swest75@aol.com

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 500 words.

Clinton plans "army" of college tutors to battle illiteracy

By Adolfo Mendez
College Press Service

SAN FRANCISCO—Why can't Johnny read? Because he doesn't know the alphabet.

At least that's what 24-year-old Jennifer Zeffaro discovered when she tutored a first-grade class in Hayward, Calif.

"A couple of kids . . . were really far behind," recalled Zeffaro, a senior at San Francisco State University. "They didn't even know their alphabets so they certainly couldn't read at a first-grade level."

Zeffaro, who wants to be an elementary school teacher, said she tried all she could to help the two children Tuesday and Thursday mornings, her scheduled days to volunteer.

"One child improved, the other had too many behavioral problems," Zeffaro said.

In fact, some 40 percent of American children are not reading at their age level by the end of third grade. By working as a tutor, Zeffaro spent last semester doing what President Clinton wants to see duplicated nationwide in September.

The President said he hopes to enlist 100,000 college students in his "army of tutors" to help combat literacy problems in America. But unlike case of Zeffaro—who was strictly a volunteer—Clinton seeks to tap into college work-study funds to pay students who get involved with tutoring.

Last fall, Congress boosted college work-study funds 35 percent to $830 million, creating 250,000 new work-study positions for the 1997-98 academic year.

Clinton is asking, not mandating, that schools use at least 50 percent of the new money to implement the college tutoring plan, called "America Reads Challenge."

While schools are not required to use the funds to set up student tutor programs, they do have a financial incentive.

That's because under current work-study rules, schools receive 75 percent of the wages for a work-study student from the federal government, but must match the remaining 25 percent. The federal government would pick up the full tab when students are placed as reading tutors for children.

San Francisco State has announced it will devote the entirety of its increase, about $180,000, to college tutors. The university's president, Robert Corrigan, heads a committee of 21 university presidents set up to devise ways to implement the program. The group includes the presidents of New York University, Georgetown University, University of North Carolina and Ohio State University.

More than 70 universities have pledged to participate in the "America Reads" program. Aside from devoting a portion of work-study funds to pay for reading tutors, the universities must agree to encourage students who aren't in the work-study program to also volunteer.

While many universities are content to accept additional work-study funds with no federal mandates about how to run the tutoring program, some educators are concerned about whether the program will work.

"It's a good thing to get college students involved in tutoring. It's just that there's no chance at all that it will actually solve the [literacy] problem," says Robert E. Slavin, director of the Center for Research on the Education of Students Placed at Risk at John Hopkins University.

"It's hard to imagine why kids would be in school six hours a day, not learning to read and all of a sudden a college tutor comes a couple times a week and the kids learn to read," Slavin said. "It's not realistic."

Slavin says the Clinton plan ignores research on how kids learn to read, and he criticizes the administration for not putting an emphasis on solving problems in the classroom.

"What is fundamental is not what the tutors do or what the parents do. To have ineffective instruction all day is at the heart of the problem," he said. "I think there's a big job to be done in terms of giving teachers better teaching materials. A lot of teachers could use a lot of help in classroom management."

Teachers say they're worried college students might be taking on too large a task.

"We are all very concerned about how far they expect the tutors to go in what is a pretty highly skilled role," said Mary Bergan, president of the California Federation of Teachers.

College students also may have to grapple with the controversial issue of what's the best method for teaching reading, says Marsha Nye-Adler, an education specialist at San Francisco State.

"Will it be the higher educa-

Students with low GPA's can sell themselves big, counselors say

By Colleen DeBaise
College Press Service

DELAND, Fla.—On her resume, Stetson University senior Meredith Preuss boasts of her computer skills and biology labwork. But there's one thing she's left off: her G.P.A.

That's because, Preuss, 22, carries a 2.9 out of 4.0—not a grade-point average that typically catches a potential employer's attention.

"I know grades count but employers are interested in 'well-rounded' people," she said. "Someone who can't handle the stress or failure is a little scary."

Although many employers view a high G.P.A. as a way to predict success in the workplace, not every student graduates with a 4.0. For students with a less-than-perfect academic record, learning how to tailor your resume can mean the difference between a job offer and a rejection letter.

Rebecca Emery, career services director at Salisbury State University, says students should always focus on the positive on their resume. That means, "if your grade-point average is well below the 3.0 level, leave it off," she said. "Universities need to know what the [public elementary] schools in the area are using [to teach children]," she said. Then, they should follow the school's lead.

Even if students are clear on the appropriate reading method, the Clinton program expects too much of college students, says Jennifer Schindler, principal of El Vista Elementary School in Modesto, Calif.

"To require students to do this work is a bit much," said Schindler, who employs four tutors who are certified teachers. "I'm not putting down volunteerism—we work with volunteers—but you get what you pay for. I don't think that's what's going to take care of our literacy problem."

She added: "You need to have people who know what they're talking about to help these kids. It's a lot more than just tutoring. Kids have a difficult time coming to school when they have problems at home. So a tutor coming twice a week is not going to help."

But the program can work, insists San Francisco State's Nye-Adler. "There are no [federal] requirements, no guidelines, nothing. So universities will organize their programs in the way that they see fit," she said. "They'll use many models, work through many resources, to train [college] students to support children in the reading program."

Zeffaro, the San Francisco State senior, says students can make a difference. "I guess any way you can get people into the classroom to help these kids would be good," she said.

grade-point average."

Real world experience through internships, cooperative education or volunteer experience can compensate for your grades, notes Ursula Hibbert, career counselor at Champlain College.

"Employers look at these as a true indication of ability," she said. "A good employment history—even when it's not career-related—can show determination and a willingness to work hard in pursuit of goals."

Students should use their college's alumni network to help them get over the low-grades hurdle, says Will Smith, career services director at Wartburg College.

"That way professors who are familiar with your abilities can make recommendations to alumni which may help you get your foot in the door," he said.

Of course, the best track to take is to have everything: strong academics, activities and experience, says Frank J. Kollar, director of career development and placement services at Mansfield University.

"The bottom line is that if your grades are lacking, you better have something else of significance to offer an employer," he said.

said.

In some cases, the G.P.A. in a student's academic major may be significantly higher than the overall G.P.A. In such a case, students should include their major G.P.A. on the resume, Emery said.

For instance, Preuss plans to include the G.P.A. in her biology major, a respectable 3.4, on her resume when she applies for jobs in the science field. "That's the one that matters," she said.

Emery adds that students can even separate their upper level G.P.A. from the overall G.P.A. to show employers what they have accomplished in their last two years.

Top-end jobs, however, do look closely at your overall grade-point average, warns Michelle Ohayon, director of the Career Resource Center at Nova Southeastern University.

"Your grade-point average matters a great deal if you're hoping to work in a technical field such as engineering or in the sciences," she said. "If you're going into journalism, employers are more interested in your writing samples. If you're going into sales, your personality matters more than your

Scots win Spring Break Invitational

by Joe Malheiro
Sports Editor

The 1997 edition of the Fighting Scots baseball team passed their first big test of the young season by winning the MC Spring Break Invitational, played on March 22-23 here at Maryville College. The Scots, led by experience, competed against the likes of Bethany College of West Virginia, Oberlin College and Urbana University, bringing home the championship in the second game on Sunday March 23.

While on break, the Scots also delivered a big win on the 27th, by defeating arch rival Sewanee. The Scots crushed Sewanee, continuing their great run during the spring break stretch of the season. The win against Sewanee was big for the confidence of the Scots, a team that is continually gaining confidence as they head into the heart of their season. The Scots have a number of key home games in the coming weeks. These key games include:

April 5: Tusculum
April 5: Greensboro
April 6: Greensboro
April 8: Lee College
April 12: Savannah College of Art and Design

April 5 will be a double header day for the Scots as they take on Tusculum College in the afternoon and Greensboro College at night beginning at 7pm. The Scots will then take on Greensboro again in the morning on April 6, and will round out their long homestand on the evening of April 8 at 6pm against Lee College.

The Scots will return home on April 12 to take on SCAD in an afternoon game beginning at 3:30. Student support is a key to helping the Scots to victory and team members are hopeful that attendance at the upcoming home games will be high and fans will bring the necessary excitement to create a good atmosphere for baseball.

Lady Scot's Softball Schedule

April 4-6: Ferrum College Tournament in Salem VA

April 9: Tennessee Wesleyan College in Athens Tennessee 4 & 6 pm.

April 12: Home against Savannah College of Art and Design at 3pm.

April 13: Home against Savannah College of Art and Design at 1 & 3 pm.

Scot's Baseball Schedule

April 5: *doubleheader* Tusculum at home, 2 pm; Greensboro at home, 7pm

April 6: Greensboro at home, 11 am

April 8: Lee College at home, 6 pm

April 12: Savannah College of Art and Design at home, 3:30 pm

Summitt, Lady Vols, the MC connection: Simply the Best

by Joe Malheiro
Sports Editor

Now, before I begin, I would like to start by saying that two MC students who are friends of mine, one an athlete, have convinced me to write this column about the Lady Vol basketball program, even though I am attempting to get away from writing about UT sports all together. I felt my friends had a point, so here I go.

Last night, I along with many East Tennesseans, sat down and watched a marvel of a team and a marvel of a coach, bring home a fifth national championship title to Knoxville and the University of Tennessee. However, the Lady Vols are much more than just a good team, they are a dynasty and a model for all. Heck, even Maryville College has a major tie to Lady Vol basketball.

Our very own Kelli Casteel Cook, Lady Scots head basketball coach, is a Pat Summitt protege. Coach Cook played a key role in the Lady Vols run to their second national championship in 1989, and she brought the winning style of Lady Vol basketball to the MC campus. But let's get back to coach Summitt.

All good athletic teams are a reflection of the quality of their coach. The Lady Vols, featuring Pat Summitt who is arguably the best coach in the country, reflected the actions and style of their famed head coach brilliantly in their run to a second consecutive national championship. Throughout the season, many people, including Summitt, wrote-off the Lady Vols feeling that this was simply not Pat Summitt's year. After all, the Lady Vols were last year's national champions, and they lost their all-American back-court of Latina Davis and Michelle Marciniak. Most felt after their uncharacteristic 10-6 start, that the Lady Vols were going to experience a rebuilding year which would have them dwelling on the brink of mediocrity. Many fans had doubts. Many fans were wrong.

Finishing the season at 29-10, the Lady Vols are this year's national champions. Believe it or not, they came one loss short of holding the record for having the most losses by a Pat Summitt team in her 23 years. The record is 11 losses in a season. As a matter of fact, the Lady Vols broke their own record Sunday night. The record they broke: the first team in NCAA women's basketball history to win a national championship with 10 losses. The old record: nine losses by the 1989 Tennessee Lady Vols.

In addition to their unparalleled success on the court, the Lady Vols also have had great success off the court. In her 23 years at Tennessee, Pat Summitt has never failed to graduate a player that made their career at UT. Her team shows great discipline on the court and off. Her players remain students as well as athletes. This is a group that is following the example of their tireless leader.

Pat Summitt, a coach, a mom and a leader has taken her style and molded her team to reflect her tremendous actions. As a dedicated mom who left the bench to take her son in her arms immediately following their victory, Summitt is also a great leader and contributor to our community. Having been the co-chairperson of this year's United Way campaign in Knoxville, the city's most successful campaign yet, Summitt is giving back to the community that has been her biggest fan since day one when she was hired 23 years ago.

Speaking on behalf of the community I say thank-you Pat for your success, your leadership and your courage. Congratulations! You and your team are simply the best.

Part-Time Job Announcements

1st TN Bank has several openings available. All positions require 10-key skills. Hours and pay vary according to position. Stop by Career Services and ask about Job 202.

Construction workers needed. This position has possibilities for summer employment. Monday-Friday with possible weekends. Start ASAP. $7-10/hr Job

DRB Reports

On 2/26: One MC student and one non-MC student were charged with violating the visitation policy in Gamble. They received a warning.

On 2/28: One student in Gamble was charged with disorderly conduct. The student was sentenced to 10 hours of community service and probation until May 15.

On 3/19: One student was charged with violating the visitation policy in Gamble. The case is pending.

On 3/20: One student was charged with violating the visitation policy in Davis. The case is pending.

The Other Record Shop

Buy * Sell * Trade
New, Used & Collectibles
Cassettes, CD's, Records
2131 E. Broadway, Maryville
(located in the Bi-Lo Shopping Center)

Trade for new releases!
977-9959

203.

Clerk/Assistant needed. Heritage Office Supply and the Copy Shop need someone Monday-Friday from 8:30-5:30. $5.00/hr with raise after 6-8 weeks. Duties vary. Ask about Job 204.

Summer Jobs

Some summer placement possibilities have arrived. If you are interested in finding summer work, please come the Career Services Office for more information. Some possibilities include childcare/nanny positions, camp placements, and forestry aide.

Internships

Anyone interested in finding an internship should come to Career Services and set up an appointment with Andy Lewter. Remember, time is running out.

On Campus Interviews

Don't forget to sign up for an interview with NBC Bank. Someone will be coming to interview on April 3rd. Call ext. 8220 to sign up for an interview time.

Mass Mutual will be holding its "Southern Region College Career Day" on April 11, 1997 from 10:00 am to 12:00 pm. This will be in Knoxville. If you are interested call or stop by Career Services to sign up.

THE Crossword

ACROSS
1 Beer
5 Sow
10 Masticate
14 Waste allowance
15 Wireless
16 Legendary knowledge
17 Culture medium
18 Arabian ruler
19 Abstract being
20 Free
22 Made
24 Simian
25 Condescend
26 One without title
30 Envisioned
34 Malt drinks
35 Seafood item
37 Mistake
38 Free from 39 Storm
41 Female deer
42 Escape by deceit
44 Very dry
45 Flowerless plant
46 Take out
48 Kept
50 Remorseful
52 Metal
53 Followers
56 Farmer's book
60 Unrefined metals
61 Flying machine
63 Donated
64 Money maker
65 Aggressive person
66 Fibbed
67 Favorites
68 Packs away
69 Otherwise

DOWN
1 Headliner
2 Goad
3 Business transaction
4 Flows steadily
5 Attendance
6 Metallic fabric
7 Summer drink
8 Family member
9 Very hot

© 1997 Tribune Media Services, Inc.
All rights reserved.

10 Clothing fresher
11 Party giver
12 Gaelic
13 Unwanted plant
21 Military address
23 Plumed bird
25 Window covering
26 Showed interest in 27 Shade of green
28 Award
29 Shade trees
31 English forest
32 Mary Tyler —
33 Movement in fashion
36 Pure
39 Grand —, WY
40 Homesteaders
43 Stops
45 Obtain by deceit
47 Explodes
49 Goal
51 Kindled again
53 Frolic

ANSWERS

54 Great Lake
55 Camp shelter
56 Once again
57 Metal fastener
58 Sits.
59 Surrender possession
62 In the past

THE VOICE

The woods whisper my name,
And the creek provides the harmony
To the music of the cardinal.
The further I get away,
The closer I become one with this hollow.
Chappell's Prayer becomes real in my thoughts,
And I can see Still's River
When I stand on the Rock Face and look about.
The words of Thoreau and Emerson echo
Throughout this hollow;
The voice calls.
I must answer as they did.

-David Golden

Activity Calendar

Tuesday, April 1 April Fools Day

>11 a.m. CCM: Worship Service
>3 p.m. FAYL: CS-Choosing a Major
>6 p.m. MC: wall climb

Wednesday, April 2

>6 p.m. MC: wall climb

Thursday, April 3

>11 a.m. FACM: Community Forum
>12:30 p.m. Senate Mtg. CCM
>1 p.m. FAYL: CS-resume writing
>6 p.m. MC: wall climb

Friday, April 4

>8 p.m. FACM: Concert Choir Homecoming Concert

Saturday, April 5

>2 p.m. BB vs Tusculum-HOME
>7 p.m. BB vs Greensboro-HOME
>GYM: Karate Tournery

>Mountain Challenge: Hike/Canoe

Sunday, April 6

>11 a.m. BB vs Greensboro-HOME
>SB vs Ferrum Tournery-Away
>Daylight Savings-set clocks ahead 1 hour

Monday, April 7

>3 p.m. FAYL: CS-Job Searching
>8:30 p.m. FACM: SPB $1 Movie—"Jerry McGuire"

Activity Briefs

On Tuesday, Apr. 1 Career Services will be giving a seminar on "Choosing a Major" at 3 p.m. in Fayweather Lounge.

On Friday, Apr. 4 the MC Concert Choir will be giving their homecoming concert. The concert will take place at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center music hall, and admission is free.

Monday, Apr. 7 SPB will present the movie "Jerry McGuire." The movie will be shown in the FAC music hall and admission is $1.

Spotlight on Tae Jum Ahn, or TJ

by Brian Hastings
Reporter

Tae Jum Ahn, 26, is known to many as TJ, and is from Seoul, South Korea. He came to Maryville College in 1991 because his uncle, Dr. Young-Bae Kim, is a political science professor here. However, Ahn does not like politics.

This is his sixth and last year at MC. In 1994, he obtained a bachelor's degree in computer science and business. Soon after, he realized that he wanted to go into the field of medicine. Now, Ahn is studying biochemistry and has been accepted at Doctor Scholl College of Podiatry Medicine in Chicago for this fall.

"I like people. I'd like to cure people. My grandfather and mother are doctors," said Ahn. "I saw them cure people, and that inspired me."

Ahn appreciates having his uncle here, although he is trying to be independent. He did have to take East Asian Studies, which Kim taught half. Ahn said he liked the class and even made an "A."

Regarding MC, Ahn said, "It's small so the teachers can take care of their students better. There is a lot of interaction."

He also commented on the cultural atmosphere, "A lot of international students, not only Korean, are here. I can learn a lot of things about different cultures."

Dr. Carl Gombert

Besides being the disciplined student that he is, Ahn is very active with the Fellowship of Christian Athletes, the jazz band, golf, tennis, and a martial art called Aikido. He has been studying Aikido for several years. Presently he is taking classes at the University of Tennessee in Knoxville.

Ahn does not see himself permanently living in East Tennessee because he thinks this area lacks diverse, open-minded people. When asked what is his favorite city in America, he replied, "Chicago is my favorite city because when I went there the people did not see me just as an Asian in America but as a person."

"America is great," said Ahn. "I'm going to get a citizenship in America."

When asked about Korea, Ahn said, "I miss my friends and relatives, but I don't miss Korea too much. We had some political difficulties before I came to America."

Foothills Cinema 8

Return of the Jedi PG T-M 1:25, 4:20, 7:00, 9:45
The Saint PG13 F-M 1:35, 4:30, 7:05, 9:30
That Old Feeling PG13 R-M 1:40, 4:20, 7:15, 9:50
Double Teen R R-M 1:20, 3:30, 5:30, 7:35, 9:40
Liar Liar PG T-M 5:30, 7:30, 9:30
Devil's Own R T-M 4:25, 7:20, 9:40
Selena PG T-M 4:10, 7:00, 9:35
Jungle 2 Jungle PG T-M 4:30, 7:00, 9:30
Rosewood R T-M 4:15, 7:05, 9:45
The English Patient R T-M 5:00, 8:30
Power Rangers PG T-M 5:25, 7:25, 9:35
Midnight shows also, call 977-4499. $3.75 admission until 5:30 and $5.75 after; $3.75 for children anytime.

Opaque Winged Butterflies

I pry open my lead box - tearing, splintering, cracking rusted hinges; straining, separating waxen seals -
Molten rainbows - overflowing, pouring forth - oozing down the sides and spewing into the air, carried with scents of sunlight by opaque winged butterflies through the night.
Stardust sleepily descends into my eyes off each flutter of their wings.
My eyelids convulse, half shutting, repulsing from the tingling fire.
I embrace the dust
And I can see.

- Izzy Kidding

BOUJI'S

MARYVILLE'S

MOST HAPPENING COFFEEHOUSE IS NOW OPEN!

ESPRESSO CAPPUCCINO LATTE STEAMERS

BAGELS CROISSANTS PASTRIES
ETC. ETC. ETC.

*Always Fresh
Always Delicious*

Jazzberry General
205 Court Street
Phone: 984-0391

HOURS

7A.M.-7P.M. MON-THURS
7A.M.-11P.M. FRIDAY
10A.M.-11P.M. SATURDAY
IF YOU WANT SUNDAYS
LET US KNOW!!

Live music (call for schedule)

Directions: Take a right at the Court Street Exit and drive till you see us!

EARLY HARDWARE STORE

Dr. Carl Gombert

The travels of Kazu

by Kazu Nakane
Columnist

Until I became 18, I grew vertically, but now I have started growing horizontally. If this growth isn't stopped, I will be in a "Humpty-Dumpty" condition someday. NO WAY.

Fortunately or not, I have American food starting from junk like hamburgers, French fries, potato chips, then roast beef, fried chicken, mashed potatoes with gravy sauce, baked beans, ravioli, lasagna, ice cream, etc. . . . Mmm, they are so yummy.

I've gone to the American Buffet restaurant with my friends once. It was fabulous. All dishes looked so delicious that I didn't know what to choose to eat. As result, I found that I was carrying two dishes of foods heaped up. I ate them all, had an ice cream cone, and couldn't move for the rest of that day. While patting my balloon stomach, I thought I was floating between the feeling of great delight and discomfort. Of course it was natural because I ate about the same amount as a man who seemed more than twice as wide as me, sitting at the next table. The lesson I learned was it can be like duck for foie gras. The only difference between the ducks and me is ducks are forced to eat feeds, but I forced myself to eat a bunch of foods.

Gaining weight is so easy for me. I sometimes hear people say, "I really want to gain more weight, but I just can't. Tell me how."

If they said that to me, I'd kick their butts. This is a serious problem for me. However, I can't count how many times I have started a diet. Almost all of my friends have heard me say, "This is 'The Last Dinner.' I mean it this time. I'll make it, you'll see," and then I failed later. This would be funny for some people, but it's as hard as quitting smoking. This is a long, tough fight against myself.

When I shop in the supermarket, I see many weird indications on merchandise. One obvious example is "fat-free." By the way, when I first learned the word "free" as meaning "of freedom," I thought "sugar-free" products are ones into which the maker can put as much fat as he/she wants. Ahem, talking about fat-free products in the U.S., I think people have "fat-free" faith. There are many bags or jars that show "fat-free," but I also see that there are many products that have this indication in spite of the fact that they aren't related to any fat at all. People must be thinking that having this kind of product is healthy, but it's not. If you think so, you're in a trap because you have to remember that "fat-free" doesn't mean "calorie-free."

My minimum effort I give on my diet is eating more vegetables and choosing diet-sodas if not juice. However, we have to be careful; I heard a restaurant offer macaroni and cheese as "Today's vegetable."

But I like sodas here. I was surprised that diet-sodas such as Diet-Coke have no calories. It does taste pretty sweet, but the indication shows "calories—0" It is neat, but I'm still wondering whether it is true or not.

Alternative spring break proves fruitful

by Carolyn Beattie
guest columnist

For many spring break is like a breath of fresh air, but for a group of Maryville College students it has been this and much more.

Alternative Spring Breakers went to the nation's capital for a week of service, fun and sightseeing. Lincoln's Memorial, the Smithsonian Institutions, the Holocaust Museum and not forgetting the predictable group photograph outside the White House were all on the agenda.

For some visiting the nation's capital was a fulfilling experience, while for others it was a good opportunity to question the foundations that this country was established on and to find their own opinions and thoughts.

The remaining four days of the trip were divided between two service projects, the first of which was working in cooperation with Habitat for Humanity. On our journey to the work site we experienced the driving of Holly Bailey, coordinator of student activities, a.k.a. Speedy-Holly-Gonzales. We also drove past some of the nation's greatest landmarks, the Pentagon, and the Washington Monument. However barely ten minutes outside of this buzz and glamour, we drove through areas of poverty and deprivation, where people were living out of boxes and plastic shopping bags. Habitat for Humanity is a realistic means of helping people to work towards their own house in conjunction with volunteer workers.

Our tasks included painting a house, moving dry walling, shoveling dirt for a foundation, and the arduous task of insulating an entire home. One of the particularly rewarding aspects of this form of service was being able to observe the tangible results of all our hard work.

Other treasured moments included the paint wars, the ice cream truck, Alison's charismatic personality, and of course the outside the shelter; one of which was a woman guarding her few possessions with a fierce passion.

This form of service was a whole new experience for the team. We had the unique opportunity to speak with the people we were helping and see the small difference it made in their lives. In my opinion, this was not even comparable to the feeling of seeing the historical monuments, it was a feeling of hope yet hopelessness. Our efforts truly were just a skim in the water of the work that needs to be done.

Therefore, all in all, students and staff who participated in this trip have grown in many ways. We have learned new skills, observed a different way of life, and made friends with people whom we would otherwise have never known.

We have learned new skills, observed a different way of life, and made friends with people whom we would otherwise have never known.

Formula for disaster

by Dave Barry

Disaster movies are back. I watched one on TV, about asteroids slamming into the Earth and causing a devastating worldwide epidemic of bad acting. Also there are TWO disaster movies about volcanoes, including one set in Los Angeles, although I doubt that a volcano would faze REAL L.A. residents, a courageous group of people who think nothing of building luxury homes on steep hillsides made entirely of mud:

MRS. L.A. HOMEOWNER: Well, our hillside home is finally done!

MR. L.A. HOMEOWNER: Let's go inside!

(He touches the doorknob, causing the house to slide down the hillside and break into 73 million pieces.)

MR. L.A. HOMEOWNER: Not again!

MRS. L.A. HOMEOWNER: Don't feel bad! The brush fire was almost here anyway!

MR. L.A. HOMEOWNER: I know! As soon as this earthquake tremor is over, let's build another luxury home on this exact spot!

MRS. L.A. HOMEOWNER: Why ever not?

I myself have experienced only one real disaster, Hurricane Andrew, and it was considerably different from the disaster movies that I've seen. For one thing, in the movies, there's always some kind of romance interest; whereas after Hurricane Andrew, nobody in the affected area was able to take a shower for approximately two months. Everybody smelled like a cologne named Eau de Dead Goat. The most romantic thing people did during that time was refuel each other's generators.

But realism is not the point of a disaster movie. The point of a disaster movie is to have exactly the same script as every other disaster movie. Here it is:

(The movie opens in a suburban home, where the heroine is having breakfast with her adorable son.)

HEROINE: Well, it's a peaceful day! No sign of any disasters!

SON: Mom, do you have a husband or romance interest?

HEROINE: No, Bobby, although I am a top scientist and very attractive.

(The phone rings.)

HEROINE: Uh-oh! I hope that's not a worker from the lab, calling to tell me about an impending disaster!

LAB WORKER: Trish, a disaster is impending!

HEROINE: I'll be right there! (To her son:) Bobby, you stay here and be vulnerable.

SON: Mom, will the disaster end up striking this exact house and placing me in grave danger?

HEROINE: Of course! (We see an exterior shot of the White House. Inside, the president, looking grim, is holding an emergency Cabinet meeting.)

PRESIDENT: Haven't I seen that exterior shot before?

VICE PRESIDENT: It's the same one they use in the Tom Clancy movies.

PRESIDENT: OK, somebody set up the plot.

SCIENCE ADVISER: Mr. President, unless something is done, a disaster is going to strike in 90 minutes, sending miniature cars flying in all directions.

PRESIDENT: Ninety minutes! Why so long?

SCIENCE ADVISER: We need to build up the suspense.

GENERAL: Sir, we must launch a nuclear strike against Houston!

PRESIDENT: Why?

GENERAL: I hate Houston.

PRESIDENT (To the hero): Jake, you're incredibly good-looking. I want you to take your minority sidekick and get over to the laboratory immediately and develop a romance interest with the heroine. If this movie is rated "R," she can show her breasts.

HERO: I'll do what I can, sir. (The next scene is in the laboratory. The hero and heroine are staring intently at a computer screen.)

HEROINE: ... and so by using the mouse pointer, you can drag the three of clubs over onto the four of diamonds.

(A lab worker rushes up.)

LAB WORKER: Trish, the pantograph is giving us a vector plasma reading in the cosine range!

HERO: What does that mean?

HEROINE: Nothing. It's movie science gibberish. But it's time for the disaster! And my son is home alone!

(The scene shifts to the heroine's neighborhood. People are screaming; miniature cars are flying everywhere.)

HEROINE: This is terrible! Thousands of people are being killed!

HERO: It's OK! They're extras!

SON: Help! Help!

HEROINE: My God! It's Billy!

SON: No, it's Bobby!

HEROINE: Oh, right.

HERO: I'll save him!

HEROINE: Watch out for the special effects!

(The hero, dodging miniature flying cars, saves the son.)

HEROINE: Now we can be a family unit!

SON: With Val Kilmer? I thought the hero was going to be Tom Cruise.

HERO: He wasn't available.

(The final scene takes place back to the White House, where everybody is relieved.)

PRESIDENT: Whew! Although we lost 124 million people, all the main characters survived except the minority sidekick!

(The Cabinet applauds.)

GENERAL: So now can we attack Houston?

PRESIDENT: OK by me.

© 1997 THE MIAMI HERALD
DISTRIBUTED BY TRIBUNE MEDIA SERVICES, INC.

OPEN DAILY AT 4:30PM
EVERY SATURDAY
AT 11:30AM

983-0000

417 W. Broadway

What I really, really want

by Sarah Christians
Copy Editor

I sunburn in under ten minutes so I opted to spend Spring Break being an indoor slacker. This plan, coupled with an actual television, actual cable, and an actual remote led to way too many hours of MTV. Way too much MTV led to way too many observations on the media, pop culture, and the crap people will consider music.

The media sucks. Technically, I could be considered part of the media, but I'm an humanities major; I don't have to get technical. Anyway, after four days of Serena Altschul's vapid news reporting, I nearly drove to New York to ask MTV execs if they were on crack. My thought was that if they were, I would suggest that they offer some to anyone who watched their programming. For every video they show, they show about of 12 minutes of commercials. Also, I'm counting worthless songs and videos, since they're usually worse than commercials.

Pop culture is wrapped up in commercials, too. The only thing any of the commercials prompted me to do or influenced me to buy was change the channel and boycott Sprite products. I was watching the program Loveline (great party game: sit around with your pals and think up extremely sexually deviant problems and call to ask Dr. Drew for his approval) with a friend who said, "If they show one more commercial, they're going to lose two viewers." Sure enough, their last ditch effort at getting anyone to watch the Jenny McCarthy (icky!) show counted. The world sees us, the "don't call me Generation X" millennials as whiny, puerile, and lost without Nike/Pepsi/Nintendo/Airwalk/whatever is hip in the next ten minutes. And we stand for this because...?

As for crap music, it counts as commercials. They're just advertising a body type and sound with no more originality than the Brady Bunch on speed. You know what this music is: the Spice Girls. I'll tell you what I really, really want. I want you to go back to England and tell good britpop groups like Dodgy, the Manic Street Preachers, and Ocean Colour Scene to come over here and release some more good tunes.

Since I have to add some sort of redeeming social message to this, I would ask that we all watch what we watch. If we don't like it, and we're loud enough about it, they'll take it away. And hopefully, they'll reconsider thinking us incorrigible and lazy and realize that the millennial generation have brains in their pockets. So, step one: The Spice Girls; just say no!

The Highland Echo

The weekly voice of Maryville College - Founded 1914

VOL. LXXXII, NO. 13

Tuesday, April 8, 1997

502 East Lamar Alexander Pkwy, Maryville, TN 37804

Senior thesis: 49 years and counting

by Sarah Christians
Copy Editor

"One of the distinguishing features of Maryville College is the senior thesis," said Pam Bunde, senior thesis editor. This year, Maryville College celebrates the 49th anniversary of senior thesis, something rarely required for an undergraduate degree.

Former President Wilson brought the outline for the thesis from Princeton.

"It started out as an honors program," said Bunde. Even before that, it was a replacement for those students who would not speak at commencement. That was discontinued in 1910, on recommendation of the faculty.

But the current thesis requirement is here to stay, though a senior thesis committee does review policies. "We've talked to various alumni and they're all adamant. Don't drop it!" said Bunde.

"For many students, it seems like...the most grudgery," said Bunde. But she also notes that for many students, the thesis is the key to a good job or graduate program.

And senior thesis is not without its humorous anecdotes. "It's a study where a student trained a goldfish to swim through a maze and before they could complete the thesis, it died," said Bunde. Often, it seems, biology majors have a hard time with their research subjects dying.

"The big deal now is undergraduate research," said Dr. Martha Craig, associate dean. And every faculty member on campus will note that requiring every student to complete a thesis is very unusual.

Thesis topics can be broad, ranging from Carol Denning's caffeine study and alumna Julia Cain's analysis of human breast milk to Eric Obermiller's work on social justice in the Old Testament and alum John Fisher's 293 page, "The Comic Element in Shakespeare: An Analysis."

John Fisher, now Dr. Fisher, a retired professor emeritus at the University of Tennessee and author of MC's standard Chaucer text, said, "The most important expression most of us have is the written language." And what better, more permanent form of communication is there than thesis? "[Senior thesis] is the best part of an education," said Fisher.

Proposal for concert choir fails

by Sherrie Brents
Reporter

Adam Shepherd, commuter senator, presented a proposal on behalf of the concert choir at the twelfth senate meeting. The proposal from the concert choir failed with five votes in favor, four abstentions, and five votes opposed to the proposal. The meeting, held on Apr. 3, also included approving the revised Constitution.

Shepherd requested $2,000, to be used to purchase new risers, on behalf of the concert choir. Shepherd explained that choir members are presently using old, homemade boxes as risers. Sara Baker, Davis Hall Senator, described the boxes for the members of senate. Baker said they did not allow for movement and were uncomfortable to stand on. Shepherd also said Voices of Praise, as well as the Maryville-Alcoa College-Community Orchestra would be able to use the risers. Dr. William Seymour, vice president of student development, informed the senate members the choir does fall under the academic program and has the right to request funds for the risers from the academic program. Seymour stressed that passing the proposal would set a precedent.

The constitution committee brought the revised constitution before senate. The changes suggested at the previous meeting were made and presented. To present the constitution to the Board of Directors, the process of voting to accept the amendments has begun. The changes were approved during this meeting, and one more vote will be taken.

Survey says students satisfied

by Sarah West
Editor

And the survey says . . . Maryville College students are more satisfied in all categories than the average student at a four-year private institution. The survey, a nationally-normed student satisfaction inventory by Noel Levitz, a research development group for higher education, was given out during January term, and the results are better than those received in 1995.

An important reason MC began participating in the survey was the retention problem. It is used to help plan budget and program priorities, said Dr. Martha Craig, associate dean.

"What were particularly happy about, in terms of student satisfaction, is in each one of these categories our students are more satisfied than the national average," said Craig.

Residence life received the biggest increase in satisfaction. Students are 16.22 percent more satisfied with the living conditions on campus and 21.62 percent more satisfied with the hall regulations than they were before.

"This [improvement in residence life satisfaction] is something we're just really proud of," said Craig. The college has spent a lot of money on projects such as Beeson Village and other campus improvements.

An insider's view of renovations on Anderson Hall.

Concerning instructional effectiveness, students rated MC higher than the national average in 1995, and the satisfaction increased by 2.97 percent.

"With advising, of all the categories, our students are most satisfied with that aspect," said Craig.

With health services, satisfaction with the staff jumped 18.26 percent.

By 10.66 percent, students say they feel more a sense of belonging than they did in 1995.

Students also feel safer than they did. Students are 12.47 percent more satisfied that tuition is a worthwhile investment.

Students are most dissatisfied with parking. Satisfaction decreased by 2.32 percent from 1995 to 1997. "I'm confused about the response about parking," said Craig. "People can't drive to class if that's the issue."

"I think what you see is a reflection of money well-spent," said Craig of the recent survey. "I think what it does is give students a voice."

Inside

Community Forum.2
GMAT.....2
Plagiarism.....3
Baseball.....4
Crossword.....5
Downs on suicide..7
Dave Barry.....8

Highlights

News.....2,3
Sports.....4
Calendar.....5
Features.....5, 6
Op/Ed.....7,8

Livingstone dispels myth of distressed damsels

by Rissa Miller
Reporter

"A Distant Mirror: The Real Women of the Middle Ages" was the title of History Professor Dr. Amy Livingstone's community forum lecture on April 3. Anyone who has had a class with Livingstone knows one of her passions is the study of Medieval women. She revels in dispelling popular images of these women and showing the similarities between the women of the Middle Ages and the women of the Twentieth Century.

Livingstone began the lecture by asking, "When you think of the Middle Ages and you think of medieval women, what kind of women do you think of?" The replies included the popular images of damsels in distress, nuns, queens, and dirty peasant women. From there, Livingstone began slowly tearing down the perception of the repressed medieval woman. She portrayed these women as the roots of the family, sponsors of the arts, artists themselves, political participants, and spiritual role models and guides.

Livingstone agreed with Eileen Power in her description of the partnership between peasant women and their husbands as having a "rough-and-ready equality." Using slides throughout her presentation—despite warnings of her klutzy technical abilities—she demonstrated the equal division of labor among all family members, despite gender. Livingstone emphasized the importance in each job in order to keep things running smoothly. In this social class, there was deep sense of shared responsibility.

Livingstone stressed the fact that females in the nobility also shared responsibility with their husbands. The woman was considered a vital part of the family. She raised the children, aided in running the estate, kept the account books in order, and, at times, elevated the family economically and socially through marriage. She made decisions concerning the estate whenever her husband was not present. She was the partner to her husband in every way. Livingstone told a story of one noble who asked his wife's opinion on anything that he did, no matter if they were apart or together. He would send messengers to her, then wait for the answer before giving his decision. Livingstone compared this family to today's commuter family. The wife takes care of the house when her husband is gone; she is the caretaker, bookkeeper, and disciplinarian at all times.

Medieval women were not only influential within the family, according to Livingstone. They were also deeply involved in the politics of their various countries. They were at the center of the blood and gore of the dangerous game of politics. They used their influence and their skills to gain what they wanted—both queen and slaves of the king alike. They were not separated or shielded from the brutality of politics. Rather they were thrust into the middle of all the sly, and often bloodthirsty, intrigue as equals to their male counterparts.

Livingstone explained that religious women were usually the reason for the conversion of many kings to Christianity, resulting in its spread across several countries. They created new forms of Christian expression and acted as visionaries in the conversion of pagans. Secular women, too, had a great deal of influence in religion. They were supporters of the poor and defenders of Christianity. It was considered the wife's duty, in fact, to make sure the husband conformed to God's law and to rebuke when he did not.

Women were essential in the realm of the arts. They were significant economic backers of various artists and major contributors in their own right. They were sculptors, painters, and authors. They also helped in the building of cathedrals. It was, according to Livingstone, a woman—a German nun—who is considered responsible for the revival and resurrection of drama.

Thus, as Livingstone showed, women from the Middle Ages truly represent a distant mirror to the modern woman. They were characterized by their actions, their judgments, and their rebellions. Therefore, as Steven Ozment said, "There may be worlds of difference between yesterday and today, but the past is not a different world . . . we discover ourselves there under altered conditions."

After June 21, the paper and pencil GMAT is dead

GMAT goes to computer, but paper & pencil test scores are good for five years, says Kaplan

NEW YORK, NY—You took your SATs in a cavernous room filled with other nervous students hunched over their grid sheets, gripping their pencils tightly. You thought that taking the Graduate Management Admissions Test (GMAT) for business school would be like deja vu. Think again. The GMAT is being put on computer, and your last chance to take the paper and pencil test is June 21.

"There are big differences between the paper and pencil GMAT and the computer test. For example, students can't skip around on the computer test," said Robert Levy, Kaplan's national director of business school programs. "Scores are good for five years, so if you're more comfortable with the paper and pencil format, it makes sense to take the test on June 21."

The computerized GMAT, or computer adaptive test (CAT), is not a paper and pencil test on computer, but a completely new kind of assessment that "adapts" to your performance. Test-takers see one question at a time. If you answer correctly, the next question is more difficult. If you answer incorrectly, the next question is easier.

Other characteristics unique to the CAT include:

- The CAT is a highly individualized test experience: your answer to a question determines the next question's level of difficulty.

- You cannot skip around, or return to questions you've already answered.

- The level of question difficulty influences your score, unlike the paper and pencil test, on which easy questions have the same value as difficult ones.

- Right or wrong answers to the early questions have a big impact on the rest of your test and your score.

- There's no exam booklet to markup, only scratch paper.

- The CAT is shorter.
- You get your score immediately.

- Instead of taking the exam in a large group of other test-takers, you take the CAT privately, at your own terminal.

The Highland Echo
Editor

Sarah H. West

Production Editor

Patrick E. Leslie

Copy Editor

Sarah Christians

Sports Editor

Joe Malheiro

Staff Writers

Sherrie Brents, Tonya Briggs, Shannon Bryant, Joey Cody, Carol Denning, David Downs, Dave Dupont, Chuck Gilkey, Brian Hastings, Andy Hoover, Kristi Johnson, Lori Leffel, Caroline Leggett, Andy Long, LaToyia Lundy, Rissa Miller, Kazu Nakane, Sun-Im Ryu, Kim Schuenemann, Michelle Shuler, Adam Shepherd, Christi Stalans, and Traci Tidwell

Public Relations
Coordinator

Michelle Shuler

Photo Staff

Keli Jennett and
Jenny Oxford

Cartoonists

Carl Gombert

Faculty Advisor

Jeff Gary

Please send letters to the editor, comments, suggestion, or story leads to box #2247.

Phone

981-8176

E-Mail

Swest75@aol.com

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 500 words.

Internet service has top college essays for sale: Is it plagiarism or "inspiration by example"?

By Elizabeth Perry
College Press Service

The deadline for law school is just a few weeks away, but your application still sits blank on your kitchen table. You think you have the grades, but you don't want to blow your chances by not getting the application exactly right—including the personal essay that's required.

So, what do you do? If you're like a growing number of prospective students, you might be tempted to turn to the Internet. IvyEssays, an Internet site headed by 28-year-old Williams College graduate Daniel Kaufman, offers to buy and sell college essays written by applicants who already got into top-notch schools. For a small fee, you, too, could own an admissions essay that was good enough to get another student into Yale Law.

Admissions officers and college guidance counselors have scorned IvyEssays for providing "cheat-sheets." But Kaufman says because IvyEssays (www.ivyessays.com) is available to millions over the Internet, the service "levels the playing field for college applicants, making information more accessible and affordable to everyone."

Students who have been accepted to top colleges and graduate schools can earn anywhere from $25 to $75 for their compositions, depending on the content and on the schools that accepted them. Authors must provide proof of admission and omit all proper names from their essays. Twenty-five dollars to $40 is the going rate for essays from undergraduate schools; law school essays earn $40; while MBA essays take in $60 to $75.

In return, college applicants can buy customized packages through the mail, e-mail or fax, of five to 10 essays, costing as little as $10 for undergraduate essays, $20 for law schools, and up to $60 for business schools. Students can choose packages tailored to their wishes, by requesting essays from a particular school, for example, or essays relevant to certain interests and backgrounds. Kaufman says his site has acquired more than 1,000 essays since his site was conceived last fall.

The people at IvyEssays have heard criticism from all sides. Admissions officers say the service undermines the goal of the admissions process, which is to get a clearer understanding of who their candidates are, and worse, it invites plagiarism. "It's too difficult to look at another person's work, without adopting ideas that are not your own," says Michelle Rogers, director of admissions at Northwestern University's Kellogg School of Management.

"I am terrified that this will force admissions officers to get rid of the essay," says Sharon Cooper, college guidance counselor at the North Shore Country Day School in Winnetka, Ill. "It's the only chance a child has to use his or her own voice, to present themselves through something other than test scores and transcripts."

Kaufman says his site does not encourage plagiarism, but provides a sense of the writing ability and level of thinking required by college and university programs.

"We provide models," says 27-year-old IvyEssays' managing director Helen Lee, also a Williams College graduate. "It is then up to the student to take what he or she can and formulate their own application."

Indeed, IvyEssays is not the first publication to provide writing samples to college applicants. Thousands of books on the subject are available in stores and libraries. Some examples include: "100 College Essays," compiled by husband-and-wife team Christopher and Gigi Gorges and members of Harvard University Alumni; and "Essays That Worked," a series of books, each directed at a different type of school applicant. So, what's the difference?

"I think people fear the power of the Internet," Kaufman says, "because it can reach out worldwide. But, once they adjust to the idea of the incredible amount of information now available everywhere, I think they might relax."

Though it is too soon to know whether or not their own essays will be future candidates for the site, IvyEssays clients say they appreciate the service's accessibility.

Frustrated by his law school essay, John, a 27-year-old IvyEssays customer, stumbled onto IvyEssays by accident. While surfing the Net to temporarily escape the application process, he found the site easily by plugging the word "essay" into his search. Two hours later, for $20, he had a package of seven essays to peruse, which finally inspired him to write his own.

"I think that if admissions officers are looking at reading samples of good writing as plagiarism, then they're contradicting the idea of higher education," argues John. "In any school, you learn by studying the work of people who have achieved greatness."

Students and educators admit that the level of assistance available for prepping students on the college admissions process varies from school to school. John, who attended Bullard High School in Fresno, Calif., claims that he received little guidance from counselors. However, Cooper, in her college guidance work at North Shore Country Day School, says she offers a workshop for students that includes sample questions from different colleges as well as sample college essays.

Students who have the money can go a step further and call a college admissions consultant, who, for as much as $125 an hour (for a five-hour minimum fee), will not only help complete the essays but also devise a strategy to best market a candidate for admission.

David, a 29-year-old management consultant from Philadelphia who is applying to top 10 business schools, says he couldn't afford the exorbitant fees of one such consultant, so he opted for IvyEssays' editing service to help him complete his application.

Claiming to have spent his twenties training for the Olympics rather than maximizing his writing skills, David says he wanted to optimize his chances for getting into a top business school. So, he sent his work to IvyEssays editing service, which is headed by experienced writers including editor Helen Lee. "It was not only really good help," says David, "it was fast." Within 24 hours, his work was returned to him complete with comments and corrections for a fee of $50 per essay.

Kaufman, who heads his team of three from a small office in Boston, says the idea for his company was first inspired by a friend who started a similar service while attending the Harvard Graduate School of Business. Kaufman's friend was asked to discontinue the site by admissions director Jill Fadule.

Later, while working at one of the nation's largest management consulting firms, Kaufman was surrounded by graduates from top colleges. "It was then I realized that students are given very different levels of preparation for colleges and universities," says Kaufman. So, he launched his own site.

Aside from essays and editing service, IvyEssays also offers a wealth of information, free to Internet browsers, including lists of the college and university programs, resources for minority students, international students, students in need of financial aid or scholarships, social networks, publications, travel guides and study guides.

The name IvyEssays, Kaufman says, intentionally conjures up images of the ivy-clad walls of some of the nation's oldest and most prestigious college campuses. It is not, however, to be confused with any formal association with the Ivy League, he emphasizes.

Although IvyEssays does promise to help college wannabes complete their applications, Lee admits that it is important to remind customers that there is no formula for an essay. "They (admissions counselors) really are trying to give students a chance to express themselves," she says.

But admissions directors say IvyEssays and services like it thrive because they play on students' fears. Stanford University business school admissions director, Marie Mookini, says she strongly disapproves of IvyEssays.

"I fear that the service feeds on the anxieties of applicants, giving them the wrong idea of what it takes to get in to school," she says. "It fuels the idea that you have to be clever, rather than real, to be accepted. It's not by writing clever, sexy or 'cutesy' essays that you stand out. It's the content that matters. Be yourself. Write an essay that tells your story."

Most importantly, Mookini says, every application should set a tone. "The content of the essays along with what they have learned from their peers, should somehow be mirrored by their references and reflected in their transcripts. It all has to fit together. An essay, in other words, is only one piece of the puzzle."

"Services like these," says Harvard College Assistant Dean of Admissions Warren Reed, "will always find ways to make money. And no one can blame a student for wanting to cover all bases."

"But I think it's too bad . . . It promotes intellectual laziness. Everyone should have an essay contained within their own experience. And those are the best ones. You can't write a heartfelt essay if it's not your idea."

Mookini admits that the admissions process is not perfect. "Some essays resonate with you. Some don't. It can be for personal, even emotional reasons," she says. "Also, unfortunately, Stanford does not have the resources to interview every candidate in person. In the end, it is no wonder that, with the frenzy of increased applicants every year, students feel pressured to use every resource available to make their three-dimensional packages as eye-catching as possible."

IvyEssays President Kaufman claims his Internet site is not a way to get rich. In fact, he says, he is losing money for now. But he says he will continue to provide his service of providing "inspiration by example," as the site advertises. In the end, it will be up to applicants to decide whether they want to use it—or abuse it.

Scots fall in double-header, now 16-8

by Caroline Leggett
Reporter

The Fighting Scots baseball team lost a double-header Saturday to Greensboro and Tusculum Colleges. The Scots, now 16-8, are looking to end the recent losing skid.

The first game against Tusculum saw the Scots lose 11-2. Scots pitching gave up 11 hits, while the defense turned in five errors. In the second game, Scots fans saw little improvement from the earlier game. The Scots fell in the second match-up 13-6 against Greensboro.

The seventh inning of the Greensboro game saw some action from Scots coach Eric Ethison. Coming to the aide of his firstbasemen, coach Etchison was eventually thrown out of the game after a heated confrontation with the firstbase umpire. A courageous effort by Brian McGhee and Ryan Rogers, both hitting doubles in the ninth inning to make the score 13-6, was ended when Tony Johnson hit into a double play and the game was over.

The baseball team has had a good season so far this year. They started off the season at 6-4 and a 7.5 ERA. Over spring break, the team had a 10 game winning streak, and they also won their home tournament, the Maryville College Spring Break Invitational. The streak was due to the pitchers throwing a 4.5 ERA compared to a higher ERA previously. This streak was broken due to two losses to Emory and Henry. Before going into Emory and Henry, the team batting average was .310.

Some outstanding players hitting well over 300 include: Junior Outfielder Jeff Huckaby #05, who is hitting .319; Senior Infielder Chucky Yates #06, a two time All-State Performer and a two time All-South Performer, who is hitting .382; Senior Outfielder Chris Hennessee #12, who is hitting .371; Senior Catcher Ryan Rogers #17, a one time All-State Performer and a two time All-South Performer, who is hitting .364; Junior Infielder Scott Hall #24, a two time All-State Performer and a one time All-South Performer, who is hitting .324; Senior Pitcher Brian McGhee #33, who is hitting .365.

McGhee said, "We talked about intensity and focus at the beginning of the season. We had great intensity during our ten game streak. The past two games we lost focus. We need to get our intensity back because competition only gets tougher the rest of the season."

Front row,
L-R: Matt
Melvin, Jeff
Huckaby,
Landon
Coleman,
Cade
Ruehling,
Chucky
Yates, Tripp
York; 2nd row:
Scott Sousa,
Josh Wade,
Ryan Rogers,
Robbie
Bennett, Mark
McKeehan,
Chris Daniel,
Brandon
Smith; 3rd row:
Alan
Archbold,
Brian McGhee,
Chris
Hennessee,
Jim Kennedy,
Chad Turner,
Scott Hall,
Bryan
Penland, Pete
Blair; Back row: Eric
Pyle, Chris
Ramsey, Jason Kallenberg,
Joe Wilson,
Jason Darnell,
Andy Moss,
Tony Johnson

1996-1997 MC Baseball Roster

Internships

UT Pre Med Internship

Excellent exposure to direct patient care and networking. Must have completed sophomore level, available for full time summer employment. May 26 through Aug. 1. Interviews prior to Apr. 23. Come by Career Services for more information.

Local newspaper Internship

Introductory position summer and part time during school year. Duties include proof reading, ad layout, graphic design, and receive introduction to the advertising sales dept. Possibility for credit, and future employment opportunity.

If you are interested in a summer internship in any field stop by Career Services to learn about possibilities. Act now; deadlines are quickly passing.

Part-time and Summer

Perpetual Motion Day Care needs life-guards and swim instructors.

9-6 pm, Mon-Fri, June-Aug. $5.00 hr. Must be certified. Job 205

Blount Memorial Hospital needs file clerk, 20 hr. week-for temporary position. Will pay $5.30 hr. Job 206

DHL Worldwide Express needs courier from 8:30-5:30 Monday-Friday or Saturday. Must be 21 yrs. of age and have a good driving record. Must be able to drive a van and pass driving test. Should know area and be able to read maps. Security check and physical required. $9.09 hr. Job 207

Local woman needs someone to do occasional babysitting for 8 yr. old boy. Prefers education or early childhood ed. major. Pays $5.00 hr. Also, she needs someone to do yardwork. Will provide equipment. $6.00 hr. Start ASAP. Job 208

Veterinary Technician needed for local vet clinic. Must be available for 30-40 hrs. per week possibly Monday-Friday. Assist Doctor and perform kennel help. Work now through August. $5.25 hr. Job 209

Computer Tutor needed for local woman. Must be able to instruct beginner on new Compaq Computer with Windows 95. Flex. hours. Should be prepared to do intermediate training later. $7.50 hr. Job 210

Spectrum Rents, Alcoa needs people for delivery team. Mornings, evenings or Saturdays. Approximately 20 hrs. per week. Start ASAP. Will set up appliances, furniture and electronics. $8.00 hr. Job 211

Attention Graduating Education Majors!!! Knox County Schools will be doing interviews on campus on April 8th and 9th. Spots are very limited, so call or stop by Career Services to set up an interview time. Career Services approved resume required.

THE Crossword

- ACROSS
1 Voting coalition
5 Zsa Zsa
10 Med. sch. subject
14 Italian currency
15 Theatrical presentation
16 Bright star
17 Steady
18 Wilder and Siskel
19 Clip
20 Distributes
22 Fold
24 Court dividers
25 Ache
26 Armada
28 Army rank
31 — Farrow
32 Happen again
34 Bird's weapon
36 Singing voice
38 Grades
40 Roof overhang
41 Noblemen
43 Takes a break
45 Goller's gadget
46 Coach
48 Change
50 Pluto or auto end
51 Elm or oak
52 Stately dance
55 Treacherous situation
59 Pedestal figure
60 Dwelling
62 Faction
63 — trap for
64 Ire
65 Ireland
66 European river
67 Pries
68 Germ

© 1997 Tribune Media Services, Inc.
All rights reserved

- 8 Native metal
9 Scamp
10 Feelers
11 Asta's mistress
12 Rara —
13 Mild
21 Swerve
23 Melee
25 Skin openings
26 Meat cut
27 Afterward
28 Prettier
29 Gladden
30 Romeo, e.g.
31 Atlas item
33 Insertion mark
35 Wedding announcement word
37 Prophetic
39 Beginners
42 Father
44 Killed
47 Patriot, — Hale
49 Annoys
51 "We're off — the Wizard..."
52 Feel the loss of 53 Thought
54 Part of n.b.
55 Embraces
56 Grow weary
57 McClurg of TV
58 Split
61 Yoko —

ANSWERS

The Other Record Shop

Buy * Sell * Trade

New, Used & Collectibles
Cassettes, CD's, Records
2131 E. Broadway, Maryville
(located in the Bi-Lo Shopping Center)

Trade for new releases!

977-9959

Activity Briefs

>The MC Concert Choir is holding auditions for next year's members. The audition will include a prepared piece, vocal exercises, and sight reading. Audition sign up times are posted in the FAC.

>On Monday, April 14 MACCO will be hosting the Ceruti String Quartet for a workshop in Wilson Chapel at 3 p.m. Admission is free with MC student I.D.

Activities Calender

Tuesday, April 8

- > 11 a.m. CCM: Worship Service
- > 6 p.m. MC: wall climb
- > 6 p.m. BB vs Lee Coll-HOME

Wednesday, April 9

- > 4 p.m. SB vs TN Wesleyan-Away
- > 6 p.m. MC: wall climb
- > 7:30 p.m. Humanities speaker, see ad

Thursday, April 10

- > 11 a.m. PDR: ICC Meeting
- > 12:30 p.m. Senate Mtg. CCM
- > 6 p.m. MC: wall climb

Friday, April 11

- > 8 p.m. FACM: Senior Recital

Saturday, April 12

- > 3 p.m. SB vs Savannah Arts-HOME
- > 3:30 pm BB vs Savannah Arts-HOME
- > FACM: Scholarship Auditions
- > Mountain Challenge: Tower

Sunday, April 13

- > 1 p.m. SB vs Sanannah Arts-HOME

Monday, April 14

- > 3 p.m. SB vs Sue Bennet-HOME
- > SPB Applications Due

Dr. Patricia Craddock

professor and former chair of the department of English at the University of Florida, will be presenting

"The Always Hypertextual Decline and Fall"

at 7:30 p.m. on Wednesday, April 9, in Carnegie Parlor

A reception will follow, and everyone is invited. Dr. Craddock earned her M.A. at Stanford University and her Ph.D. at Yale University.

Sponsored by The Humanities Club

Spotlight on Sanchiko Arai

by Kristi Johnson
Reporter

Maryville College has a large population of international students both on and off-campus. Sachiko Arai is a senior born in Japan who has been in the United States a total of three years.

The first time that Arai came to the U.S. was in 1992. She returned to Tokyo after a short stay, then decided to come to MC in 1995.

Arai comes from a small family with only one older sister who is married. Both of her parents and her sister still reside in Japan while she is attending classes here.

Arai said that she heard about MC from her best friend who is a Center for English Language Learning student here and made the decision that the program here was exactly what she was looking for since she is a Business major who hopes to find a job in management.

Working at Denso part-time as an interpreter and translator helps Arai gain the experience that is necessary for her career field.

She has also worked for Saturday School teaching young Japanese students.

Arai admitted that she does not have much time to participate in clubs or school-related activities because of the amount of time that it takes her to study.

She emphasized the difference in education between the U.S. and Japan in terms of the switch from year-round schools in Japan to the summer closing of American schools. She said that she believes the break from studying is important.

Arai said that Japanese schools have classes which teach the British version of the English language beginning at age ten, which help students become familiar with the language before encountering it in a social setting.

Even with her previous background in English, Arai found the Southern accent of Tennessee difficult to get used to.

Arai likes to travel to different states and see tourist attractions. She wants to visit Niagara Falls and has already been to New York City and Washington, D.C.

When she is not studying, Arai enjoys visiting the Smoky Mountains and going to barbecues with friends.

While Arai has not been back to Japan in over two years, she will probably see her mother this summer if she comes to the U.S. to visit.

Arai will walk in the graduation ceremony in May, but will be a full-time student in the summer and a part-time student in Fall of 1997 to earn all of her credits.

College rankings to be standardized

By College Press Service

In a collective effort to improve the accuracy of college rankings, four major publishers said March 7 they would use a standard set of questions in the surveys they send to colleges.

The College Board, U.S. News & World Report, Peterson's and Wintergreen/Orchard House will ask the same basic questions about a college's courses, enrollment, admission requirements, expenses and freshman class profile.

The publishers acknowledge that the 43 questions, known as the Common Data Set, were developed after their rankings were criticized for their unreliability.

For instance, the Wall Street Journal reported in 1995 that some colleges skewed data by including different groups of SAT takers when reporting average test scores.

"Prior to the Common Data Set, each survey asked for similar data in different forms, and this lack of standardization often led students and parents to make inaccurate comparisons," said Donald M. Stewart, president of the College Board.

The 43 questions were developed by the publishers and reviewed by more than 1,000 colleges.

Donna Spencer, coordinator of institutional surveys for Ohio State University, said the questions are "clear" and "well-defined."

"Even assuming that most publishes will still request a good deal of additional information, the standardization of any of this material is a welcome change," she said.

Senate elections schedule

Elections for the 1997-98 student senate will be held in April. The elections are divided into two categories: president and all other elections.

Applications for the president's office may be picked up in the student senate office and are due back (to the same office) by April 14. Debate between candidates will be held on Wednesday, April 16, at 8 p.m., in the Center for Campus Ministries. The presidential election will be held on Wednesday, April 23 in residence and Fayerweather Halls.

Applications for all other offices can be picked up in the student senate office as well, and are due back by April 21. The election will be held on Wednesday, April 30, in residence and Fayerweather Halls.

The following underclassmen offices will be elected: senior class president, vice president, secretary/treasurer, class senator. The junior and sophomore classes will elect the same four offices. All other elections will be held in the fall.

If you have questions or would like further information, call Jason Thompson, student senate president, at x8736.

Spring Workshops Career Services

Resume Writing:
Mon. Apr. 21 3:00pm
Job Searching:
Wed. Apr. 30 1:00pm
Interviewing:
Wed. Apr. 23 3:00pm
Graduate School
Thurs. Apr. 17 1:00pm

Workshops are in the Faculty Lounge, 2nd floor Fayerweather.

Foothills Cinema 8

The Saint PG13 T-M 4:30, 7:05, 9:35
That Old Feeling PG13 T-M 4:20, 7:15, 9:50
Double Team R T-M 5:25, 7:35, 9:40
Liar Liar PG T-M 5:30, 7:30, 9:30
Devil's Own R T-M 4:25, 7:20, 9:40
Jungle 2 Jungle PG T-M 4:30, 7:00, 9:30
Power Rangers PG T-M 5:25, 7:25, 9:35
Scream R F-M 7:15, 9:25
Anaconda PG13 F-M 1:25, 3:25, 5:25, 7:25, 9:35
Midnight shows also, call 977-4499. $3.75 admission until 5:30 and $5.75 after; $3.75 for children anytime.

The wisdom of Grandfather

by Andy Hoover
Columnist

I read recently that there is an old African proverb that says that when an old person dies, it's like a library has burned down. I know how true that is: my Grandfather died last month and took a library's worth of stories with him.

I know many of the stories; he loved to tell anyone who would listen just about anything. Many times I stood still and listened to his story/recollection/pronouncement, bored as all get out, but trying to remember it all just the same. I knew that what happened last month would happen someday, and I wanted to know all of the stories.

He, a life-long Church Of Christ teetotaler, told me once how to mix a mash for hogs that would ferment like beer. Apparently the hogs liked this, and I suppose the extra calories helped fatten them up, too.

He used to tell stories about growing up in Shady Grove, Tennessee (the one in Coffee County). As a child he used to sit in the potato shed and eat sweet potatoes raw. There were a couple in his community who married late in life, never had any children, and rode their tractor to the church on Sundays: the husband driving and his "bride" (as they persisted in calling her even years after the wedding) holding on the rear of the seat and standing on the fitting where discs or plows could be attached. When my grandfather was a teenager, he moved up the road to Morrison so that he could go to high school. He lived in Morrison with an aunt and uncle who were brother and sister. Neither one had ever married, so they kept house together into their old age.

He told me countless instructive little narratives about how he made some little something around the house, car, or toolbench work, despite its being broken or worn out or obsolete. Every time I try to fix something or to solve any mechanical problem, I will think of him and his notorious "jerry rigging." He may have at times taken it too far, but I will always think twice about it before I ever resort to actually replacing a part on something, much less hiring someone else to do it for me. There is hardly anything that a little scrap metal and some amateur welding won't fix.

There are reasons for the reverence other cultures have about age. When you've lived 82 years like my grandfather did, you're bound to have lived a lot of stories. Those stories are often rich with wisdom. I wish I had listened to my grandfather's stories more while I had the chance.

I never felt like I had amounted to much in his eyes; I wasn't as close to him as some of my cousins were. One of the last times I talked to him he told me how proud he was of me for returning to college. He told me that if I put my mind to it, I could do anything. The way he said that made me feel as if he wasn't just giving the all-purpose "you can do anything" speech a parent or grandparent might be expected to give to any of their young, but it was as if after careful observation and thought, he had noticed this empirical fact. I never told him how good that made me feel and how inspiring it was. I found out after he died that he had been bragging on me to friends and relatives. I never knew he would think that much of me. I miss him.

Cold shower: alternative to suicide

by Dave Downs
Columnist

Welcome back to the real world all you partyin' social deviants. I assume that the IV drip worked on most of you . . . It appears that most of you have regained the color in your faces. Nevertheless, I sincerely hope that your Spring Break '97 was a most enjoyable experience. I guess it is now time to journey down to the local health department and discover the after-effects of an experience that you probably don't remember anyway.

I must admit . . . Dr. Feelgood did have the experience of a lifetime. Just think, concerts in seven major cities in a ten day period, the eventful and always entertaining company of Dennis Rodman, and the permanent piercing of my nether region. I must admit, the Synge movement is underway and heading to a city near you!

For those of you who actually believed the article published in the last issue of the Echo, get a clue and keep watching reruns of Beverly Hills 90210.

As I sit upon my pulpit pondering the message that I want to send to you today, one recurrent thought constantly persists to damage what brain cells I have left. The message today will be delivered from Stupidity 90210, verse 69. What the hell were the people of the beloved Heaven's Gate religious group (more like a local visit to Peninsula Hospital) thinking when they proceeded to kill themselves in an attempt to jump on an extraterrestrial spacecraft following along behind the Hale-Bopp comet? For those of you who entertain thoughts of following this cult's lead, I guess you'll have to wait until the year 4000 something since the comet won't make a return trip until then.

NOT-SO-GREAT MOMENTS IN ART HISTORY

In case you have not been watching the news lately (too busy watching 90210 reruns), on March 27 in Rancho Santa Fe, California, 39 members of this so-called religious group committed suicide by first, eating a mixture of pudding or applesauce mixed with a drug called Phenobarbital, and then shooting it with alcohol. Their destination, an alien spacecraft that they believed would somehow, despite the fact that it follows behind a comet, would help them find a place in Heaven. The rationale behind this, don't ask me.

I have personally inspected the Hale-Bopp comet with a telescope, and unfortunately I have not observed any kind of UFO flying in the wake of this beloved mass of space waste. And according to news reports, neither has anyone else.

My point is this is not Star Trek, and since we don't have wookies and jawas running around like in the Star Wars trilogies, I'm willing to make a sizable bet that this cult was just a hoax like many of the others out there that are just waiting for college graduates like ourselves to enter the "real world" so that they can manipulate us into believing that they know more about immortality than we do. To tell you the truth, I think Dr. Seuss knew more about immortality than these bunch of clowns.

For those that want to repent of their sins, don't call the psychic hotline, just take a really cold shower and wash away all those manipulating thoughts.

This has been another edition of Life According to Dr. Feelgood... Amen!

Top-of-the-line tax advice from an expert

by Dave Barry

It's time for my annual tax-advice column, which always draws an enthusiastic response from grateful readers.

"Dear Dave," goes a typical letter. "Last year, following your advice, I was able to receive a large tax refund simply by claiming a $43,000 business deduction for 'paste.' I am currently chained to a wall in federal prison, but they tell me that, with good behavior, in 25 years they'll remove the skull screws. Thanks a lot!"

Yes, helping people is what this column is all about. That's why today I'm going to start by answering a question that taxpayers are constantly asking, namely: "When writing a letter to the IRS, should I use hyphens?"

Not if you can help it. I base this advice on a Washington Post news item, sent in by alert reader Bob Pack, concerning an internal memo distributed by the IRS counsel's finance and management division. This memo, according to The Post, stated that the deputy chief counsel, Marlene Gross, "does not want to receive any memorandums, letters, etc. with hyphenated words." This was followed by a SECOND memo, which stated that Gross "does not want hyphenated words in letters, memos, unless it is at the end of the sentence."

The Post item does not say why the deputy chief counsel feels so strongly about hyphens. But it's quite common for people to develop hostility toward certain punctuation marks. I myself fly into a homicidal rage when I see business names featuring apostrophes on either side of the letter "n," such as "The Chew 'n' Swallow Cafe." Many historians believe the 1970 US invasion of Cambodia was a direct result of the fact that Richard Nixon received a memo containing a semicolon. The important thing for you, the taxpayer, to remember is that if you write a letter to the IRS finance and management division, and you must use a hyphen, you should place it at the end of the sentence, as shown in these two example sentences provided by the American Association of Tax Accountants Wearing Suits:

WRONG: "You fat-heads will never catch me!"

RIGHT: "You'll never catch me, fat-heads!"

Speaking of finance and management, I have here an Associated Press story, sent in by many alert readers, concerning a congressional audit of the IRS. The key finding, according to the story, was that the IRS "cannot properly keep track of the $1.4 trillion it collects each year." Isn't that ironic, taxpayers? The IRS—the very same agency that expects you to maintain detailed records of everything but your toenail clippings—can't keep track of $1.4 trillion! Although I'm sure there's a good reason for this. They probably have their hands full at the IRS, what with this hyphen crisis.

But enough about punctuation. Let's answer some other common taxpayer questions:

Q. Are you saying that, as a taxpayer, I DON'T have to maintain detailed records of my toenail clippings?

A. No, if they account for 4.7 percent or less of your Adjusted Gross Bodily Debris, which you are of course required to report quarterly on Form 2038-YUK (not available) unless you are a single taxpayer filing jointly or vice versa, whichever comes first.

Q. Are we ever going to have a federal tax system that regular people can understand?

A. Our top political leaders have all voiced strong support for this idea.

Q. So you're saying it will never happen?

A. Right.

Q. At 9 a.m. today, I made large cash contributions to both major political parties. As of 1:30 this afternoon, the federal government had still not enacted special tax-break legislation just for me. What kind of country is this?

A. Unfortunately, because of the high demand, the federal government can no longer provide "same-day service," but if you do not see action by noon tomorrow, you should contact your personal congressperson; or, if you are staying in the Lincoln Bedroom, simply stomp on the floor.

Q. I have been trying without success since 1962 to get through on the IRS Taxpayer Assistance Hot Line. I understand that the IRS now also has a help site on the Internet.

A. That is correct. Now, in addition to failing to receive help by phone, taxpayers can fail to receive additional help by trying unsuccessfully to connect with the IRS World Wide Web site at <http://www.bunchofletters.gov>.

Q. If I could get through to that web site, what would I see?

A. Photographs of Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, naked.

Q. When you write columns like this, don't you worry that the IRS is going to get ticked off and audit you with an electron microscope?

A. No, because the guys and gals at the IRS are a fun bunch, and they know I'm just kidding around. "Ha-ha," is their reaction, unless they work in the finance and management division, where their reaction, if they know what's good for them, is "Ha ha."

© 1997 THE MIAMI HERALD
DISTRIBUTED BY TRIBUNE MEDIA SERVICES, INC

Dr. Carl Gombert

PSYCHOLOGY LESSON

Ready, aim . . . squirt

by Patrick E. Leslie
Production Editor

Having spent another Friday night avoiding anything that even has the pretense of potentially being work, I set my priorities and headed to the toy store.

First of all I have to ask myself why they did not have some of this stuff when I was a kid. It would have been far easier for me to thwart the plans of the evil Empire while driving to grandma's house if they had sold MicroMachine sized star fleets. Of course I also have a feeling that the pilot of our family sedan and the representative of the Empire's highest command would have used maximum application of force as soon as the first battle cruisers either went over the front seat, clearly to my mind back then representing the division between the dark side and my brother and I, or either my brother and I began bleeding from a direct assault.

However, today when I walk into a toy store with some friends, the clerk starts getting a little nervous when they see us all huddled up in the corner conspiring. No we are not going to rob the place blind. It is nothing more than a premature second childhood. The degree of missile envy a $30 dollar water cannon can produce is staggering.

It is the same type of psychotic smile I would get if the guy at the Porsche dealership said, "Hell, why not just take it for a drive." I did not realize that our jaws could contort to produce the smile we developed as we all contemplated the things we could do with a water cannon that can unleash a pint of watery fury with every squeeze of the plastic trigger.

Needless to say at least one of us left with one in our arsenal; as for the rest of us, I can guarantee we will also be packing one of these weapons of water fury as soon as I can talk dad out of a few bucks.

The Highland Echo

The weekly voice of Maryville College - Founded 1914

VOL. LXXXII, NO. 14

Tuesday, April 15, 1997

502 East Lamar Alexander Pkwy, Maryville, TN 37804

Analia and Sergio find true amor at MC

By Sun-Im Ryu
Reporter

This March, one newly-married couple came to Maryville College with the beginning of the spring. Analia Belli, a 23-year-old woman from Argentina, and Sergio Freddi, a 35-year-old man from Brazil, met four years ago in January 1993 here at MC.

They were classmates in the same level in the Center for English Language Learning program. Even though they are not the first couple who met here and married, international marriage has been rare recently.

Sergio recalled, "When I saw her first, she looked very shy, but that turned out not true. She is not a shy girl."

On the other hand, Analia said, "First I was not so interested in him. I like Portuguese, so I just wanted to hear Portuguese at first. I was only nineteen."

They started dating three days after the CELL program begun. "After three days—I remember, it was Friday—we had a party, and we talked and danced together. That was the start of our love," Sergio said.

However, they had to go back to their countries. Even after going back home, they couldn't put their love out of their thoughts.

Analia said, "We couldn't stop meeting. At last, he visited me on Easter Day, March. He visited me 30 times after, and I visited him 25 times for three years." Her parents wanted them to be married after her graduation.

She said, "It was terrible when I couldn't meet him. He called me every day once or twice. We spent so much money for calling or for visiting each other. When he visited me, I was so happy. We could spend every summer together. Finally we thought three years was enough."

They got married on May 25, 1996, in Brazil. They had to have two wedding receptions—one in Brazil and the other in Argentina.

"Since I met her family, the relationship with her parents has been good. Even our marriage is international, we can communicate very well. Also, South American culture is similar. We have almost the same problems in each country of South America," Sergio

Cont. on p. 2

Get ready to Blister!

By Lori Loeffel
Reporter

Maryville College is gearing up for Blister in the Sun 1997, to be held on Saturday, April 19, from noon to 5 p.m. Blister has become a tradition at MC, this being the fifth year that it has been sponsored by the student programming board.

This year, there will be a virtual reality type game. Farmer Not So John and Tom Reno will be performing throughout the day.

Other events that are being sponsored by the different groups and halls on campus include the following: volleyball, dunking booth, tie-dye t-shirts, dart throwing, kiss a pig, pie throwing, finger-paint, water balloons, puppet skits, cards table, and a stockade (jail).

The food that will be sold includes nachos, mocktails, baked goods, pizza, and coke.

Admission is free to all MC students. T-shirts will go on sale the week beginning April 14. They will be on sale in both Pearson's and Fayerweather.

Analia Belli and Sergio Freddi will be celebrating their first anniversary in May.

Chilhowean is allocated $5000

By Sherrie Brents
Reporter

Proposals for the March of Dimes and the Chilhowean were presented at the student senate meeting on Apr. 10. The March of Dimes proposal, sponsored by Joy Bailey and Yosef Addis, requested $200 to be used to purchase T-shirts. Matt Wilks sponsored the Chilhowean proposal, which requested $5000 in order to cover the costs of printing. Both proposals passed without opposition.

The Chilhowean editor, David Downs, spoke under the observer clause, to explain the need for $5000. According to Downs, each fall the final payment for the previous year's annual must be made. As a result, there is an automatic strain on the resources available to create the yearbook. This fact has contributed to the need for the additional funds, without which there would be no yearbook for this year. Included in the proposal, was a reminder that there will be a request for an additional $5000 next fall. Downs said that the money, if allocated, will make the last payment for the yearbook due in the spring. Hence, each yearbook staff will begin with a complete budget, and no outstanding debts. Also, Downs pointed out that the publishing company will reduce the cost for the next year, if the final payment is made in the spring. In order to help reduce the amount needed next year, Downs said that there will be parents' pages in this year's Chilhowean to raise money.

The March of Dimes proposal requested $200 in order to buy T-shirts for the participants of WalkAmerica. Last year, according to the proposal, Maryville College supported the event by sponsoring faculty, staff, and students who participated. Addis wore the T-shirt from last year to show the members of senate.

Inside

MC2000 Update....	2
Guest speaker.....	2
Senioritis.....	3
Baseball.....	4
Crossword.....	5
Kazu & Polly.....	7
Dave Barry.....	8

Highlights

News.....	2,3
Sports.....	4
Classifieds.....	5
Features.....	5, 6
Op/Ed.....	7,8

Craddock expounds on Gibbon, hypertext

Dr. Stephen Soud addresses the audience as Dr. Patricia Craddock looks on.

By Sarah Christians
Copy Editor

Maryville College has had its share of guest lecturers and speakers in as many different venues. None however, have been so thoroughly inventive and even nouveau as Dr. Patricia Craddock of the University of Florida.

Dr. Craddock lectured on "The Always Hypertextual Decline and Fall," or, the similarities between Edward Gibbon's multi-volume masterpiece "The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire" and the time-space quirks presented by hypertexts, better known as web pages.

Dr. Craddock received her B.A. from Indiana University, her M.A. from Stanford University and her Ph.D. from Yale. According to Mr. Steven Soud, she is one of, if not the, leading Gibbon scholar.

Craddock gave a brief overview of her larger work likening "The Decline and Fall" to web pages. She asserted that they are similar because both formats allow a number of beginning and ending points and also allow a reader to move vertically as well as horizontally. In essence, "The Decline and Fall" reads like a web page. You may choose to read horizontally, understanding the most obvious linear narrative, like you would read a web page, clicking on the last link to take you to the next in a series of broad headings. The reader might also choose to further investigate specific topics under a broader heading. "Hot links, if you will," said Craddock.

Josh Goocey, a junior, said, "The lecture exposed me to a more complete level of literature that I'm glad I now know exists."

Craddock's homepage, detailing some of her work on "The Decline and Fall" in hypertext is located at <http://www.ucet.ufl.edu/~craddock>.

MC2000 update

by Sarah West
Editor

Recruitment and retention are two important reasons for the Maryville College 2000 plan. Some results are in.

According to Donna Davis, admissions vice president, results in retention are measured

"Amor" cont. from p. 1
said.

They came to MC again to study English, but this time as husband and wife.

"I don't think I studied hard last time I came here. I met him [Sergio] here and we didn't talk to each other in English all the time. MC is good place to meet people (to find partner)," Analia said smiling.

"For us MC has two meanings. Maryville is the wonderful place that made us meet, and it is a good place to learn English."

They are going to stay here until July, then they are going to go to Pittsburgh, PA because he needs to finish his Ph.D in Music. They have not decided yet whether to live in Argentina or Brazil.

in two ways: the graduation rate and the return rate for freshmen to their sophomore year. The goal is to retain 75 percent of the freshman class to the sophomore year. This year, over 74 percent of freshman returned for their second year, bringing MC closer to this goal.

Next year's class will be even larger than this year's, adding somewhere between 50 and 80 students to the 928 members of this year's student body, coming even closer to the goal of 1,000 students.

Grade point averages and test scores of next year's class will also be higher. The goal is to have 75 percent from the top quarter of the class. This year's class was 67 percent from the top quarter and 95 percent from the top half. According to Davis, the next class' scores are "looking great." The average GPA of the incoming freshman is 3.52; whereas, this year's was 3.39. The national average ACT score last year was 20.8, and 75 percent of MC students ranked above that. Davis said that next year's average is looking to be even better.

Beeson Village is almost finished!

The Highland Echo

Editor

Sarah H. West

Production Editor

Patrick E. Leslie

Copy Editor

Sarah Christians

Sports Editor

Joe Malheiro

Staff Writers

Sherrie Brents, Tonya Briggs, Shannon Bryant, Joey Cody, Carol Denning, David Downs, Dave Dupont, Chuck Gilkey, Brian Hastings, Andy Hoover, Kristi Johnson, Lori Leffel, Caroline Leggett, Andy Long, LaToya Lundy, Rissa Miller, Kazu Nakane, Sun-Im Ryu, Kim Schuenemann, Michelle Shuler, Adam Shepherd, Christi Stalans, and Traci Tidwell

Public Relations Coordinator

Michelle Shuler

Photo Staff

Keli Jennett and
Jenny Oxford

Cartoonists

Carl Gombert

Faculty Advisor

Jeff Gary

Please send letters to the editor, comments, suggestion, or story leads to box #2247.

Phone

981-8176

E-Mail

Swest75@aol.com

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 500 words.

It's the time of year for senioritis

By Colleen DeBaise
College Press Service

Every day, Christy McBride tosses aside her books and dreams about her summer plans to lay on Aruba's sunwashed beaches.

McBride, a University of Missouri senior, wonders how she'll make it though two more months of journalism classes until she dons a cap and gown for graduation. Not to mention, she still needs to polish her resume and line up a job for the fall.

But it seems a certain affliction is making it...well, hard to focus. The affliction is so common among graduating students, it's earned a name—senioritis.

"Senioritis is when the brain is nowhere but on the glorious day outside, the future ahead, not on what needs to be done here and now," she said with a sigh.

With spring break over and the countdown to graduation on, a number of seniors complain that a peculiar lethargy has taken over their bodies. As they simultaneously anticipate and dread the final curtain on their college careers, they report that senioritis makes it a challenge to keep their minds on anything important.

For Beth Taylor, a Miami University of Ohio senior, it's even tougher to get through classes until graduation because she already has a job lined up, at Bank One in Louisville, Ky.

"Now that I have a job, I don't feel like studying," she said. "I just want to go out, to work out and sleep."

Kristy Miller, a Stetson University senior, said she heard the call of graduation earlier this year and started going out every night. "You just cease to care about everything—from grades to classes," she said. "You just want to leave school."

Miller forced herself to buckle down when she realized graduation was still several months away. But she's not too concerned about life after graduation, because "there's always grad school," she said.

For many students, "senioritis" is a form of denial that the real world is banging on the door, says Sara Hoover, director of personal counseling at Birmingham Southern College.

"They've had so much structure in their lives—probably since kindergarten—they feel so much pressure to know what they'll be doing in June," she said. "And so many people are asking them what they're going to do."

Instead of finishing resumes or grad school applications, many students decide to blow off classes, frequent bars every night, and even take time away from their job search to play Frisbee in the sun.

"It affects seniors in different ways," Hoover said. "I have seen some folks come in stressed to the limit. They're so worried about their G.P.A., getting the right job, what they're going to do after May 31."

Then there's the students who come in and say, "I just don't care. I'm just going to party this semester," Hoover said. "Their G.P.A. may be great until that last semester."

Jen Nowitzky, a James Madison University senior, admits that she goes out three nights a week and expects that to increase as the weather grows warmer and graduation gets closer.

"You get tired of the busy work and realize this is it, my last chance to chill before stepping into the chaotic real world," she said.

Nowitzky's excited about leaving college but a little worried because, "I haven't even looked at my resume in three months, much less sent one out," she said.

That's the mistake lots of seniors make, according to Chuck McConnell, president and CEO of FirstCareer, a job counseling service for college students and recent graduates.

"They really don't have a sense of urgency to go into

Students were initiated into the Alpha Gamma Sigma honor society this past week.

Students who delay their job search to backpack through Europe or lay on a tropical beach often find themselves at the greatest disadvantage, McConnell said.

"The worst thing is [students] who coast and who take off a year," he said. "When they come back, they don't have the edge."

At the least, students who plan to take time off should make sure they gather as much information as possible on the job search process before they graduate. "Then if they choose to take six months off, at least they've thought it through," he said.

For students who slack off before graduation because they already have a job, a lower G.P.A. might hurt a future job search or grad school application. "It certainly doesn't help matters," McConnell said.

Hoover, at Birmingham Southern, said she encourages restless students with jobs in the bag to bide their time by "breaking it into small chunks" instead of counting the months until graduation.

"If they have classes for two hours, then they have a break when they can go play," she said. "You just have to encourage them to keep in mind what their priorities are."

On the flip side, as graduation nears many students "wondering what they're going to do in life" usually pay a visit to her office, Hoover said.

"They feel out of control about their future, and their plans in life," she said. "I encourage them to look at areas of their lives they do have control over."

She added: "If they don't think they have any, we'll work on that, too."

For Kelli Long, a Western Illinois University senior, the idyllic "senior spring" she expected did not pan out.

"You always think the last semester is going to be an easy one," she said. "You think you are just going to party and have fun. The truth is there is so much that needs to be done."

After a string of interviews, Long says she still doesn't have an offer. "If I had a job lined up, being out in the real world wouldn't scare me," she said.

"Senioritis is when there is a part of you that wants to get out, but another part is scared to face the real world."

They've had so much structure in their lives—probably since kindergarten—they feel so much pressure to know what they'll be doing in June, and so many people are asking them what they're going to do.

Tiger Woods: a youthful phenomenon

By Joe Malheiro
Sports Editor

At the request of many people, I'm choosing to write a column that has nothing to do with college athletics. It does however, have great importance for people who are our age (that age being 18-25). I'm writing about a sensation that has been sweeping the professional golf world for several months now. That sensation is none other than Tiger Woods whose most recent accomplishment was the 1997 Master's tournament championship.

To those readers who are not followers of golf, winning the Master's tournament is the equivalent of winning the Super Bowl in football or the World Series in baseball. What makes this accomplishment even more incredible is the fact that Tiger Woods is just 21 years old. Yes, that's not a misprint, I said 21 years old. Woods, a three-time winner of the U.S. amateur golf championship, left Stanford University last semester to become a professional golfer. Some questioned this move saying that it was purely a money decision by Woods and his father. Though he did sign a $55 million contract for clothing and television endorsements with the Nike corporation before he ever played in his first tournament as a professional, Woods is now proving his worth as an outstanding golfer as well as a tremendous role model and spokesman for today's youth.

In a sport dominated by an older generation, Tiger

Woods is showing a tremendous youthful ability to conquer a sport in which many youth have been unsuccessful in entering. In his first major tournament as a professional, last weekend's Master's, Woods took home a victory by an incredible 12 strokes. That margin of victory is a tournament and course record. Even more impressive is the fact that Woods took home a Master's title in his first try, while many veteran players such as Nick Faldo and Greg Norman failed to make the cut to play in the third and fourth rounds of the tournament.

Another very important barrier that Woods has brought down, even more important than the barrier of youth, is the barrier of color. Woods, with both a black and asian background, has broken through in a sport that has long been dominated by white middle class males. With an unending work ethic and the backing of his father, Woods has made himself the premier young golfer in the world today.

As a child, Woods played his first round of golf at the age three and shot a 48 for nine holes. He was featured in Golf digest at age five. Before his tenth birthday Woods putted against Bob Hope on the Mike Douglas show. How many children do you know that are doing those things before their tenth birthday? Tiger Woods, with his unparalleled work ethic and tremendous drive to succeed, has become one of the premier golfers and youth role models in the world. A job well done.

Landon Coleman swings the bat in last Tuesday's game against Lee College.

Wrestling legend wins third straight NCAA championship

By Marco Buscaglia
College Press Service

IOWA CITY—Dan Gable has been hinting all year that he may walk away from Iowa's wrestling program. And if the legendary wrestling coach does decide to leave the mat, he will do so as a national champion.

Again.

Gable's Hawkeyes won their third straight NCAA championship, and set a new team record of 170 points while doing it.

"I know this would be a good way to leave," Gable said. "People tell me I can leave now with no regrets."

Gable, however, will leave behind 15 championship banners.

"This has been a great year for us," said Gable, who's coached at Iowa since 1975. "It was nice to be the underdog. It was nice to come up and surprise people."

Although Oklahoma State was favored when the championship tournament began, few would dare count out the Hawkeyes until the last match ended.

"They are a true sports dynasty," said Lawrence Polen, a former wrestler at Iowa State. "They belong up there with the Yankees and the UCLAs. I mean, they have dominated their sport like no one else."

Gable takes the compliments in stride.

"The success I've had has everything to do with the team and very little to do with me," said Gable, who's won six championships the past seven years. "I've got kids here who work their tails off. They don't quit, and they don't settle for second best."

Lincoln McClravy, Iowa's champion in the 150-pound division, says Gable is the force behind the team's fighting spirit.

"He never lets us dog it or do things the easy way," McClravy said. "We push ourselves in practice because he's always there pushing us. And when it comes time for an intense match, something where we really have to dig deep, we know how to get it done because coach makes us do it every day."

McClravy was one of five individual champions from Iowa. The others were Jessie Whitmer at 118 pounds, Mark Ironside at 134, Joe Williams at 158 and Lee Fullhart at 190. That core of Iowa's team helped the Hawkeye win 23 matches in a row at one point to nail down the lead.

"It was something," said Gable, who had hip replacement surgery in January. "We got on a roll, and everyone kept feeding off of each other. The momentum was unreal."

Mike Mena, whose loss at 126 pounds was the Hawkeyes' only defeat in the finals, said Gable will serve as an inspiration to Iowa's wrestlers, even if he doesn't remain as head coach.

"He's the kind of person who brings out the best in you," Mena said of Gable, who is a former Olympic gold medal winner himself. "He's a champion."

Part-time and Summer

Aramark in Maryville has cashier position asap, $6.25 hr., part time 4-8 pm. Permanent part-time. Job 214

Local family needs "odd jobs" around house and yard, includes some trim painting, lifting & toting. Will pay $8.00 hr., mostly Saturday work, lunch provided. Occasional part-time. Job 215

Local physician needs permanent part-time non-smoking Nanny Tuesdays & Fridays. Must be available 7am-8pm if needed. Pay will be $100.00 (negotiable) each week for childcare for 3 1/2 yr. girl, and 7 yr. boy after school. Boy has carpool bringing home from school daily. Job 216

Turn Key Marketing, Maryville, has permanent part-time position for HTML Coating for web sites, must have experience or knowledge of HTML. $10.00 hr. or pay by the job, flexible schedule Monday thru Sunday, at least 3 days/eve. per week. Job 218 Fairview United Methodist Church, Maryville, needs 1 or 2 permanent part-time nursery workers, $6.50 hr. Prior child care experience helpful. Shifts are Mon.,

& Wed. 9:15-10:45, Wed. 6:00-8:30 Sun. 9:15-12:00

Will assist Nursery supervisor & interact with children. Job 217

Madison Avenue Baptist Church, Maryville, has openings for (1) permanent Bed Babies Nursery Worker, Sundays 9-12:00, & (2) temporary nursery worker as needed for revivals, concerts & special times. $6.00 hr. for both positions. Job 219

Full time Positions

Aramark in Maryville has 3 full time openings with benefits.

Cashier, $6.25 hr. Work 2pm-10:30 pm.

Cashier, $6.25 hr. Work 5am-1:30 pm, includes food prep.

Cook, $6.75 hr. Work 2-10:30 pm, Mon. thru Fri., includes serving, food prep, supervise 2nd shift. Food service experience helpful. Call or come by Career Services X8220.

Turn Key Marketing, Maryville, has full-time position for sales, 33% commission, selling internet access & web sites. Hours are flexible 9-5 days, or eve/weekends. Call or come by the Career Services Office X8220.

Other Record Shop

Buy * Sell * Trade

New, Used & Collectibles

Cassettes, CD's, Records

2131 E. Broadway, Maryville

(located in the Bi-Lo Shopping Center)

Trade for new releases!

977-9959

Charge for non-MC students for Spring Fling, May 3

at Royal Oaks.

In advance $4.00

At the door $5.00

Activity Briefs

>On Thursday, Apr. 17 Career Services will be hosting a session regarding graduate school at 1 p.m. in Fayerweather lounge.

>On Thursday, Apr. 17 there will be a student recital at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Music Hall featuring a variety of voices and instruments. Admission is free.

Campus Events

Tuesday, April 15

>11 a.m. CCM: Worship Service

>6 p.m. MC: wall climb

Wednesday, April 16

>6 p.m. MC: wall climb

Thursday, April 17

>11 a.m. PDR: ICC Meeting

>12:30 p.m. Senate Mtg. CCM

>3 P.M. FAYL: CS-Graduate School

>6 p.m. MC: wall climb

Friday, April 18

>8 p.m. FACM: Senior Recital

>Parent's Council Meeting

Saturday, April 19 Spring Family Weekend

>12 p.m.-5 p.m. SPB: Blister in the Sun

>1 p.m. BB vs Wilmington-Away

>Academic Awards Banquet

>Mountain Challenge: Tower

Sunday, April 20

>1 p.m. BB vs Thomas More-Away

Monday, April 21

>3 p.m. FAYL: CS-Resume Writing

>SPB applications due

NORMAL COLLEGE CRAZINESS OR ANXIETY DISORDER?

Free, confidential screening
April 21-25.

• Call Bruce Holt, director of counseling, at x8220 to schedule a screening.

THE Crossword

ACROSS
1 Palindromic name
5 Type of high heel
9 Thrashed
14 Island greetings
15 Met highlight
16 Ancient Greek marketplace
17 Barbers
19 Stream
20 Sword material
21 Consider
23 Tennis need
25 Code or rug
26 Month: abbr.
29 Unusual
32 Refashions
36 Living quarters
39 Skip over 40 Togas
41 Meadow sound
42 Show to be valid
43 Make revisions
44 So-so
46 Upper house
48 off (angry)
49 Sea eagle
50 Come down to earth
52 Do sums
54 Sorrowful
59 Noose
63 Navigational system
64 Certain worker
66 The best of the best
67 Lamb
68 Part of TLC
69 Tree
70 Parking lot souvenir?
71 End of a series

© 1997 Tribune Media Services, Inc.
All rights reserved.

ANSWERS

9 Library study area
10 They stir things up
11 — Scotia
12 "... saw Elba"
13 Mild oath
18 Sounds the alarm
22 Notable periods
24 Hat
26 Takes the plunge
27 Lyric poem
28 Lodge
30 First name in country music
31 Make into law
33 Overact
34 Nile, e.g.
35 Austere
37 Get even 38 Accept
42 Small pool
44 Pre-Easter time
45 Meadow
47 Worker on hides
51 Chopped up
53 Social function
54 Entreaty
55 Hang loosely
56 Sere
57 Glen 58 Gray or Moran
60 RBI, e.g.
61 Antitoxins
62 Pitcher
65 Touch lightly

The Appalachian Ballet Company

and the Knoxville Symphony Youth Orchestra present

"Collaborating of Classics"

on Friday, April 18 at 7p.m. at the Tennessee Theatre.

$10 adults $5 students/senior citizens Festival Seating

•Contact Brian Hastings (x8424) if interested.

CONTEST TO NAME BEESON APARTMENTS

We are looking for names for each individual apartment building. Only restriction is it can't be a person's name. If you would like to submit your ideas, please turn them into the Residence Life Office by May 2. A $10.00 gift certificate to the bookstore will be awarded to the best entry.

Students collecting labels for deaf children's van

by Shannon Bryant
Reporter

In our culture we always help each other like a family, states student Justine Turner. Most people will agree that an important part of leading a happy and productive life is giving to those in less fortunate than ourselves.

However, it becomes relatively easy to say, "But it's just too hard."

Well, Maryville College

students do not have that excuse anymore. Turner and fellow student Jessica Adams, with the help of Sigma Lambda Kappa,

They are not asking for cash; they are asking for trash. In short, when you have consumed the contents of a container of some well-known products, merely clip the label and donate it to their cause.

are currently organizing a campaign to raise money to help provide a much-needed van for a deaf school in Puerto Rico.

But before you reject this cause because of your thinning wallet, you do not have that excuse either. They are not asking for cash; they are asking for trash. In short, when you have consumed the contents of a container of some well-known products, merely clip the label and donate it to their cause.

MC students who participate in this manner will join many other charitable persons throughout the Southeast. Sponsored by the Southern Baptist Convention, the Puerto Rico Deaf Ministry is raising funds by hundreds of churches and organizations. When the van is finally purchased, it will go to aid a school for deaf children and adolescents.

Student Holly Bailey is studying while enjoying the sunshine.

When asked why she decided to become active in this cause, Adams said "I want to help out any way I can." Turner emphasized the importance of helping others and "giving our hearts" to those in need.

Product labels which can be donated include Campbell's, Swanson, Pepperidge, Marie's, Franco American Gravies and Pasta, Milwaukee's Pickle, Open Pit Barbecue Sauce, Pace Picante Sauce, V-8 Vegetable Juices, Vlasic Pickles, and Prego. Currently, these labels can be placed in Jessica Adams' box (#2494). Adams and Turner are planning on placing boxes in the lobbies of the residence halls.

Remember when the pavement was the only way to find a job?

now you can do it all online

- 1 find a position that interests you
- 2 fill out a pre-qualification form
- 3 set up an interview

<http://www.ups.com>

Now, with the click of a mouse, not only can you find a position that interests you, but you can fill out a pre-qualification form AND set up an interview...ALL ONLINE! Just visit our website at: <http://www.ups.com> and discover a truckload of employment opportunities right at your fingertips! UPS is proud to be an equal opportunity employer.

Senate Elections Schedule

Debate between the presidential candidates will be held on Wednesday, Apr. 16, at 8 p.m., in the Center for Campus Ministries. The presidential election will be held on Wednesday, Apr. 23 in residence and Fayerweather Halls.

Applications for all other offices can be picked up in the student senate office and are due back by April 21. The election will be held on Wednesday, Apr. 30, in residence and Fayerweather Halls.

The following underclassmen offices will be elected: senior class president, vice president, secretary/treasurer, class senator. The junior and sophomore classes will elect the same four offices. All other elections will be in the fall.

If you have questions, call Jason Thompson, student senate president, at x8736.

Foothills Cinema 8

- The Saint PG13 T-M 4:30, 7:05, 9:35
- That Old Feeling PG13 T-M 4:20, 9:50
- Liar Liar PG T-M 5:30, 7:30, 9:30
- Devil's Own R T-M 4:25, 7:20, 9:40
- Jungle 2 Jungle PG T-M 2:00, 7:00
- Scream R T-M 1:40, 4:20, 7:15, 9:25
- Anaconda PG13 T-M 1:30, 5:25, 7:25, 9:35
- Murder at 1600 R F-M 2:00, 4:45, 7:10, 9:35
- McHale's Navy PG F-M 1:50, 4:25, 7:15, 9:35
- Midnight shows also, call 977-4499. $3.75 admission until 5:30 and $5.75 after; $3.75 for children anytime.

Polly's "good answer"

Dr. Carl Gombert

Dear Polly:

My sister is driving us crazy. She dresses and acts like Marilyn Manson and then constantly complains about not being able to get a good job. It's driving us nuts. We're not sure whether this is a cop-out to let her slack off at home or whether she really doesn't get why people usually won't hire someone with five safety pins sticking out of their forehead. She whines of people being so "out of it" and not respecting her individualism and alternative standards of beauty. Can we get through to her? I'm not a prude, but she's really getting on my nerves. That, and she looks like %$#!

Signed,

A Scarless Sibling

Dear Scarless,

Ah yes . . . the poor misunderstood vampire. Lemme guess, she's not going for the bartender position at the Merc on Goth Nite . . . Well, sorry, but sis is gonna have to pass on the Parisian shoe department spot, at least for the next few years. What she fails to realize is that we all adhere to some appearance standards in order to procure gainful employment. I'd love to wear my latex and boar's head to work, but I need a touch more Dilbert in me in order to avoid the wrath of Boss. Even if you're not into the whole bodily mutilation deal, you have to style your hair in a certain way, keep the skirt at a certain length, and, of course, endure those godawful pantyhose. (Ick - but we won't go there.) Counsel your sister on having her cake and eating it too by dressing for success during the day and then slathering it on at night (or vice versa?). It's all compromise. Certain situations, however, vary. She could search for a job that calls for the freak/addict/demon look. What's on the inside does count, but the message that most employers will get when they see your sister is that she is so preoccupied with her appearance that she won't be productive. And she'll frighten small dogs and children.

The thing that really cracks me up about people like your sister (no offense) is that they profess to have such individual style and aesthetics when really they are joiners in the classic sense: trendies who are just trying to out-weird or out-gross everyone else. And as far as eschewing any "traditional" sense of beauty, all I can say is that your sister probably takes five times as long to get ready in the morning as Claudia Schiffer does, yes? 'Nuff said.

At any rate, there's not much you can do except ignore her. She's trying to prove a point but she'll eventually grow tired of it as soon as everyone stops with the attention (cheerleaders ring a bell?). You'll have to get your mom to stop freaking every time she comes home with her newest Gwar tattoo or nifty labial piercing. And if she wants to emulate a moron who's totally devoid of any musical talent whatsoever, let her. (You still have those Milli Vanilli tapes, doncha?) She may never borrow your gingham sundress for a date, but hopefully she'll temper her zombie streak with enough sense to get a real job. If not, just run her through the metal detector at the airport a few times . . .

Love, Polly ("wanna see my tongue stud?") Graf

The travels of Kazu: moments of embarrassment

By Kazu Nakane
Columnist

It is going to have been 10 months since I came to the US, and I've experienced a lot. Most of my experiences are pretty nice, but some of them are very, very embarrassing. For this time, I'll finally confess the moments of embarrassment.

Well, actually, I've come here with my family. My father works for a company here, and that was a big, but only, chance for me to be able to come here. At that time, my father had come much earlier than we did to find our house (it's rental, though), cars, and so on. However, for some reason, we had to live in an apartment for a while. The problem was that there weren't any apartments that contained five bedrooms, so my father had to rent two rooms that have two bedrooms. One room was for my parents and the youngest brother, another for my young brother and me. That place has several houses and our two rooms were in different houses. I thought it was no problem at all going room to room across the parking lot, but it was our very, very first day. When our airplane departed late in the morning, and when we got the airport at Knoxville was couples of hours later on the clock at the airport. As you see, it doesn't mean that the itinerary was that short. NO. I guess you can think that Japan is back side of the US when you put a line parallel to the equator. The time difference between Japan and the US is 14 hours, that means it's 2 a.m. in Japan when it's noon in the US in winter. But about the season like now, we have to think like this because of "summer time"; if it's noon on April 15, it's 1:00 a.m. on April 16. The feeling was as I time-slipped.

My father's theory to avoid jet lag was letting us to sleep at night here, not time in Japan. So after my father came to the airport to pick us up, he took us to go shopping even though we would rather take a nap. It was a little exciting shopping tour because that was our first time for us to come to the US, but it wasn't fun, honestly, because I wanted to fall asleep as soon as possible. When we came back to home, my dear clumsy, stubborn Dad's handmade dinner was waiting for me. That was unusually great, but by then, my brain had stopped working and I felt something spinning around.

The accident was happened when my brother and I came back to our room. Well, he went back earlier and I came alone. I thought I remember my room number. I stood by the door and made sure I have my key. ....Hey, what's wrong? I can't open it!! When I try pushing my key in a hole of a door knob, suddenly, the door was opened and a half-naked man I don't know had shown up.

".....!!!!!!"

I just gasped for a while and the guy seemed frozen, too.

"Ai.....ai.....I....."

Can you imagine how long I felt it took me to say something? Finally, I could say simple stupid phrases hurriedly, like, "Oh, I'm sorry. I made a mistake."

There is nothing I could do at that time but move my hands and arms up and down meaninglessly like an octopus or something. The man pointed to the room next room to his with his thumb (cool, he's real American!!) and said that he guesses my room is on my right. I just said thank you to that friendly guy and shut the door. Actually, my room that is next to his was on my left. This is my memorial, very first conversation with a Tennessean.

SoHo-Rible

by Dave Barry

I admit that I don't have a sophisticated lifestyle. I don't party all night in trendy clubs with people whose hair is the color of Jell-O. My idea of an exciting evening is to go out at 7:45 p.m. and get a medium dish of frozen yogurt with—sometimes you have to walk on the wild side, dam it—low-fat chocolate topping.

I live on a peaceful street where there's hardly any noise except for a neighbor's pet parrot, which has been trying for years to make some kind of important announcement, but unfortunately cannot get past the fifth syllable, which is "GRAAK!"

I've worn the same style of clothes since 1967, when I made the breakthrough fashion discovery that you can't make TOO much of a fool of yourself if everything you own, except your underwear, is blue.

I would no more have my body tattooed or pierced than I would stick a live scorpion up my nose.

In other words, I am, culturally, Mr. American Cheese On White Bread With Mayonnaise. So I experienced quite an awakening recently when my wife and I spent a weekend in New York City's fashionable SoHo district. SoHo is located south of Houston Street; hence the name "SoHo," which stands for, "So, How do You Eat With those Rings Through Your Tongue?"

We stayed in a very nice loft belonging to some friends of ours, who sent us pages of detailed instructions about how to get past the elaborate system of locks and entry codes and burglar alarms. I have never personally launched nuclear missiles against Moscow, but I bet it would be less complicated than gaining access to this loft. People are very security-conscious in New York; at one point, we encountered a woman in the lobby, and although we tried to appear friendly and harmless, she had that expression that you see on many New Yorkers in such situations, whereby they strain to look as polite a possible considering that they strongly suspect you're about to whip out a machete and a vial of hydrochloric acid.

(I'm not saying it's a lot better in Miami. I'm just saying that in Miami we don't go around WORRYING that everybody else is armed, because we KNOW everybody else is armed.)

But getting back to my cultural awakening: SoHo is full of clothing boutiques selling fashions that are extremely "avant garde," which is French for "visible from space." Do you remember when hip people wore black, and un-hip people wore polyester clothes in clashing, retina-damaging colors? Well, things have changed. There are many boutiques in SoHo featuring comically unattractive, radioactively plaid outfits—and these are not cheap outfits—that would be barred from Clown School for being too loud.

(Meanwhile, in some variety store in rural Kentucky, the first shipment of black clothing is just now arriving.)

Do you want to know what else is fashionable in SoHo? Cruddy old furniture. By "cruddy old furniture," I don't mean "furniture that, underneath the surface crud, is actually beautiful." I mean "furniture that, underneath the surface crud, is crud." Some SoHo stores are proudly selling metal yard furniture from which all the metal content rusted away decades ago, so what you're actually purchasing is a furniture-shaped shell of hardened dirt.

One store was selling a beat-up "seed cabinet" that had many drawers broken or missing and that looked as though it had served as a latrine for generations of diseased bats; the price was $4,000. Nearby, in the store's clothing section people were admiring a female mannequin dressed in a color scheme that had to be distorting the Earth's magnetic field: bright-blue-plaid pants, a lime-green blouse, and of course a purple scarf. In a situation like that, you find yourself thinking: "Am I THAT unsophisticated? Or are all these people insane?"

This is what we were asking ourselves as we returned to the loft and settled down for a restful night of sitting bolt upright in bed every two minutes until dawn. Because it turns out that, at night, SoHo can compete, decibel for decibel, with World War II. There are people whose social lives apparently consist of standing on the sidewalk directly under loft windows all night shouting curse words at each other. SoHo is also the site of the nightly meeting of the Organization of Easily Irritated Torists With Very Loud Horns.

My theory is nobody in SoHo ever sleeps, so that after a while people become delirious and encourage each other to engage in erratic behavior:

"I know! Let's pierce our bodies and wear polyester clown outfits!"

"Yes! And then let's buy a cruddy old seed cabinet for $4,000!"

"Great idea! Even though the closest we ever come to engaging in agriculture is when we steam asparagus!"

That's what I think is going on. Although I admit it could be that I'm just too unsophisticated to understand the SoHo scene. But I doubt it. I'm not some yokel who thinks that "fine art" is a portrait of Elvis on a beach towel. Mine is on genuine velveteen.

© 1997 THE MIAMI HERALD
DISTRIBUTED BY TRIBUNE MEDIA SERVICES, INC

CAT LOVERS

We don't even want t-shirts

by Sarah West

Editor

Oh what a tangled web we weave when first we practice to be self-sufficient. The Echo is not able to use the money it generates in ad sales for its benefit. What are we supposed to do?

Well, you try to be rational, meat, communicate, and all of those civilized methods of problem-solving, and that lasts for about . . . one and three-quarters semester. You then scream, "This academic institution has lost its conscience, not to mention its common sense." Sure, this is a generalization, but it's fun to generalize when you're mad.

Last semester, we discovered our ad money was not being "credited" to our account. Our fine advisor tried to resolve this. We would think it was taken care of, only to be notified later it was not; this happened repeatedly. So, we deposited $250 last semester that the college soaked.

Under the illusion that we were earning our own money, we went before senate and agreed we would raise enough to cover our press service and the cost of a scanner, if they would ensure us the amount to produce the weekly. We have a miserably-tight budget. We never do the pizza thing, unless we pay for it ourselves. That's not too sad, but the editorial staff has been known to pay for stuff like faxes, film, processing, etc. out of their own pockets to avoid the red and be able to produce the 12 issues we told senate we would.

As it stands, we will be in the red. We don't have the money from last semester that we assumed we had when we went to senate. We have turned in some money this semester that was also soaked. It's funny that the college would think I would spend the time each week to raise it money. I do love my college, but this is a little excessive.

We are hoarding money. If we can't have the money from the checks, the college can't either. As for the cash, maybe we can get enough to get the scanner. I think the barter system is a good idea for next year. "We'll give you an ad if you give us paper, film, pizza, etc."

I have met with the student development and business vice presidents and the comptroller. They do want the Echo to get its own money but can't agree on how to do it. Our administration is great, but they're not helping. Most of our ad money is in check, and we can't use it.

The Highland Echo

The weekly voice of Maryville College - Founded 1914

VOL. LXXXII, NO. 15

Tuesday, April 22, 1997

502 East Lamar Alexander Pkwy, Maryville, TN 37804

Awards banquet: Echo wins "best organization"

by Caroline Leggett
Reporter

The Academic and Service Awards Banquet was held this past Saturday. Awards were given for campus leadership and service, religious life, all academic subjects, international student academic award, and senior presidential scholarships. Special awards and recognition were given to the Alpha Lambda Delta National Honor Society for Freshmen, Alpha Gamma Sigma Honor Society for seniors, and an outstanding senior.

The Sharon A. Murphy Crane Memorial Scholarship Award was given to Staci Kerr. The Maryville College Student Development Award winner was The Highland Echo. Who's Who Among Students in American Colleges and Universities Award went to the following students: Lucy Alexander, Ben Batchelor, Heather Belair, Monica Blackburn, Jennifer Buck, Joey Cody, Laurie Cribb, Aimee Cropper, Paul David Davey, Jon Davis, Katie Greer, Mark Hatfield, Rebecca Heckler, Mary Grace King, Jeffrey Krumm, Lauren Lassiter, Maureen McCullough, Kathryn McDonald, Christopher Bo McMichael, Eric Obermiller, Kerry O'Keeffe, Greg Plattenburg, Kevin Rowland, Tiffany Rudicil, Lew Rudisill, Sarah Stevenson, Keli Stewart, Jason Thompson, Cheryl Wagner, Matt Webb, Sarah West, Cling Wight, Matt Wilks, and Jennifer Woodhouse. The Resident Senior Leadership Grant was awarded to John McDonald, Kara Buechele, AJ Ballou, Leandra Barriage, Judy Dunnam, Karson Leitch, Katherine Groves, Sherrie Brents, Lizbeth Opiola, Devin Koester, Brandi Wilson, Amethyst Schott, Emily Brock, and Alice Wong. The Virginia Eaddy Senior Leadership Grant was awarded to John McDonald.

The Charles and Mary Ensign Scholarship Award winners were Monica Blackburn and Eric Obermiller.

The A. Randolph Shields Award winner was Benjamin Bachelor. The Distinguished Achievement in Chemistry Award recipient was Clint Wight. The Outstanding Performance in Inorganic Chemistry winners were Janel Beckley and Joette Russell. The Outstanding Performance in Structural Chemistry Award recipient was Lori Stinnett. The Sophomore Biology Award winners were Sherry Oden and Lori Stinnett. The Susan Allen Green Award recipient was Clay Stalcup. The Elizabeth Hillman Award winner was Staci Kerr. The George A. Knapp Physics Award recipient was Kenyon Evans.

The Bates Forensics-Drama Award winner was Kathryn McDonald. The Barracough Choir Award recipients were Jennifer Brashears and Mark Hatfield. The Oscar Philip Steele Award in Music

Cont. on p. 3

President hopefuls focus on communication, covenant

By Carol Denning
Reporter

Last Wednesday a debate between the senate president candidates was held giving candidates the opportunity to clearly state their objectives, and it also gave the student body a chance ask further questions. One concern they all agreed on was communication between students and senate needs improvement.

The candidates had ideas on how to improve communications and were adamant about further using the covenant and enforcing its values. Although candidates had similar concerns, they had different ideas on how senate can be more consistent and efficient.

Joel Campbell, a rising junior, has chosen this year to run for senate president because he has the time to dedicate to the position. Campbell wants to make sure that the covenant is more noticeable and everyone sees it.

Josh Goocey would like to see senate be autonomous. Goocey thinks compromise is crucial for senate to run smoothly, and hopes to "further implement the covenant by changing the DRB and J-Board to a covenant committee."

Staci Kerr wants to instill unity into the senate. Kerr would like to promote an atmosphere of respect for students, faculty, and cabinet.

She would like to move the senate meetings back to Thaw hall where she thinks "students will be able to observe the proceedings more conveniently."

Sherrie Brents, if elected, is determined to publicize the senate's progress. Brents plans to take advantage of the newspaper, signs, voice mail, and email to inform students. Brents believes an informed student body will make senate more efficient.

Jared Younger stated the exact role of president. As mediator, it is a role that should remain impartial. Regarding communication, he said, "Information is vital."

Dr. Seymour kisses a pig at Blister!

MC honor societies

by Tonya Briggs
Reporter

Maryville College is known for the academic integrity of its students. The honor societies at MC reflect this characteristic of success in education. Some of the honor societies include: Psi Chi, Kappa Delta Phi, Pi Gamma Mu, Alpha Psi Omega, Alpha Lambda Delta, Alpha Gamma Sigma, and Tri-Beta.

Psi Chi is a national honor society that has had a chapter at MC since 1991. It is open to people who are psychology or child development majors. They must have a 3.0 GPA overall, a 3.0 GPA in the major classes, and be in the upper thirtieth percentile of their class. Psi Chi currently has 18 members. The society does annual service projects, such as adopting a shelter. They are trying to organize an event that has alumni coming back and talking about experiences since MC.

The education honor society, Kappa Delta Phi, is an international society in education for undergraduate students who want to become kindergarten through twelfth grade teachers. Students must have a 3.3 GPA and a recommendation from an education professor to be eligible. The society is new; a local chapter was established last year. Dr. Terry Simpson, advisor, stated they were not doing service projects right now because many members are student teaching.

Pi Gamma Mu, a social sciences honor society, is for students in political science, history, economics, and international studies. Students must have a 3.0 GPA overall and a 3.0 GPA in major subjects. One must also have completed a number of major credit hours. Scholarships are available and inductions are held annually. Dr. Wallace Lewis and Dr. Hary Howard are the advisors.

Alpha Psi Omega is the theatre honor society. One is eligible based on points earned. For example, the lead role in a production is so many points. The inductions are each December, and students must be initiated by reciting the Greek alphabet and twelve lines of Shakespeare. Each year the society performs a student sponsored and directed show.

Alpha Lambda Delta is a freshman honor society which inducts students based on GPA which must be a 3.5. The society promotes and honors academic performance.

Alpha Gamma Sigma, a senior honor society, was founded as a counterpart to Phi Beta Kappa. It inducts primarily seniors who are in the top ten percent of their class.

Inside

Senate Presidents.2
Commuter senator.3
Baseball.....4
Artificial Tan.....6
Downs & Hoover...7
Dave Barry.....8

Highlights

News.....2,3
Sports.....4
Classifieds.....5
Features.....6
Op/Ed.....7,8

What your senate president candidates have to say

My name is Staci Kerr, and I am currently a junior studying biochemistry. While participating in senate for three years, I have seen the chamber develop into a strong governing body. However, I feel that this group can become even more influential. The strengthening of senate can occur through three ways. The first two are dependent upon one another. Initially, I believe many of the policies this year were beneficial, such as the open forum meetings, the conference at the beginning of the year, the establishment of a senate office, and recognition of the class officers and senators. I would hope to continue these policies with the possibility of changing several aspects. This idea leads to my second point—improving communication among the campus concerning issues discussed in senate. Finally, I believe these changes can only take place if respect and unity are maintained in the chamber. As a result, the group will definitely become more unified and work together to achieve its goals.

My name is Sherrie Brents, and I am a junior majoring in Political Science. Since I have attended Maryville College, I have been involved in various organizations. This involvement has fostered a great love and respect for what this institution stands for.

I have been involved with Model United Nations, Student Foundations, Hall Council, Student Literacy Corps, Alternative

Spring Break, and the Highland Echo. Presently, I am serving on the Planning and Budget Advisory Committee. As this year's student senate secretary I have prepared the agendas and minutes. With this position came the chance to become acquainted with the Board of Directors. Also, I have had the opportunity to hear and listen to the students' questions, concerns, and suggestions. This year has been an important year for MC, and it is important that the next president is aware of the changes that have occurred and are about to occur. More important, however, is that the president listen and lead the senate without ruling it. It's not the president's opinion and voice, but that of the students' that is important.

My name is Joel Campbell, and I am a candidate for student senate president. I am an upcoming junior. My major is computer science/business with a minor in economics. I am originally from Clermont, Georgia. This year I have been fortunate enough to serve my fellow students as a sophomore senator.

So what will I do as senate president? My major goal for next year is to increase involvement on campus. By involvement I mean involvement in everything from SPB to senate meetings. As senate president, I would not be able to propose legislation. The way I plan to increase involvement is through setting an example and encouragement of my fellow students. I have the experience, dedication, and determination to lead the senate to a successful year. Please vote for me on April 23. Thank you.

Lori and I want to see the beginning of dramatic change on the MC campus. First, we want to see an increase in student understanding and participation in Senate. The most efficient way to accomplish this is through a special non-senate public relations committee: this will provide a non-biased advertisement, review, and poll for students that will be funded by the senate. Second, we want to be the student voice to the administration. We are acquainted with many directors on the board that we will be meeting with to discuss student issues. Finally we want to see a greater emphasis on the Covenant. There are three ways to begin that process: reworking of the R.A. concept—we would rather see an extended Peer Mentor role; redefinition of speaking privileges for the administration in Senate meetings, and a reconstruction of the notion of DRB and J-Board—a Covenant Review Committee would be more conducive to student's ideas of respect, integrity, and scholarship. ~Josh Goocey

I'm Jarred Younger, from Townsend, a junior with a psychology major and a political science minor.

The main problem I have seen with senate this year has been that the majority of the people, outside of the representatives, do not know what is going on in this very important organization. For senate to function as effectively as possible, the students need to be informed and involved. I want to make sure that every student knows what senate is, what it does, and how they can use it. Students need to know who their senators are, when/where meetings are, and what is being voted on. I have several plans to increase communication. These include the heavy use of the new information/news channel, e-mail, the Echo, as well as a new senate board that will have a great deal of information. It will be my goal to make sure that every person who wants to know about senate has that information.

The Highland Echo Editor

Sarah H. West

Production Editor

Patrick E. Leslie

Copy Editor

Sarah Christians

Sports Editor

Joe Malheiro

Staff Writers

Sherrie Brents, Tonya Briggs, Shannon Bryant, Joey Cody, Carol Denning, David Downs, Dave Dupont, Chuck Gilkey, Brian Hastings, Andy Hoover, Kristi Johnson, Lori Leffel, Caroline Leggett, Andy Long, LaToya Lundy, Rissa Miller, Kazu Nakane, Sun-Im Ryu, Kim Schuenemann, Michelle Shuler, Adam Shepherd, Christi Stalans, and Traci Tidwell.

Public Relations Coordinator

Michelle Shuler

Photo Staff

Keli Jennett and
Jenny Oxford

Cartoonists

Carl Gombert

Faculty Advisor

Jeff Gary

Please send letters to the editor, comments, suggestion, or story leads to box #2247.

Phone

981-8176

E-Mail

Swest75@aol.com

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 500 words.

Commuter senators consider senate

By Kristi Johnson
Reporter

The commuter senators for the 1996-97 year are beginning to see the effects of decisions they have made this year.

Each senator identifies different policies which they believe to be influential on the student body, but all of them look upon their student government experiences as preparation for life after college.

Amanda McCarter, freshman commuter representative, said senate is a way to keep up with issues that affect the campus. She added that being a commuter does not allow her as much a chance to become aware of campus happenings.

McCarter believes the greatest accomplishment of senate recently is the change in the Covenant to include faculty and staff. She hopes she will be able to assist in the passing of other senate issues, like campus club announcements.

McCarter said senate would get more response from commuters if they continue to hold the newly established Friday meetings for all students.

Yosef Addis, junior representative, agrees senate helps in many ways. He said through senate, he learned how to better communicate his ideas, budget his time and money, and how to compromise.

Addis believes the recent changes in the alcohol policy, new residences, and a lottery system for the assigning of rooms have been some of the pro-active decisions which he has participated in making.

Adam Shepherd, sophomore commuter representative, also credits student senate with providing him with many of the necessary skills for his future.

Because it is a student organization, senate is on its way to gaining more prestige on the MC campus. With its proposed budget in place, the commuter section of the senate is a step ahead of where it was this time last year.

One of the more recent accomplishments of the senate is the development of the new on-campus fitness room located in Fayerweather Hall.

The commuters meet every Friday from 3-5 p.m. in the commuter lounge. The representatives invite anyone to come and talk about student issues and to give suggestions on how they can better serve and represent MC.

"Awards" cont. from p. 1

winners were Jennifer Brewer, Joel Shields, and Dara Di Giacomo. The Evelyn Seedorf Prize in Dramatic Arts was awarded to Russell Groff. The Theatre Scholarship was awarded to Jennifer Taylor, Amy Brewer, Nathan Zumwalt, and Barbara Milton. The rising Sophomore Award for art was awarded to Jill King. The Rising Junior Award winner was Callie McPherson. The Kenneth C. Cox Art Scholarships were awarded to Sahra Tinker, Chris West, and Scott West. Art scholarships were awarded to Kimiaki Itamura, Yasuko Tominaga, Mark Roddy, Mark Cole, Sarah Best, Joshua Lintz, Amanda Goodwin, Mike Fernald, and Michael Black. Music Performance Scholarships recipients were CJ Allen, Jason Bailey, Jennifer Brashers, Teresa Cooper, Mary Copeland, Sammy Crawford, Dara Di Giacomo, Richar Galyon, Yusuke Kanamori, Adam Shepherd, Jennifer Taylor, and Carrie Wright. The Minibel S. Dean Scholarship was awarded to Kevin Rogers. The Bahret Music Scholarship recipient was Robin Skipper. The Honarine Cozart Furgerson Scholarship was awarded to Jaqueline Broeker and Joel Shields. The A.L. Alexander Memorial Scholarship was awarded to Mary Eva Merrell. The Anna Holland Breen Scholarship recipient was James A. McFetridge. The Lowell Bunge Scholarship was awarded to Michelle Shuler. The Harry H. Harter Scholarship was awarded to Jerry Sullivan. The Marcia Keim Spickard Scholarship recipient was Reanna Meyers. The William G. Hoffner Voice Scholarship winner was Eleanor Peebles. The Dan H. Kinsinger Voice Scholarship was awarded to Funmilayo Eke. The Davies Fine Arts Award winner was Scott West. The Dorothy Barber Bushing Award recipient was Mark Hatfield.

The Ruth Lloyd Kramer Student Award winner was Sarah Stevenson. The Alexander English Prize was awarded to Matt Webb. The Verton M. Queener Award for History recipient was Tony Shuler.

For Impressions: Best poetry was awarded to Russell Groff. Best prose winner was Sarah Christians. Best Photography award winner was Jenny Oxford. The Drawing/Sketch recipient was Jessica Wilkins.

The Bates Bible Award winner was Marilew Rudisil. The T.T. Alexander Award recipient was Eric Obermiller. The Edwin R. Hunter Award for Excellence in Research in English or American Literature winner was Matt Webb.

The Outstanding Achievement Awards in Foreign Languages was awarded to Shannon Bryant for French, Tomas

Josh Goocey is put in the stocks by the grim reaper at Blister for being a "womanizer."

Czudowski for German, Teri Ann Green for Japanese, Jane Hadden and Robbie Allen for Spanish. The Charlotta Cook Hensley Award winner was Joey Cody. The Glenn Hewitt Ethics Award recipient was Monica Blackburn.

The David H. Briggs Award winner was Sandra Fuchs. The Irma Young Outstanding Senior Award in Interpreting recipients were Bridgette Ewing, Maureen McCollough, and Marti Slaughter.

The Russell Edwards Award winner was Mitsunobu Hanyu. The George A. Knapp Mathematics Award recipient was Justin Lane.

The John W. Burgess Award winner was Keli Stewart. The First American Trust Scholarship recipients were Brian McGhee and Lauren Lassiter. Op Den Gradf-Levering-In Den Hoeven Award was awarded to Sherrie Brents. The Wall Street Journal Award winner was Jeff Huckaby. The Verton M. Queener Political Science Award recipient was Lizbeth Opiola. The Lanie Crowell Scholarship winner Karson Leitch. The Lanie Crowell Award recipients were Monica Blackburn and Jennifer Woodhouse.

The Betty Lester Faulkner Scholarship was awarded to Cheryl Beth Carpenter.

The Mary Elizabeth Jackson Award winner was Mariana Boero.

The Presidential Scholarship was awarded to Ryan Coutlee. The Dean's Scholarship recipients were Karoline Westerling and Erin Palmer. The LeQuire Award winner was Clint Wight.

The Hayden Laster and Willie Nell Harold Laster Endowed Scholarship winner was Yvette Prinsloo.

The Alpha Lambda Delta National Honor Society for freshmen members are: Robertson Allen, Allison Baxter, Janel Beckley, Whitney Black, Laurie Brallier, Amy-Lisa Brewer, Tonya Briggs, David Bright, Ellen Canupp, Leann Evans, Folami Ford, Portia Frederick, Karen Gertz, Elyse Gottschang, Teri Green, Russell Groff, Jane Hadden, Kevin Hedrick, Elizabeth Hewitt, Lisa Higginbotham, Benjamin Hoopes, Travis Hutson, Sherrilyn Johnson, Brooke Ledbetter, Caroline Leggett, Jodi Lloyd, Steffanie Mashburn, Kelli McCroskey, Emily McLemore, Cherie Olivier, Melissa Poplin, Jessica Reynolds, Joette Russell, Melissa Walker, Cristina Wieck, Maxim Williams, Melissa Wright, and Nathan Zumwalt.

The Alpha Gamma Sigma Scholarship Award recipient was Clay Stalcup. The Alpha Gamma Sigma Honor Society of Seniors recognizes: Monica Blackburn, Jennifer Buck, Joey Cody, Sandra Fuchs, Laura Gibson, Jeffrey Krumm, Janette Lafon, Justin Lane, Maureen McCollough, Bryan McGhee, Ronald Moore, Amethyst Schott, Keli Stewart, Clint Wight, Jennifer Woodhouse, and Keryon Evans. The Alpha Lambda Delta Award recipient was Keli Stewart.

The MC Alumni Association Outstanding Senior Award nominees were Eric Obermiller, Tiffany Rudicil, Sarah Stevenson, Monica Blackburn, and Beckie Heckler. The Outstanding Senior Award recipient was Tiffany Rudicil.

Common Sense about Feeling Tense or Stress—the Good, the Bad and the Ugly!

The Health Clinic is providing a Stress Management Education program beginning April 21 through May 12. There will be a stress quiz to help assess the stress level in our lives, with appropriate brochures and hand-outs available. At the end of the program, there will be a drawing for two "give-aways." One is an excellent book titled From Stress to Strength, and the other is a gift certificate to a free stress management class at Blount Memorial Hospital.

Please come by the clinic for the chance to learn if your life is over stressful—and what you can do to change it.

Scots prepare for Shriner's tournament

By Joe Malheiro
Sports Editor

The Fighting Scots baseball team prepared for the upcoming Shriner's tournament in Marietta, Ohio by picking up a win on the road.

The Scots Landon Coleman delivered Sunday's game-winning hit in the top of the 11th inning giving the Scots a 5-4 victory over Thomas More College at Crestview Hills, Kentucky. The Scots were led on the day by Coleman and Junior Scott Hall who went a combined 3 for 5. Seniors Chuck Yates (3-for-6) and Ryan Rogers (2-for-5) also helped power the Scots to victory. Jeff Huckaby led off the 11th inning by notching a single. Senior Tony Johnson then stepped to the plate laying down the sacrifice to move Huckaby into scoring position. The rest was up to Coleman who delivered a two-out single, scoring Huckaby from second, proving to be the game-winning single.

The Scots will now look ahead to next weekend where they will face many talented squads at the Shriner's tournament in Ohio. The tournament will run Friday through Sunday.

The Scots, now 22-9 will face an extremely tough road ahead as their final 10 games will be on the road, six of which will be against nationally ranked opponents.

Lady Scots boast best record in nine years

By Joe Malheiro
Sports Editor

The Lady Scots softball team has posted its first winning season in almost 10 years, and the prospects for an even brighter future look promising.

By sweeping a double-header against Mississippi College on Saturday, the Lady Scots finished their season with a final record of 14-10, their best since the late 1980's. The Lady Scots took the first game of the double-header 10-6, and the second game 5-2. The Lady Scots were led in the weekend series by Brandy Shamoon and Maria de Guzman.

The Lady Scots relied on the bat of catcher Karen Strachan, along with several costly Mississippi errors which eventually helped the Lady Scots to victory. Strachan led the Lady Scots with three RBI, starting her hit parade in the third inning, driving in Julie Posey.

The fourth inning proved to be the games turning point as Kim Moss and Charity Merritt both reached base with walks. Following the two walks, Julie Posey reached first by a fielder's choice while trying to sacrifice bunt. With all runners safe, Sonja Moore and Strachan broke Mississippi's back by hitting back-to-back singles and driving in three runs to give the Lady Scots a 5-1 lead.

Mississippi College would later add one more run, but it would make little difference, as the Lady Scots went on to secure the best record in nearly a decade.

Blister in the Sun 1997

Blister in the Sun 1997 turned out to be "Blister in the Gym" due to a chilly day and rainy skies.

Activities at this year's blister included: 'Air Boxing' (below) and MC 'Chariot Races.' (right). Also, a number of organizations had booths at the festival to promote awareness about their group. Bottom right, the Baptist Student Union presents a puppet show.

JOB ANNOUNCEMENTS

Knoxville family needs summer child supervision to begin June 1. Work 40-45 hrs. per week, 8-5:30. Two boys ages 7 & 10, active in sports. Must transport to daily swim lessons at UT's Swim Club, use of outdoor pool at UT, boys enjoy bicycling, basketball, go to movies on rainy days. Must be responsible, with references. $5.00 hr. Job 226

Perpetual Motion Day Care, Maryville needs infant day care worker. Permanent part-time position Mon. thru Fri. 2-6:00 pm. Child Development background preferred, must be consistent, good with infants. $5.00 hr.

Also need someone to substitute as needed for positions. $5.00 hr. Job 227

Fort Sanders, West Knoxville location has several part-time positions including Aerobics Instructors, Baby Sitter (age 16 & up), Front Desk Receptionists, Lifeguard, Personal Trainer/Fitness Instructor, Teachers & Nannys on call. Job List 228

Full Time Positions

Several new listings for full time positions. Come by Career Services and look for recent postings.

For Your Information

Interviews May 7, CAC Americorp. Come to Career Services to sign up.

The Other Record Shop

Buy * Sell * Trade

New, Used & Collectibles

Cassettes, CD's, Records

2131 E. Broadway, Maryville
(located in the Bi-Lo Shopping Center)

Trade for new releases!

977-9959

Charge for non-MC students for Spring Fling,
May 3
at Royal Oaks.
In advance $4.00
At the door $5.00

Activity Briefs

>On Wed. Apr. 23, Career Services will be offering a session on graduate school which will take place at 3 p.m. in Fayerweather lounge.

> On Thurs. Apr. 24, the MC Jazz Band, led by Dr. Larry Smithee, will be giving their spring concert. Mezzo-Soprano Dara DiGiacomo will be performing with the band singing "Lover Man." Admission to the concert is free.

Campus Events

Tuesday, April 22

>11 a.m. CCM: Worship Service

>6 p.m. Mountain Challenge: Wall Climb

Wednesday, April 23

>3 p.m. FAYL: CS-Interviewing

>6 p.m. Mountain Challenge: Wall Climb

Thursday, April 24

>11 a.m. FACM: Community Forum

>6 p.m. Mountain Challenge: Wall Climb

>8 p.m. FACM: MC Jazz Band Spring Concert

>SPB Interviews for new members

Friday, April 25

>New SPB members posted

>BB vs Shriners Tourny-Away

Saturday, April 26

>Spring Leadership Conference

>Mountain Challenge: Raft Trip

>BB vs Shriners Tourny-Away

Sunday, April 27

>BB vs Shriners Tourny-Away

NORMAL COLLEGE CRAZINESS OR ANXIETY DISORDER?

Free, confidential screening

April 21-25.

- Call Bruce Holt, director of counseling, at x8220 to schedule a screening.

THE Crossword

ACROSS

- 1 Hefty slice
- 5 Clipped
- 10 Pleat
- 14 Flexible tube
- 15 Terre —
- 16 Woodwind instrument
- 17 Bad
- 18 Between: pref.
- 19 Costa —
- 20 Transactions with others
- 22 Champion
- 24 Farm implements
- 25 Penalty
- 26 A nut
- 29 Kitchen appliances
- 33 Daytime TV shows, for short
- 34 Fiasco, e.g.
- 35 Sickroom item
- 36 Offspring
- 37 Move by gravity alone
- 38 Move sideways
- 39 "Do — say..."
- 40 Soup
- 41 World-weary
- 42 Like vegetarian fare
- 44 Kicked
- 45 Ill-mannered
- 46 Ship part
- 47 Fully developed
- 50 Protector
- 54 Dark and Middle
- 55 Approaches
- 57 Former
- 58 Litter's littles
- 59 Regions
- 60 Court order
- 61 Wallet items
- 62 Wrathful
- 63 Beatty and Rorem

DOWN

- 1 Lean-to
- 2 Kind of seat
- 3 Vast landmass
- 4 Hotel employees
- 5 Polished
- 6 Dangles
- 7 Ins and —
- 8 Itinerary: abbr.
- 9 Most bold
- 10 Coerced
- 11 Sad news item
- 12 Crazy
- 13 Letter start
- 21 Charged particles
- 23 Hotels
- 25 Kind of bulb
- 26 State in India
- 27 Unfettered
- 28 Craze
- 29 Unruly kids
- 30 Brilliance
- 31 Stir up
- 32 Horse
- 34 Gander
- 37 Legless
- 38 A slackening
- 40 Smudge
- 41 Uncouth one
- 43 Relies (with "in")
- 44 Insolent
- 46 Cleaner

© 1997 Tribune Media Services, Inc.
All rights reserved.

ANSWERS

J-Board and DRB Report

On 3-12, Four MC and nine non-MC students in Gamble charged with violating the alcohol and visitation policies. Two received first offense; two had the charges dismissed.

On 3-14, Three MC students and one non-MC students in Lloyd Hall were charged with disorderly conduct. The case is pending.

On 3-19, One student in Davis was charged with violation of the visitation policy. The case is pending.

On 3-20, One student in Davis was charged with violation of the visitation policy. The case is pending.

On 4-5, Two students in Davis were charged with violation of the visitation policy. The case is pending.

CONTEST TO NAME BEESON APARTMENTS

We are looking for names for each individual apartment building. Only restriction is it can't be a person's name. If you would like to submit your ideas, please turn them into the Residence Life Office by May 2. A $10.00 gift certificate to the bookstore will be awarded to the best entry.

Artificial tanning: beauty vs. risk

By Nicole Griffin
The Utah Statesman
Utah State University

LOGAN, Utah—In her attempt to look as tan as possible for a special event, a young woman arranged several tanning sessions, all at different salons.

After her long day of tanning, the young woman was relaxing at home when she smelled something unusual, according to folklorist Jan Harold Brunvand in "Curses! Broiled Again."

When she realized it was coming from her own body, she showered, but was unable to rid herself of the smell.

A few hours later, a doctor's consultation revealed that she had cooked her insides and had only a short time to live.

Although this story is considered an urban legend by folklorists, and even Brunvand admits the story's truth is sketchy at best, medical experts, including the American Academy of Dermatologists, tout the serious medical problems associated with tanning by artificial light.

The darkening of the skin by artificial light works by exposing the skin to ultraviolet radiation, according to the Tanning Fact Book distributed by ETS, Inc. Tanning Systems. These UV waves cause pigment to the rise to the surface of the skin, thereby causing the "tan look."

Logan dermatologist Bradley Summers said artificial tanning has become popular in the past years because of society. "There is this perception in society that tan skin looks better," he said. "It's the mark of a leisurely lifestyle."

Summers said this societal perception is ironic because years ago, tan skin was the sign of the working class, and to the contrary, the aristocracy prided themselves on being milky white.

According to Summers, those who frequently indulge in this new trend have two main reasons to worry about the health of their skin: skin cancer and premature aging.

There's no question that tanning beds are not necessarily safe, Summers said. There is definitely skin cancer risks associated with frequent tanning, he added.

In his medical training, Summers said he saw dermatology patients who had something like tanning booth addiction. The patient's skin looked just like leather with white and brown spots, and they had prematurely aged at least 20 years, he said.

"I try to warn people when they ask about it, but they have to make their own decisions," Summers said. "People are going to do it whether they know the risks or not."

Despite these warnings, the success of the tanning industry is evident, even in Cache Valley in Utah.

Ten local tanning salons provide customers with private rooms, which in addition to housing tanning beds, contain radios, rotating fans, towels and cans of spray deodorant—everything to make the tanning experience a comfortable one.

While salon clients lie in the bed, which closes over them like a clam shell, they are exposed to ultraviolet light bulbs from the top and the bottom. Sessions last anywhere from just a few minutes to a half an hour.

Joy Bailey gets her caricature drawn at Blister.

Stephanie Vicars, manager of Island Tan, said most of the people who come to the salon know tanning is not entirely safe. Clients are warned about the dangers associated with UV radiation to eyes and skin by posters hanging in the rooms. In addition, every customer is required to sign a release form, Vicars said.

"Either they will tan in the sun or here. Both ways are harmful," she said. "That's basically proven—it's their decision to make."

Vicars said 30 to 40 percent of the salon's customers are Utah State students—both male and female. Also, she said, many come to Island Tan because they don't want to burn when going on vacation or Spring Break.

Summers said the yearly use of a tanning bed before going on vacation may be justified.

When asked the ultimate reason why people tan, Summers said he thought it was because it makes people feel good. Psychologically, Vitamin D from UV radiation helps people feel better, he said.

Although interest in tanning is still very strong and there continues to be a strong demand for services, Summers said down the road, the tide may turn when people acquire a greater understanding of the risk.

"I envision society's attitude about tanning changing, just as it did with smoking," he said.

"But that will be many, many years down the road."

Thumbalina, silly girl, how do you think you got that name?

Dancing around on top of his tables, jump when he said was the name of the game.

You went from your knees to the edge of your seat, anticipating the master's request

All of your energies vainly invested in giving your all instead of your best.

Thumbalina, silly girl, you would cease to breath if he said the word

His passions drown yours, his wishes deplete yours, your nothing more than a house-cleaning whore.

Lost are the castles that guarded your dreams, dead the ideas that made you your own

Senselessly traded for something as jaded as total possession from Beazulbub's clone.

Listen closely, Thumbalina, for every second is a day that is lost

Pack up your bags and blaze your way out of here—think of the future and realize its cost.

Build a fire to rekindle your passion, that white picket prison will loosen its hold,

Gasoline alley becomes liberation for a fool hearted woman and a tale gone untold.

—Mary Eva Merrell, Box 2514

Senate Elections

The presidential election will be held on Wednesday, Apr. 23 in residence and Fayerweather Halls.

The election for other offices will be held on Wednesday, Apr. 30, in residence and Fayerweather Halls.

The following underclassmen offices will be elected: senior, junior, and sophomore class president, vice president, secretary/treasurer, class senators.

Foothills Cinema 8

- The Saint PG13 T-M 4:30, 7:05, 9:35
- That Old Feeling PG13 T-R 4:20, 9:50
- Liar Liar PG T-M 5:30, 7:30, 9:30
- Devil's Own R T-R 4:25, 7:20, 9:40
- Jungle 2 Jungle PG T-R 4:30, 7:00, 9:30 F-M 7:00
- Scream R T-R 4:20, 7:15, 9:20 F-M 9:35
- Anaconda PG13 T-M 5:25, 7:25, 9:35
- Murder at 1600 R T-M 4:45, 7:10, 9:35
- Michael's Navy T-R 4:25, 7:15, 9:35 F-M 1:50, 4:25, 7:15
- Romy & Michelle's Reunion R F-M 1:35, 3:35, 5:30, 7:35, 9:50
- Sixth Man PG13 F-M 1:45, 4:25, 7:20, 9:40
- Volcano PG13 F-M 1:55, 4:30, 7:00, 9:40
- Midnight shows also, call 977-4499.
- $3.75 admission until 5:30 and $5.75 after; $3.75 for children anytime.

Get your ticket to the real world

by Dave Downs
Columnist

Oh yes! It is moi again... Dr. Feelgood, the administer of daily medications, the doctor of literary misgivings, the pain in everyone's gain, the impression of self expression, the brutality of 1st Amendment reality.

Well, another week has come and gone, and I am, with the love and support of Maryville College's faculty and administration, going to be graduating in just a few more short weeks. The idea of graduation leads me to the topic of yet another mindset encompassing the mind of the doctor. Just a few more short weeks, and I, along with the rest of my classmates, will be given a one-way ticket to the "real world," the hated territory of unemployment and bouncing bank accounts.

Of course for some, they will avoid the inevitable search for a home and run off to grad school or med school. To these people... congratulations, you have succeeded in not only accomplishing your dreams, but prolonging the inevitable future. However, stand proudly, you have succeeded where many people have fallen; therefore, I tip my hat to each of you.

Eventually, the graduating seniors, myself included, will have to leave the comfortable confines of the Maryville College community in search of first of all, a job. Just the search for a job scares me but throw in finding a home, paying for rent, buying food, car insurance, health insurance, death insurance, and a variety of other obstacles, and a person could become overwhelmed in a matter of seconds. This is even before you walk across the stage to receive your diploma.

Well, unfortunately, Extra Strength Tylenol and plenty of juices won't be prescribed from the doctor this time. Dr.

Feelgood prescribes the knowledge of knowing that you are one of a few selected individuals in this world that have what it takes to graduate from Maryville College and to even get a diploma period. You were given the ability to affect the future of your life. There remain many people in the world in which this statement is not true.

So, seniors, as we sweat over the hated senior comps, finish up senior thesis (which I believe they just make us do so they can laugh at how naive we really are), and while in the process of finishing the other two, also try to pass the classes this semester, sit back for a second and remember the first time you stepped on this campus as a freshman. Look how far you have come since then.

I can't speak for anyone else, but I am proud of myself. Through comps, thesis, three earrings, two tattoos, a near death experience, classes that still haven't made sense to me, and everything in-between, in a few short weeks, I will be a college graduate.

And for those who still have years to wait (haha, I feel pity for you), I sincerely hope that each of you can experience how this feels. It is, in all respect, worth the sweat and tears that goes into graduating from Maryville College.

Once again, CONGRATULATIONS SENIORS, and I look forward to sharing that special moment with you on graduation night when we not only get handed our diploma, but the responsibility of beginning a new chapter in our lives.

Why are you here?

By Andy Hoover
Columnist

Why am I here? Why are you here? In fact, how did any of us come to be here?

By here, I don't mean "here" in a vast and cosmic meaning-of-life-and-the-universe sense. I mean "here" in a much more concrete and local Maryville-College sense. Why and how did we come here? I found out about MC in a less usual way than most. I did not meet a representative from the school at a college fair. I did not read about the college in any publication. I did not know any alumni or current students.

I was residing in Nashville, my native town, with my wife and expecting our first child. I was employed at a restaurant delivery service in the evenings. I delivered food from various restaurants, so instead of only being able to order pizza delivered to your home, you could have steak, lobster, or even Thai cuisine.

Anyway, I delivered a meal one night to a gentleman staying at one of the nicer hotels in our delivery area. He was graying, and was dressed nicely, but casual; I could tell though, that his casual clothes cost more than my dress clothes. He was particularly friendly. To some customers, I was not worth getting off the phone to deal with; they'd just keep on talking on their cordless phones while they paid me for the food. Not him. He asked me if I was in school, and I said that I was not. I told him about how I had gone to Middle Tennessee State University for almost a year, then I got married and we were expecting a kid, etc..., so my schooling was sort of on hold for the time being, but that I did plan on finishing school at some point. He then proceeded to tell me about a small college in

IN SAVE SITUATIONS DR. SPARKY USUALLY GOES WITH THE SOUTHPAW

To my fellow Maryvillians,

Who among you remembers the seventh grade history class where you learned that one of the causes of the Revolutionary War was "taxation without representation?"

How many of you have noticed that we are governed here at MC by a representative democracy, and yet the student body is not represented?

To the best of my understanding, a representative democracy is one in which representatives are elected by different areas. Those representatives are then responsible for voicing the opinion of their constituency.

I can tell you that this semester, ONE senator has asked me my opinion on bills before the Senate meeting. One. And yet according to the Constitution of the Senate, there are several people who are supposed to represent me (and you).

I urge you to consider putting each agenda in the newspaper. This cuts off some of the burden from the senators because it gives us the opportunity to seek out our representatives and inform them of our opinions on different issues.

With elections approaching, I ask all candidates to consider your willingness to communicate information to the people you represent. Only through such input can you be responsible governors.

Thank you for reading this.

Sincerely,

Dara DiGiacomo

East Tennessee where I could get a good education while earning my way through school. He himself had gone there, and had since become a dental surgeon. He said he was on his way there the very next day, for a reunion or something. He told me how he had been on his own since he was sixteen, and consequently had not only worked his way through college, but had worked to support himself during high school before that. He strongly recommended that I find out more about the school. That school was Maryville College.

I looked up Maryville College, and it looked good; so here I am. I have been wondering how other students here found out about Maryville. I know we have a number of international students, and I am particularly curious about how they heard about Maryville. As a matter of fact, if you have an interesting story about how you came to be here, be you from Blount County or from across vast oceans, please write to me about it at campus box 2959 or e-mail me at ahoover@maryvillecollege.campus.mci.net. I would love to read them, and I might report on some of the more interesting ones in future columns.

Passing the hat

By Dave Barry

I recently received some very exciting mail. And I'm not talking about a sleazy letter from some magazine-selling outfit claiming I won a sweepstakes. I'm talking about a sleazy letter from the Majority Leader of the U.S. Senate, Trent Lott.

Trent—I call him "Trent"; he calls me "David"—informs me that I "have been nominated as one of Florida's 15 representatives on the Republican Presidential Roundtable." Trent explains that the Roundtable is "a unique group of only 400 Americans," and that "recently, a vacancy occurred"; he's hoping I will "consider stepping forward to fill it."

"It's not often in life that one is called upon to lead," notes Trent.

This is true. The last time I was called upon to lead was when I was a counselor at Camp Sharparoon, and I led a cabin of 12-year-olds on a nature hike directly into the heart of what had to be North America's largest bee colony. That was in 1966, and the swelling is just now subsiding on some of those campers.

Of course the Republican Presidential Roundtable is not interested in a nature hike. It is interested, according to Trent's letter, in obtaining my "personal help and assistance in shaping and driving our Republican national agenda."

I do have some thoughts on that. I think that Item No. 1 on the Republican national agenda would be to introduce a bill that would enable the Senate Majority Leader to change his first name from "Trent" to something that makes him sound more like the kind of strong legislative stud we want running our Senate, such as "Dirk," or "Buck," or—this would make me very proud to be an American—"Mojo."

My other suggestion for the national agenda occurred to me recently when I read about a plan by the federal government to pay hospitals NOT to train doctors. According to a New York Times article that I swear I am not making up, the federal government is going to pay 41 teaching hospitals in New York State $400 million of your tax dollars to stop training so many doctors, thereby stemming "a growing surplus of doctors."

Perhaps your reaction to this program is: "Hey, if there's such a surplus of doctors, how come whenever I try to see one, I have to sit in the waiting room long enough to watch 'Rocky' and all 14 sequels?" This shows why you are an ordinary dirtball taxpayer, as opposed to a health-care expert. The Times says that health-care experts greeted this plan as "brilliant." Bear in mind that, in their field, they spend a lot of time around drugs.

My own reaction to the plan is that it would be perfect with one minor modification: Instead of paying the $400 million to teaching hospitals, we should pay it to law schools, on the condition that they promise to stop producing lawyers, which already outnumber humans in some cities. Naturally, because this is a free country, any given law school would always have the option not to participate, in which case Army tanks would reduce it to smoking rubble.

So those are my feelings on the national agenda. Unfortunately, I may not be sharing them with Sen. Mojo Lott and the other members of the Republican Presidential Roundtable, because when you get to page two of Trent's letter it turns out that, in addition to my personal help and assistance in shaping and driving the national agenda, they want 5,000 of my personal dollars. And before I spend that kind of money, I want to consider what kind of deal I can get from the Democrats.

As I understand it, the Democrats have a whole menu of options for contributors. If you pay so much, you get coffee with the president; if you pay more, you get to stay overnight in the Lincoln Bedroom; if you pay still more, you get to use the Jefferson Bidet; and so on up the donor scale until you reach the level of your major supporters such as Indonesia or Barbra Streisand; at this level, you get the Executive Package, in which you get to appoint an ambassador, veto a bill and launch a nuclear attack against the city of your choice. Another plus with the Democrats is, it will probably turn out that your donation is illegal, which means they have to give it back.

The downside is, if you give money to the Democrats, reporters will snoop around and eventually link you to "Whitewater"—there is no activity on earth, including erosion, that is not ultimately connected to "Whitewater"—and President Clinton will issue a statement about you making these points:

1. He doesn't know you.
2. Well, OK, he DOES know you, but he didn't promise you anything.
3. Well, OK, he DID promise you something, but it was not technically illegal.
4. But if it WAS illegal, the Republicans do the same thing all the time, and we need to put a stop to it.
5. It was Chelsea's idea.

I don't need that kind of hassle. So I'm frankly thinking that maybe I won't be donating to either political party. Bill and Dirk will just have to call on somebody else to help them lead, somebody more in tune with the ethical concepts involved in modern political fund raising. I hear O.J. is available.

© 1997 THE MIAMI HERALD
DISTRIBUTED BY TRIBUNE MEDIA SERVICES, INC

Dr. Carl Gombert

That four letter word

by Sarah Christians
Copy Editor

I have recently been informed that there is no such thing as true love. I am trying as hard as I can to disbelieve this.

I never classified myself as pessimist or optimist. I like to think I'm a realist. Nor do I think of myself as a romantic. Now, however, I appear to be a hopeless sap, bent on finding a pair size 11 glass slippers.

I would like to be positive that there is such a thing as true love, but that's impossible. So, love becomes a matter of faith, something like a religion. My faith in love is mostly blind.

I have "religious experiences" about every three days. I fall in love very easily, be it with another person, a new song, or whatever new thing I read for 222.

Most important, though, is being truly in love with another human being. Where do lines of friendship blur into those of love? What makes love easy for one person, yet so difficult for another that simple friendship becomes impossible? Did I just write simple friendship?

I think I have come to the conclusion that my fall from belief will be ugly. I will lose my religion only with much kicking and screaming.

To me, true love (any kind) is pretty simple. It's nice. It's only when we desire reciprocal love that things get sticky.

I believe that it's possible to love completely without being loved back.

I believe the line between friendship and love should stay just as blurry as it is now.

I don't believe in knights in shining armor.

I believe you can have love without sex just like you can have sex without love.

I believe in Romeo and Juliet. I believe they might have thought of a better solution.

I believe that love is stronger than anything there has ever been or ever will be.

I believe in best friends and "happily ever after."

The Highland Echo

The weekly voice of Maryville College - Founded 1914

VOL LXXXII, NO. 18

Tuesday, April 29, 1997

502 East Lamar Alexander Pkwy, Maryville, TN 37804

Goocey elected 1997-98 senate president

By Sarah West
Editor

In this year's student senate president election, there were five candidates who made a bid for the seat. Josh Goocey was chosen by 28.6 percent of the 314 students voting to be the next senate president.

"Elections ran very smoothly. We hope to have a better turnout next year. We have had good turnouts for the last few years. We hope to keep increasing the numbers," said Emily Brock, chair of the election committee.

"It was really difficult on all the candidates, as far as stress is concerned. We were all happy when it was over," said Goocey.

Jarred Younger came in a close second with 78 votes. Staci Kerr received 59, Joel Campbell 50, and Sherrie Brents 35.

Candidates all focused on applying the covenant and increasing communication during the campaign.

"One of the big things that myself and the cabinet would like to accomplish is to reestablish the lines of communication that have been broken in the past few years between senate, the student programming board, and the Echo," said Goocey regarding his plans for next year.

In order to achieve this, Goocey wants "open dialogue between myself and the different organizations." He also added that "just being nice" was important.

Goocey said that in the past people have gone after these organizations for "personal reasons."

"Other than that," said Goocey, "we want to create a public relations committee, a senate funded ad hoc committee; none of the senators will be on it. They will be responsible for publicizing all the major student senate events."

Goocey's cabinet consists of Lori Leffel, vice president; Sherrie Brents, secretary; Joel Campbell, parliamentarian; Ryan Stewart, treasurer.

Thirty-two commuters voted in Tuesday's election, 44 Carnegie residents, 50 Copeland, 49 Davis, 43 Lloyd, 40 Pearsons, 56 Gamble.

Goocey's column on page seven details more of his plans.

Wednesday's election for the class officers and senators will occur between 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. and between 5 p.m. and 7 p.m. in Pearsons and Fayerweather's lobbies.

Fling into spring this Saturday!

By Lori Leffel
Reporter

Get ready to boogie! On Saturday, May 3, Spring Fling will be held at Royal Oaks Country Club from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. Dress is semi-formal. There is no charge for Maryville College students, but there is for non-MC students. Tickets will be $4 in advance and $5 at the door.

A van service will depart from Pearsons Hall every thirty minutes. There will be a cash bar available for those over twenty-one. Identification will be required at the door in order to get a wrist band, which allows students to drink.

This charge is something new, and is due to problems that have occurred in the past with non-MC students disrupting the dance. According to the Student Programming Board, it is very important that MC is represented in a good manner. By charging non-MC students, they feel that there will be less trouble at the dance. This charge is not a fund-raiser for SPB, but a way to defray damage costs.

A DJ will provide a variety of music. Souvenir glasses will be given away as a memory of the dance. Supplies are limited and will be given on a first come basis.

Rudicil chosen "outstanding senior"

By Tonya Briggs
Reporter

On Saturday, Apr. 19 the Maryville College Alumni Association awarded Tiffany Rudicil the Outstanding Senior award at the Academic Awards and Service banquet. She was chosen out of five candidates for the award. The other finalists were Monica Blackburn, Beckie Heckler, Eric Obermiller, and Sarah Stevenson.

All the finalists had to be a senior with at least a 3.0 GPA and an overall record of academic achievement and involvement in extra-curricular activities. The winner exemplifies the ideal MC graduate and promises to be an outstanding alumnist. All of the finalists received a plaque and recognition at the banquet.

Photo by Keli Jennett

MC Chaplain Stephen Nickle and History Professor Dr. Chad Berry appear to be a little sleepy on this spring day.

quet. Rudicil received a cash award of $100 and an additional plaque.

Rudicil is a Child Development major with teacher licensure and has a 3.4 GPA. She has been involved in MC players, Student Foundation, and Alpha Lambda Delta all four years at MC. She has also participated in the Jazz Ensemble, the Equestrian Team, Student Senate, Big Brothers/Big Sisters, the Wellness Force, Alpha Psi Omega, Psi Chi, Kappa Delta Pi, and STEA. She has also volunteered at the Koella Stables as barn manager, tutored at Ft. Craig Elementary and Mary Blount Elementary, worked at the YWCA with interactive educational theater, and participated in the MC Literacy Corp and the Senior Committee/Pledge Committee.

Her goals for the next five years include joining the Peace Corp for twenty-seven months. She wants to be in the Peace Corp to challenge herself and to help her discover the things about herself she wants to change. After her service in the Peace Corp she would like to

Cont. on p. 3

Inside

McDonald's thesis.2
Play.....3
Equestrian.....4
CELL.....6
Goocey.....7
Dave Barry.....8
Highlights
News.....2,3
Sports.....4
Classifieds.....5
Features.....6
Op/Ed.....7,8

McDonald presents thesis at final forum

by Shannon Bryant
Reporter

In Thursday's Community Forum, senior Kathryn McDonald was given the opportunity to present her senior thesis. This final Community Forum of the semester, entitled "The Search for a Heroic Past: Medieval Influence in Northern and Italian Renaissance," focused upon the Renaissance in relation to the Medieval period. McDonald cited "historical continuity" as her goal as she attempted to provide "a link" between the Renaissance and the Middle Ages.

Historians, stated McDonald, tend to take Renaissance art out of context. This is accomplished by forgetting that the Renaissance was not a time of instantaneous enlightenment, but merely a period of change and adjustment.

For example, McDonald pointed out that the nobles of the early Renaissance were beginning to lose power to the rising middle class. These increasingly insecure nobles "looked to the Medieval past" for comfort in seeming chaos. McDonald also cited the grievance literature of the Renaissance as a search for the past.

From there, McDonald referred to the concept of chivalry among nobility as a Medieval ideal held over into the Renaissance. She stated that chivalry was "a mostly fictitious idea which represents the nostalgia for the past" of which she spoke.

With the discovery of gunpowder, "the institution of knighthood disintegrated." This left the nobility without that which was "symbolic...of security." Therefore, McDonald said that "the inclination to glorify the knight is a common theme."

In addition, McDonald stated that the Renaissance carnival was influenced by the drama traditions of the Middle Ages. This carnival included masks, puppets, and staged hunts.

McDonald informed her audience that the Pope was often portrayed as wearing a carnival mask. This, she said, "implies that the Pope is a false God." She added that the symbolism is perpetuated by the fact that the puppet is burned and buried after carnival, in effect "sending it to hell."

Finally, McDonald began an account of Reformation sympathies present in the works of Northern painters.

These artists were named "heretical" by the Italian church, because the fact that they "recognized the hypocrisies and corruption of the church" is evident in their works.

McDonald concluded by stating that, in reaction to the many changes which took place by the end of the 15th century, "Northern society created a golden past."

Photo by Keli Jennett

Some people just really don't like their picture to be taken ...

"Freaknik" draws smaller crowd this year

By College Press
Service

ATLANTA—Fewer arrests and fewer complaints marked this year's Freaknik festival, an annual street party which draws thousands of black students from across the country.

Atlanta Police Chief Beverly Harvard reported there were 17 percent fewer telephone complaints about the citywide party.

Still, Atlanta police said there were 511 arrests, and 232 people were jailed. Last year, 683 people were jailed.

Police seized 29 weapons during the three-day event, more than twice as many as the 14 confiscated last year.

Cars jammed Atlanta streets throughout the weekend, as students crowded city streets and roadways.

Police issued the most tickets for traffic violations, followed by public indecency or "taking off their clothes," as officers described it.

In previous years, Freaknik was marred by looting and violence, which did not occur this year.

Last year's event attracted an estimated 80,000 students. No official estimate was made of this year's crowd, but authorities believe it was smaller than in 1996.

The Highland Echo Editor

Sarah H. West

Production Editor

Patrick E. Leslie

Copy Editor

Sarah Christians

Sports Editor

Joe Malheiro

Staff Writers

Sherrie Brents, Tonya Briggs, Shannon Bryant, Joey Cody, Carol Denning, David Downs, Dave Dupont, Chuck Gilkey, Brian Hastings, Andy Hoover, Kristi Johnson, Lori Leffel, Caroline Leggett, Andy Long, LaToyia Lundy, Rissa Miller, Kazu Nakane, Sun-Im Ryu, Kim Schuenemann, Michelle Shuler, Adam Shepherd, Christi Stalans, and Traci Tidwell

Public Relations Coordinator

Michelle Shuler

Photo Staff

Keli Jennett and
Jenny Oxford

Cartoonists

Carl Gombert

Faculty Advisor

Jeff Gary

Please send letters to the editor, comments, suggestion, or story leads to box #2247.

Phone
981-8176

E-Mail

Swest75@aol.com

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 500 words.

Photo by Keli Jennett

... While others, like Katie Greer, just grin and bear it.

Alpha Psi Omega presents play

by Sarah Christians
Copy Editor

On May 1-3, at 8 p.m., Alpha Psi Omega will present a production of "Beyond Therapy" by Christopher Durang. The show will be presented in the MC Playhouse.

"Beyond Therapy" is a comedy in two acts that has been performed both on and off Broadway.

The plot centers around a man and a woman, Bruce and Prudence, who are desperately searching for relationships and are both under the care of quirky therapists Stuart and Charlotte. The plot is complicated by Bruce's live-in lover, Bob. The play climaxes in a restaurant as the waiter, Andrew, brings the house down.

Durang attended Yale school of drama, where he received his M.F.A. in playwriting. He has received grants from CBS, Rockefeller Foundation, and the Gugenheim Foundation. He has also won a Tony, an Obie, and a Drama Desk nomination for acting.

"Beyond Therapy" is directed by senior history major Kathyn McDonald. Cast members include Sara Baker as Prudence, Robbie Patton as Bruce, AJ Ballou as Andrew, Russell Groff as Bob, Mark Hatfield as Stuart, and Becky Lill as Charlotte.

"I'm sure I will be crying a lot on May third," said McDonald. "Directing is really, really difficult. I'm glad I'm doing it, but I wouldn't want to do it all the time."

Detailing some of the quirky parts of the plot, McDonald said, "Yeah, Charlotte barks."

Admission is free to MC students with a current I.D.

"Rudicil" cont. from p. 1—

teach junior high students. She plans to attend graduate school in Ohio after her third year teaching evaluations.

She said, "I know my goals are ambitious, but I do know that I have the abilities to achieve them. The next five years are going to be an incredible adventure."

She is thankful for the love and support she has received from faculty and staff. "The faculty and staff have protected me, set me free when I needed it, and listened to me, and followed me in my times of sorrow," said Rudicil.

Her role as an MC representative began her freshman year. She said, "I began . . . as a Student Foundation member giving tours and eating lunches with perspective students."

She said in the future that wherever she is the people around her are going to hear about MC. She also is going to help support the college financially whenever possible. Other than the general fund, Rudicil wants to contribute money to the endowment fund, the fine arts division, and the equestrian team. She is looking forward to giving and helping MC.

*O Circe, Goddess,
Let the wild destructive train,
That in the past,
Has created a decaying core,
Sweep through your void that has Changed many an eddying form:*

*Yes, more sweet wine from your cup,
That mingles with the Power to heal,
To forget the dark smells
Of the past: Let the wine imbibe my soul.*

*O Circe, Goddess,
The quick eyed stranger
Looks at me, the beloved of Pan,
With wondering eye, as I slouch
Burdened by your fumes:*

*Thank you for your illumious magic
That mends the Darkness
Of the night--
Faster, faster,
You heard me shout,
But now let us return to our goals!
-Joshua Goocey*

MC Habitat for Humanity presents: "Links for Life . . . Help build a future"

May 6, 7, 8

Pearsons Lobby-cafeteria
Who can build a house the fastest between males and females?

Participants can purchase:
1 log for $.50 or 1 roof log for $1
11:30 a.m.-2 p.m.

Come purchase a log to build a house for Habitat for Humanity!

Contact Karson Leuch for more information at x8317.

Photo by Kelli Jennett
Did you know that the third floor of Fayerweather is being renovated for office space?

Thousands expected to tune out T.V.

By College Press Service

WASHINGTON—Can you live without "Friends"?

How about "Melrose Place" or "ER"? That's the question posed by TV-Free America, a non-profit group that hopes 5 million Americans will click off their television sets and abstain from watching the boob tube for an entire week this April.

The group's third annual National TV-Turnoff Week is April 24-30. Last year, an estimated 3 million Americans clicked off their sets to re-evaluate TV's role in their lives.

"National TV-Turnoff Week moves beyond the usual debates about the content of TV or individual programs . . . and instead asks the question: 'What does all TV-watching displace in terms of creativity, productivity, family interaction, healthy physical exercise and community involvement,'" the organization said in a statement.

The average American spends four hours each day watching television, which adds up to two months of TV viewing each year, according to Nielsen Media Research.

TV-Free America's website (www.essential.org/tvfa) includes testimonials from those who switched off their sets in past years. Several people said they were inspired to get rid of their sets entirely.

The organizers of TV-Turnoff Week have suggested 101 ideas of how to fill up time once spent in front of the set. Here are 10 of them:

1. Construct a kite. Fly it.
  2. Go bird watching.
  3. Bake cookies and bread. Make jam.
  4. Go to a museum.
  5. Take a nature hike.
  6. Watch the night sky through binoculars and learn to identify the constellations.
  7. Learn sign language.
  8. Write a letter to your favorite author. Mail it to the writer's publisher.
  9. Play soccer or touch football.
  10. Have a conversation with friends or family.
- Or, if you're a student, you could just study.

Equestrian team members, Lyon and Stephens, place at regionals

By Caroline Leggett
Reporter

Two outstanding equestrian team members are being recognized for their recent achievements. Senior Kelly Lyon and Junior Rennay Stephens met the qualifications to compete at the regional competition.

The requirements entail earning 35 points in each division of riding. Many team members came close to qualifying. Regionals were held at Midway College in Midway, Kentucky on Mar. 23.

In her first time at regionals Lyon placed 5th in Hunt seat and Stephens, also in her first time at regionals, placed 4th in Hunt seat and 2nd in Western.

From regionals, the top three riders in each division are chosen for zones, which is the level beneath nationals. Stephens, a two year

The girls work really hard at what they do. To get to regionals, zones, and nationals is a great honor.

-Rennay Stephens

team member, qualified to compete in Western at zones on Apr. 13 at Wesleyan College in Macon, Georgia.

She said, "The girls work really hard at what they do. To get to regionals, zones, and nationals is a great honor. Many freshmen team members came close to regionals this year, so next year a lot of the new girls will most likely qualify."

At zones, the rider chooses the horse he or she will be riding by drawing a name of a horse out of an envelope. There is no time to prepare, therefore the riders are judged on posture and performance on the unfamiliar horse. No one from Maryville advanced to nationals.

Lyon said, "It's been a great riding experience here. Hopefully, the girls will mature along with it and put as much dedication and heart into it as possible."

Elemental Zoo rocks MC

by Sarah Christians
Copy Editor

Garage bands are a dime a dozen, but The Elemental Zoo is not your average band. With as many influences as there are genres of music, the Elemental Zoo is an eclectic, rocking mix of sounds, talented and determined to go far.

The members of the Elemental Zoo are all connected to MC, though not all are students. Dan Hayes sings lead vocals for, Joel Shields plays lead guitar, Sam Apodaca plays rhythm guitar, Brett Heron plays bass, and Josh Hardeman plays drums. Hayes, Shields, and Apodaca are all MC students.

The band's manager, Joel Campbell, is also an MC student.

Their music is, according to Campbell, "hard to describe." "It's a pretty intricate combination of rock, funk, blues influences," said Hayes. Campbell and Hayes cited several bands and musicians as contributing influences such as Eddie Van Halen, Phish, Metallica, Ben Harper, and the Doors.

It seems each band member has a different influence. "I hate Marilyn Manson, but Sam likes them," said Hayes.

The started during the 1995-96 academic year when Hayes and Apodaca wrote a couple songs together.

Then, this year, Hayes suggested the pair get together to play with guitarist Shields. They played

It's a pretty intricate combination of rock, funk, blues influences.

- Dan Hayes

their first show at the Homecoming Coffee House with Larry Ervin on drums, although Hayes defers, saying, "We played 'Free Bird.' That didn't count."

They found drummer Hardeman when he dropped out of Herbal

MC community concert band performs its spring program

The Maryville College-Community Concert Band will present its spring concert, Friday, May 9 at 8 p.m. in Wilson Chapel.

The band is currently completing its fifth season under the direction of Dr. Larry Smithee, Associate Professor of Music.

Jazz, also an MC band. Hayes related that Hardeman was friends with Heron, and that was how the Elemental Zoo found their bassist.

In addition to playing at the Homecoming Coffee House, the Elemental Zoo has played at Copeland's Casino Night and Lloyd's recent Friday night Coffee House.

The Elemental Zoo tries to write songs consistently, but often don't have much time left over after other obligations. "We'd have a lot more stuff if we didn't have to go to school," said Hayes,

The spring program will consist of a wide range of musical styles, including traditional march tunes, religious hymns and Hollywood film music. A special highlight of the program will be the saxophone solo performance of Gunther Schuller's Tribute To Rudy Wiedoeft.

laughing.

The band created their name, interestingly enough, on a job Hunt. Hayes and Hardeman were at the Knoxville Zoo performed by long-time community member Jason Stumbo.

Maryville College alumnus Elias Smith will be the featured conductor for Dedicatory Overture, by Clifton Williams and The Music-Makers, by Alfred Reed. Admission is free.

applying for jobs when they were inspired.

In the future, the band plans to record a demo and try to get "gigs in Knoxville."

MACCO presents final concert

The Maryville-Alcoa College-Community Orchestra will be performing their final concert of the 1996-1997 Signature Series on Monday, May 5 at 8 p.m., in Wilson Chapel.

MACCO will be performing "A German Requiem" by Johannes Brahms with the Maryville College Community Chorus directed by Dr. Daniel Taddie. Soloists will be Rosemary Barenz, soprano, and Burt Rosevear, baritone.

The orchestra will also perform Symphony No. 1 by Beethoven.

Exhibiting artists will be Muriel Fawcett, watercolors, and Steve Gamza, pottery.

Tickets are adults: $10.00, seniors and students: $7.00, and children 12 and under $2.00 and are available at the door.

JOB ANNOUNCEMENTS

Summer & Full-time Jobs

For the latest summer postings come by Career Services.

Summer Jobs in Tennessee-Sevierville, Gatlinburg & Pigeon Forge have openings for Hotel & Restaurant Management, Food Services Management, and Liberal Arts Majors.

For full-time positions, we have current notices from the U.T., Suntrust Bank, City of Knoxville, Pellissippi State and Covenant Health.

Summer Jobs

Local family needs child care for girls ages 6 & 10, Mon-Fri 30-40 hrs. per wk. Need vehicle to transport to swim-team lessons, safe driving record. Must be proficient swimmer (have pool). Prefer single female. $5 per hr.

Local family needs Nanny for summer Mon-Fri 7am-6pm, girl age 5, prepare meals as needed, option of room & board with salary to be decided.

MC's Coach Pavo needs sitter for 2-3 evenings per wk (or 20-25 hrs.), and occasional weekend sitting for 3 children ages 13 months, 7 yr., & 9 1/2 yr. Responsible, non smoker, vehicle needed. Room and some board with kitchen privileges will be provided in lieu of salary. Perfect for someone with a day job.

Part-time Jobs

Moses Cartage Service, Louisville has permanent part-time position for West Knoxville delivery person. Minimum age 20, good driving record. Mon-Fri 2:30-7:30, one Sat. per month 6:30am-noon. More Sat. work available. $7.00 per hr. Job 231

Townsend Shopping Center has permanent part-time positions for cashier, some grocery stocking. Work 30-40 hrs. per wk summer, part-time fall. Work AM or PM, $5-5.75 hr. Job 232

First Tennessee Bank has several positions for bookkeeping clerk, lock box clerk, proof operator, teller, lundy operator, cash letter clerk. Pay begins $6 per hr. Some jobs have incentive or differential pay. Jobline 977-5195. Job 233

THE Crossword

ACROSS

- 1 Burn slightly
- 5 Tender
- 10 Shut with force
- 14 Acting part
- 15 Cheek coloring
- 16 Musical sound
- 17 — the Red
- 18 Illegal fire setting
- 19 Decays
- 20 Doorway
- 22 Wads in secret
- 24 Rim
- 25 Expletive
- 26 Hair cream
- 29 Wrist decoration
- 33 Distinct entity
- 34 Dashing youth
- 35 Mexican cheer
- 36 Irritate
- 37 Stop
- 38 Look over
- 39 The sun
- 40 Carried
- 41 Roman statesman
- 42 Put into bondage
- 44 Weight inspector
- 46 Help along
- 47 Pierce with dagger
- 48 Unproductive
- 51 School publication
- 55 Ripened
- 56 Included with
- 58 — mater
- 59 "Clair de —"
- 60 Oslo natives
- 61 Spool
- 62 Sly look
- 63 Seizes
- 64 Finished

DOWN

- 1 American Indian
- 2 Antler
- 3 Landed
- 4 Refresh mentally
- 5 Citrus fruit
- 6 Power
- 7 Blend together
- 8 Self
- 9 Deserter
- 10 Walked
- 11 Circle
- 12 Poker stake
- 13 Untidy state
- 21 Total up
- 23 Lingerie trim
- 25 Rub out
- 26 Pocketbook
- 27 Pungent bulb
- 28 Factories
- 29 Dull and insipid
- 30 Train type
- 31 Make happy
- 32 Singing voice
- 34 Head cover
- 37 Pact
- 38 Sword container
- 40 Infant
- 43 Pantry
- 44 Phases
- 45 Listening organ
- 47 Feel
- 48 Formal dance
- 49 Chills and fever

© 1997 Tribune Media Services, Inc.
All rights reserved.

ANSWERS

- |                              |                    |
|------------------------------|--------------------|
| 50 Lacoste of tennis         | 52 Bread spread    |
| 51 A ruling house of England | 53 Sign            |
|                              | 54 Leafy vegetable |
|                              | 57 Extinct bird    |

The Other Record Shop

Buy * Sell * Trade

New, Used & Collectibles

Cassettes, CD's, Records

2131 E. Broadway, Maryville

(located in the Bi-Lo Shopping Center)

977-9959

Trade for new releases!

Charge for non-MC students for Spring Fling,

May 3

at Royal Oaks.

In advance $4.00

At the door $5.00

*SPB is not charging to make extra money but to defray damage costs.

Activity Briefs

>On Thursday, May 1 there will be a student recital which will feature a variety of instruments and voices. It will take place in the FACM at 8 p.m.

>On Saturday, May 3 at 8:30 p.m. Bouji's will feature a husband and wife musical duo performing rock, jazz, blues and Irish music.

Campus Events

Tuesday, April 29

>11:30 a.m. CCM: Community

Worship

>6 p.m. Mountain Challenge: Wall Climb

Wednesday, April 30

>1 p.m. FAYL CS-Job Searching

6 p.m. Mountain Challenge: Wall Climb

Thursday, May 1

>11 a.m. PDR: ICC Meeting

>6 p.m. Mountain Challenge: Wall Climb

>8 p.m. TH: "Beyond Therapy"

>8 p.m. FACM: 8 p.m. Student Recital

Friday, May 2

>8 p.m. TH: "Beyond Therapy"

Saturday, May 3

>8 p.m. TH: "Beyond Therapy"

>9 p.m. SPB: Spring Fling at Royal Oaks

Oaks

Monday, May 5

>7 p.m. Athletic Banquet

>8 p.m. WC: MACCO and MC Community Chorus

Impressions Correction

The poem "Who Broke Aphrodite" on page 28 is continued on page 35, where it is listed as "In Paris." It was printed as two separate poems. We apologize for the error.

The staff of Impressions

If anyone still wants a copy of Impressions, please contact Sarah Stevenson at x8394.

CONTEST TO NAME BEESON APARTMENTS

We are looking for names for each individual apartment building. Only restriction is it can't be a person's name. If you would like to submit your ideas, please turn them into the Residence Life Office by May 2. A $10.00 gift certificate to the bookstore will be awarded to the best entry.

CELL program attracts students around the world

By Brian Hastings
Reporter

One of the good things that Maryville College has to offer its community, is the international culture shared by the students in the Center for English Language Learning program and the rest of the campus.

Many students from around the world come to MC to learn English and American culture. They come with the discipline needed in order to grasp the skills for speaking another language.

For many of the CELL students, it is a necessity to be able to speak English. English is the business language of the world; in order to function well in the business world, one must know English as one of their languages.

The CELL program operates in five week sessions year around and two week sessions in January and July. Nearly 60 to 70 students are enrolled in the program each session. Classes are weekly, Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

In this session, 32 percent of the students are from Japan, 21 percent are from Korea, 16 percent are from Venezuela, and 11 percent from Panama. Also there are students from Argentina, Brazil, Guatemala, Mexico, Puerto Rico, Thailand and Turkey.

Before I Leave My Home (Here I Will Remain)

Let the world's foundations tumble
Let the earth groan and rumble
Let the land turn to dust and crumble
Before I leave my home.

Let the sky become dark and drear
Let the trees become brown and sear
Let there be not a single deer
Before I leave my home.

Let the sun be plucked from the sky
Let the birds cease to fly
Let the crops wither and die
Before I leave my home.

Let the flood come and so what it will Let the hail ruin the fields
Let the fire burn and kill
But here I will remain.

From now until the end of hope
I will stay and cope
There is not enough to quench my spirit
And here I will remain.

by Will Rich

*Friends and Faculty
The honor of your presence is requested at the marriage of Kelly DeAnn Huffstetter
and*

*Benjamin Shawn Batchelor
Saturday, the twenty-fourth of May at three o'clock in the afternoon*

Broadway Baptist Church

2329 East Broadway

Maryville, Tennessee

Reception immediately following

RSVP by May 10

983-0047 or 984-6484

Number in party

Hogan reflects on MC experience

By Patrick Leslie
Production Editor

Joshua Hogan, class of '94, is taking advantage of his undergraduate studies at Maryville College.

Hogan is currently enrolled as a first-year graduate student in the Medieval Studies Program at the University of Notre Dame in Indiana. He says that his interest is "history, particularly Church history and the history of Islam," and that he is "also interested in Middle English literature."

Hogan believes MC helped to prepare him for his studies. He said that he "was able to gain experience in working closely with an academic advisor [Dr. Amy Livingstone] on my Senior Thesis project. I was also blessed with the opportunity to be involved in other independent research projects. The open atmosphere between professors and students helped with the beginning of my professionalization."

One of the things Hogan said he missed most about MC was "the community and friends I found at MC." He added, "I also miss the mountains and East Tennessee."

The fondest memories

Hogan has of MC were his years in Copeland Hall and the year he spent in the "dungeon," a room shared with his friends in the basement of Carnegie Hall that received little sunlight.

Participating in the study abroad program, Hogan believes that his experience in Wales changed his perception of himself and the world.

Foothills Cinema 8

■ The Saint PG13 T-R 4:30, 7:05, 9:35
■ Liar Liar PG13 T-M 5:30, 7:30, 9:30
■ Scream R T-R 9:35
■ Anaconda PG13 T-M 5:25, 7:25, 9:35
■ Murder at 1600 R T-M 4:45, 7:10, 9:35
■ McHale's Navy T-R 4:25, 7:15
■ Romy & Michelle's Reunion R T-M 5:30, 7:35, 9:50
■ Sixth Man PG13 T-R 4:25, 7:20, 9:40
■ Volcano PG13 T-M 4:30, 7:00, 9:40
■ Breakdown R T-M 1:25, 3:25, 5:30, 7:35, 9:35
■ Austin Powers PG13 T-M 1:40, 3:45, 5:25, 7:20, 9:25
■ Warriors of Virtue PG T-M 2:00, 4:45, 7:10, 9:40
■ Midnight shows also, call 977-4499.
■ $3.75 admission until 5:30 and $5.75 after; $3.75 for children anytime.

Do you need prayer?

Come to the Upper Room Tuesdays at 11:30 am. and Thursdays at 12:00 noon, 2nd floor of Bartlett Hall. The Praise and Prayer Group cares about you.

Senate Elections

The election for senior, junior, and sophomore offices will be held on Wednesday, Apr. 30, in residence and Fayerweather Halls.

The travels of Kazu: moments of embarrassment, part 2

By Kazu Nakane
Columnist

I still have two things that I have not conquered; the drive thru and the telephone. They're both obvious situations that I can't use nonverbal language.

One day, I was told that my debit card (you know what it is, don't you? It's similar to a credit card, but the amount of money I have to pay will be subtracted at the cash register) didn't work at all. I was told twice on the same day, and they just said something was wrong with mine. I had to call the customer service center by myself. I got so nervous because I had never made a phone call in English. I spent more than 30 minutes walking around my room, took a deep breath, and hanged around some more. Finally I pressed the buttons with my finger shaking. It took several times figuring out what guidance was saying. The sound of my heartbeat sounded bigger than the voice. I finally got a man on the phone, about three days later.

"What can I do for you, sir?"

I explained the situation about using my card. I had to explain what I was saying again and again, but he still didn't understand. I didn't understand what he was saying. He soon got tired of saying "Pardon?" or "Would you say that again?" and his comment toward my sorrowful complaining, was

"....., ....., ....., .....(rough snort)"

I was trying to tell my problem calming myself down from freaking out, but my explanation succeeded this time. He said,

".....Something is wrong with your card. You gotta bring it to the bank and ask for the checking."

Something is wrong!? What is something?? Give me back my time and effort. I just lost all of my confidence in speaking English, and hanged up the phone being at a loss. In fact, nothing was wrong with my card.

A few months later, I drove to the fast food shop. Because I felt tired, I decided to try to go through "Drive thru." I took everyone's order and was ready to speak up to the microphone. Here came our turn. Actually, I wanted four number one meals (or combos or whatever.) I guess I spoke correctly, but there was a problem; we couldn't hear each other's voices very well. We echoed each other, and the situation was just a mess. I saw cars in the mirror making a line. The pressure was on. I just wanted to escape from the mess. After I finished answering, it suddenly became silent. I thought I can go ahead. I was pressured and embarrassed because of the line, and I wanted to escape as soon as possible. I drove forward seeing the next driver confused in the mirror. I became more panicked. When I arrived at the window, the girl and I were frozen for a moment, and she gave me just one number one meal. I had no idea how we could share just one with four people. I had to drive around and get into line again. From then on, I get out of my car and buy the food inside.

Thank you very much for reading my column. For the further articles, I'd like to hear your comments, suggestions, and topics you would like me to introduce. Please send your e-mail to KNakane@aol.com or mail me to box #2726.

Dr. Gombert

MASHED POTATO HEAD

Goocey outlines plans for next senate

by Josh Goocey
Senate President Elect

I want to extend a humble word of gratitude to all of those students who were confident in my abilities to serve as student senate president, and for those of you who are not so confident I pray that you will please wait patiently with an open mind: my motives are pure.

I have chosen a cabinet that will consist of: Lori Leffel as vice president, Joel Campbell as parliamentarian, Ryan Stewart as treasurer, and Sherri Brents as secretary. Each member was chosen for their ability to add to the diversity of the cabinet, and I feel that when they are combined they will create a strong center for the senate body.

We have a wide range of issues that we want to cover over the next year, and all of us are dedicated to serving our fellow students. First, we hope to make a great deal of structural changes in the way the senate meetings are run. We hope that this will improve efficiency and help us accomplish more for the students. Second, we want to establish an ad hoc committee that will be responsible for publicizing all of the major senate events such as open forums, regular senate meetings, and elections. Also, we hope to create a tentative activities schedule for the entire year, and place these schedules in the boxes of all the students. By doing this the students will know enough in advance so that they can plan to attend. As well as doing this the public relations committee will be publicizing all major events the week they are occurring via e-mail, posters, and memos. In addition we hope to make the senate meetings more accessible to the students, and we would like to see a large student representation at all of the meetings. Third, we have seen a large level of displeasure in the room selection process, and we hope to make changes that will benefit all of the students. Discussions on this will begin immediately. Fourth, we want to begin a covenant action committee. We have researched and amended the covenant for long enough, and it is time that we start acting on the ideas of the covenant. This will be a long process, and there is no way that we will be able to reach all of the goals we are going to set, but the process must begin somewhere. Tantamount to this idea, our senate cabinet, especially myself, wants to create a greater sense of unity among all of the student organizations. In the past we have seen huge political battles occurring between senate and other important student organizations. We feel that by amalgamating the major student voices like The Highland Echo, The Chillhowean, and the Student Programming Board, we can accomplish much more than by wasting time over petty disagreements.

I would like to encourage any forms of advice or concern. My box number is 2187, and my home phone number is 977-6109. You may also e-mail me at rodion@maryvillecollege.campus.mci.net. I am looking forward to serving the community that I have grown to respect over the past three years, and I hope that we can all work together to make beneficial improvements to the campus and the community.

Ask mister language person . . . if you dare

By Dave Barry

It is time once again for "Ask Mister Language Person," the only grammar column to have won both the Nobel Prize for Literature and the Indianapolis 500.

We shall begin today by reviewing the correct use of the apostrophe, which is defined grammatically as "the little thing that is hard to find when you put it inside quotation marks," as is shown in this example: "".

Even top professional writers have trouble with apostrophes, as we see in this quotation from William Shakespeare:

"O Romeo, Romeo

"Your lookin' fine in them tight's."

This is incorrect, of course: Shakespeare has used the word "your" as a participial infraction, which requires an apostrophe, as we see in this corrected version:

"O Romeo, Romeo

"You're buttock's are highly visible in them tight's."

A lot of people have this problem, which is why it is important to remember the Three Rules For When To Use Apostrophe's:

1. TO INDICATE CONTRACTIONS.

Example: "This child-birth really hurt's!"

2. IN HERPETOLOGICAL PHRASES.

Example: "There's snake's in the Nut 'n' Honey!"

3. IN LETTERS TO CUSTOMER SERVICE.

Example: "Dear Moron's:"

Please have these rules tattooed on your biceps, because Mister Language Person is getting tired of correcting people and may soon turn the whole matter over to the police.

Now let's take a look at some other grammar questions that have poured in to the Institute of Grammar Institute from readers all over the world:

Q. Has anybody ever used the word "penultimate" correctly?

A. Not since 1949.

Q. Recently, did your research assistant Judi Smith make a grammatically interesting statement regarding where her friend Vickie parks at The Miami Herald?

A. Yes. She said, quote: "She comes and parks in whoever's not here's space that day."

Q. Can you please quote the caption to a newspaper photograph from the Associated Press, sent in by Patricia Lees, showing a man throwing some kind of whitish substance?

A. Yes, it said: "a protester hurls yogurt in a demonstration in Belgrade Wednesday against the government's decision to nullify municipal elections."

Q. Private citizens in Belgrade are allowed to possess YOGURT?

A. Yes. No wonder there's trouble over there.

Q. On Nov. 23, 1996, The Milwaukee Journal Sentinel ran a story, sent to you by Amy Mason, concerning six teen-agers who were charged with illegally shooting 30 deer. Please print the reaction, as printed in the story, of state Department of Natural Resources official Dave Zeug.

A. He said: "It's sad, especially this close to the deer gun season; there's at least 30 or more deer that are not available for someone's son or daughter."

Q. Those poor kids!

A. I'm sure the deer were also very upset about missing deer gun season.

Q. Please quote from a 1996 Associated Press story, sent in by Richard Carvonius, concerning a Federal Aviation Administration decision to ground a charter airline for not meeting federal standards.

A. The story states that "planes in the air were allowed to land."

Q. No wonder we have problems, what with the FAA being so soft on these airlines.

A. If the Internal Revenue Service were in charge, this type of situation would be dealt with via missile.

Q. How many letters will you get from people who are upset because you used apostrophes incorrectly in this column?

A. Hundreds.

Q. Really? Even though it's clear to anybody with an IQ above crustacean level that it's a joke?

A. Yes. We will also receive angry mail from people on all sides of the hunting issue.

Q. What about Barry Manilow fans?

A. Yes, now that you've brought his name up. Thanks a lot.

X X X

GOT A QUESTION FOR MISTER LANGUAGE PERSON?

He does not care.

© 1997 THE MIAMI HERALD
DISTRIBUTED BY TRIBUNE MEDIA SERVICES, INC

Dr. Carl Gombert

ULTIMATELY, VACU-MATIC'S LATEST AD CAMPAIGN PROVED INEFFECTIVE.

Anatomy of a critic

By Patrick Leslie
Production Editor

The world seems full of people who are willing to criticize other peoples' actions or their work. However, I wonder if many of these people realize what their views, which frequently turn into blind and arbitrary ravings, reflect of themselves to anyone who stops to ponder.

People such as these who feel that they are the definitive source should consider reading a little work by Alexander Pope. In his work An Essay on Criticism he calls it as it is: "Go just and alike, yet each believes his own./ In poets as true genius is but rare/ True taste as seldom is the critic's share."

Perhaps the most scathing part of this statement is that it is true. Those who criticize are seldom, if ever, understanding of what must be done and what is given up to produce the final product. Hardcore critics frequently either lack the practical experience or any knowledge of what it really takes. They do not see the soul a person laid bare.

The beauty of all of this is that Pope and others alike, whether they realize it or not, are calling it like they see it and showing how these windy critics really are. But then again what would Pope, his contemporaries, or his predecessors know you may ask. The answer in many ways is comical. The shockwaves which they unleashed are still felt even today. And as for the critics? They still do not realize that they, critics old and new, are the comic relief for the master.

Letters to the Editor must be signed and limited to 500 words.

The Highland Echo

The weekly voice of Maryville College - Founded 1914

VOL. LXXXII, NO. 17

Tuesday, May 6, 1997

502 East Lamar Alexander Pkwy, Maryville, TN 37804

Seniors prepare for life after Maryville College

By Lori Leffel
Reporter

Graduation is getting closer and closer and the seniors will soon be leaving MC and going in their own directions. May 18 is the day when these students will either lose the title of student and enter the "real world" or get one step closer to that goal.

Katie Greer plans on working at Disneyworld in Orlando, Fla., this summer. She said, "I hope to get a job with some biological aspect at Disney, such as Epcot."

Jennifer Woodhouse is moving to Orlando with Greer and is going to work at the new ESPN club in Disneyworld.

Other seniors, such as Greg Plattenburg and Allison Pryor, plan to take some time off from school.

Plattenburg said, "I am going to take a year off and try to get into a law school and be an environmental lawyer."

Prior said, "I am going to goof off for about six months and then go to UT and get my master's."

Many seniors, like Mike Parris and Sarah West, are going back to school in the fall.

Parris plans to attend pharmacy school, and West is planning on studying law at UT's law school.

Law school is not the only choice for graduate schools. Clint Wight will be attending medical school at East Tennessee State University in Johnson City.

Marriage is the next step for some, like Monica Blackburn, Ben Batchelor, Patrick Leslie, Kim Schuenemann, and Paul Weaver. However, marriage is not their only plans. Schuenemann will be attending journalism school at UT, and Weaver will be entering the master's of divinity program at Columbia Theological Seminary.

"I wouldn't be going in this direction if it were not for the religion department, specifically Dr. Cowan and Dr. Cartilage," said Weaver.

Juniors, seniors may live off campus by fall 1998

By Sarah West
Editor

By fall of 1998, juniors and seniors may be permitted to live off campus. This recent development approved at the last board meeting is the result of a projected imbalance in the number of resident students and the resident space available.

"It [the approved proposal] really is all enrollment-driven," said Dr. William Seymour, vice president of student development.

The five year plan for residence life in the goals for MC2000 includes making sure that adequate number of housing possibilities are available. The goal of 80 percent housing of full-time students by 2000 had to be adjusted back to 70 percent because of the lack of space and increasing number of students. Even with the new Beeson Village, in two years, there will not be enough space available.

"We've gotten pretty good at predicting enrollment," said Seymour.

The residence requirement that only fifth year seniors, 23 year olds, married students, or locals may live off campus will expand to include first seniors and then juniors who qualify.

It will be announced in the spring before students go through room selection. Students will participate in a process, undesignated as of yet, to be approved.

The reason it will also be extended to juniors is that it may be necessary. Many seniors have room grants or may be happy with on campus arrangements, and, therefore, the lack of space could still be a problem.

The approved proposal gives a solution to the concerns of students wanting to live off campus and to the lack of residence space.

Photo by Cassie Kershaw

Alisha Waldroop and Randy Stanley take a break from dancing.

General election results in some seats still vacant; others tied

By Shannon Bryant
Reporter

This past Wednesday, Maryville College students had the opportunity to voice their opinions on who should lead the separate classes in the upcoming year. The general elections were held in Pearsons and Fayerweather Halls during the times of campus lunch and dinner. Many candidates ran for the positions.

There was much competition in the rising senior class during the elections. Juniors Becky Keiffer, Devin Koester, and Emily Brock ran for the office of president of the senior class. The final results were Koester winning with 83 votes, Keiffer with 31 votes, and Brock with 22 votes. Running for vice president were Kelly Boyatt, Chris Rajkowski, and Lori Leffel. Leffel was elected with 56 votes. Boyatt had 40 votes, and Rajkowski had 37 votes. The office of secretary-treasurer was contested by AJ Ballou and Whitney Nations. Nations won with 39 votes. Ballou had 35 votes.

Senior class senators for next year will be Staci Kerr and Jarred Younger. Kerr received 63 votes, while Younger had 47. The other candidates were John McDonald, who received 45 votes, Sherrie Brents with 42 votes, and Becky Keiffer with 31 votes.

The election for the rising junior class officers ended in a partial stalemate. Ryan Stewart, Jennifer Windrow, and Erin Palmer ran for president, vice president, and secretary-treasurer, respectively with no opposition. Ryan Miller was elected senator with 55 votes, while Rachel Roe and Nicole Brabender tied with 48 votes apiece. The runoff will be held on Wednesday, May 9.

The rising sophomore class will also have additional elec-

Cont. on p. 2

Inside

Schott, Fox.....	2
Scholarships.....	3
Baseball.....	4
Polly.....	6
Downs & Hoover..	7
Dave Barry.....	8
Highlights
News.....	2,3
Sports.....	4
Classifieds.....	5
Op/Ed.....	6-8

Schott, Fox prepare for France

By Sarah West
Editor

Two Maryville College students, Amethyst Schott and Valerie Fox, will be participating in a Study Abroad Experience at the Catholic University in Western France this summer.

The students will take a placement test and then attend courses for three and a half weeks, earning six credit hours in French.

While they are in France, a French student will be attending Maryville College.

"The one reason that I'm really glad I'm going is because "Election" cont. from p. 1

tions on Wednesday. Holly Grigsby was elected president with no opposition. The positions of vice president and secretary-treasurer were left vacant. Candidates will be located for those positions, and they will be voted upon in the additional election. Brian Gosset and Nathan Anderson were elected as sophomore senators with 75 votes and 68 votes, respectively. Smith Jean-Phillippe received 60 votes.

Student senate president Jason Thompson called the general elections successful with good voter turnout. He said, "We're real pleased with it." The runoff will be held from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Congratulations

Sarah Christians,
the next editor
of the Highland Echo, and to Tonya Briggs,
the
assistant editor!

I want to find a French guy; no, I'm kidding! It is really because it will complete my French experience at Maryville College," said Schott, a junior majoring in English and minoring in French and psychology.

Schott previously visited France for a weekend last summer when she was working in Switzerland as part of her French practicum and the International Cooperation Education (ICE) program. The ICE allows students to learn another language by working around speakers, instead of attending classes. It also allows students to pay for their experience through their work.

"One thing I've always wanted to see is Mont St. Michel, which is supposed to be a very beautiful place," said Schott, regarding her anticipations for the trip. "Of course, I want to go back to Paris."

Valerie Fox, a junior major-

Photo by Cassie Kershaw

Students shook booty at Spring Fling.

ing in international business, and French would be invaluable," said Fox. "I want to go see everything!" said Fox.

Of the places she would like to visit, Fox mentioned Spain and Morocco.

Fox believes the learning opportunity is important for her career options. "I'm hoping that one day I'll be able to work overseas in some capacity, and French would be invaluable," said Fox.

As an exchange student in high school, Fox went to the Netherlands. While in Europe, she is hoping to visit her host family that she has kept in touch with through letters.

"I love to travel. It's one of the things my mother can't believe because she's a homebody," said Fox.

The Highland Echo Editor

Sarah H. West

Production Editor

Patrick E. Leslie

Copy Editor

Sarah Christians

Sports Editor

Joe Malheiro

Staff Writers

Sherrie Brents, Tonya Briggs, Shannon Bryant, Joey Cody, Carol Denning, David Downs, Dave Dupont, Chuck Gilkey, Brian Hastings, Andy Hoover, Kristi Johnson, Lori Leffel, Caroline Leggett, Andy Long, LaToya Lundy, Rissa Miller, Kazu Nakane, Sun-Im Ryu, Kim Schuenemann, Michelle Shuler, Adam Shepherd, Christi Stalans, and Traci Tidwell

Public Relations Coordinator

Michelle Shuler

Photo Staff

Keli Jennett and
Jenny Oxford

Cartoonists

Carl Gombert

Faculty Advisor

Jeff Gary

Please send letters to the editor, comments, suggestion, or story leads to box #2247.

Phone

981-8176

E-Mail

Swest75@aol.com

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 500 words.

Ragsdale scholarships available for studying abroad

By Rissa Miller
Reporter

How many of you want to study abroad but think you can't afford the cost? Well, here is your chance to travel and study overseas! The Chairman of the Board, Richard Ragsdale, has given Maryville College an endowment worth one-half million dollars to begin the new Ragsdale International Scholarship program.

Each year, one quarter of the annual earnings will be added to the principal, enabling the amount to remain comparable in the future. The remaining three quarters will be distributed to students wishing to study abroad.

Scholarships will be rewarded by the International Programming Committee, which approves student applications to study abroad. Students who wish to study abroad for one or more semesters will be given preference over students who want to travel for short-term study or study trips, such as J-term trips.

For students attending one of MC's sister schools, those in Japan, Korea, Great Britain, France, Puerto Rico, and Mexico, there is a direct tuition exchange and, in some cases, room and board as well. In these instances, the scholarships, which could equal as much as $2,000 per student, can be used to cover the extra costs of air fare, related travel, and other incidental costs.

For students wishing to travel during the summer, the scholarships might be used to cover costs, including tuition, at a time when normal financial aid is not available. They would also cover some portions of the cost of trips led by faculty taken during J-term and the summer.

Photo by Cassie Kershaw

These students appear to be enjoying themselves on this memorable night.

The 1997 Summer Institute at Maryville College

the Native American Legacy in the Smokies

JUNE 1-5, 1997

Featuring:

John Martin
Mark & Sherry Finchum
Dr. Mike Abrams

Billy White Wolf Ford
Freeman Owle
Amy Walker

Interest Sessions:

Craft Classes:
Bead Jewelry
Stone Carving
Fingerweaving
Native American Basketry

Cultural Insight:
Medicine and Spirituality
The Tradition of Masks
Craftsmanship of Weapons & Tools
Music of the Cherokee
Traditional Roles of Men and Women

Heritage:
Indian Art
Genealogy
Tribes in North America
Cherokee Government
Qualla Boundary
Cherokee Language

Recreation: Hiking
Nature Walk
Introduction to Cycling
Cades Cove Bike Tour

For More Information, Call:
(423) 981-8050 or (423) 981-8014

THE SUMMER INSTITUTE
Maryville College

BOUJi'S

MARYVILLE'S
MOST HAPPENING COFFEEHOUSE
IS NOW OPEN!

ESPRESSO CAPPUCCINO LATTE
STEAMERS
BAGELS CROISSANTS PASTRIES
ETC. ETC. ETC.

Always Fresh
Always Delicious

Jazzberry General
205 Court Street
Phone: 984-0391

HOURS
7A.M.-7P.M. MON-THURS
7A.M.-11P.M. FRIDAY
10A.M.-11P.M. SATURDAY
IF YOU WANT SUNDAYS
LET US KNOW!!

Live music (call for schedule)

Directions: Take a right at the Court Street Exit and drive till you see us!

Weekly Entertainment
See calendar for details!

Bring this coupon and get a free cup of coffee or a $1.25 off anything in the store!

Scots hope to make national toumney

By David Dupont
Reporter

Over the weekend of April 25-27, the Scots traveled to Marietta College in Ohio to compete in the Shriners tournament. This tournament hosted three nationally ranked teams: Emory University, Marietta College and Otterbein College.

The fighting Scots triumphed over, nationally-ranked Emory University in the first two games by a score of 7 to 6 and 6 to 4. In the third and fourth games, the Scots fell to Marietta (No. 4 in the nation) by a score of 4 to 3 and lost to Otterbein by a score of 9 to 14.

Due to the rain, the Scots were not given a chance to redeem themselves against Marietta or Otterbein. However, beating Emory was enough to put them in contention for a national tournament bid.

Players from Maryville were named to the all tournament team. These players were: Chris Hennessee, Jeff Huckaby, Brian McGee and second baseman, Chucky Yates.

When asked about the success of his team, Coach Eric Etchison said, "No one person has made our team successful: it has been a combination of nine to 10 players. This has made it really exciting for me because I never know who will step up and take control of a game."

Etchison along with the team would like to extend a special thanks for the support they have received from parents, local fans and the student body here at Maryville College.

As the baseball team gets ready for this weekend's Salisbury State Gull Classic Tournament, many records are in danger of being broken. According to Coach Etchison "We are close to breaking the defensive field mark, and Chucky Yates is on a pace to break the record for double plays and career stolen bases."

In just one season Yates has attempted to steal 44 bases. He was successful 39 times.

Other individual statistics include Chris Hennessee's .402 batting average. Chris Daniel, Brian McGee and Pyle lead the way in pitching by allowing opponents an average of only one hit per inning.

As the Maryville College baseball season draws near the end, their chance of participating in the national tournament looks bright. However, the Scots must first focus on the Salisbury tournament. Methodist, Albright and Salisbury State will be the teams that MC will be competing against.

Men's soccer shaping up for next season

By David Dupont
Reporter

Spring practice for the soccer team is almost over, and next year looks to be a very promising one. Even though the Scots will lose some very valuable seniors, they are excited about the new young talent they posses.

When asked about next year Heath Corlew said, "We have lost a lot of size and speed; therefore, we will have to focus more on possession."

Over the past two years, the Scots have rallied to two national tournaments and have boasted a record of 34 wins and 8 losses.

When asked about next year Andy Byrd said, "We have a very young team and we are very excited about our potential. We have lost a lot of great individual players, but our team still remains in tact with the same goals and hopes from the previous years."

In the off season, the Young Scots have won two tournament championships and have put in extra time with the weights.

As the Scots look forward to this fall, they are excited about their potential. The Scots feel that this summer will determine how successful they are.

Byrd said "How hard we work this summer will determine how successful we are next year."

Slag

She

is the one with the angsty face her mind on herself fingers point every place

a flower child with fatigues on her back well read, but can't see what her intellect lacks so enlightened she's not.

preaching here
while she rots

a contradiction, aberration, avoid her indoctrination

so carefully dressing proves she doesn't care what she wears peel back her scabs
see the cancer that's there eating her thin

she is her poetry
gouging, biting, frothing recoiling from the mirror to lap at her own venom

she doesn't want to believe that athletes can be aesthetes that poets can be pretty reviving the high school anti-clique

she's everyone's favorite left-over hag
she looks up to the stage with her face on the sag

pobresita. what's wrong?
not homecoming queen?
didn't he kiss you?
do you see what we mean?

she reeks of arrogance, and petulance.
but no evidence of recompense

Alternier-than-thou
and disdainfulness is next to godliness

no, who asked you ?

shy?
oh, no doubt. we bought into that con
histrionic. sardonic.

acidic.
"Amard, play on."

gifted?
oh, of course. she wants awards and applause, but from only those blind to ersatz erudite claws

-from admirers
who meet her strict standards—in awe

sick?
oh, yes. so she's beyond this critique feeding her illness
those scraps of raw meat

see there bite off the brittle little laugh with a caustic sneer

vitriol she is hypocrite. Devil's advocate.

she won't think this is about

Her

-Anonymous

Do you need prayer?

Come to the Upper Room Tuesdays at 11:30 am. and Thursdays at 12:00 noon, 2nd floor of Bartlett Hall. The Praise and Prayer Group cares about you.

Job Announcements

Full Time Positions

There are some professional listings with Universities, etc. that require master's.

Office Team Staffing, Knoxville needs receptionist, $6-7 hr, secretary, admin. assistant $7-10 hr, data entry $6.50-7 hr.

Other listings from Pizza Hut, A&W of Maryville, UT Medical Center, Mountain Loft Resort of Gatlinburg, & Farm Credit Services. Applebees of Alcoa needs all positions.

Global Solutions is staffing entire new office, several positions, some traveling may be required, chance to relocate.

Blount Memorial needs general clerk 4 pm-12 midnight. Temp-to-hire position.

Full time baby sitter asap 10:30 pm-7:45 am (for a single parent nurse with 2 boys ages 11 & 6). Need someone responsible to sleep in the home, perfect for someone in class or may also have another job. Up $100.00 wk.

Summer Jobs

Several listings in Career Services Office for summer work, stop by and look through new information from: Promises Child Enrichment Centers, Office Team Staffing, Pizza Hut, & A&W of Maryville.

Some new baby sitting jobs, local. Jobs can be flexible, speak to the families, they are anxious and willing to find someone.

Blount Veterinary Clinic has full-time and part-time positions (temporary) for fillin during peak season, May-Aug. Occasional weekend work, will be flexible with your needs. Assist Vet, receptionist, kennel & general cleaning of facility. $4.75-6 hr. Job 241

Part Time Promises Child Enrichment Centers of Maryville& Knoxville needs counselors & preschool teachers. Interested in students majoring in early childhood or elementary education. Start $5.20 hr. Job 239

Local boarding kennel needs "odd jobs" or "handyman" mostly outdoor work, painting, lifting & use of wheelbarrow, very flexible days & hrs. Kennel off Sevierville Hwy., 9 mi. from campus. Must be responsible, honest, reliable. $5 hr., with raise after 90 days. Job 238

Applebees of Alcoa is accepting applications for all positions, flexible schedules, meal discounts, insurance, vacations. They will match or exceed your current pay stub. Employee stock ownership program, instore mgmt programs. Job 237

Pizza Hut is hiring delivery drivers, flexible schedules, free meals & uniforms, stock purchase plan, insurance, vacations, etc. $7-12. per hr. Job 240

TVA Credit Union has 3 openings for tellers, very flexible schedules, morning or afternoon, 2-3 days per wk, may vary. Will train. $6 hr. Job 236

Global Solutions is staffing entire new office, has several openings in sales, presentations, independent rep., chance to travel and relocate. Job 235

A&W Maryville has part-time positions: cashiers, assemblers, cooks, closer, shift supervisor, will train. Start $5 per hr. Job 242

THE Crossword

ACROSS

- 1 Carry on
- 5 Oak and elm
- 10 Alphabet run
- 14 — in one's bonnet
- 15 Crest
- 16 Does garden work
- 17 "Vast wasteland"
- 19 Christmas
- 20 Building wing
- 21 Aid in a crime
- 22 Mood
- 24 A Peron
- 25 Doled
- 26 Bring to mind
- 29 Penitent
- 32 Put into office
- 33 Waltz, e.g.
- 34 Dowel
- 35 Dim
- 36 Gay —
- 37 Practice for a bout
- 38 Follower: suff.
- 39 Social gathering
- 40 Ganders
- 41 Bad marks
- 43 Wine
- 44 Kilns
- 45 Attention getter
- 46 A Hemingway
- 48 Ajar
- 49 Resort
- 52 Curb
- 53 Ginn or frown
- 56 Pork, e.g.
- 57 Religious ceremonies
- 58 Golf club
- 59 — well that ends well
- 60 Milkop
- 61 Soccer great

DOWN

- 1 Grade
- 2 Brother of Seth
- 3 Dickens character
- 4 Football holder
- 5 Of a certain group
- 6 Up
- 7 Revise
- 8 Self
- 9 Verdict
- 10 Verse writer
- 11 Ladle
- 12 Far: pref.
- 13 Addict
- 18 Safe
- 23 Major ending
- 24 Item in a car trunk
- 25 Cash
- 26 Fixed
- 27 Gladden
- 28 Ritual
- 29 Wagons
- 30 Pester
- 31 Heron
- 33 Pub missiles
- 36 Monet and
- 37 Stratum
- 39 High official: abbr.
- 40 Dells
- 42 Happenings
- 43 Of poor quality
- 45 After

© 1997 Tribune Media Services, Inc.
All rights reserved.

ANSWERS

- 46 — Bombeck
- 47 Stagger
- 48 Makes a choice
- 49 Father
- 50 Swimming place
- 51 — Bancroft
- 54 Noon, in Rome
- 55 Drink slowly

Campus Events

Tuesday, May 6

11:30 a.m. CCM: Community Worship
6 p.m. Mountain Challenge: Wall Climb

Wednesday, May 7

6 p.m. Mountain Challenge: Wall Climb

Thursday, May 8

6 p.m. Mountain Challenge: Wall Climb
8 p.m. FACM: Aaron Stone-Senior Recital

Friday, May 9

8 p.m. Wilson Chapel: MC Community Concert Band Concert
Last Day of Classes

Saturday, May 10

8 p.m. Wilson Chapel: Gospel Choir

Sunday May 11

BB vs Gull Classic-Away

Mother's Day

Monday, May 12

10 p.m.- 11 p.m. MRDR: Finals Breakfast

Activity Briefs

On Thursday, May 8, baritone Aaron Nakia Stone will be performing his Senior Recital accompanied by Carol Ann Smalley at 8 p.m. Admission is free.

On Saturday, May 10, Bouji's will be featuring "The Love Dogs" beginning at 8:30 p.m.

Cassie Kershaw, Jamie Cotton, and Jacqueline Broeker have fun at Spring Fling.

MC band, WikSend, performs at showcase

By Sarah Christians
Copy Editor

The talent at Maryville College knows no bounds. In addition to others, well publicized and not, WikSend will be performing at the Music Association of Knoxville's Showcase of Artists.

WikSend is comprised of MC students C.J. Allen, Lodge McCammon, and non-student Chris Owens. Both Allen and McCammon sing, while Owens plays percussion. The band diversifies its sounds with McCammon on guitar and Allen on various wind instruments, among them, the penny whistle.

WikSend came together

last school year. Speaking of Allen, McCammon said, "I heard him singing in the hallway and I invited him to come sing a song I wrote called Fourteen Years and Twenty-One Days." Of their first musical venture, Allen said, "It was horrible, but I liked it."

The duo couldn't exactly phrase how percussionist Owens had joined the group. "I don't know," said McCammon, "he just showed up." "He's good," added Allen. Both noted that Owens added a driving beat and African influences. "He brought a whole new sound to us," said McCammon.

The band, who has been writing and recording since Christmas of 1996, cites numerous influences. Allen and McCammon listed such diverse sounds as Adam Duritz, Steely Dan, the old Rod Stewart, Journey, Queen, and the Grateful Dead. Explaining his affinity for the Dead, McCammon said, "They had crowds follow them around, why not?" Allen also noted Dave [Matthews] as one of his influences. "We're on a first name basis," he said.

Even with the numerous and diverse influences, WikSend has still managed to create an individual sound. "It's a melting pot of our generation and the times," said McCammon. He also said that the music was avant-garde and philosophical. After Allen protested a bit, McCammon said, "that about sums it up: feel good music."

As for their performance schedule, Allen said, "It's hard to find good places to play." Both also commented on the nature of performing in front of crowds. McCammon grew up recording and Allen often finds it difficult to get energized. "Now we have the crazy bongo player, it's easier to be wild," Allen said.

WikSend's future is uncertain. "The future is we're having fun," said Allen. The band is putting together a compact disc this summer that should be done in late May or early June. McCammon credits Owens with the CD, which will be independently produced and contain 11 songs. They will also be performing at the Showcase on Saturday, May 17, at World's Fair Park. Tickets will be three dollars. WikSend is one of two MC bands performing at the Showcase; the other is metal band Synge.

Explaining their unique name, McCammon and Allen faltered for a moment, trying to say it was random. Eventually they relented and told the truth. "It means the tail end of [MC student] Crissy Wieck," said Allen. "We're always lookin' at her butt. She was our inspiration."

Dear Editor:

This letter concerns our campus bookstore. In no way do I wish to condemn much of the staff or students who work there, they've been helpful and competent for the most part. What bothers me is the store's buyback policy. To me, it's reprehensible to buy back a practically brand new textbook at the end of each semester at a fraction of what it cost the student, and then sell it again to the next student at basically the brand-new price. Although I admit I don't know the markup policy on stocking books the first time around, it's pretty obvious that the overhead the second time around can't be much. What a gouge. What is that, around 95% profit just on every two times a book is sold? That doesn't even count successive sales. As if we don't already pay an arm and a leg for our education here. I'll have to promise my first-born boy in exchange for a lousy alumni t-shirt.

The only excuse I hear time and again is that "all campus bookstores operate that way." Well, at the risk of sounding trite, that's just not good enough. Maryville is supposed to be the "best possible college." It's supposed to be better. Setting standards in serving and caring for students. That's one of the main reasons I'm proud to attend here (although I'm exceedingly disappointed in myself for waiting until graduation to write this). By the way, that graduating senior discount coupon doesn't exactly make up for three years of consumer bitterness. (Don't even get me started on the questionable ethics of professors who require, for their courses, the purchase of books they've authored. . . .)

I do realize that we pay for the convenience of having the store right in Fayerweather (plus the fact that it has such a small community to serve) and avoiding the hassle of taking the time to sell books ourselves, but after waiting in line for an hour, we still can't be guaranteed that they will be bought. Like we don't have enough to worry about already. And this kind of pricing is ridiculous. Especially when there's little if any difference between the pricetags of an ancient, stinky, dog-eared, coffee-stained book and an exact virginal copy untouched by human hands. I ask the business policy-setting powers that be to examine the necessity of this kind of treatment. And if this is what it costs to keep our bookstore running in the "off" season, I also urge students to go a bit out of their way to frequent the UT bookstore instead. (You can save around ten bucks per book on average.)

Signed

-A concerned student (who wishes she'd used her hard-earned money to have her thesis bound professionally for about the same price as one of those butt-ugly binders.)

Dear Editor:

This evening I was approached in the cafeteria about signing a petition to have the Echo continue its [sic] once a week publishing. I replied with a curt "No" and I would like to take the opportunity to explain myself.

The Echo has some good points. When I get my paper, the first thing I look for are Dr. Carl Gombert's comics. Some of the pictures are good, the poetry ranges from "he must be 'kidding'" to quite interesting, and I enjoy the crossword puzzles. However, I am not satisfied with the quality of this paper.

The Highland Echo, since becoming a weekly newspaper, seems to be struggling for articles and headlines. Many of the articles are not more than two pages long and don't have enough valuable information to fill a page. The article gets filled in with not so vital quotes and the pages are completed with pictures. Some of these pictures staged [sic], despite provoking headlines (April 1, Commuter Senators), and make the paper even worse and the attempt more evident.

The information seems disorganized. Recent Features pages contained classified ads, the calendar, the Crossword, and the J-Board and DRB Report on its [sic] first page. More calendar information was then on the next page with the Features articles.

I suggest the staff writers find more article material and research the topic more in order to put more information into the articles. Also, put all calendar events on the calendar, not in three different places on different pages (Campus Events, Activity Briefs, and Senate Elections). This will make the activities easier to find and will give the activities better publicity. The calendar was much more readable in the April 8th issue, you might try going back to that format, using indentation. The editors need to check and make sure the titles of the pages are correct and someone needs to be sure the articles are proofread before the paper is printed.

If you cannot find interesting and important information in this community, perhaps we're not ready for a weekly publication. Just please don't fill in the gaps with pictures again.

Sincerely,
Heather Devilbiss

Hey, why don't you come work with us next year!

-Echo staff

The Journey of a Lifetime

When I sit upon the ground,
Gazing wonderly to the clouds,
Hoping, Waiting,
Until the sounds,
Cease to flow upon the ground.

Lying on my back at night,
I gaze into the moonlight,
Seeing the future, seeing it stare.
Until the clouds pass
In my view, do I care.

When the clouds block my view,
I listen for the wind
To guide me through.
Always hoping, always willing and wanting,
For it to get me to,
That in which I dream and care.

Robert Bailey

True nightlife confessions

By Andy Hoover
Columnist

I have been thinking lately about who I am and who others think I am. I have been pondering an aspect of my life that, although it affects me every day, I have kept secret from most of my friends and associates here on campus. I have told a few friends my secret, but it is not general knowledge as far as I know. I realize that not everyone will accept my choices, but I don't want to be ashamed anymore. It is time for me to be honest with everyone, including myself, about what I do at night. As some readers have probably figured out by now, and some on the campus may have already suspected; I, Andrew Hoover, deliver pizzas for a living. There, I said it. There is no turning back now. Everyone knows. I feel a weight lifted from my shoulders.

Perhaps I should explain myself. When I moved here from Nashville in order to attend Maryville College, I took the only job I could find that fit my schedule and would generate enough income to support my wife and two children. I also happened to have experience in the field. It has been a fun and rewarding job. So why have I been so embarrassed to tell anyone about where I work?

When I deliver a pizza to a home with small children, I, "the Pizza Man", get a reaction of only a slightly smaller magnitude than Santa Claus would. But when I deliver to adults, especially ones I know, I feel like the doorman, the paperboy, the waiter, the servant; I feel distinctly below peer level. That's the essence of it right there. My pride is what makes me keep my job a secret. To suddenly be a servant to those I would be an equal to is a cutting blow to my pride.

I work hard to support my family. It's honest work. I deliver pizzas now so that I can go to school. I go to school so that I won't be forever delivering pizzas. I really have nothing to be ashamed of. I sacrifice now for future gain. I wear a hokey uniform and subsist on tips so that my children will not have to. I risk death in the ever possible traffic accident or robbery so that I can better myself intellectually.

I know things now that I could not imagine when I was the age of most of my fellow

Polly's final "good answer"

Dear Polly:

I've been at my new job about three weeks now, and a coworker (who's worked there for over seven years) has been making increasingly suggestive remarks to me, as well as sexist remarks about my competence. This week he actually grabbed my breast as he put his arm around me! This guy is not my superior, but I still don't know what to do! I've told him to stop, but he's not getting the message. I always thought that if something like this ever happened to me, I'd report it immediately, but I can't risk losing this job. How should I handle this?

Signed,
-Fed Up in Farragut

Dear Fed Up,

Made contact with your local Neanderthal, did ya? First of all, please don't feel alone in students. I know what it is like to receive the unconditional love of a child. I know what it is to feel the weight of responsibility for an entire family upon my shoulders. I know what it is like to see my own child being born. While sobering, knowing these things have made me resolute and determined. I am much more serious about my education than I was at times during high school. Working nights delivering pizzas reminds me why I am going to school; looking at my 22 month-old daughter asleep in her bed after I come home from work reminds me even more.

BAD MOVIE IDEA

worth it to confront this through your employer or to handle it on your own. Personally, my favorite politically correct response is a quick right to the package, followed by a sharp knee in the family jewels. Sometimes living in the 90s is just not enough to enlighten.

Seriously though, you do not have to put up with this. Take him aside and have a serious discussion about what he is jeopardizing by continuing this behavior. Tell him firmly that you will no longer tolerate it, and, if it continues, you will have no choice but to report it to your supervisor (or maybe his wife). Most businesses have an equal opportunity office or even a counselor within human resources you can talk to anonymously to see what your options are. Your shot at straightening this guy out may actually be better than you think because, chances are, if he's treating you this way, others have been the object of his undesired attentions as well; they may help you put a stop to it. But don't feel that it's your responsibility to take it all on yourself; it's your decision what to put on the line. If the job is worth it to you, take him on. You have my deepest admiration and support. If all else fails, however, do not ignore it—get out. No job is worth sacrificing your self-esteem and peace of mind.

Take care of you,
Maryville College. I'll
miss you much. I'm off to seek enlightenment in exotic-smelling lands.

: oD

Love, -Polly

Ever seen a bald dog?

by Dave Barry

Our topic today, on Breakthroughs in Medicine, is: New Hope From Dog Spit.

I have here some very exciting scientific correspondence from William B. Yancey, M.D., who is a medical doctor and therefore legally allowed to (1) park anywhere; (2) give shots; (3) tell people to get naked; and (4) make scientific observations.

Dr. Yancey wrote me about an observation he scientifically made regarding his Labrador retriever, who is named Refrigerator. Refrigerator recently underwent hip surgery; in preparation, the veterinarian shaved his hindquarters. Then, realizing his mistake, he also shaved Refrigerator's hindquarters.

No, seriously, the veterinarian's hindquarters have nothing to do with this, and I am instructing the jury to disregard them. The point is that Refrigerator had all the fur removed from his rear end (or, in medical parlance, his "bazooty").

If you know anything about dogs, you know how Refrigerator spent his recuperation period: He licked himself pretty much full time. Dogs are very big believers in the healing power of licking. If dogs operated a hospital, here's how it would work:

A patient would arrive in the Emergency room, and a team of doctor dogs would gather around to conduct an examination, which would consist of thoroughly sniffing the patient. (They would also sniff the floor, in case anybody had left food lying around.) Then the doctor dogs would hold a conference, and whatever the patient's symptoms were—coughing, lack of pulse, a spear passing all the way through the patient's head—the doctor dogs would agree that the best course of treatment was: licking. And we're talking about a LOT of licking. Not just the patient licking himself or herself; but also the doctors licking the patient, licking themselves, and licking the other doctors. This is state-of-the-art medical care for dogs. Their equivalent of a CAT scan machine would be a big tube filled with tongues.

So anyway, after his operation, Refrigerator was performing medical care on himself, and Dr. Yancey made a scientific observation; namely, that Refrigerator's hair "has grown fastest in the areas where he has spent significant time licking himself."

Using this observation, Dr.

Yancey was able to form a scientific hypothesis—a term that is formed from two Greek words, "hy," which means "something," and "pothesis," which means "that pops into your head while you are watching a dog lick itself after you have maybe had a couple of brewskis."

Dr. Yancey's hypothesis is this: Dog spit grows hair. In fact, Dr. Yancey believes that unwanted hair, such as facial hair on women and nose hair on men, probably did not exist until the human race domesticated dogs and started getting licked all the time.

But the more important implication is that dog spit could be a revolutionary new hair-growth treatment for balding men. Granted, we do not yet have actual laboratory PROOF of this. But we do have a published report in the form of this column, which has been printed in a newspaper with professional looking margins.

So I think it's time to move past the research phase of Dr. Yancey's hypothesis and go directly to the phase where we unleash the power of this amazing discovery to benefit humanity, to make the world a better

... a scientific hypothesis—a term that is formed from two Greek words, "hy," which means "something," and "pothesis," which means "that pops into your head while you are watching a dog lick itself after you have maybe had a couple of brewskis."

place, and most important—to make money.

Specifically what I am thinking of is a franchised line of hair-growth salons, perhaps with a sophisticated name such as La Spitte Du Chien Pour Les Hommes. Upon arriving at al salon, a client would undergo a pre-treatment interview, during which he would be asked a series of scientific questions ("Do you have money?" "How much?"). The client would then be ushered into the Preparation Area, where his scalp would be coated with a scientifically designed, nutrition-enhanced, precision-balanced formulation consisting of Skippy brand peanut butter.

Finally the client would enter the Treatment Area, where he would be instructed to lie down on the floor with his arms at his sides. A door would then be opened, and a professional Hair Growth Technician, barking loudly, would sprint into the room at upwards of 400 miles per hour, skid to a stop, and begin enthusiastically treating the client's scalp. All of the technicians at La Spitte Du Chien Pour Les Hommes would be carefully selected on the basis of friendliness, professionalism, and not peeing on the clients. I grant you that this procedure has a few wrinkles that need to be worked out, such as the issue of creamy vs. chunky. But basically I think it makes at least as much scientific sense as the baldness cures you see advertised in magazines. I see no reason why we can't go ahead and start setting up franchise salons, and if any government agencies such as the Food and Drug Administration have any questions, well, they can just send their inspectors around to meet with our Board of Directors, Big Boy and Fang. They LOVE inspectors. It's their favorite meal.

© 1997 The Miami Herald

Distributed by Tribune Media Services, Inc.

Dr. Carl Gombert